43,333. Yes?—I do in this neighbourhood, and certainly in Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire there are some extremely capable men, Mr. Rule Owen, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Davies of Frood Vale, I consider are some of the most competent men in Wales. Mr. Rule Owen is a landowner himself in Lincolnshire, Mr. Davies of Frood Vale is a large landowner in Carmarthen, and farms a good deal himself. I think there are many solicitors who also are landowners, and themselves farm. I quite agree with you that a knowledge of agriculture is very essential indeed.

43,334. Generally speaking, a solicitor would not be a desirable man as agent?—If he was not a practical farmer as well, but it happens in this part of the world that some of our most skilled farmers are solicitors.

43,335. I was thinking probably they found the law a more paying business?—That may be, but perhaps they are so public-spirited that they sacrifice themselves to the public good.

43,336. Has the custom of carting coal to mansions been abandoned?—No. As to the question of the "duty fowl," I may say that I have an old lease, and I think that he is the only tenant who does not bring me poultry as a present at Christmas, and I am sure if I or my wife did not take it, they would be quite insulted. But, however, that idea is now completely exploded. Speaking for myself, my neighbours from sheer good-will always lend me a cart once a year to bring my little stock of coal home.

43,337. But would they not rather regard it as humiliating to have a clause of this sort put into an agreement?—I do not think one would put it into a fresh agreement. I think the feeling is rather that it is a friendly, neighbourly act.

43,388. It is not put into agreements now?—No.

43,339. Would you condemn the practice?—Yes, certainly. I should like a very great simplification of agreements. I should like free cropping and all that sort of thing; an agreement whereby the tenant could have a perfectly free hand, and the landlord could have a proper stipulation to prevent waste, either permissive or actual. I think our agreements are really waste paper; they are never carried into effect.

43,340. You are in favour of upholding the preferential claim for rent?—Yes, I think so; in the case of small holdings it should be. Supposing we let a farm at 30*l.*, 40*l.*, or 50*l.* a year, practically as a rule the tenant has no capital beyond his stock, which is really a very small capital.

43,341. Do you think a man is able to make the best of his farm if he is short of capital?—As a matter of fact, their working capital is very inadequate.

43,342. May that not be attributable to the fact that the landlord has a preferential claim? Do you not think he would be more careful in the selection of his tenants if he was placed in the same position as other creditors?—The amount of capital is so short in the country that you would find great difficulty in filling up your vacancies.

43,343. We have been told over and over again that competition is very keen?—Yes, but they are all competing on equal terms. There is a very small amount of capital in the country, and the competitors are all very much of one class. As a rule, one never goes to the bank to inquire, as you would in Scotland, as to the amount of capital a man has. We go very much, with respect to the small farms, by taking a man who is thrifty and hard-working. He may have a few pounds put by. Some of them manage to do very well. They have no personal expenses on the small farms. They have no labour bill, and they live very frugally. I think capital does not exist in the country, it is diminishing every day. Of course there is a great deal of money on deposit, but it is in very small sums, and a great deal of it is from people other than farmers, retired tradesmen and retired seamen. It would be, no doubt, much better to have a man with capital, but I am afraid the class does not exist here commonly.

43,344. What inference do you draw from the fact that tenants are short of capital?—Well, that we are a poor country.

43,345. And getting poorer?—I do not think we are getting poorer yet, but certainly if these disastrous times go on we shall. It applies not only to the tenants, but to the landlords. In this district there are very few landlords indeed who have any ready money; they have their land, and very often it is very heavily charged with family charges and mortgages. The land is suffering from dearth of capital with respect both to tenant and landlord.

43,346. The question is this: Do the landlords get poorer in the same degree as the tenant farmers do in the present depressed times?—I think so, really. Assuming that their income depends entirely upon land, they are very much in the same boat.

43,347. Do you think they take the proper share of the burden in these depressed times?—That involves a very large question, because it depends entirely upon what the original rent is. If a man's rent is 1*l.* an acre for a farm which another rents at 10*s.*, and they each receive the same reduction, obviously the landlord who has the lower-rented farms is suffering more than the man who has the higher-rented farms. I think, on the whole, that the landlords have fairly met their tenants, because I think it is a very acute crisis. Upon a fair average rental I should say, if things do not improve, from 10 to 20 per cent. would be a fair deduction to make. I will put it in this way: supposing land is let at an average during the last 15 years before this time—up to 1892—a deduction off that of 20 per cent. would be about what would meet the present crisis. That is my impression.

43,348. You are now taking the prices of stock and produce as the basis alone?—Principally.

43,349. That is only one item in the account?—I am looking at the price of stock and produce, and also at the enhanced price of labour.

43,350. You think, taking the enhanced price of labour into consideration, 20 per cent. would be fair?—20 per cent. upon the average of 15 years; something of that sort.

43,351. I suppose opinions vary upon a point of that sort?—It depends so much upon the initial figure of rent, you see.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,352. Is not this a difference between you and Mr. Jones as to the number of years you take the per-centage from?—Possibly.

43,353. During the last two or three years the depression is very much greater?—Yes, but I am taking 15 years.

43,354. That would not meet the present depression?—Not this last year.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,355. I will ask you this question: What is your opinion; do you think that the present depression is temporary or permanent?—You must go to a much wiser man than I am for an answer to that. That is a problem of political economy. I can tell you one thing, I think it depends a great deal on the weather.

43,356. Then I have a question to ask you upon that. Do you consider the present depressed times are owing chiefly to bad seasons during the last 15 years?—Yes, I have said so in my evidence-in-chief.

43,357. Under those circumstances, bad seasons have really become the normal condition of things, and not the abnormal?—You are getting now into all sorts of things, cycles of weather.

43,358. It is a very fair deduction from your statement?—The weather is rather inclined to go in cycles, and, having had a series of cycles of bad weather, we shall have a series of cycles of good weather.

43,359. According to what you say, the tenant farmer would say that his rent was adjusted on the assumption that they were going to have fine weather?—The weather is dry and wet and wet and dry; I cannot give you any further information about that.

43,360. Is there any reclamation of waste land going on in this neighbourhood?—On the mountains there is, I think.

43,361. Still?—I think a little, not much. I think under the Inclosures Act they have enclosed pretty nearly all that can be cultivated.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,362. Is there any marshy land, for instance, reclaimed?—I do not know which way you came into the town this morning.

43,363. From Carmarthen way?—Then there has been a very valuable piece of marshy land here reclaimed, I think, at a cost of 1,500*l.* odd, let at 4*l.* or 5*l.* an acre to butchers, and it is of about 30 acres; but there has been no reclamation on a large scale.

43,364. Not since the prosperous years of 1872 to 1875?—I do not think we have much marsh land about here.

43,365. You say the County Council of Cardiganshire has voted 250*l.* for the purpose of agricultural education?—I am not so well informed with reference to Cardiganshire as Carmarthenshire. I have paid more attention to the Carmarthenshire council. The chairman of the Cardiganshire council is here, and he can tell you better than I can.

43,366. Do you hear any complaints from the farmers that this money is not judiciously expended in any way?—No complaints have reached my ears. It is paid to the governing body at Aberystwith, the college there. It is the same in Carmarthenshire. I think the dairy schools are very much appreciated, and I think those lectures on manures by Professor Parry have been very much appreciated, and I am sure they have done good.

43,367. Do you think that the lectures are generally delivered in such a way that the tenant farmers are able to understand them and make the best of them?—I think so. I have attended one or two. Of course it was all in Welsh, and I am a poor Welshman myself, but I think he lectured in a very intelligible and plain way—very much so, I thought—and certainly if they would only go on with the dairying when they get home it would be very beneficial. I would not go to the extent of advising a large expenditure for that; I think we should just feel our way. There are various schemes for an agricultural college for the three counties. It may be a good thing. Aberystwith is awkwardly situated with regard to Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire.

43,368. As to this expenditure; the county council would get so much under the local taxation account. How much is that?—Do you mean for the intermediate education?

43,369. Yes?—I am afraid I could not tell you; I should not like to quote it from memory, and I have not the statistics by me.

43,370. You say that many tenants have bought their holdings. What prompted them to buy their holdings?—A good deal of it is up in the parish of Penbryn, and that way.

43,371. Was it owing to insecurity of tenure that they bought?—No, I do not think so. So far as regards insecurity of tenure, a freehold is preferable to any form of tenure; that may be taken as a maxim of English law. I do not think they bought from fear of eviction; the estates were sold generally, and put up for sale in the ordinary way.

43,372. Do you think that if a tenant farmer felt sure he would not be capriciously disturbed there would be any desire on his part to buy his holding?—I think there would; not so much now as formerly. Do you mean fixity of tenure for ever and aye, or a limited fixity of tenure?

43,373. A limited fixity of tenure?—I can go with you there. For a limited fixity of tenure I am quite with you, but I cannot go in for perpetual fixity of tenure. I do not know whether you do yourself. No doubt on many estates the tenants think themselves much better off. On my estate—I do not like to quote it—they have practically 60 years leases, but they have done most of the improvements.

43,374. You allow this, that where a tenant feels himself secure he generally farms better?—They ought to, but some of the yearly tenants farm very well here.

43,375. Do you think that some of the tenants who feel secure do not farm as well as they should?—Well, there is a tendency—I am sorry to say that some of the owners of the long leases do not farm up to the mark, especially if they have a very cheap holding. My own is a very cheap property. It was in a wretched state of repair when I came into it; I had no money; it was before the Settled Estates Act was passed, and I could not sell. What was I to do? I consulted with my tenants, and I assisted them as far as I could, and then we agreed that something should be laid out by the tenant, and in consideration of that I gave them leases for three lives concurrently with 60 years, and I have reduced 20 per cent. upon that. The relations between myself and my tenants have been of the most friendly description, and only the other day I received a letter from a tenant thanking me for the reduction, and hoping very soon the times would improve, and he would be able to pay me the full rent without reduction whatever. I am proud of that letter, but that is the fact. Certainly, security ought to be given.

43,376. Do you think the standard of comfort among tenant farmers is lower than it should be?—The standard of comfort generally has been raised among all classes. No doubt, as we get better educated, we naturally look to a higher standard of comfort. I should be very glad indeed to see the standard of comfort raised.

43,377. Considering the amount of capital which a tenant farmer has, do you think the standard of comfort has risen as much among tenant farmers as it has amongst other classes of the community?—I do not think the capital which you refer to exists to any very great extent.

43,378. They have some, of course?—Of course they have some.

43,379. I will ask you this question: Who generally lives best, a tenant farmer who has

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

500*l.* to stock a farm or a grocer who has 500*l.* to stock a shop?—I cannot tell you. I know I would very much sooner farm than keep the shop. I told you in my evidence-in-chief that they lived very frugally and thriftily, and I should be very glad if the standard of living was improved. I can answer you in this way: If you compare the standard of living with that class in England, or even in Scotland, I should say it is much lower. That is one of the reasons why they have struggled on so long; it is in consequence of their thrift, industry, and self-denial. I know England well; take the Gloucestershire men in the Cotswold Hills, the depression is very great, but the farmers are very luxurious in their way of living.

43,380. Do you think an English farmer would live on "cawl" and bacon, and so on?—No, certainly not, but I think he would be all the better for it if he did occasionally.

43,381. Have the landlords readily come forward to supply additional buildings for the tenant farmers under the altered circumstances?—I do not hesitate to say that we want more buildings in the country—I think that would be one of the good ways to meet the depression—especially for young stock. You know the importance of keeping young stock dry and having buildings for the manure and straw. There is another thing that the landlord should do, have a good sire for the benefit of their tenants, and good bulls and horses and sheep. Our stock, especially on our small farms, is very inferior. Last year, when dealers were able to pick and choose, the inferior stock was quite unsaleable. We want the breed improved by judicious crossing.

43,382. Are you prepared to say the landlords really do their duty?—You must not ask a landlord to say that they do not. I think they try to, at all events. There are black sheep, and there are white sheep too. I am not going to mention names.

43,383. I will ask you another question, at any rate: Do you know of any landlords who have reduced their establishments in order to meet the times?—Yes, I do.

43,384. Very much?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,385. I am sorry to have to ask you one or two questions after the length of time the examination has already continued, but you were good enough to put in an abstract of accounts regarding the poor for the Union of Cardigan. May I ask you at this stage of the evidence to put on record a return of the expenditure of the guardians during the 10 years ending Lady Day 1893?—Yes, I will. [The witness handed in the following table]:—

† This item is the difference between the amount of grants, &c., received last year, and the moiety of the grants, &c., received during the two years 1883 and 1884, part of the grants receivable in the year 1883 having been received in the year 1884.

43,386. We have had it stated in Carmarthenshire, on the evidence of the rate books, that there has been an increase of rents during the last 20 or 30 years of something like 25 per cent. Would you say, from your knowledge of the county, that it is at all likely to be the fact?—No, I do not think so.

43,387. This table seems to me to give us a little light on the subject. Will you kindly look at the figures for 1883 and 1884 under the head "Rateable value"?—I will explain that at once to you. Previous to those years the rent was not taken as the basis of rating. I was chairman of the board of guardians at the time, and I used every effort I could to have what I thought a more equitable, although very imperfect system, adopted. Now the actual rent is taken as the basis, except in the case of old leases, where, of course, the special valuation is made, and of course of land in hand, where it is settled by comparison with adjacent farms.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,388. Are you not aware that there was great diversity in the unions of South Wales upon that point?—Yes, I am sorry to say so. In the neighbouring union of Newcastle Emlyn they have what I call a fancy valuation.

43,389. You would be aware from those conferences which occurred that there was a great diversity of practice in the various unions of South Wales?—Yes, very great indeed. I still maintain that, although imperfect, rent is the proper basis of rating.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,390. But the value of those figures to me is that I think they clear up a great deal of the difficulty we have had before us. If you take these figures from 1883 to 1893, you show an increase of rateable value in this union of 25 per cent.; but if you look to the year 1885 you will see that the entire rise was from the revaluation in that year, and from 1885 to 1893, instead of being a rise in the rateable value, there has been a very slight fall of from 69,000*l.* in 1885 to 68,888*l.* in 1893?—That fall would represent more than there is upon the face of it. That would include the villages and towns where there are a certain number of buildings going on. You would have to bring those figures in as well, which would increase the rateable value to a certain extent.

43,391. I am taking the rateable value, and it goes as far as this, that, if the Carmarthenshire evidence was correct, in a similar way we should find there had been no increase of rent since 1886 according to those figures, and that the apparent rise of 25 per cent. in the last 20 years is accounted for by the rise in the rateable value—the mode of valuation—and does not really prove anything as to the actual rise in rents. There is only one other question I wanted to ask, and that is with reference to the fair rent. You expressed yourself that it was very difficult, and you did not see exactly how the fair rent could be ascertained at the present time. Would not you say that the difficulty lies in this, that the fair rent on the taking of a farm is really dependent upon an estimate of what the future is going to be, and not upon the past—that you could not arrive at a fair rent always by taking an average of the past, but in taking a farm you have to estimate what is really to be the profit of the future?—Then you enter very largely into the region of speculation. One is an established fact, the past, and of course it is extremely difficult to forecast what may be the future of any particular industry.

43,392. So that if you had a Land Court it would be almost impossible to forecast what the future would be?—The Land Court must of necessity, I apprehend, base the rent upon what had happened in the past. I do not apprehend any judicial body could form a judicial opinion upon what may or may not take place.

43,393. In the very valuable suggestion you made with regard to using our present arrangements—appointing two arbitrators, and making the County Court Judge the umpire, you were referring, I apprehend, only to the valuation of tenants' improvements, and not to the fixing of rent?—I think, unless you can show a very strong case indeed—I do not say cases may not be proved, but it requires a very strong case indeed, in my opinion, to interfere with freedom of contract.

43,394. In case it should come out that it was necessary in certain cases, do you make the same suggestion as to the mode in which it should be done?—I do, certainly.

Mr. Grove.

43,395. I am likewise sorry to trouble you with a question or two?—I am here for the purpose of answering your questions, and I will tell you all I know.

43,396. As to this point of railway rates, I think you said that you had certain figures that you might give us as to certain rates that are now charged?—I am afraid I have not got them with me. When I was chairman of the Carmarthenshire County Council I had them, and took them up to town; however, I will try to send them to you.

43,397. You will send us some of the actual rates now being charged?—I will not say now being charged, but which were charged two years ago.

43,398. That will be before the revised scale?—It is on the revised scale. I think I can find it, but I am not quite sure whether I can.*

43,399. This analysis, which I have here, was issued by the Board of Trade in August 1892?—I have seen the analysis.

43,400. That gave what the railway companies can charge?—Yes, I will look it up.

43,401. We want to get at it. A great many of the witnesses have complained of the railway rates, but they have failed to give us specific instances. Have you any reason to suppose that the railways are charging more than the maximum they are entitled to?—No, I do not say that, but the special case in point had reference to the exportation of cattle and horses from the station at Carmarthen, not that they charged the maximum, but that they had increased the previous rate very largely.

43,402. I think you stated the increase was about 100 per cent.?—That is my impression.

43,403. That is a most serious thing for any industry, is it not?—Yes.

* The following memorandum was subsequently forwarded to the Secretary:—Horses from Carmarthen to London, from 7*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.* to 18*l.* 6*s.* per truck. Cattle from Carmarthen to Leicester, 30*s.* a truck, i.e. a 6*l.* 12*s.* rate. Clogs, wood, from 3*l.* to 9*l.*

Mr. Grove—continued.

43,404. You spoke about the dealers in stock going round to the farmers and buying the stock at the various farms, and so injuring the utility of fairs?—Yes.

43,405. Could not that be remedied by the farmers if they had a little co-operation amongst themselves?—Yes, certainly.

43,406. Are there any farmers' clubs, or any agricultural societies about here?—Yes, there are. They have co-operated in a practical way this winter by killing beef themselves and sending it direct.

43,407. You say in your evidence-in-chief that there is a very general depression in all trades?—Yes.

43,408. Do you consider that the depression in agriculture now is greater than it is on an average in other trades?—I am not sufficiently acquainted with other trades. Tin plates, I should say, are quite as bad.

43,409. You go abroad a good deal?—Yes.

43,410. Have you been to Denmark and seen the working of the butter factories?—No, I have not.

43,411. There are 2,000,000 people there, and they have 1,000 butter factories. They have been an enormous advantage to the country, and we are anxious to see that this effort at St. Clear's should be encouraged as much as possible, so as to see if there is anything in it?—The farmers' wives, I think, are the difficulty, as I say.

43,412. Then as to the rateable values. The rateable values include, of course, the increase of buildings in various parts of the union, and probably some industries, so that the inference drawn by Mr. Seebohm must naturally take into account any increase or decrease from things outside agriculture, must it not?—Yes; for instance, we have a good many small woollen factories.

43,413. And all those would affect the question of rateable value?—Undoubtedly.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,414. The butter factory at St. Clear's has not been quite as successful as you would wish it to be?—Quite so.

43,415. And I think you suggested it was owing to the farmers' wives. Is it this sort of thing, each wife thinks she is the best person to make butter in the whole county, or even in the whole country, and does not wish to send the milk to the factory?—No doubt they have a very good opinion of their own skill, and besides which, I think it affects their pockets to some extent. Farmer A. thinks that his cream is very superior to farmer B.'s. It is impossible to analyse every sample of cream sent in; the only way to do it is from time to time to analyse the cream, and make a proviso that it is up to a certain standard. I live too far from St. Clears to give you very accurate and minute information, but I apprehend that is one of the difficulties. There is a good deal of jealousy.

43,416. That makes it very difficult to get them to come forward as readily as you could wish to help you ?—Yes, we could do with three times the stuff they are bringing.

43,417. I am sorry they cannot be induced to co-operate more thoroughly. I suppose there is a certain amount of land hunger about here ?—Yes.

43,418. If a small farm was empty there would be many applicants ?—Yes, that is my experience.

43,419. Supposing a small farmer has three or four boys, would it do for him to bring all those boys up to agriculture ?—I think he would do much better to put some of them into something else.

43,420. If he brought them all up to farming he would want more farms for them ?—Yes.

43,421. Education helps to get some of them away ?—Yes.

43,422. You think that is beneficial ?—It is beneficial in two ways. It gives them an opening in life to a higher standard of education ; it proves a sort of reflex action, and improves them very much when they come back amongst us.

43,423. We were warned by one witness in Pembrokeshire that there was too much education ?—I do not believe in that.

43,424. That I must say was in the English part of Pembrokeshire. What is the county doing to help education ?—We have the intermediate schools in posse, not in esse, at present. To tell you the truth, I think we are rather in a little bit of a hurry. It would have been perhaps better to experiment with two or three, instead of having so many centres at first. As a matter of fact, neither in Carmarthenshire nor Cardiganshire has a single school been built yet. In Carmarthenshire we levy a technical education rate, and we have a large reserve fund, and I hope before the end of the year, at all events, we shall have laid the foundation of one school. At present we have not an intermediate school built in either Carmarthenshire or Cardiganshire. I think there is a tendency to build too many. If you have intermediate schools you want a very high-class school. If you divide them into small twopenny-halfpenny schools you cannot get efficient people to teach.

43,425. You do not start those schools unless the locality subscribes money for building and so on to help ?—Yes, very great liberality has been shown by local people, wonderful, considering the bad times. At Llandyssil there have been large subscriptions, and in other places. I think in almost all the proposed centres local contribution by subscriptions has been found.

43,426. It has been forthcoming ?—Generally speaking, I think so.

43,427. You expect the working of the Welsh Intermediate Education Act will help to take away the surplus sons of the farmers to other occupations ?—Yes.

43,428. And help the existing machinery ?—Yes. I think it would be very well if a little more attention was paid, or some special intermediate schools were established for the purpose of developing agricultural education. I think it would be very desirable indeed to teach in the elementary schools a little more the elements of agriculture. It is to some extent done, but we might improve upon it, I think.

43,429. Has that been before the council ?—Yes. I am not on the Education Committee, but it has been before them, I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,430. Has the Agricultural Holdings Act been published in Welsh ?—I think not.

43,431. Has it ever been brought before any of the farmers' clubs or the agricultural societies of the county for discussion ?—I cannot tell you, I never heard it.

43,432. Do you not think that would be a good thing ?—Very good. As to publishing it in Welsh, and having regard to the fate of the County Council Act, I should say it is very difficult to turn English legal phrases into Welsh. I will tell you what I think would be very useful. In the case of the Irish Land Act, there are very concise and plain summaries published, and I think if a summary was published in Welsh it would be better.

43,433. May I suggest such work as that would be very suitable work for a county association. However, with regard to railway rates, do you know whether the railway between Cardigan and Whitland pays ?—You ought to know, Sir John, better than I do, as you are a director of the Great Western Railway Company. I cannot tell you.

43,434. What use has been made of the competition by sea ?—If it was not for our competition by sea, I am afraid we should fare very badly here.

43,435. You have that advantage which all places have not. You can send your cattle by sea ?—Not by our little boats.

43,436. They do so from Ireland ?—Our little local boats here would not take cattle.

43,437. You have not availed yourself of the opportunity of competition ?—Not so far as regards agricultural produce.

43,438. By sending your cattle to London, for instance ?—By sea ?

43,439. Yes. Has not that been done ?—Not here. We have no facilities for doing it. I believe we have sent some pigs to Bristol.

43,440. You send pigs to Bristol by sea ?—Yes.

43,441. Now as to the freeholders. I believe Cardiganshire, as you say, is a county of freeholders ?—Yes. There are a larger number than in any similar area in the United Kingdom, I believe.

43,442. Should I be right in assuming that the principal advantage that they gain over tenant farmers is fixity of tenure ?—I should call it ownership of land.

43,443. That ownership of land gives them fixity of tenure ?—Yes.

43,444. What other advantages ?—I think a man who is an owner of an estate in fee simple is in a higher position to some extent than a man who is a mere tenant. He is his own master.

43,445. Would he be more likely to carry out more permanent improvements upon his own land?—Yes, human nature would say so.

43,446. Can you give any case of capricious evictions from farms?—I do not know of any myself. It is very hard to define what a capricious eviction is.

43,447. Quite so. I do not want to press you upon that. Are there many large landowners in the county of Cardigan?—Not in this part; I should think 3,000*l.* a year is about the maximum down here.

43,448. That, as compared with some of the counties of Wales, would be rather small?—Yes. I fancy the largest landowner in Cardigan is Lord Lisburne.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,449. I do not wish to commit myself in any way by asking this question, but Mr. Seebohm asked you, assuming that a Land Court was established, and you replied to him that in fixing the rent you would of necessity have to go into the region of speculation?—No, I did not say that.

43,450. To some extent?—No. If I understand Mr. Seebohm's question, it was this: He said, in fixing the rent, would you not have regard to future probabilities rather than past facts.

43,451. What was your reply?—My reply to that was I could not see how you could form a judicial opinion upon speculation. That was my answer, and you cannot——

43,452. At any rate, this is the difficulty. I apprehend that, prices fluctuating so much, it would be difficult to fix on an average for a certain number of years?—No doubt.

43,453. That is the difficulty, is it not?—Yes, it is the difficulty. Fluctuation in prices of course makes a difficulty.

43,454. But may not provision be made for such a contingency by providing that an appeal might be made either by the landlord or by the tenant, the costs to follow the decision?—My reply to that is, that in the Irish Act the prices are fixed for 15 years. Then, assuming that there is a revision of prices, I apprehend that they would not be fixed upon what the probabilities were for the next ensuing 15 years, but they would be fixed, either raised or decreased, by the current rate of prices during the 15 years which had passed. I do not see how you fix prices upon theoretical figures.

43,455. The rent might be based upon the present prices?—Yes.

43,456. With power to appeal to the landlord or the tenant in case the prices alter?—Assuming you have fixity of tenure, I do not suppose any one ever suggested that the rent should be fixed for ever and aye. When I suggested leases I expressly said there ought to be breaks to enable provision to be made at stated periods to readjust prices, but then the prices would be readjusted, not upon what was going to happen, but upon what had happened.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,457. I think it is generally agreed that a 15 years' period is too long?—I merely mention that because I happen to have the Act before me, and I quoted that; five to seven years is what I said. I do not think you can alter them oftener than that. It would be endless if you altered prices every year. You must have averages.

43,458. A thing might be mutually agreed?—Yes, it might. I would not interfere with any mutual contract at all, but I think in anything approaching to what I suggested you must have some sort of periods.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,459. Is it not a fact that the standard of cream is taken at the St. Clear's dairy from all the milk as it comes in?—From each individual sample?

43,460. Yes?—I think not. You may be right.

43,461. We called there and saw the place when we were at St. Clear's?—Surely it is not done daily.

43,462. There is no difficulty in getting the standard of cream, you understand. Then is it not the fact that mothers will not allow their daughters who have been in the dairy school to adopt the principles they have been taught?—That is not within my knowledge. I have heard so, but I cannot say so within my knowledge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,463. Is there much under-letting of land in the part of the county you know; I mean sub-letting?—Not a great deal. I may say this, when it is sub-let it is generally sub-let very much over the original price. Sub-letting is not common.

Chairman.

43,464. I believe you have returned from Egypt earlier than you intended?—Yes.

43,465. Was that for the purpose of giving evidence here?—Yes, it was, my Lord.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,467. You will admit that the majority of them come from Cardiganshire?—Nonconformists and all denominations.

43,468. All denominations?—I have heard something about pigs and parsons in Cardiganshire.

Chairman.

43,469. Mr. Vincent asks this question: "Do "you not think that a per-centage of 2½ on the "market price of land would represent the "acreage rental of the country much more "nearly than 4 per cent." ?—Yes, I should say 2 per cent. I sold an estate some years ago to Lord Cawdor, and I do not think it pays more than 1½ per cent. I am sure it does not pay 2 per cent.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,470. Referring to what you said about ministers, are the farmers' sons brought up now to these occupations during the depressed times, as in former times; do you think that is going on now?—I cannot answer it better than I have done—I think the farmers make tremendous sacrifices to maintain their sons, but there are many sons who in a great measure—I could mention many—by their own ability and exertions maintain themselves by getting scholarships and exhibitions, and so forth.

43,471. Do you think that is going on still?—Yes, I think so. I know two very eminent men who have risen from the working classes, and have entirely maintained themselves in their position.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. David Rhys Jones called and examined.

Chairman.

43,472. Where do you live?—At Cardiff.

43,473. What is it that you wish to give evidence with respect to?—Respecting a farm called Ffynonwen, in the parish of Llangunllo.

43,474. In the county of Cardigan?—In the county of Cardigan.

43,475. Is it rebutting evidence?—No, not at all.

stones and slate quarries, with rights of ingress, egress, and regress, without going through the corn or hay, are also reserved, subject to reasonable satisfaction for any damage caused. Here I may mention that as to quarrying the reservation was not altogether meaningless, as besides stone quarries there was a slate quarry worked on the premises at that time. The rights as to the trees of course, both during the lease and the subsequent yearly tenancy, were always jealously guarded and asserted. The lease was granted from the 29th September preceding, for the term of the natural lives of the said Rees John, Mary, his wife, and Thomas, his son, and the life of the survivor of them. There was to be a yearly rent of 25*l.* in half-yearly instalments, payable on the feast day of St. Philip and St. Jacob the apostles, and on the feast day of St. Michael the archangel, commonly called Michaelmas Day, respectively, "together "with keeping one dog and paying six hens and "sixty eggs as duties at Christmas" yearly, without any reduction whatever for rates, taxes, &c., "by virtue of Act of Parliament, or any "other usage, custom, power, or authority "imposed upon the demised premises." I may here parenthetically remark that the rent of hens and eggs was doubtless precedent as it was subsequent to this lease. Dr. Owen Pughe derives the word "ynyd" from the Latin "initium," and associates it with Shrove tides. From a well-known song it appears to have on other farms embraced other feathered things. The old Welsh woman who had been directed to ask her landlord for "Lēs (lease) three ever-"lasting lives" and the first offer after, is made by the Bard to offer her rent in these terms. (See the original Welsh ballad in the Appendix). I give the translation:—

"Full twenty pounds to you I'll pay,
And two fat geese in pig-troughs fed,
Two 'ynyd' hens with combs all red,
And load of coal for winter's day."

Likewise Rees John is bound to do and perform "from time to time and at all times suit and "service of mill by shelling and grinding all

Chairman—continued.

" corn and grain " used and spent on the demised premises "at the water corn grist mill of the said Thomas Lloyd called Pwllcornol mill."

43,478. Time is going on, and I venture to suggest that if you think this is of importance as history it would be as well to put this agreement into your evidence; then will you kindly tell us the history of the farm later on, what the present position is now, and what the grievances are that are complained of?—Yes.

43,479. We will not go through the lease, if you please, we will come on to the practical part of the evidence; will you tell us how long you have been in possession of the farm, what the rent was when it was put up, and so on?—Rees John executed a sub-lease to his son, who, in addition to these services, was to pay a peppercorn rent, and the sub-lease was to take effect from the day of Rees John's death.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,480. What was the date of that sub-lease?—1814.

43,481. It was undivided, according to this map in the year 1765. Then we go on?—Then I will not take up your time with some old entries.

Chairman.

43,482. I think you had better not. He sub-leased to his son Thomas in 1814?—Yes. Then there are several receipts in this book of the chief rent, 2*s.*, and I also find the same amount was paid by my father many years afterwards.

43,483. Some of the rates went up to 12*s.*?—Yes, some were 9*d.* and some to 12*s.*

43,484. Rees Jones died in 1820?—Rees Jones died in 1820.

43,485. What did his estate amount to?—His estate in all amounted to about 70*l.*

43,486. Then when did Thomas Jones, the son of Rees Jones, your own grandfather, die?—He died in 1832.

43,487. How did he leave his property?—He left his property equally amongst his three unmarried children, leaving 1*l.* to the other that was married.

43,488. What was the valuation of the stock and crop on this farm by three competent men before your father's marriage in 1838 taken at?—462*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.*

43,489. We will take those figures?—I have the particulars. Will you take them in the same way?

43,490. Yes, we will take all the details of it?—In this valuation the following prices are set down:—

A fat cow - - - - -	8	15	0
9 cows from 6*l.* to 7*l.* 15*s.* average	5	10	0	each

43,491. Then the wages of servants for 10 years more or less, between 1838 and 1876, we will take, if you please, as well?—Yes, only that I ought to add that many of those wages were supplemented by so much (mostly two loads) potato manure, a pair of stockings, washing, or fetching culm for parents, or so much flannel shirting or wool, &c.

43,492. With regard to full copies of accounts of wages of servants, workmen, and so on in 1839, I hardly think that we need put that in evidence. (See Appendix)?—No.

43,493. Then will you tell us what you have to say with regard to the original bidding letter. What is a bidding letter?—This is a bidding letter, or "Llythyr Neithior," not my father's, but a specimen of another one. (See Appendix.) I want to call your attention to the fact that both among rich and poor in those days it was a very considerable help in starting them in life I think my father's and mother's gifts amounted to at least 60*l.* in all, which of course was a consideration. The offerings to the young couple at these biddings were of the nature of a loan without interest.

43,494. Then those gifts were returned when the donors married themselves. Is that so?—

Chairman—continued.

Whenever they themselves married, or someone else, if they asked for them.

43,495. Or someone else, if they asked for them, in their stead?—Yes.

43,496. Then the gifts were only returned once?—Only once. The few days previous to the wedding day there was "cyweirio y ty neithior" (making up the bidding house), when gifts in kind—bread, sugar, tea, cheese, butter—and money equivalents were brought. Some brought more substantial gifts, such as whole cheeses, and measures of corn, and household utensils.

43,497. Then if you like to put the customs as to services during corn harvest in your evidence you may put those in?—Yes. In this neighbourhood it is the custom for the farmers to assist each other at hay harvesting, while the shoemakers, weavers, carpenters, &c., also turn out. The one who has been most liberal with his skim-milk, with taking firewood home, and in other minor services, gets sometimes far more hands than is required, but no one's help is refused. Digging potatoes is also done in the same way. Corn harvesting is done without much of this common service between one farmer and another. The landlord's hay, of course, must be attended to, though in this matter the landlord, contrary to his general demeanour, gives as well as takes. Machine threshing has been latterly done in the same way. It was usual to take corn enough for pretty well a year's supply of food to the mill at once. Baking, shelling, and grinding this corn was sometimes a two days' and nights' job. In this instance crowds of young men would gather to what was called the "shembly," possibly "assembly," where they would be useful in whiling away the tedious time as well as in handling the heavy bags. Among other customs were the following:—The payment made by a cottager for a load of manure for potatoes, and for the potato ground itself was a day's harvesting; here, as in all harvesting, men and women were counted equal. For carting coal from the pit, about 30 miles away, nine days' harvesting was rendered. For fetching culm from the sea, and later on, coal from the railway station, stated days were given. Harvest service was also rendered by the small holder for the use of a man and pair of horses in ploughing and harrowing—as was also for the privilege of turf-cutting. I should like to state that at one period there were six cows kept on the farm, and some 60 years afterwards nine cows on the farm.

43,498. Was there any subdivision of this farm afterwards?—No, there was no subdivision, but there was a small farm added to it.

43,499. Then this, of course, increased the rent?—Yes. I have not yet stated that when the lease went out, on my grandfather's death, the rents went from 25*l.*, according to the lease, to 76*l.* I have abundance of early rent receipts of my father's tenancy. These show that it was the invariable custom to allow him 2*l.* at each audit for liming and improving the farm. The grandfather of Sir Marteine Lloyd used to receive the rent personally, and would return the 2*l.* with a few encouraging remarks upon the improvements which he had himself observed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

43,500. In what year was your grandfather's death?—In the year 1832.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,501. At the expiration of the lease was the rent advanced from 25*l.* to 76*l.*?—Yes, at the expiration of the three lives lease.

Chairman.

43,502. Then a small farm was subdivided?—It was given between my father and another farmer. I do not think there was any increase. 8*l.* was added to the rent then, making it 84*l.*

43,503. What was the name of the land that was added to it?—Penmount.

43,504. Is that shown on this map?—I do not know that I have named it separately. It is down at the bottom of the map.

43,505. Parkgwair is the name put down here?—No, there was no separate name to it, because it was joined to the hayfield.

43,506. What was the increase of rent, and in what year was it made?—I think that it was increased more before I come to the last increase. I cannot tell you the precise year of that, because I have not the date of it, but it was somewhere between 1850 and 1860 that it was increased to 88*l.* Afterwards all the farms of the Bronwydd estate were re-valued.

43,507. In the fifties it was increased to how much?—It was made 88*l.* Then when the farms were all re-valued——

43,508. In which year?—In 1871.

43,509. On the re-valuation in 1871 it was increased to what?—The valuation really was 112*l.*, but Sir Thomas then was kind enough, on account of my father's long tenancy and so on, not to demand more than 104*l.* This was a period of exceptional prices. Owing to the demand for men in Glamorganshire, and to the demand for women in the local woollen manufacture, the wages also bounded up. Prices of produce soon went down, but rents and wages went down. From thence less farming was done by my father, and he retired about 1879. I think I ought, in justice to the former landlord, to add there were several discounts allowed about 1850 to 1853.

43,510. What sort of discounts?—Discounts in the rent of 10 per cent. and 7½ per cent. and 5 per cent. I find. I am not in possession of the recent receipts.

43,511. About what year was that?—From 1849 to 1853.

Mr. Grove.

43,512. Was there a great depression then?—I presume there must have been. I cannot say from any document; I have only that fact. Then I have summarised the payments, and when my father's stock was sold it was sold for about 800*l.*, but as the cost of my medical education had taken away very considerably from his capital, my father at the end of all had not anything like the 800*l.*—not 400*l.*, I should think, himself.

43,513. When your father's stock was sold it fetched 800*l.*?—About 800*l.*

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

43,514. In what year?—That was in the year 1879.

Chairman.

43,515. Now we come to this in your statement. You say, "Near as Ffynonwen was to "Bronwydd (within about half-a-mile), and "though my father was employed in many "gratuitous services implying much trust and "confidence on the one part, and much care "and so on on the other part, I well remember "the great difficulty he had in getting proper "houses and a dwelling-house. This worry "went on for many years." Is that the case?—That is so.

43,516. "And when they were at last got, "all the hauling was done by him and his "neighbours." Is that so?—Yes, that is so.

43,517. And you say that you think all the expense of improving the dwelling-house and so on was borne by him?—I should not say all, but nearly all the expense. I should correct that.

43,518. Do you say you think, or do you know?—I know that a great deal of the expense fell on him.

43,519. You say, "I know that nearly all the "expense of improving the dwelling-house fell "on my father"?—Yes, I know that most of the expense of the dwelling-house did so.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,520. Did the rent remain the same till 1879? We have got the rent advanced to 104*l.* Did that continue till 1879?—Yes, it was continued to the end. It is continued yet, I believe.

Chairman.

43,521. "As the outcome of all, through all the "years from 1832 to 1879 after a coarse living "for the farmer apparently and the servants, all "the money made out of the farm went in rent "year by year, which money was gathered by "immense toil and anxiety, and spent in one "night's feasting at the palace close by." I think we might leave out those words?—Well, I think it is perfectly true.

43,522. Then put them in if you wish. You say then, "I had to go to Australia in 1866 for my health." Is that the case?—Yes.

43,523. And that "Sir Thomas Lloyd offered "me a letter of introduction to the Mayor of "Melbourne"?—Yes. I think this is material, and it is short, if you will allow me to state it as I have it here.

43,524. Yes; will you read it?—When I had to go for my health to Australia in 1866, the late Sir Thomas Lloyd sent for my father and me the Sunday before my leaving on the Monday morning, and in his kind thoughtfulness offered me a letter to the then Mayor of Melbourne. He also enjoined me to write to him. His letter secured me my first situation. I wrote to duly thank him but at the same time I availed myself of the opportunity to point out to him what I then saw, namely, the vast advantage to a people of a country wherein the fruits of labour are not devoured to an extreme by rent. Some 28 years more of life have only deepened the conviction of the wrongs of the present system, which as a young child I acquired from my mother. Of all men the farmers are among the worst to outbid each other. My father had to go to his landlord the afternoon of his father's funeral, because others had been before him for the farm. He, however, had to deal with a landlord less hungering and more honourable than his neighbours. I believe this evil is much aggravated since that dark summer day for my father in 1832. Land Courts are therefore essential until each man has a high court of justice in his own bosom. It should be set as a principle that rents should allow a sufficient margin to pay a living wage for sufficient work done on the farm. Would you allow me to mention the fact that I find in the records of my father that a man with his wife and about three or four children lived on 11*l.* 14*s.* for a year, together with what little the wife could do by knitting and a few perquisites.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,525. Do you mean the farmer lived upon that?—I am speaking of my father's workman, who lived in a cottage. I point out also that when my father had to pay these very high wages, which were four times what they were once, he was not able to cultivate the steep parts which there were on the farm, and I have ventured to give my opinion as to renting. I strongly advocate that the parish councils or county councils should acquire land and rent it, not sell it. Thus a system of land nationalization would be initiated. It may be that many of those nominal freeholders who now pay heavy rent in the shape of mortgages would be glad to hail the State as their landlord. We want, however, to avoid the danger which I have been told has come upon Ireland. I have been credibly informed so by Irishmen. There the farmers, through the Land Courts, are well off, but the workmen are no better off. If a workman got too small a holding he might be taken advantage of by the larger farmer, his employer. Therefore on the principle of preferring the ills he knew of to flying to others which he knew not of, he would not seek to alter his position. I venture to think that it is necessary to exact some of the old duties from the landowner before talking of buying wholesale. The aged land labourers demand a few millions yearly in the way of pension, which could be well afforded out of about 220,000,000*l.* a year of rent, while the workman on the land does not get as yet anything like his just reward, I mean the workman while he works. After these deductions, and others, the State can buy on better terms. There is an old saying that justice must prevail if the heavens fall, but I say that justice may prevail and that heaven may thereby come down to earth.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,526. I think you say that you objected to the system of landlordism?—Yes.

43,527. What would you put in its place?—I would bring back what is now theoretical. I would make the State the owner of all land, as it is now in theory.

43,528. Do you think the State is capable of making a good landlord?—Yes, I believe so.

43,529. I suppose rents would still have to be paid?—Oh, yes.

43,530. But they would be paid to the State instead of to the present landlords?—Yes.

43,531. Do you think that the present landlords would continue to live in the country?—I do not know. If they went they would not take their land with them. They could go then if they liked.

43,532. Who would collect the rents; someone on behalf of the State, I suppose?—I daresay the landlords' agents would be very willing to do it.

43,533. I am not speaking so much of the individual who actually collects as to the principle. The system would be that the State would have to collect the rents?—Yes.

43,534. So that if the rents were not paid it would be the taxpayers or the ratepayers of the county who would suffer; in short, it comes to this, that the ratepayers would become the landlords under the State?—Yes.

43,535. And under those circumstances who would do the repairs?—The State of course. I will hand in some photographs of the cottages. [The witness handed in photographs.]

43,536. With regard to those cottages, were they occupied by the labourers?—They were at one time both occupied by labourers, but in each case the labourers died, the tenants of the first two cottages.

43,537. Are those the labourers to whom your father paid 4*s.* a week?—Yes.

43,538. And they lived all their life in these cottages at, you say, 11*l.* 5*s.* a year, that is about 4*s.* a week?—Yes.

43,539. What are the wages now payable on that land?—The last I know of—I cannot bring it quite down to the present time—but the last that my father paid to my knowledge was 1*s.* 3*d.* a day, and food, of course, and several perquisites.

43,540. Then that is an increase in the wages?—Yes.

43,541. I suppose the tendency of the labourers' wages has been to increase from that time?—Extremely so, from just about 1873 or 1874.

43,542. So that they are better off now than they were then?—Yes, they are better off than they were then.

43,543. On that farm are the buildings now being improved?—No, I do not think there has been any improvement at all since that time. This is instead of the original lease. [The witness handed in the document.]

43,544. One of the photographs you put in seems to be a very good thatched cottage, though small?—They are rather flattered in those photographs on account of the trees around them. There are only two of them that are on my father's farm. There are several others in the neighbourhood, but they are much of a muchness in that respect, I think.

43,545. Is it the custom in your neighbourhood that the thatch is repaired by the tenant or by the landlord?—By the tenant. The tenant receives the rent of the cottage, too.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,546. What are the floors of those cottages made of?—Earth, and a considerable portion of the walls of some of them is made of earth, too.

43,547. One objection to the earth floor, I think, is that if it is not very well made it varies with every state of the atmosphere; if it is a little damp, then this sort of floor becomes mud, does it not?—Yes, it is very liable to that.

43,548. Is there an actual lack of cottages for the labourers on this estate now, do you know?—As regards my father's farm?

43,549. Yes?—There is not a lack of cottages. An old maiden woman lives in one of those, and I do not think that they really want the workman now, because they cannot afford to pay him.

43,550. You put in a bidding paper. Does that sort of thing go on commonly in the district now?—It is not very common, but it happens now and again.

43,551. And it is of considerable importance to some people, is it not?—Yes, it is of great importance; it starts them in life.

43,552. I am very glad you put that in. I only wish you had a Welsh version as well. What do you call it in Welsh?—"Neithior."

43,553. What do you call the bidding?—"Neithior"; the bidding itself is there called "Neithior" in Welsh. "Gwahodd" means to summon to it. I suppose "Neithior" is to hold it at night.

Professor Rhŷs.

Perhaps it is.

Mr. Grove.

43,554. Just one question. If land were nationalized you would, of course, pay the landlords a proper value for their land that you took of them, would you not?—Yes, proper value, but it takes a good deal of thinking and consideration to know what a proper value is.

43,555. What do you mean by saying that the State would do the repairs? Would you not have some system of selling the land to the tenant farmers, so that they might become their own freeholders?—No, I would not sell it at all, or else we would have three or four different rents to pay. There is the chief rent now. I do not know how many holdings there are there now, only they are practically merged in the rent to the present landlord; but I should certainly have the State to retain it afterwards. It has lost hold of it once, and that is the cause of a great deal of the evil.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,556. You have put in this bidding letter of 1848, which shows, I suppose, that it was a general custom—that there was a very kindly feeling amongst the tenant farmers to help anyone taking a new farm. Is that so?—I do not know that it was so much the kindly feeling; it was a very old custom, I think.

43,557. There has been a great competition for farms, which you say is the reason why that custom has been dropped?—No, I do not think so. It has got out of use as things do get out of use. I do not think that has anything to do with its dropping.

43,558. But you spoke of the landlord being more honourable in his feelings than the neighbours?—Yes.

43,559. The neighbours come and try to oust the next-of-kin, do they not?—Yes.

43,560. Is that a general thing?—I think it is very general.

43,561. That does not show a very nice feeling?—No, it does not—not anything like what it ought to be.

43,562. The old bidding principle had this great advantage, that it did find a little capital at any rate to begin with in starting the new comer?—Yes. Even it applied to the cottager to get his few articles of furniture, as well as to the tenant farmer.

Chairman.

43,563. Mr. Vincent asks the following questions: "Do you think that the State would be a good landlord"?—Yes, I believe so.

43,564. "If the State let at less than the com-" petition rent, would it not be an injustice to " those who were not farmers?"—It is evident, I think, that competition does not arrive at justice at all.

43,565. I think, Dr. Rhys Jones, you have been in Australia?—Yes.

43,566. You know that the sale and transfer of land is very cheap and easy there?—Yes.

43,567. You can sell land as easily as you can a chair or any other article or commodity. You know that two-thirds of the land in New South Wales belongs to the State?—Well, I do not know that.

43,568. You will take that?—Yes.

43,569. Perhaps you know that out of the taxation of 10,000,000*l.* required to keep New South Wales going only one-third of the taxation is required from the individual taxpayer. Was that so in your time?—I do not know the particulars of those matters.

43,570. That is so now, and that is what you would like to see in England. I understand you would like to see the taxation relieved by the State being the owner of the land?—I want people to get the fruits of their labour.

43,571. You want people to get the fruits of their labour, but then at the same time you are aware that when the land belongs to the State, as it does in Australia, there is very little compensation allowed for improvements?—I do not see that the state of things in Australia need be perfect.

43,572. But it is in working order there?—No, because they sell the land there.

43,573. And lease as well?—Yes, they lease as well; but they sell.

43,574. They sell to a certain extent, but not to a great extent?—I think they do to a great extent.

43,575. Not to a great extent. The feeling is in favour of the sort of idea which you have, that it should be the property of the State, and that it should be let on lease, and after a term of years be retained to the community at large?—Yes.

43,576. Without any great compensation for improvements being allowed. That is your line of thought, is it not?—I should so far as possible do away with this speculation. It is impossible to do away with it altogether, but so far as possible it should be done away with, as any bargain for a length of time brings all the evils of speculation into it.

43,577. Your line of thought is that you want to get rid of the landlord; you want the tenant to rent straight away from the State, is not that so?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

43,578. You are owner of a farm of 114 acres?—I am.

43,579. And you live at Llwynduris Farm, Llandyssul?—Yes.

43,580. And you are tenant of 263 acres?—Yes.

43,581. Who is your landlord?—Charles Marshall Griffiths, Esq., Llwynduris.

43,582. Will you tell us what rent you pay?—365*l.*

43,583. That is for the 263 acres. Then the date of entry is at Michaelmas, I suppose I may take it?—Quite so.

43,584. Are farms let on leases in this neighbourhood?—Yes, my lord.

43,585. And some yearly tenancies I suppose?—Yes, my lord.

43,586. Is there as much demand for land now as there was in former years?—There is quite as much demand for land, but not so much for leases.

43,587. Who farms the best a leaseholder or a yearly tenant?—I do not think there is much difference in that respect.

43,588. Compensation is paid, I may take it, by the good landlords for taking land for planting, or when any damage is done?—Quite so.

43,589. Are there any clauses in agreements which tenant farmers consider oppressive, and which have a tendency to bad farming. If so, would you name them?—There are.

43,590. Would you tell us what they are?—A tenant farmer ought to get the best advantage for doing everything he can upon his farm, provided, of course, that he does not deteriorate it.

43,591. What do you consider oppressive?—Selling hay, selling turnips and straw, and this and that.

43,592. But are those enforced. Are you obliged to keep to those conditions?—Yes, my lord.

43,593. Are you not allowed to sell hay or straw off your large farm?—No, my lord.

43,594. Not even if you bring back an equivalent in manure?—No, my lord.

43,595. Are there any penalising clauses. Are there any clauses besides those which you object to?—I do not know of any in that way. I should say that they have a tendency to bad farming, because they do not give the tenant the chance of doing the best he could do.

43,596. No other service, I take it, is done, other than the payment of rent?—I do not know, my lord.

43,597. Do the landlords give many permanent reductions in the neighbourhood?—Very few.

43,598. I suppose they give five or six months' grace for the rent. The rent is paid five or six months after it is due?—That is so, sometimes.

Chairman—continued.

43,599. But not always?—Not always, not in my case, my lord.

43,600. Do you have to pay at the time?—Quite so.

43,601. Whenever the rent is due it has to be paid?—I have to pay it when it is due.

43,602. I suppose farmers are short of money in the neighbourhood; they are not very well off in the neighbourhood, are they?—Very badly off.

43,603. As regards haulage—is that strictly enforced. Do you always have to do the haulage for improvements?—The haulage is generally done by the tenant.

43,604. Do you know of any cases where the landlord contracts out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do, my lord.

43,605. Could you name them, or would you rather not name them?—Myself, for one.

43,606. Is that in your agreement?—It is, my lord.

43,607. Would you hand it up. [The witness handed in the agreement.] The custom of the district is, I suppose, that manure is left on a valuation to the incoming tenant?—Quite so.

43,608. What do you think of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is it satisfactory or not?—I do not believe it is workable, and there is no co-operation.

43,609. Tenant farmers are a very hardworking class of men, as a rule?—Very hardworking in this country.

43,610. And their children and wives help them. That, I think, we have heard on all sides. Have many people gone away from this neighbourhood into Glamorganshire?—They have.

43,611. When do you think the depression commenced?—11 or 12 years ago.

43,612. About 1883?—About 1883.

43,613. What do you think are the principal causes of this depression; I take it unfavourable seasons, foreign competition, excessive railway rates, and scarcity of labour are the general causes?—Those are the ones I would mention, my lord.

43,614. Would you suggest any remedy that you think would help this state of things?—I should think that before the land will produce what it could produce every man ought to be the owner of what he tills himself.

43,615. He ought to be the owner of his own farm?—He ought to be the owner of his own farm, and I think that the Government, of course, should grant money to the tenant on small interest, so as that he should be able to buy it.

43,616. To lend the money on the security of the farm?—Yes, my lord. I know of instances about here where what was poor land before is looking now in splendid condition because it had been tilled well.

Chairman—continued.

43,617. Then it would encourage the holder to lay out capital, because he would have a feeling of security?—Quite so.

43,618. As regards the relationships between the landlords and the tenant farmers in this district, are they friendly or otherwise?—Most friendly.

43,619. You are on good terms with your landlord?—On very good terms with my landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,620. Have you no clauses preventing you ploughing up some land under a penalty?—I have.

43,621. You said, in answer to Lord Carrington, that you did not have any such clause in your lease?—No, I do not think I said that.

43,622. Do you know of instances where tenants have not been able to obtain compensation for having done hauling throughout the farm, upon leaving?—Yes.

43,623. Are there many such cases about?—There are some.

43,624. Do you know if they have ever made any application for the payment of compensation?—That I cannot say.

43,625. With regard to the stock of the neighbourhood, as a rule do the people study anything as to the class of animals they breed?—By far too little.

43,626. You think that the best stock pays the best?—Yes, the best stock pays best. There is a demand for good stock always.

43,627. Do the landlords of the district do anything in the way of improving the stock? Do they bring good sires?—They do a little in that way.

43,628. Would the tenants, do you think, avail themselves of the opportunity if they brought some good bulls and entire horses into the neighbourhood?—I think so.

43,629. I mean at a moderate price?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,630. You say that penalising clauses are not often enforced. Is that because the restrictive clauses in the agreement are observed?—Yes.

43,631. Have you ever applied to your landlord to sell hay and straw in a year like this, when selling hay and straw would pay you much better than to consume it on the premises?—I have.

43,632. And he refused you?—Yes.

43,633. Absolutely?—He refused me, but he gave me that year, when I applied—that was four or five years ago—a sum of 15*l.* reduction instead of that.

43,634. Of course that was only temporary?—That was temporary.

43,635. You want more freedom to dispose of the produce, and also more freedom to cultivate the soil as you think proper, that is, provided that the farm is not deteriorated?—Yes, I think that the tenant ought to get every freedom in that way.

43,636. You think that the rent of small farms is higher as a rule than large ones. Can you assign any reason for it; is it because the competition is keener for small farms, or is it because of the cost of erecting buildings?—I think it is because there are more people who are able to take a small farm than a big one.

43,637. You attribute it then, chiefly to competition?—Yes.

43,638. Do you think you could pay the rent of your place unless you owned the 114 acres?—Not for the last two years.

43,639. So that really you are paying for Mr. Charles Marshall's farm out of your private resources?—That is quite so.

43,640. Do you think it is usually the case with the tenant farmers that they have to fall back on some private resources?—I think so in this neighbourhood.

43,641. That cannot last for ever, can it?—No, I do not believe so.

43,642. If you have no private resources, of course you would have to go to the wall?—Quite so.

43,643. Then it is high time that something should be done in order to save farmers from ruin?—I think so.

43,644. Do you think there is a keen desire among farmers to become the owners of their holdings, that is, provided that there was security of tenure. Do you think the tenant farmers would prefer to be secure in their holdings, or would they prefer to be owners?—If they were owners I should think that they would do more justice to their farms.

43,645. Do you think they would do more justice to a farm than if a farmer felt sure that he would not be disturbed, and that when he left he would get compensation for the improvements he had made. Do you not think a farmer under those circumstances would make the best of his farm?—I think he would.

43,646. You will admit this, that of course there is a certain amount of difficulty when a man becomes the owner of a farm; say that he expends all the money he has at his disposal to buy a farm, and he has six or seven children, when he dies he may want to give each child an equal portion. How will that do? When he makes his will he will have to make a charge upon this property for every child; so that really the property will become encumbered to the eldest child, and that is not a desirable thing, is it?—It is not.

43,647. That difficulty has not occurred to you?—No.

43,648. So that now you are rather changing your mind, and you are inclined to go in for security of tenure?—No, I think a man would farm his own farm better than he would farm under other circumstances.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,649. I have only one question to ask: did you lose money in such a year as last year on the farm which you rent?—I have lost money.

43,650. You could not have paid the rent except out of capital, I take it?—No.

43,651. Did you lose money on your own farm?—On this farm that I am farming now.

43,652. The one that belongs to you?—I lost in this way, that an abatement was given.

43,653. You are the owner of one farm as I understand?—Yes.

43,654. Did you lose on that farm as well as on the farm that you rent?—I do not farm that one; I let it.

43,655. I did not understand that. So that what you meant was that out of the rent of that you paid the rent of the other farm?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

43,656. Do you think there is enough labour on the land now?—No, there is not what there ought to be.

43,657. Why? Is that because the farmers cannot afford to pay the men?—One reason is because the farmers have not enough capital to pay them.

43,658. Would there be cottages enough, supposing they could get men more readily?—There is a good supply of cottages.

43,659. Are you troubled with the question of game at all?—No, not much.

43,660. You do not complain in that way?—No.

43,661. Do you think that land has to bear too many burdens in the way of rates and so on, an undue proportion?—I think it has.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,662. How many servant men do you keep?—I keep one servant man, and the others are labourers.

43,663. Where does your servant man sleep. What sort of accommodation have you for your servant man?—He sleeps in a loft above the horses.

43,664. Is that the usual thing in this part of the country?—That is so.

43,665. Do you know whether that leads to any difficulties or trouble?—Well, no, I do not.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,666. May I ask why it would be better to own a farm than to hire it. You let your own farm instead of living on it?—Yes, this is a small one, and the one I occupy is a bigger one.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,667. You instanced your holding as contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. It is before the date of the last Act. You have a lease, have you not?—Yes.

43,668. This lease has not yet expired?—No.

43,669. It commenced in 1882, before the last Agricultural Holdings Act was passed?—Yes.

43,670. Therefore there was a chance then for a landowner to contract out if he liked?—Yes.

43,671. Do you know the terms of the 1883 Act, the present Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,672. You said in answer to Professor Rhŷs that you did not see any disadvantage in the servant man sleeping out above the horses in the stable, in the loft. Have you found it an advantage sometimes to have a servant sleeping by the horses?—I have found it an advantage.

43,673. In what way?—If something occurs in the yard he is more likely to hear of it.

43,674. And in the stable too?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,675. He is more likely to hear the noise you mean?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Edward Davies called and examined

Chairman.

43,676. Do you live in Cardigan?—I do.

43,677. And are you an estate agent?—I am, my lord.

43,678. On what do you propose to speak?—On the minutes I have handed in.

43,679. Will you read your statement?—I am a solicitor and land agent residing at Cardigan, where I have been in practice for nearly 30 years. I am and have been for over 16 years agent for Thomas Edward Lloyd, of Coedmore, owner of the Coedmore estate, situate in the counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Carmarthen (2,400 acres about), and Trewern estate, in the same counties (2,900 acres about), and also agent for the Llanina estate (about 3,200 acres), the property of Messrs. I have expended in buildings and repairs on the Coedmore and Trewern estates during the last 9 or 10 years the sum of 1,800*l.*, and no increase has been made in the rent. The buildings and repairs on the Llanina estate were ordered by the late Mr. Longcroft His son, Mr. C. G. Longcroft, was only four years in possession after his father, and I cannot state the amount of repairs done, which was pretty considerable, by the late Mr. C. R. Longcroft. The repairs and buildings were made by their direction and the superintendence of the farm bailiff. The estate is about 23 or 25 miles distant from here. The tenants assisted in the haulage of material for building, but not compulsorily. Their men were allowed for their dinner and refreshment when in at the yard of the town. Politics and religion made no difference in the management of the estate. The best man was endeavoured to be selected. The tenants, with very few exceptions, are all Nonconformists. The sons or daughters of the deceased tenants have had the first refusal of the taking of the farm, and generally have become the tenants. With regard to game, since the Ground Game Act came into operation there is very little game on the Coedmore estate. What little there is, is principally on the Coedmore demesne, farmed by the owner himself. On the Trewern estate there is scarcely any game since the above Act, although at one time (owing to its natural advantages) it was fairly stocked with mixed game. On the Llanina estate there is some game but not very much now. The farm bailiff, Evan Thomas, can speak as to this, as the estate is distant from Cardigan about 23 miles, and it is practically more under his supervision than mine. That is all the statement I have to make. See 48,159.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,680. You have given an instance of continuing abatements of rent?—Yes.

43,681. Has the tenant any chance in going before the Assessment Committee to get his assessment diminished in consequence of abatements?—I believe he has.

43,682. The practice appears to be very different in different parts of the country. Can you tell us what the practice is of the Assessment Committee here?—I have not had much practice before the Assessment Committee, I should say, 43,683. Do you know as a matter of fact whether any of the tenants who have had these abatements have had a reduction of their assessment?—No, I do not.

43,684. I take your answer that you do not know that they have?—I do not know personally.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,685. Did they not press you for a permanent reduction on the score that they cannot get their rates adjusted. Have you ever heard that advanced as an argument?—Not particularly.

43,686. Do they ever advance that as an argument that if you gave a permanent reduction they would be able to get the rates adjusted accordingly?—They have in some instances put that forward.

43,687. Did that suggest to you that they could not get it; that they failed to get it on the abatement?—I do not think they have made any application.

Sir John Llewelyn.

You would perhaps be able to interest yourself in that. It is a great question in some places. We find the practice to be in some cases that they allow a reduction of the rates on account of the abatement.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,688. Then they would go on paying too high a rate if that is not so?—That is so until the alteration is made.

43,689. You have a great many farms on the different estates that you manage?—Yes, I have.

43,690. Every now and then you find a family where a farmer has three or four, or five, or perhaps more, sons. What usually becomes of those sons What are they brought up to?—They are brought up to different trades and professions, and the Church and dissent. The youngest are brought up so, but the eldest generally remains at home.

43,691. And the youngest go away to the towns and to England?—Yes.

43,692. And they push their way in various departments of trade and the professions?—Yes, that is so from what I have seen.

43,693. Are the parents still able to help them on in that way?—I think so.

Mr. Grove.

43,694. When you make abatements, do you give notice of the abatements to the tenants? Do they know some little time before rent day?—Not as a rule.

43,695. Would it not be advisable to do that, so that they might know exactly the amount of money they have to bring to the rent audit, do you think?—They are taken more by surprise when they are allowed it at the rent audit, and they think more of it.

43,696. There may be perhaps your view on the one side and the tenant farmer's views on other?—Just so.

43,697. We have had cases brought before us where they have complained that they had sold their stock at a very low price to get the money to pay the rent, and then when they have gone to pay the rent they have not wanted all the money that they had prepared?—Perhaps it might be more advantageous to give them notice.

43,698. We find it pretty general that five or six months, or something of that sort, is given to them, so that they know exactly what they have to pay?—Yes.

43,699. Have you made any remark with regard to a Land Court in your evidence?—No, I have not been asked.

43,700. Have you any ideas at all about that, as to whether it would be desirable in any way, or do you think it would not?—I think it would be most undesirable, from what I know.

43,701. I suppose that whatever tribunal were formed, or whatever arrangement was made, if the landlord and the tenant always come together first in a friendly way to try and agree upon the rent and the conditions, would not that do away somewhat with the objection to a Land Court, do you think?—Decidedly.

43,702. And that they should only go to a Land Court when they were obliged to do so?—Only when they are obliged to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,703. Do we understand from your reply to Mr. Grove that you admit the necessity of some sort of tribunal in extreme cases?—I do not think that the law of contract ought to be violated.

43,704. No, but that was the inference which I drew from your reply to Mr. Grove?—I do not know what the advantage of a Land Court would be.

43,705. The suggestion made by Mr. Grove was this, that a tribunal, whether it be a Land Court or anything else, should settle disputes when they arose between the landlord and the tenant either as to the adjustment of rent or as to the conditions under which a farm is cultivated?—As a last resort you mean, I suppose?

43,706. Yes, as a last resort?—Well, it might be done.

43,707. Is it the fact that you have supplied us with the particulars of the amount of money that has been expended on all the estates?—No, only the two estates, Coedmore and Trewern. I have not given the items of the others, because I do not know them.

43,708. Could you tell us offhand what proportion the repairs bear to the income?—I could not tell you exactly.

43,709. Could you supply the Commission with that information?—Yes, I could.

43,710. Later on you will do that?—Yes, only for the two estates.

43,711. Yes, for the two estates?—I will do so.

43,712. We should be very glad to receive it. Were these abatements made on your advice?—Yes, generally.

43,713. You heard what Mr. Brigstocke stated, did you not?—I did.

43,714. He stated that he considered that taking the last 15 years the average reduction would be about 25 per cent.?—The average reduction in prices, do you mean?

43,715. Yes, in the value of farms?—Yes something like that.

43,716. Are you prepared to confirm what he said?—Yes, I believe so, or perhaps say 20 per cent. instead of 15 to 25.

43,717. That would be taking it at the mean of 20 per cent.?—Yes.

43,718. If you only make an abatement of 10 per cent. you have not really done justice, then, in that way?—But then that is taking it in different years.

43,719. Yes, and that would strengthen the average; that is what we are talking about?—Those are the abatements I have made.

43,720. Upon your own confession you ought to have made abatements of 10 per cent. more?—Well, I do not say that. Those are the abatements I have made.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,721. Upon your own confession, practically, you ought to have made 10 per cent. more abatement if you admit that Mr. Brigstocke's figures are nearly correct?—Well, perhaps so.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,722. May I ask you, are you a practical farmer as well as a solicitor and land agent?—No, I am not a practical farmer.

43,723. You can talk Welsh, I suppose?—Yes, I can.

43,724. Supposing a tenant leaves any farm on this estate after doing much hauling, does he always get compensation for so doing?—There was not much hauling ever done on the estate.

43,725. Not towards the buildings?—No, not a great deal, but it was always done voluntarily.

43,726. I mean it might be done voluntarily, but supposing, for some reason or another, he has to leave in a year or two, are many allowances made?—Some allowances have been made.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,727. Do you grow much timber on the estate?—There is a lot of timber.

43,728. Is there any damage done to the farms by hauling timber?—Very little has been sold during the last few years or for many years.

43,729. When it is sold do you generally agree as to the damage with the one who purchases it, or do you generally agree with the tenant himself?—We generally agree with the tenant himself, but we have had no sales for many years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,730. I should like to ask one question upon what Mr. Griffith's asked you with regard to the haulage. Would you not agree with Mr. Brigstocke when he said that compensation should justly be given for every 6*d.* that is laid out by the tenant?—Yes.

43,731. You say it was done sometimes?—Yes.

43,732. You think it would be just to do it always?—I think so.

[Adjourned for a short time.]

Mr. Charles Evans Morgan-Richardson called and examined.

Chairman.

43,733. You are an owner of property, a tenant farmer, a solicitor, and a land agent?—I am.

43,734. What district do you represent?—I speak for the neighbouring district in the counties of Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembrokeshire.

43,735. What particular estates?—Particularly for the estates known as the Clynfiew estate and the Noyadd Trefawr estates. I am agent for several properties of smaller size in the neighbourhood, but I choose to speak for those two estates in particular. I thought perhaps I might save some time of the Commission if I were to give a brief outline of what I had to say upon this subject.

43,736. If you please. Will you read that to us?—I have to say that I am interested in this land question both as a solicitor and a land agent, also as owner of several properties myself. I am also interested for a number of freeholders in this part of the country who are my clients, and for their mortgagees. I may add that the question of mortgages is very important from my point of view. I may say that I receive and pay interest on something between a quarter of a million and half a million of money which is invested on mortgage in this neighbourhood. Speaking of these estates, I would say that they are generally, as compared with English estates, of small size, the largest being about 4,000 or 5,000 acres, and the average size being about 3,000, rented for about 1,500*l.* to 2,000*l.* a year. The farms are small, averaging from 60*l.* to 80*l.* per annum; it would be a large farm in this country that is rented for more than 100*l.* a year. A great deal has been said as regards the rise in the value of land in this country as compared with the rise in the value of land in England, and I am prepared to admit that there has been a rise during the last 100 years, and a considerable rise, but I think that the rise is to be explained by particular causes. One cause in this country is that our land is principally grazing land, and the produce of grazing land has risen during the last 100 years, the produce of corn lands having fallen; that a great deal of land is now cultivated which 100 years ago was not in cultivation at all; that roads have been made into the country and through every part of the country, and have developed land which was practically unenclosed 100 years ago; and a very important factor has been the making of railways in this country. The land 80 or 100 years back was far away from the best markets, so that land near the big towns in England had a very much greater advantage over land in this country than it has in the present day, the railway practically bringing us within a short distance of the best markets. And arising from this is the fact that the produce in this country

—the grazing land produce—has very materially risen. I have with me certain schedules which give the price of stock in the years 1840, 1850, and 1856. I propose if they are of any value to hand them in to the Commission. I have extracted them in one case from a diary kept on a gentleman's home farm in the year 1850. They show in those cases a very marked increase in prices. Bad as the prices are at the present time, they are much greater than they were. In 1850 fresh butter was sold, containing 24 ounces to the pound, at 10*d.* to 1*s*, and I see that fat cows sold at 3*l.* 10*s.* to 5*l.* The following are the tables.

Something has been said, in explanation of the great rise in rents, as to the repairs having been executed by the tenants, and I have to say that as far as the permanent improvements are concerned it is not my experience that this is done by the tenants. It is the practice for all the buildings in this country to be done by the landlords. There has been an immense improvement in the farming of tenants during the last 20 or 30 years, but it is almost an invariable rule that buildings are executed by the landlord. I have one particular case which I have permission to put in before the Commissioners. In many cases people do not like me to give information as to their exact rental, and as to the exact outlay for repairs, but in the case of the Noyadd Trefawr estate, which was very well managed by trustees during the minority of the present owner, the accounts of the estate were very carefully and elaborately kept, and not only were they well kept, but they were afterwards audited on behalf of the persons owning the estate, and vouched by a firm of chartered accountants at Bristol. The figures which I now hand in may therefore be taken as absolutely correct. They show that during the 18 years the estate was in the hands of the trustees 4,061*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* was expended on a small estate, the gross rental of which was only 1,520*l.* per annum. In addition to that certain sums were allowed to the tenants for repairs which they had executed. The total amount of these repairs came to over 15 per cent. of the gross rental, and it bore, I might say, a very much larger proportion to the net rental of the estate. At that time the estate was very heavily charged with jointures, and there was very little money accumulating; in one year hardly anything at all was accumulated by the trustees, the whole of the income being expended on repairs. I propose to hand in to the Commission the schedules, which I have permission to do, showing the detailed statement of these repairs. (See Appendix.)

With regard to the question whether politics and religion affect the relations between landlord and tenant, I have to say that I do not think that they have affected them in the slightest degree. No difference whatever is made on estates that I have connexion with between the application of a Nonconformist and the application of a Churchman, and if it were attempted by a landlord to plant his estates with Churchmen he would find his land lying waste, because there are no Churchmen to come forward for them. There are on the Clynfiew estate and on the Noyadd estate some 150 or 160 tenants, and I do not think on either estate there are 10 Churchmen. The question is never asked. When I was younger and more inexperienced I did ask, about 14 or 15 years ago, the question whether the tenant was a Churchman or not, but I very soon discontinued that (within 12 months in fact), because I found that no landlord ever paid the slightest attention to it. One landlord, with more experience than any other man I know, and who was himself a Conservative member for an adjoining county, said that whenever he was pressed by his vicar to appoint a Churchman and a Conservative, he generally discovered that it was an excuse for the fact that the man was either a bad farmer or was short of capital. I have never attempted it since. There is the very best feeling, I think, between tenants and their landlords, particularly between the tenants of the estate and their own particular landlord. I might not unfairly use a simile, and say that the relations between the tenant and his landlord are very similar to the way in which the world regards gentlemen of my profession. Everybody is agreed that lawyers are rogues as a class, but everybody excepts his own particular lawyer, and in the same way I think that the tenants of this country might suppose that landlords are as a class exacting; some of them might think so, but they would always make an exception in favour of their own landlord. I do not know that there has been anything in the way of a capricious eviction. I never heard of anything of the kind. The question is asked in the syllabus, and my reply is that I have never known a case within my own experience. I have heard of such things, but nothing has ever come before me personally. Abatements have been made during the bad times—the bad times which commenced in 1883. As times improved, the abatements were discontinued. The bad times returned, I think, in 1886, and abatements were then made, the abatements generally averaging 10 per cent. on the gross rent. They have returned again, and abatements are made at the present time. With regard to game, there is no game in this country. I do not suppose that there is one landlord within 40 miles of this place who could say that he had killed 100 pheasants in one day. The ground game is very scarce since the passing of the Ground Game Act of 1880, and hares are almost extinct. With regard to compensation for improvements, I think it is usual, when a tenant leaves a farm, particularly if he is compelled to leave, to make him some compensation for the work he has done in haulage. In respect to this question, there were two small suggestions which I should like to have made myself.

Chairman—continued.

The one is that there might be some alteration of the law with regard to permanent improvements. I would suggest it in the interests of the tenants, just as in the interests of the landlords. With regard to permanent improvements of the nature of buildings, at the present time, if the tenant has not got a written consent from his landlord to erect the buildings, when the tenancy determines he must leave the buildings without any compensation, but if the more common-sense view were to apply to the law as to these permanent improvements, it should be possible for a tenant, in case the landlord argued that the building referred to is of no value to the farmer, to remove it and take it to another place, which would at once set the question at rest as to whether it was an improvement or not; and, on the other hand, it would be very unfair that a landlord should pay for a building which was unnecessary to the holding. I can mention a small case in point, a small farm which belongs to me near this town, and belonged to my predecessor, and was farmed as a pleasure farm. A great number of buildings were put upon it which were wholly unnecessary except for a gentleman who wished to make farming a hobby. I have let those buildings, but I have let some of the fields to a man who keeps cows for the town. This tenant discovered that it would pay him well to put up a stable and keep a horse for hauling. I was of opinion that there were already sufficient buildings for the farm, and I was perfectly willing for the tenant to put up those buildings, and to do so practically at his own risk, if circumstances should arise that he left the farm to take a larger holding. There being already far more buildings upon that farm than I should require, it would be unjust that I, on the one hand, should be compelled to pay for that building which is of no value to me, and unjust, on the other hand, that I should be able to retain it and keep it for myself, if I was not willing to give the tenant any compensation. Then there is another suggestion in connexion with this subject of compensation for improvements. I so frequently hear men say that things were not so when they came to the farm. I think it is a great pity that there is no record kept of the state of cultivation and the state of buildings when any new tenant enters a farm. I think if a report could be made either by two valuers or one valuer, or by two independent farmers, and signed by the landowner or his agent, and by the tenant, as to the exact state of cultivation at the time a man enters, and as to the state of the buildings, and as to the state of the fences, it would be an immense advantage when the time came for changing the terms of the tenancy. With regard to the other suggestions for remedying the present state of things, there are men far more competent than I am to make those. The question of improvement of railway rates and foreign competition—all those tend terribly against us at the present time, but I would speak as to the suggested remedy of a Land Court. There are many reasons, many arguments against a Land

Chairman—continued.

Court from a landlord's point of view, and from what I think the point of view of fairness, but there are also arguments against it from a tenant's point of view. The landlords would at once cease to take any interest in their holdings, and it would be more difficult to get buildings put upon their farms than even at the present time. And (this is one of the greatest objections that tenants have at the present moment) it would very much increase the number of sales of land. Landlords would be realising their properties wherever they possibly could, and with respect to the lands which they would retain, they would commence to occupy their lands instead of letting them as they do now to tenants. As to a court to fix rents, I am afraid it would be a greater benefit to gentlemen of my profession than either to landlords or to tenants. I have no belief myself in valuers. I think the farmer is a far more competent person to judge of the value of a farm before he takes it than a valuer who takes perhaps two or three hours, or even a day, to go round a farm which he has never seen before. If the times were good I do not think that the rents are high at the present time, but last year and the year before it would be difficult for a man to farm certain farms if he had his land rent free. The average rent in the neighbourhood is low. I do not think there are many farms let at over 15*s.* an acre. The average on the Clynfiew estate is 10*s.* 2*d.* an acre, and the average on the Noyadd estate is about 11*s.* 6*d.* an acre. I would say, too, that there is not a single farm upon both those estates which could not be let to-morrow, if it were vacant, at the same rent that it is let at to-day. With regard to fixity of tenure, I consider that it would be only making a present to existing tenants at the expense of future generations, and I am not certain that it would improve the style of farming, because I do not believe that the freeholders, who have of course the highest form of fixity of tenure, farm at the present time any better than the tenants from year to year. If I were to name the four or five best farmers in this neighbourhood I should name four or five who are farming on simple agreements from year to year. There is one other objection to fixity of tenure—from the labourer's point of view. Many of the successful farmers have commenced in a small way as gentlemen's herdsmen, or as labourers, getting on from one farm to another, increasing it in size according as they developed their capital, and these are among the most desirable of tenants. If there is fixity of tenure for the existing class of tenant farmer, and a free sale of tenant's interest, it would be practically impossible for any labourer to become a tenant farmer. I think that this is a point which should be made very strongly, because a great many labourers apply for farms, and are very competent to take some of the smaller holdings in this country. There is the last case, and that is the case of the freeholder. It has already come before this Commission here to-day that a strong feeling exists in this neighbourhood on the part of many freeholders who have purchased their holdings, for some means of borrowing money from Government to pay for their holdings, or to pay off the existing mortgages Having a great deal of experience with this mortgaged property, I must say I sympathise very strongly with the movement. The greater part of the money which has been paid for these holdings has, I am sorry to say been borrowed, but the mortgagors pay their interest punctually even in bad times (with very few exceptions they pay punctually), but the great difficulty is the uncertainty of the mortgage, which may or may not be called up at any moment, and the man put to very considerable expense in finding the money elsewhere, and sometimes not able to find the money at all. The difficulties which have been suggested with regard to the Welsh land tenure, and the suggestions which have been made for a Land Court have, I may say, prejudiced these freeholders to a very great extent, because the rate of interest has proportionately increased. People have no longer that confidence in investing in land that they had eight or ten years ago. I may say that five or six years ago, before a Welsh Land Question was heard of, we were frequently offered, and I was frequently offered personally by London solicitors, large sums of money at 3 and 3½ per cent. to lend on land in Wales, because the interest was so punctually paid that it was supposed to be a very first-rate investment. But since this agitation has commenced for a Land Court a great many of these mortgages have been called in, and I find it quite impossible to get the money in again at those same rates. I think that a scheme for lending, and lending in such a way that the Government would not be prejudiced, and even so that the Government might lend the money at a profit itself, is perfectly practicable, and since the principle of doing that sort of thing has been recognised by the Small Holdings Act Committee, and especially by the Small Holdings Act itself, I do not see why we should not have assistance of that kind in this country. Those, my lord and gentlemen, are the points of my evidence.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,737–8. I see, with regard to timber cutting, you pay damage for hauling the timber over the farms?—Yes, the usual arrangement is that the person who buys the timber must compensate the tenant, and we inquire at the time that the purchaser is there, and we ascertain that he does compensate.

43,739. Do you think that the tenant himself is in a position to deal with the contractor?—I think so. There is generally an arrangement between the purchaser and the tenant. There is a certain amount of haulage required, and some trees are left as a compensation. After a man has left I never heard any grumbling, except in one particular case.

43,740. Have you not found that the tenants grumble that the timber is laid on the land very often, sometimes two years, without being taken away?—Yes, in one particular case I have.

43,741. And in only one?—In only one.

43,742. Do you not think it would be better for the landlord to make an agreement with the purchaser?—Well, he does make an agreement with the purchaser.

43,743. I mean as to the clearing off of the timber?—Oh, yes, we always do that. That is invariably done.

43,744. That the cutting of the timber shall be completed by a certain date?—Yes.

43,745. You do?—Yes.

43,746. You spoke with regard to the decrease of agricultural produce up to a certain point. Does that table include the particulars up to the present?—No, I have only given extracts in the table of prices that I have put in from a farm diary from the year 1850 to 1856; extracts from two farm dairies.

43,747. You could not give it up to the present date?—No, I am afraid I could not.

43,748. But I think you have already said that you consider that the present time is a most depressing time?—It is a most depressing time, the last 10 or 15 years, but I think that as compared with 1850 prices, bad as they are, are better now than then.

43,749. Then with regard to those tenants who purchase their holdings, at what rate do you generally lend the money?—At 4 per cent. generally.

43,750. They never get it at much less?—I am afraid not.

43,751. Suppose these tenants had some security that they could borrow money at 3 per cent., have you any way of preventing them—suppose the farm was sold, would not they calculate the amount of the purchase money to be at that rate?—But I do not think we should lend the money on the amount of the purchase money. We should not lend, say, two-thirds or four-fifths of the purchase money, but two-thirds or four-fifths of the proper value, to be certified by proper valuers. That would be your protection.

43,752. Not upon the purchase money?—No, not upon the purchase money.

43,753. I think you differ in opinion from some of the witnesses we have heard before us to-day, in saying that in the last two years it would be difficult to make things pay if the land were held rent free?—With regard to some land.

43,754. Not with regard to all?—Oh, no.

43,755. As to what kind of land would you consider you are right in saying that?—Well, heavy clay land, for instance.

43,756. Is there much heavy clay land in this district?—There is a good deal of heavy clay land.

43,757. You say that changes of tenancy are less frequent now?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,758. Do you draw any inference from that?—No, I draw no inferences. Changes of tenancy are not frequent; I draw no inference from it.

43,759. You would not go so far as to say that because changes are less frequent farming is a profitable business?—No, I would not say that. I draw no inference from it.

43,760. You say that letting to the highest bidder is exceptional, then we may gather that in some cases it has occurred?—It is quite possible in the case of very small owners, who have bought merely to invest a few hundred pounds, wishing to get the highest rate of interest for their money, but on all the large estates with which I have anything to do it is never done; it is never let to a man because he is the highest bidder.

43,761. We may take it that as a rule small holders do not attach so much importance to having a man with capital?—No, I would agree with you.

43,762. What are your views with regard to the game laws. Do you think they require alteration?—There is no game in this country, so the question would not arise, I think.

43,763. What about the laws of trespass. Is there any need of any alteration about trespass, because suggestions have been made to us very frequently that persons trespass when after mushrooms or something of that kind. Have you any mushrooms in this neighbourhood?—Yes, great quantities 43,764. Do the farmers complain of trespassers at all?—No, I do not think so.

43,765. Not to any great extent?—No, I do not think so.

43,766. Not sufficient to justify any alteration of the law?—No, I do not think so.

43,767. You say there is co-operation among farmers at harvest time?—Yes. There is a general arrangement for give-and-take at harvest time I think; farmers help one another in hay, and again in corn. They take it in turns.

43,768. And in thatching, I suppose?—I do not think there is much, well there is a little interchange in thatching too, but not so much. Hay and harvest is what I think my answer referred to.

43,769. Who repairs the cottages when they are let by a farmer. Is it the tenant or the landlord?—The landlord in the cases with which I have had to do; I think where there are thatched cottages a tenant replaces the thatch, but thatched cottages are almost going out of date in this country.

43,770. I suppose it is your opinion that it is time that thatched cottages should go out of date?—Yes, I think it is false economy to keep them.

43,771. It is a great burden on the tenant farmer; he really has to raise more wheat than he otherwise would, in order to thatch these cottages?—Yes, well, when wheat straw sells so well as it does now, I think it is a mistake.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,772. Your evidence was very interesting with regard to the loan of public money for the purchase of farms. Would you recommend that the loans should be made to anyone purchasing the farm, or only to the sitting tenant?—I think only to a man who was occupying the farm, and the moment the man sold the farm, even if there were Government money upon it, if it was sold to a man who did not occupy, I think the money ought to be called in and lent to a man who meant to occupy the farm.

43,773. I suppose 4 per cent. could still be paid, thus providing a sinking fund as well?—That is my idea.

43,774. Otherwise the amount would be always increasing, and it would be an enormous amount?—Yes. My idea was to lend at 3 per per cent., and allocate seven-eighths per cent. as a sinking fund to repay itself in 50 years, the additional one-eighth per cent. to cover the cost of insurance and the cost of collection.

43,775. Then you suggested, I think, four-fifths as the extreme of value to which you would let. Would you think, on consideration, that that was sufficient security; is it not going rather near the hedge?—If it were only taken upon the certified value, the proper value, I think I should be inclined to go as far as four-fifths, particularly as the repayment is being made every year, and the security is rising year by year in value.

43,776. The margin would be constantly increasing?—The margin would be constantly increasing.

43,777. But, supposing such a scheme had been at work in 1878, just before the depressing time came on, would it not have broken down?—I do not think so, because the mortgagors have paid their interest at 4 per cent., some at 4½ per cent., and continued to do so even in these bad times.

43,778. But with reductions and abatements?—No, no abatements.

43,779. You mean payments to the mortgagees—I understand you. Do you think that the advantage of such an offer could in any way be secured entirely to the tenant, from this point of view: supposing that it was known that money could be borrowed on these low terms from public sources, would it not have a tendency to put up the price?—The rule that only three-fourths or four-fifths should be applied would, I think, meet that objection, but I would even go further. I would say that this money should first of all be applied for the use of those persons who have already bought their farms, because if it were to be lent at once to persons buying at the present moment, it might have some effect in causing a fictitious rise in value.

43,780. It is very difficult to see how a competition price can be kept down, because if the farm was sold at anything like a competition price, 4 per cent. on that, I suppose, would increase the amount of the outgoing—it would be larger than the rent, would it not?—If a man borrowed the whole amount.

43,781. If he borrowed the whole four-fifths he would have to find cash for the rest?—He would have to find cash for the rest. Of course if he borrowed the whole amount it would be so.

43,782. Then he would really be paying a higher rent than he has been doing during these years?—That is almost outweighed by the advantage of becoming his own owner.

43,783. I only wanted just to get at the fact. What would you say to the principle; do you think that ultimately this offer could be made only to a single class, like tenant farmers?—I think so, and particularly as we have the recommendation of the Small Holdings Committee and the Small Holdings Act to establish the principle.

43,784. And would not you extend it to a labourer on a farm?—Yes, most certainly, and almost more so.

43,785. Though he was not a sitting tenant?—Yes, though not a sitting tenant.

43,786. Then would you confine it to Wales, or would you extend it to England?—I would extend it to England.

43,787. So that you would get a large public fund always increasing and invested in mortgages on land. That is what it would come to, pretty much?—Yes, it would.

43,788. Do you think there would be any way in which it could be done without a large outlay of public money?—I am afraid not. I do not see any other plan.

43,789. What it amounts to is, is it not, a Government guarantee, and the difference between the rate of interest of 4 per cent. and 2½ per cent. which it costs the Government, is really the measure of the value of the Government guarantee?—Yes.

43,790. Now, suppose through some machinery the advance was guaranteed, would it not be possible that the money should be found by the public for investment with that guarantee?—Yes, that would suit me equally well, if it were possible, but I do not see how we can have a public guarantee except through Government. I do not see it.

43,791. Would you say, for instance, that if a county council were allowed to guarantee in such case it would be unfair to the ratepayers who are not farmers?—You mean for the county council to guarantee it on the rates; yes, I think it would be fairer to do it from the Imperial funds.

43,792. But the same principle would apply to the taxpayers who were not farmers—not purchasers?—I do not myself believe that there is any risk of losing the money at all if the proportions I suggested are adopted.

43,793. Of course you are aware that the great difficulty in the future with regard to continuing what is now going on in Ireland is the enormous sum that it amounts to. Would you kindly turn your attention to that point—whether by some means the public might advance money on the Government guarantee on precisely the same conditions and coming to exactly the same thing so far as the public was concerned, though it might not involve the enormous amount of expenditure on the part of the Government. I merely throw it out for your attention?—Thank you. I think it would be good if it were feasible.

Mr. Seebohm.

I think your evidence is so exceedingly good that if it could be put into a feasible form it would be well worth consideration.

Mr. Grove.

43,794. You give a list of abatements. Do you give notice of abatements at all to the tenants beforehand?—Invariably now. At first we did not do so, but I invariably do so now.

43,795. Then you mentioned the question of railway rates; I think your words were "ruinous to cultivation." Do you happen to know whether the railway rates are above the legal maxima that the railway company can charge?—No, I do not know that, but I know that they do very prejudicially affect the farmers of this neighbourhood.

43,796. They are considered very oppressive?—And they are considered unfair as compared with the rates which obtain on the Great Western Railway from Ireland to England. I have had cases repeatedly brought to my notice; one was that of horses; there is a great sale of cobs and ponies in this part of the world. People who come down from England take a fancy to one of these ponies, and will readily give more money than we should be prepared to give in this country. The charge for sending one of these ponies up to London amounts to something like 5*l.*, whereas a horse can be sent from Waterford across the channel and up the Great Western to the same place for a sovereign.

43,797. Then in that case it appears to be five times as much from this district?—That is my impression.

43,798. Of course that is a very serious matter for any industry. You spoke about compensation. Do we gather that you consider full compensation should be given to the tenants for their improvements?—Improvements in buildings?

43,799. You said buildings. You separated buildings rather from other things. I suppose you mean that compensation should be given for all improvements to buildings or to the land?—I do think so.

43,800. Do you put in a copy of an agreement?—I have a copy of an agreement which I shall be very pleased to hand in. (The document was handed in.)

43,801. We like to peruse the different agreements, because they are suggestive. Then is the Agricultural Holdings Act much used. Is it workable in its present state, do you think?—I do not think it is as much known as it ought to be. The suggestion has been made that there should be a summary in Welsh.

That would be a very good thing. I have often wondered that farmers have never had it printed on almanacs, and so forth, so that it might be well known.

43,802. Mr. Brigstocke was good enough to suggest the publication of a summary in Welsh?—That would be good.

43,803. Do you think that there might be amendments to it which would make it more workable. Have you thought out that at all?—I have not thought out that question. I think it is quite workable as it is.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,804. May I put one more question. I understand rather from your evidence that to stimulate the purchase of farms by the farmers through the loan of public money would rather tend to obviate an evil which we have seen so often in our evidence, of small landlords, commercial landlords we will call them, buying the estates over the heads of the sitting tenants?—Yes, I think it would.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,805. I have not heard all your evidence, but I see that you mention that the outgoing farmer frequently recommends the farmer who is to follow him?—Yes; very frequently they come together. When a man is leaving his holding he brings someone whom he suggests to his landlord.

43,806. Does that ever amount to what is called goodwill. Is that ever recognised at all in this district?—I do not think you would speak of it as goodwill in the ordinary sense of the word.

43,807. You do not know of that occurring, do you, a claim for goodwill simply?—No, I do not know it. It is never brought to my knowledge.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,808. Are there many farms vacant there?—I do not know of any farm vacant anywhere.

43,809. If there were any, do you think they would command the same price; would there be many applicants or not?—There would be many applicants, and they could be let at the same rent as they are let at now.

43,810. Should you consider that the present tendency is to improvement or deterioration socially?—Improvement; for these last two years considerably so, I think.

43,811. I think the sons of some of the larger farmers go into the professions?—Yes, they do.

43,812. Is there a tendency for the smaller farmers to take larger farms or not?—Yes, there is.

43,813. And for agricultural labourers to take the smaller farms?—Yes, that is so.

43,814. That would be a general upward tendency in the agricultural community?—Yes.

43,815. Do you think that that continues to-day?—Yes, I think it continues, in spite even of the bad times.

43,816. Do you consider that the agricultural depression in 1893 was more serious than any other that you have known in your experience?—Yes, it was accentuated by the weather, the season.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,817. How are questions settled between the incoming and the outgoing tenant as to any compensation for any improvements. In this district are they made in accordance with the Agricultural Holdings Act or otherwise?—I do not think the Agricultural Holdings Act is adopted much in this neighbourhood. I do not think I should say so, no.

43,818. What course is adopted?—You mean as regards payment?

43,819. Yes, compensation for any unexhausted improvements. Is it by arbitration?—The incoming tenant always pays the outgoing tenant for the seeds and for manure, but I have known no case that has come before me as regards unexhausted improvements to be paid by the incoming tenant to the outgoing tenant.

43,820. But how is the price for the seeds and manure settled?—By valuation. One man appoints a valuer, and the other man appoints a valuer.

43,821. And they generally agree without appointing an umpire?—Yes, they generally agree. There is generally a friendly understanding on these occasions.

43,822. So that practically the Agricultural Holdings Act is inoperative?—It is practically.

43,823. Would you go so far as to say that a tenant should receive compensation for capricious eviction, in case a thing of that sort occurred?—As I have said in my evidence, I have had no experience of a capricious eviction. Such a thing appears to me at the present time to be impossible, in the state of public opinion.

43,824. We have had instances before us?—It would be impossible in this country in the present state of public opinion.

Mr. Richard Jones.

I am very glad to hear that public opinion is so healthy.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,825. Did I understand you to say just now that it would cost 5*l.* to send a horse from here to London, whereas if you sent it from Ireland it would only cost 1*l.*?—Yes. I know a case where a man bought a cob in this neighbourhood; I think he lives at Surbiton, near London, and the bill for sending it there came to 5*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* I did not pay the bill myself, but I was so informed by the man who paid it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

43,826. Does not that difference arise from a greater number being sent together from Ireland, whereas only a single cob would be sent from here; the rate is cheaper from Ireland, because of sending a good number together?—I do not know about that. There certainly is an unfair preference; you can send from Waterford cheaper than you can from here, even if you send a truck of beasts. I believe you could send a truck of beasts cheaper from Waterford than you could from Cardigan, and pay the passage as well.

Chairman.

43,827. The following questions are handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Is it not your opinion that "the establishment of a Land Court would tend "to reduce the selling price of land?"—Yes, to a certainty.

43,828. "If so, would it be safe for the State, "which established a Land Court, to lend money "to the mortgaged freeholder?"—Not after the Land Court was established. I think you could lend, then, a much smaller per-centage than four-fifths of the purchase money.

43,829. "Have you not had cases in which "arrangements for the advance of money on "mortgage have been broken off by reason of "agitation?"—I have.

43,830. These are questions by Mr. Thomas Hughes: "Is Mr. Morgan Richardson sure that "buildings are not often built at the expense of "farmers and landlords conjointly"?—Arrangements are in certain cases made with regard to particular buildings, for instance, a shed for cattle; a man may wish a small shed to be built upon the farm, and there may be an arrangement between the landlord and tenant, the landlord finding the materials, and the tenant the labour. I believe such a thing is possible, but the general rule is that all permanent improvements, like buildings, should be carried out by the landlord.

43,831. "I think Mr. Richardson said that "landlords would take no interest in their "farms afterwards, and would neglect the "buildings; but would not the value of the "land and buildings be arrived at in their "neglected state"?—I am afraid I do not understand that question.

43,832. "Will Mr. Richardson kindly produce "a few of the Clynfiew agreements"?—I handed one in.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,833. I think that question of Mr. Hughes can be explained. You state that after a Land Court was established the landlord would take perhaps no interest, or but very little interest in his property, and he would not build. You made that statement?—Yes, I did.

43,834. Then Mr. Hughes asks, "But would "not the value of the land and the buildings be "arrived at in the then neglected state"?—I am afraid I do not yet understand the question. If it is so clear to you, perhaps you would kindly explain it.

43,835. Suppose the farm was deficient in buildings, of course it would be of less value, would it not?—It would.

43,836. Then the question is this, would not the value of the farm be arrived at owing to the neglected state of buildings on the farm, and be taken into consideration in adjusting the rent?—But I do not see how that would affect the question of the landlord taking no interest in his holding.

43,837. But it is from the tenant's point of view he is asking the question, not from the landlord's?—I do not think a tenant would care to have the buildings on his hands. I think it would be rather an advantage for him to have them fixed upon the landlord.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Chairman.

43,838. There are two more questions by Mr. Hughes: "Is Mr. Richardson in favour of un-" educated tenants, and do the uneducated stand " the same chance as the educated in farming"?—I should infinitely prefer an educated tenant to an uneducated one.

43,839. "Do the uneducated stand the same " chance as the educated in farming?"—A preference would naturally be given to an educated tenant.

43,840. "Is the cottage accommodation suf-" ficient to keep the sexes apart?"—I think so.

Re-examined, 72,291.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Phillips called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

43,841. Do you choose to give your evidence in English or in Welsh?—In Welsh.

43,842. This is your evidence, and it has been translated to you, and is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read.]

Evidence of William Phillips, Crynga newydd, in the parish of Llandygwydd, Cardiganshire.

My farm of Crynga contains 79 acres. Before that I held the farm of Ffynongrog, in the parish of Mount, where I lived from the age of 13 years with my mother till her death in 1864, and afterwards on my own account. My mother built the outhouses at the expense of 120*l.*, and was repaid by the landlord 80*l.* Besides the expenses of building, she had to do the haulage. The landlord was Captain Edwards, Sealyham, Pembrokeshire. After building, the agent applied for the advance of 10*l.*, but my mother refused. The acreage was 132 acres, and the the rent 90*l.* My mother died in August 1864, and I farmed the place on my own account. In 1874 I built a barn; it cost me besides the haulage from 100*l.* to 110*l.* I was allowed 60*l.* by two instalments out of the following rents in 1875. I applied for a lease after building the barn, but was refused unless I paid an advance of 10*l.* In 1879 the farm was sold, and was bought by Mr. Alban Davies, the present landlord. I had received notice to leave by my first landlord. I re-took the place from the present landlord at an advance of 10*l.* The roof of the dwelling-house was replaced, and cow-house for 12 cows was built, of which I did the haulage. I had notice to quit in 1882, Lady Day, to leave at Michaelmas, and I took my present farm of Crynga, 79 acres at 65*l.* I again hauled for new buildings at Crynga, including barn and cow-houses. I had 21 years' lease of Crynga when I took it, in which there is a covenant to do the haulage. I never was paid anything for any of the haulage I had done. On the sale of Ffynongrog my landlord got the profit of the work done by me in haulage and building and material supplied at my expense, while I only got the benefit of it for two years. When I did it I understood that I should continue tenant, or should have been paid in full. Since I have taken Crynga the prices of cattle have fallen to less than one-half. I employ no labour. I have children of my own. Had I no children I could not keep on the farm. Wheat has fallen in price to quite one-half, barley to one-third. Labour is very scarce in my neighbourhood. I think that farming is deteriorating. I know of no land which has got out of cultivation, but I do know of land brought into cultivation without the assistance of the landlords. I ascribe low prices partly to general depression, and, partly to foreign competition. I have had no reduction in rent. Landlords take advantage of good times to charge heavy rentals. I think they should make permanent reductions. Remedy: There should be a Land Court for appeal.

Chairman—continued.

43,843. Do I understand from your evidence that the outbuildings cost 120*l.*, and that you were paid 80*l.* for them?—Yes.

43,844-5. How long after the buildings were put up did you get that money?—I built the first buildings in 1869, and I was paid in 1870. No, I am wrong—the first building was built in 1859, and I was paid in 1860.

43,846. That was built by the landlord?—Yes.

43,847. Why did you receive notice to quit that farm. Do you know why you had notice to leave it?—I received two notices.

43,848. Do you know why. Have you any idea why you received notice?—The first notice was that the place had been sold. The second notice was that the landlord took possession of the place after me.

43,849. If you had no children to help in the labour of the farm I suppose it would not pay at all at the present time?—We could never live there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,850. Who is the landlord of Cryngа Newydd?—Mr. Alban Davies, who purchased Ffynongrog.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,851. Does he live in the neighbourhood?—Yes, at Ffynongrog.

43,852. Is he a large landowner?—No.

43,853. In the event of a farm being sold, is the rent generally advanced?—Yes.

43,854. Were you paid for hauling on this last farm at all?—No, not all.

43,855. Did you claim compensation for it?—No, it was no use my claiming it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

43,856. Where do you live?—In Cardigan, No. 1, Bingham Terrace.

43,857. Your address is given here as 10, Grange Terrace, Cardigan?—I moved towards the end of March. I now live at No. 1, Bingham Terrace.

43,858. What are you. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, I am agent to the Prudential Assurance Company now.

43,859. Have you ever been a tenant farmer?—Yes, in two farms.

43,860. Is this a correct statement of your evidence?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read.]

The first farm I held was Tredwr, in the parish of Llangranog, Cardiganshire. My grandmother held this farm for about 50 years, and I was in her service when she died, in the year 1856. I obtained the farm after her death; the rent was raised a little at the time. I held it until the year 1869, when I was turned out of it. I was one of the oppressed ("gorthrymedigion"): as a result of the General Election of 1868, after holding it for 13 years, and after going to great expense in draining the marshy land which it contained, to repair the buildings, and fixing a water wheel to turn the machines, and after building an outer kitchen wholly at my own cost, with the exception of rough timber from the wood and slates for roofing it, and before the end of the twelve month after completing it I received six months' notice to leave the farm. And my landlord tried to take revenge on me through his agent, namely, his son, who was a solicitor.

43,861. Will you give us the name of the owner?—Mr. G. B. J. Jordan, of Pigeonsford.

43,862. Is that in this county?—Yes, in the parish of Llangranog.

This one did everything he could to attempt taking revenge on me. One Monday morning at the commencement of the month of April a notice comes to me to pay the rent the following morning at Rhydcolomenod by 10 o'clock, and if I was not there in time he would distrain on my horses that day for the rent, which I was accustomed to pay at the end of July, and at the time all the other tenants paid that season as usual. After seeing my auction papers out in the month of September, I received a notice threatening me, if I touched the water wheel, that he would resort to the law to punish me, although he knew that I had sold it to his new tenant about two days before this. (His object in doing this was to frighten me and to worry me as far as he could.) After I had sold the stock and the crops on the 24th of September, and after I had begun to move part of my articles of furniture, another notice came to me, warning me, unless I cleared everything off altogether on the 29th, i.e., Michaelmas day, that he would double the rent for the additional time. We left altogether on the day, and I and the family were out of a farm for three years. The Conservative landlords had marked us out so that we would not have a farm from them on the same terms. I did not receive a penny compensation for any of the great expense I had incurred in improving the farm.

Chairman—continued.

I took the second and last farm, Penallteifed, in 1872. The owner was Mr. T. R. P. Wagner, Manoreifed. He made it known that the farm contained 120 acres of land, namely, the fields and some 3 acres of hillside in addition. About 12 acres of hillside were of use for the cattle to have access to the water, but I was not to touch the ferns or gorse. He cut the ferns every autumn, and he kept the gorse for rearing game. I had only the 3 acres to graze the ferns therein, if I cared to do so. He kept the other 9 acres to himself. I had taken the farm at 15*s.* per acre, and he assured me that it contained the measurements, namely, the fields without any portion of the hill, that is, the 120 acres. So the rent was 90*l.* and I was to pay him the tithe with the rent (and the tithe he valued at 14*l.* that year), and thus the rent, including the tithe, was 104*l.* I had to pay the tithe to him with the rent, according to the tithe valuation, and not according to the Tithe Act; that is, I was to pay 14*l.* to him every year, whatever was the exact value of the tithe for that year. I went to ask him many times how my tithe was so high, but the answer I received each time from him was that he believed that there was something wrong in the tithe of the parish somewhere, but he did not know where. My first landlord died at the end of six years, and two months after my coming to the farm. When the heir came into the property he let his mansion and the land which belonged to it to a lady. He also denied that he knew how the tithe was so high, and I paid this one for another 10 years. I entreated him fervently many times for a reduction in the rent, that it was too high for me to pay, and that the market prices had come down enormously, cattle under half the price from the year 1882 and onward, and that I had taken the farm at the time when the market was highest. After beseeching fervently many times so, the last answer I received was, 'Do not trouble me any more; I 'will not reduce the rent a penny for you, nor 'for anyone else. I will keep it as pasture for 'birds before I reduce it a penny.' After struggling hard in this manner over the year 1887, he won over me in the following March. I was obliged to sign the whole to trustees through his attacking me, and everything was sold, except our beds; and so we were turned out after losing everything we had, and worse than this.

43,863. What year was this?—1888?

You will see that we had to pay 15*l.* a year owing to our having been deceived in the measurements. And we had to pay tithe for 10 acres of meadows which the first landlord kept to himself; but when the second landlord came to possess it, he rented it to a lady without the tithe, namely, the above-mentioned meadows, and so, between these two pieces of injustice, I had to pay about 17*l.* a year for the 16 years I held the farm. This is a gross injustice. These are examples of the way tenants are treated and are turned out of their holdings in Wales. If there is anything of value in the above you have perfect liberty to use it. I ought also to add, that when I left the farm, in Michaelmas 1888, he rented it to the new tenant for about 26*l.* a year cheaper, after refusing to do so to me during those years, and it is likely that he will have to reduce it more this year again, as the tenant again sees the farm is too high, and is leaving.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,864. You say you had a letter from the agent. Have you a copy of that letter?—I have not got it here now.

43,865. Have you a copy of the agreement which you have mentioned referring to the farm?—I had no agreement with regard to the first farm.

43,866. How do you know the measurement of the farm?—That was the last farm.

43,867. Yes, I know?—It was 112 acres, including the bill.

43,868. What reason did they give for turning you off?—I think I have stated in my evidence that they won it over me; they got over me.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

43,869. Did you refuse to vote for your landlord?—Yes, the first.

43,870. Did he come and ask you to vote?—Yes.

43,871. What did you say?—I said that conscientiously I could not do so; that I considered it would be wrong.

43,872. What did he say?—Everything between us was at an end now.

Mr. Richard Jones

43,873. Can you say that you were an industrious and a thrifty man as a tenant farmer?—I cannot say that I put money by, but I venture to say that I was an industrious man, and my family too, as they know in the neighbourhood.

43,874. Then your allegation is this, that you became poor in consequence of the dishonesty of your landlord?—Yes, and that the farm was in a bad condition, and the rent too high.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,875. What do you mean by the dishonesty of your landlord?—Because he said that the farm measured more than it really did.

43,876. It is not always known exactly what a farm does measure, is it?—He knew the measurement of the farm as far as the tenant who preceded me went.

43,877. This occurred before the Ballot Act of 1870, did it not?—No, this was 1872, after that.

43,878. But you said you were one of the oppressed at the election in 1868?—Oh, that was the first.

43,879. You said you were one of the oppressed in 1868?—Yes.

43,880. That was under the first landlord?—Under the first landlord.

43,881. But what do you mean by saying you were one of the oppressed?—"Gorthrymedigion," that was the word that was used in the newspapers for those who were turned out of their holdings for voting.

Mr. Richard Jones.

He was one of the victims; "oppressed" is an indifferent translation.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,882. Every one regrets that these occurrences happened, but since the Ballot Act has there been any considerable number of cases of the same kind?—I cannot say.

43,883. Are the tenants under any fear as regards that now, under the Ballot Act?—No, I think many of them are sure that it is being kept secret.

Mr. Grove.

43,884. So that, if a tenant says nothing, and keeps his mouth closed, he can get the full advantage of the Ballot Act, can he?—Yes.

43,885. It has been put in evidence time after time that religion and politics make no difference?—I cannot say that always.

43,886. If it is true, that applies to the past and not to the present, in your opinion?—I it applies to the present time as well.

43,887. I suppose you are clearly of opinion by your own experience, that it applies to the past?—Yes.

43,888. And you think it applies to the present also?—I know some. There are some exceptions which I could mention.

43,889. There are a few further questions about the letter you had from your agent to say that you must pay your rent the next morning. What date was that letter, because the other tenants had to pay in July?—That was the 9th of April, and I paid it on the 10th.

43,890. So that, for some reason or other, they made you pay up your rent in April when the rest of the tenants were allowed till July to pay theirs?—Yes, and the reason was perfectly apparent to my mind, and to everyone else.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,891. What do you mean by saying that the landlord won over you, and that you were put under trustees. What was done?—I was unable to pay any liabilities.

43,892. What was done. Did they distrain on you?—I made an assignment to the trustees.

43,893. You consider that you paid too much rent and too much tithes. Did you find out how much tithes ought to have been paid at all?—I know that I paid for the meadows more than I ought to.

43,893A. No, the translation is wrong. I think you said you paid for things that were left to another man?—Yes, that is so, land which the first landlord kept to himself.

43,894. And his son or successor let to another person?—Yes.

43,895. How do you know that the tithes for those meadows were included in the 14*l.*?—Because I understood that my landlord paid no tithes in the parish of Llangoedmore.

43,896. And the meadows were in the other parish?—No, in the same parish. My farm and the meadows were in the parish of Llangoedmore, whilst my landlord's mansion was in the parish of Llandygwydd.

43,897. How long did you pay what you consider an excess of rent?—Sixteen years, being the length of time I was in my last farm.

43,898. Did you consult any lawyer about this question?—No, I did not. It was only a month before I left that I understood there was anything wrong about the tithe.

43,899. But did you have any talk with any lawyer or solicitor about it?—Yes, I mentioned it to a solicitor when I was settling the arrears. See 44,176*b*, 44,185.

43,900. What did he say?—After I had told him of the wrong which had been done to me during those years, he said he thought that I should have some compensation.

43,901. What was it he said?—After I had explained the wrongs which I had suffered, he said that my case was an extraordinary one—that was his own word, and he thought that I ought to have compensation, and he believed also that I would have compensation.

43,902. That, of course, was from your own account of the case?—Yes.

43,903. Was he a solicitor of any standing; a man of any weight?—Yes, he was my landlord's solicitor.

43,904. What was his name—you need not answer if you do not wish?—Mr. Picton Evans.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,905. When Mr. Evans left Penallteifed, had you any claim against Mr. Wagner?—Dr. Mitchell was the last. I gave him, after leaving the place, an account of the cost which I had incurred in building a new house in the year 1884, and the money which I had paid out for labour.

43,906. Did you make that claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I gave as accurate an account as I could of the cost which I incurred.

43,907. But I do not quite understand to whom you made this claim?—To my landlord's solicitor.

43,908. Who was he?—I mentioned his name just now.

43,909. Was the landlord alive or not?—Yes, only that he was down at Tenby.

43,910. What was his name?—Dr. Mitchell.

43,911. I do not find his name on this statement of yours?—No, it is not there.

43,912. What had he to do with Mr. Wagner?—He was Mr. Wagner's heir. He was a nephew of Mr. Wagner.

43,913. Are there any Nonconformist landowners in the county?—Yes, there are a few.

43,914. I hope religion and politics make no difference whatever?—It does make a difference with some, but not with the two under whom I was.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,915. Is it not the fact that tenants are often pressed to give an answer whether they will vote or not for the candidate that the landlord favours?—After the Ballot Act, do you mean?

43,916. Yes, now, in these days?—Oh, they try.

43,917. Do they generally succeed?—I cannot say.

43,918. You cannot say what answer is given, then?—No, I cannot say.

43,919. Do you think it would be a good thing to do away with canvassing?—I think it would be a very good thing.

Chairman.

43,920. These questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Do not you think that your "liability to tithe was taken into consideration "in fixing your rent"?—Yes, but not on the land which I did not hold.

Chairman—continued.

43,921. "Are we to understand that you took "the farm without knowing what tithe you "had to pay?"—Oh, no. I knew only that it was said it would be the tithe on the farm, and I did not consider that the tithe on the meadows would be included.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,922. Do you not mean the meadows that were not in your occupation?—Yes.

Chairman.

43,923. This is a question by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Is the landlord who evicted you in 1869 still alive"?—No, neither he nor his son is alive.

43,924. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Do not both sides do their best to get votes at an election"?—I cannot say. Nobody has been bothering me about it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Jenkins called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

43,925. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

43,926. Where do you live?—Ffrwd Wenith ganol, Aberporth.

43,927. How far is that from Cardigan?—About 5½ miles.

43,928. Does this statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

43,929. You vouch for its being accurate?—Yes.

43,930. Do you wish it read?—Yes.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows.]

Evidence of Thomas Jenkins, tenant farmer, of Ffrwd Wenith ganol, Aberporth, Cardiganshire.

Language, &c.—In my case language, creed, or politics have not made any difference, although my landlady is a Churchwoman and I am a Nonconformist. My landlady cannot speak Welsh, but I can speak a little English, and there has never been any misunderstanding between us.

43,931. Will you give us the name of the landlady?—Mrs. Brigstocke, Blaenpant.

Tenancy.—I prefer a tenancy from year to year to a lease, because the buildings are not good enough to take a lease, but the buildings are now being put right. When the buildings are completed I should prefer a lease, as my landlord may change.

Security.—I think tenancy is reasonably secure.

Agreement.—I am familiar with the terms on which I hold, and I have copy of agreement.

Chairman—continued.

Penalising clauses are not enforced against a good tenant in our locality.

Land Court.—I should prefer being without a Land Court, as I feel it would do more harm than good, and interfere with the good understanding now existing between landlords and tenants.

Buildings, &c.—The buildings are done by the landlord, the tenant doing the haulage free. In draining, the landlord sometimes pays half and the tenant the other half. A new dwelling-house has been erected on my farm, but my rent has remained the same as it was before.

Change of Tenants.—A tenant when he leaves a place is generally allowed for any improvements, a sum fixed by arbitration. The incoming tenant has to take the unused manure at a valuation, and also pay for the seeds sown the previous year.

Giving Evidence.—There may be ground for saying in some cases that farmers are afraid to come forward, but I am not afraid to do so."

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,932. Why are tenants afraid of coming forward?—Here, to-day, do you mean?

43,933. Why are they afraid of coming here to give evidence?—I did not say that anyone was afraid, so far as I know.

43,934. You say, "There may be ground for "saying in some cases that tenants are afraid "to come forward." Then do you not know of any yourself?—No, I do not.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,935. Mrs. Brigstocke is the landlady about whose estate we heard something this morning from Mr. Brigstocke?—Yes.

43,936. And the tenants and the landlady are on friendly terms?—It is impossible that they could be on better terms.

Mr. Grove.

43,937. Why would a Land Court interfere with the good understanding now existing between landlord and tenant?—There is good feeling now between us and our landlady.

43,938. But suppose we had a Land Court, and the landlord and tenant put their heads together to agree upon the rent at which a farm was to be fixed, what harm would a Land Court do?—I prefer meeting my landlady face to face myself.

43,939. I do not think you understood my question. The point is this: if we are to have a Land Court there is no need to go to a Land Court so long as the landlord and tenant can agree between themselves?—That is all right.

43,940. Then if you do that, why do you object to a Land Court?—Because we live nicely now under good landlords.

43,941. So you would then, no doubt. You have a very good landlady, have you not?—Yes, beautiful.

43,942. Are all the landlords in the county as good as your landlady?—There is no better landlord, so far as I know.

43,943. That is exactly the point, but I asked a different question: are there any that are worse?—I cannot say about that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,944. Do you think that a tenant should be secured in his holding in order to cultivate the soil to the best advantage?—We have an agreement between us and our landlady now.

43,945. I want an answer to that question, please?—Many tenants have agreements now, we have.

43,946. I am asking a general question, and I want a reply to it: do you think that a tenant should be secured in his holding in order to cultivate the soil to the best advantage?—Yes, to some extent.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

43,947. Why are you so anxious to have a lease?—As I state here, if the buildings were put in repair I should like a lease.

43,948. Is there in your mind a feeling of insecurity of tenure?—No.

43,949. Then why are you so anxious to have a lease?—I am anxious to have a lease because one landlord dies and another comes in, and there is a change.

43,950. Then really you are in favour of security of tenure?—No; I am only in favour of that which is right.

Mr. Griffiths.

43,951. Are you afraid that if you change your landlord you would have a worse one?—No, I am not afraid of anything. I think if I live that the succeeding landlord would be as good.

43,952. Supposing, on the other hand, that that landlord dies too, and the estate should be sold, would you be afraid then?—If I knew that I would have a lease.

43,953. Why would you want a lease then?—I do not want to change from the place after working on it.

43,954. What occasion have you to go from the place? Are you afraid that the rent will be advanced too high?—If sold, perhaps.

43,955. The rent would be too high?—Yes.

43,956. Would it not be a good thing for you to have somewhere else to go to appeal to, so as to have that farm at a fair rent?—I would try and settle the matter with my landlord then face to face.

43,957. But we have seen some landlords are unreasonably high in their rents?—If they buy the place at a high price.

43,958. Let it be so?—They are unable to rent it cheaper then, because they want interest on their money.

43,959. Then would you leave your farm because it was too high rented?—Yes, if I could get a place anywhere else.

43,960. But would it not be a good thing for you to have someone else to go in and see that your farm was fairly rented?—I cannot say about that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Picton Evans called and examined.

Chairman.

43,961. You are a solicitor at Cardigan, agent for several landowners in the counties of Cardigan and Pembroke, vice-chairman of guardians of the Cardigan Union, and a member of the Assessment Committee of the same union?—Yes.

43,962. I believe you wish to speak to North Pembroke and South Cardigan? The total acreage of estates under your management is between 3,000 and 4,000 acres?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

43,963. I understand it will save your time, and will be to your convenience, to take it that you confirm Mr. C. E. Morgan Richardson's statement in the main?—That is so.

43,964. Then I do not think it will be necessary for me to take you seriatim through the same statements that Mr. Richardson has been kind enough to give us?—No, my lord.

Chairman—continued.

43,965. But would you state the expenditure in improvements, and would you tell us if there is anything that has escaped the attention of Mr. Richardson, because I do not think it will be necessary to go through the whole of the evidence again?—No, my lord.

43,966. I will ask you first to state the expenditure on the improvements upon these 4,000 acres, and will you put in any agreements?—You have an agreement put in, which is the form that is adopted on all the estates with which I am concerned.

43,967. That has been handed in?—That has been handed in. There is a schedule which I have put in representing three of the estates over which I have the management, and perhaps it would be as well if you had that schedule before you, my lord.

43,968. Yes, I think it would. Could you speak generally to the schedule?—The following is the schedule:—

Chairman—continued.

I speak, first of all, as regards the Pantsaeson estate, which is situated in North Pembrokeshire.

43,969. To whom does that belong?—To Mr. James, who is at present an infant. It is now under the management of trustees. The extent of that estate is 1,329 acres, with a gross rental of 795*l.*, which shows an average per acre of 11*s.* 11*d.* I have been agent for that estate for eight years, and during the time that I have been agent for the estate we have expended 478*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* for repairs and re-buildings, which represents an average annual expenditure for the eight years that I have been concerned in the estate of 59*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*, or 7½ per cent. on the gross rental. There has been a small permanent reduction on one of the holdings to the extent of 3*l.* from Michaelmas 1891. The tithes are paid by the tenants, except in two instances, where the tithes are included in the rent.

43,970. How many tenants are there on this estate?—There are 12 holdings. Abatements have been allowed of 10 per cent. in 1887, and Lady Day 1888, and also from Michaelmas 1892. I may say that owing to the minority of the owner the estate was under the control of the Court of Chancery, and consequently the trustees had some difficulty in seeing their way to making the allowances. The times got so bad that they ran the risk of the court, and made the abatements on their own responsibility. Then the next estate which I deal with is the Pantirion and Tredefaid estate, which is also situate in the county of Pembroke.

43,971. Whose estate is that?—That belongs to the Rev. Bowen Jenkins. That estate represents a rental of 806*l.* and an acreage of 936 acres, which amounts to 17*s.* per acre. We have expended during the last nine years 509*l.* 11*s.* 1*d.* in repairs and buildings on this estate, which represents about 7 per cent. upon the gross rent. The next estate which I wish to bring before the Commission is the Blaenpistill estate, which is situate in the county of Cardigan.

43,972. Whose is that?—That belongs to Dr. Propert, of London. That represents a gross rental of 535*l.*, with an acreage of 699, and it averages about 15*s.* per acre. During the nine years that I have acted as agent for that estate we have expended 1,346*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* on new buildings and repairs, representing 149*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* a year, or about 28 per cent. on the gross rental. There is one thing I should like to refer to also with regard to the Pantirion and Tredefaid estate with regard to the permanent reductions.

43,973. Permanent reductions, how much?—We made a permanent reduction in 1890 of 35*l.* I should wish to explain the circumstances of that. The tenant complained of the rent being rather high, and it was arranged between him and myself that we should ask Mr. Rule Owen, of Haverfordwest, who is known to us both, to go over the farm, and to say what the rent should be. It was upon his report that that 35*l.* was reduced. The abatements on that same estate were 10 per cent. allowed on 1885, 1886, and 1887, and Lady Day 1888, and also from Michaelmas 1892.

43,974. No permanent reductions?—No, excepting the one that I have spoken of. Then, on the Blaenpistill estate (Dr. Propert's) there was 15*l.* permanent reduction of one holding, which was made in 1886, and another 15*l.* at the same time out of another holding. Upon one of the holdings, a farm called Troedyrhiw, which belongs to that same estate, the rent was 80*l.* I have spent in repairs and new buildings on that farm 727*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*, which represents more than the rent I have got. When the new tenant came into Troedyrhiw, that is, in 1887, he was allowed 10*l.* for three years for lime; the farm had run out a little. The abatements on this estate have been 7½ per cent. on all the rents for for year 1885, 10 per cent. for 1886, 10 per cent. the Lady Day 1888, 10 per cent. on the year ending Lady Day 1893, and also on the rents due at Michaelmas 1893 10 per cent. The permanent improvements are always done by the landlord, the tenant doing the haulage.

I am also a clerk to the magistrates for three petty sessional divisions in this district, and I hand in now a return of the number of convictions under the Game Act from the year 1880 down to the year 1893. The three divisions are Lower Troedyraur, which is in this county, Cilgerran, which is in the county of Pembroke, and Cemmaes, which is also in the county of Pembroke. The Cemmaes Division extends down as far as Fishguard, so that it takes in nearly the whole of the north of Pembrokeshire. In the Troedyraur division the total number for those years are 11; in the Cilgerrran, 27; and in Cemmaes, 13; and the following is the table of convictions for game poaching:—

Year.	Lower Troedyraur.	Cilgerran.	Cemmaes.
1880	Nil	1	Nil.
1881	2	2	2
1882	Nil	2	4
1883	2	Nil	1
1884	Nil	Nil	Nil.
1885	Nil	1	Nil.
1886	1	1	2
1887	Nil	3	2
1888	1	1	Nil.
1889	Nil	3	Nil.
1890	Nil	2	Nil.
1891	4	6	Nil.
1892	1	1	Nil.
1893	Nil	4	2
Total	11	27	13

Mr. Seebohm.

43,975. You have given us the number of game cases. Would you tell us the total of other cases, so as to compare the game with other cases?—I have no return of other cases.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,976. It would be necessary to have it in order to make the return for the game cases of value?—That represents a very small per-centage of the other cases that come before the petty sessions—they are very small.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,977. If the figures are so small it is hardly necessary to trouble about the proportion to other cases, so long as it is understood they are so very few?—Practically there is no game preserving in the district at all. In fact, there is very little game.

Mr. Richard Jones.

43,978. Could you supply the Commisssion with a full return?—You mean of all cases?

43,979. Yes, all of cases?—Certainly.

Chairman.

43,980. Is there anything else that you wish to suggest?—No, that is all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,981. Confirming Mr. Morgan Richardson, could you tell us something about the mortgages in this country. Have you had many cases of mortgages passing through your hands?—Yes, a good many cases.

43,982. What is your opinion as to the effect of that?—My opinion is that a man who buys a farm, and has to borrow the money at 4 per cent., is worse off than a man who occupies his farm as a yearly tenant.

43,983. Do you think that there could be any harm in Government advancing money at a low rate of interest to help those people who have already mortgaged their farms?—I think it would be a very good thing.

43,984. Have there been many cases to your knowledge where the negotiations for mortgages have fallen through recently?—I have found it much more difficult to get money now than it used to be on account of the land agitation.

43,985. Have you been able to lend money as low as 3 per cent.?—Yes, upon large amounts; 3½ on large properties, not 3 per cent.

43,986. But not recently?—No, not recently.

43,987. What is the market price now?—4 per cent.

43,988. Are there any vacant farms now about this country?—No, I do not know of any.

Professor Rhŷs.

43,989. You are a member of the Assessment Committee for the Cardigan Union?—Yes.

43,990. There has been some question raised here and at previous sittings of this Commission about abatements in the rent, and as to whether the tenant can get an abatement in his rates on the basis of an abatement in the rent?—No, that is not the rule at our Assessment Committee.

43,991. Does that vary with each union?—I do not know. I do not see how it could be done very well when an abatement is made, because it is only a temporary abatement.

43,992. I know that in certain parts of England, if an abatement is given for three years the tenant says he can get a reduction in his rates?—That is a matter of arrangement. I do not know whether the Assessment Committee would be legally allowed to do a thing of that sort. I question it.

43,993. But in any case it does not occur here?—No, it does not.

43,994. It would have to be a permanent reduction?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Grove.

43,995. Is not that very hard upon a farmer?—I think it is hard. I should be inclined to give them credit for the abatement in the rents the same as they have done it in the case of the income tax.

43,996. If they were to take the receipt, which would be, so to speak, a certificate of the rent, would it not be fair for them to have an abatement upon the rateable value?—It would upset the rateable value of the whole union if you did that.

43,997. What is that to the farmer. I assure you in Monmouthshire it is done, and in some of our unions in Monmouthshire if a receipt for rent is taken to the Assessment Committee they allow the next year on the one year's abatement?—I quite admit the justice of it, but I do not quite see how they can legally do it.

Mr. Seebohm.

43,998. The average figures for rents in the cases of these three properties are 11*s.*, 17*s.*, and 15*s.* Is there a difference in the character of the land that causes the difference in the amount of rent?—Yes.

43,999. What is the kind of land here which makes rents so much lower than the rents we have had in Carmarthenshire?—On the Pantsaeson estate there is a good deal of high land, shallow land.

44,000. Just one word on the question of why you think a Land Court would disturb the relations between landlord and tenant. We had before us a tenant just now who said he was afraid of a Land Court. Are they afraid of their rents being raised by a Land Court?—No, I do not think so, but I think it would take out of the landlord the interest that he has now got in his property by having a Land Court. Practically it would be taking the management of his land out of his own hands.

44,001. But there are cases of estates where rents are upon a higher level than they are upon the good estates I have mentioned?—Those are the small properties.

44,002. If the two parties went to the court, and the decision of the Land Court as to what their rents should be should fix a sort of standard of judicial rent, and the standard of judicial rent should be higher than what it is now in practice on the good estates, it perhaps would tend to raise the rents on the good estates?—Very likely it would.

44,003. May not that be a good ground of fear on the part of the tenants of a Land Court?—I do not know that; I do not think so. I think the tenant, when he gets hold of a good landlord, likes to stick to him, and does not like to have anyone interfering between him and his landlord.

44,004 What would your opinion be as to the suggestion that was made by Mr. Brigstocke? Did you hear it?—Yes, with regard to arbitration.

44,005. Yes, the two arbitrators?—I rather agree with that; I think it would be a very good thing.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

44,006. If that were carried out, it would have this essential advantage, would it not, over a Land Court that the quarrel, or whatever it was, would be settled in private and not in public?—Yes, and another thing is this, that the tenant then would have a voice in the selection of an arbitrator and the landlord also, while he would not have it in the Land Court.

44,007. But the suggestion was, I think, that the county council should appoint one arbitrator and the County Court Judge the second, and the County Court Judge himself should be the umpire?—I did not understand that. I should not advocate the county council electing one.

44,008. Anyhow, it would be a great advantage if in the case of difficulties with what may be called bad landlords that could be got over in private rather than in public. You, I understand, would think it was a great advantage?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,009. Is there any other body you would suggest if the county council cannot be trusted?—I should be inclined to leave it to the landlord and tenant to fix each on an arbitrator.

44,010. But I understand you raised an objection against trusting the appointment of one of the arbitrators to the county council, and I was thinking you might suggest some other body?—I should rather object to an elective body like that as arbitrator. I do not know of any other except the Board of Agriculture. I still think it would be much better to leave it to the appointment of the tenant and the landlord, and let the County Court Judge then be the umpire.

44,011. You say that if the tenant complains that his rent is too high, valuation is usually resorted to with the approval of the tenant?—Yes, that is my experience. I am only speaking of what I have done myself.

44,012. Have you had many applications for reduction of rent?—No, I have not.

44,013. Do you think it is possible that the tenant farmers are too timid to ask for a reduction?—Not in the least. I think I am on good terms with them.

44,014. Do you think they would be afraid to incur your displeasure by asking for it?—Not the slightest.

44,015. Is this copy of agreement now in use?—Yes, it is in use.

44,016. Are all the clauses enforced?—Oh, no. With a good tenant the agreement is never looked at at all.

44,017. I suppose it is provided against a bad tenant?—It is a provision against bad tenants, but I am thankful to say all my tenants are good.

44,018. You would rather object to a Land Court to provide against a bad landlord?—I object to a Land Court anyhow, whether it is to protect them against bad landlords or against anything else.

44,019. Is this clause enforced, that "The "tenant, his executors and administrators,

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

" shall and will carry and spread four cart loads " of well-burnt lime " ?—That is not enforced, I believe, but it is practically always done. The tenant never objects to that condition, but approves of it. It is never enforced.

44,020. But is not the use of lime pretty well abandoned now ?—But you will see there is another thing besides, " or any equal quantity of good manure."

44,021. What do you mean by that, " or any " equal quantity of good manure to every acre " of the said land." Do you mean the same amount of money to be expended in other kinds of manure ?—Quite so.

44,022. That would be, perhaps, too liberal a treatment, I think, in some cases ?—As I said before, these agreements are in print, and we never enforce them. Practically, the tenant does the farming in the way he thinks best to his advantage, of course, having in view the farm he is farming.

44,023. Really, lime is too expensive for manure ?—So it is.

44,024. Curiosity prompts me to ask what is this winchester bushel; is it an old English measure ?—I believe it is the measure that is known in this part. It is called a bushel.

44,025. But it is called a winchester bushel in the agreement ?—It is the ordinary bushel, I believe.

44,026. How many Imperial gallons is it, do you know ?—I am not a Welshman, but I am told it is called " wynchin " in Welsh, and that means a bushel.

44,027. That will be four pecks ?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

44,028. Will you kindly explain this: Under the head of " Management " you say that it is easier on large estates that are consolidated. Is it easier for the agent to receive the money from one person rather than from two or three ?—No, I do not think so.

44,029. What do you refer to then ?—I think the thing works better together by getting the farms together; it is better than if they are separated. I mean to say, if there is one farm at one end of the county and one at the other.

44,030. You do not mean to put two or three farms together instead of leaving them separate ?—No, I did not mean in that sense at all.

44,031. Then you say that the agents have practical knowledge of farming. I suppose you are a tenant farmer yourself ?—No, I am not a farmer, although I grow my own hay.

44,032. Do you call in a surveyor whenever there is any valuation going on ?—Yes, always.

44,033. Do you always give an allowance to the tenant in leaving if he has done some haulage ?—Oh, yes, always. If the tenant leaves just after the completion of the buildings I invariably give him an allowance.

Chairman.

44,034. There are some questions which are handed in by Mr. Vincent: " Did you hear Mr. " Evans tell the Commission what you had said " to him " ?—Yes.

44,035. Was that about claiming the water wheel, or what was it ?—It was a claim for a water wheel and other things that he said he had put on that farm, and which he consulted me on, and he said that I advised him that he had a claim. Now, I beg distinctly to say that I advised him nothing of the sort. I happened to be a solicitor for the trustees, and I certainly did not advise him that he had any claim at all. See 44,176B–44,185.

44,036. That is not exactly what he said in answer to my question. I asked him if he had a talk with the solicitor about it, and he said that he had, and that the solicitor had said that his case was an extraordinary one. I think that was the word he used ?—Very likely; I might have said it was extraordinary.

Mr. Vincent. I withdraw the rest of the questions referring to that case until we hear from the shorthand writer what the evidence was with respect to this.

Chairman.

44,037. Yes, I have sent for the shorthand writer. The following are Mr. Vincent's questions: " Did you not understand Mr. Brigstocke " to suggest this tribunal only for the purpose of " settling compensation ? "—Yes, quite so.

44,038. " Was it not only upon the assumption " of the necessity of a Land Court that Mr. " Brigstocke said that this tribunal might act as " as such ? "—Yes, I think that was so.

44,039. " Was not Mr. Brigstocke's court to " consist of one arbitrator appointed by the " County Court Judge and one by the county " council, subject to the approval of the Board of " Agriculture, with a County Court Judge as the " umpire." Did you understand that to be so ?—I understood that one of the arbitrators was to be appointed by the County Court Judge, certainly.

44,040. And the other by the county council ?—The other by the county council.

44,041. Subject to the approval of the Board of Agriculture ?—Yes.

44,042. And then if they could not agree, the County Court Judge was to be called in as umpire ?—Yes.

44,043. You understood that ?—Yes, but I do not agree with that.

44,044. You do not agree with it, but you understood that to be the proposal ?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,045. Will you kindly say why you object to the county council; is it to keep it out of a political sphere ?—Yes.

44,046. If anything like that was carried out, what would you suggest instead ? Have you any idea on the subject ?—If any public body is to select an arbitrator, I should prefer going to the Board of Agriculture. At the same time, I say it is much better to leave it to the landlord and tenant.

Chairman.

44,047. Mr. Picton Evans, would you mind remaining in the room for a short time until the shorthand writer who took the evidence referred to is present, and then we will proceed with the remaining questions which are handed in by Mr. Vincent.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I wish to draw attention to a statement which has appeared in one of the most influential papers in this part of the world, "The Western Mail," Monday, April 23rd. It says: "The "inquiry of the Commission is at length drawing "to a close, and when they commence sitting in "London there will be little if any chance of "challenging any evidence which may be taken. "Landowners cannot afford to risk the odium of "practically withdrawing evidence from criti-"cism." That might bear—I do not say that it does—but it might bear interpretation to the effect that landlord's evidence is going to be taken in London. No landlord's evidence will be taken in London, and all evidence of such a nature must be given locally. In Glamorganshire the landlords were not ready with their evidence, and so we went back on purpose of giving them an opportunity of bringing it forward, but at the same time we said that time would not admit of that in other counties. Of course, we must have all the evidence brought before us at one and the same time in the public interest. London evidence is confined to special information upon subjects such as the working of the Scotch Crofters Act, Government departmental evidence, and other evidence of that description. The Commissioners wish that that should be distinctly understood.

Mr. Evan Williams called and examined.

Chairman.

44,048. Where do you live?—Ffynonfair, in the parish of Blaenporth.

44,049. How far off is that from this place?—Seven miles.

44,050. Would you like to give your evidence in Welsh or in English?—I am a thorough Welshman, but I will do my best for the Commission in English.

44,051. You speak English very well, and you can understand it?—Yes.

44,052. If there is any difficulty as to any particular word, will you be kind enough to let us know, and we will allow the interpreter to help you in every way?—I will make you understand.

44,053. Shall I ask you some questions, or would you like to read your statement?—I do not care which.

44,054. You are a freeholder?—Yes.

44,055. You are also a tenant of Mrs. Brigstocke?—Yes.

44,056. And you give evidence for the district of the Cardigan Union?—Yes.

44,057. We are very glad to hear that you are on the best possible relations with your landlady; you are on very good terms with your landlady?—Yes, but I ought to give you to understand that I am only a tenant of Mrs. Brigstocke for some 30 or 40 acres, being in the Cardigan Island, out in the sea, not attached to land outside the parish of Verwig. I have no house that I hold under her or anything else.

44,058. You only farm a portion of land?—Yes, keeping some sheep there.

44,059. You do not think that language or politics or creed make the slightest difference between you and Mrs. Brigstocke?—Not the least.

44,060. Of course, you have Michaelmas tenancies and yearly tenancies, and so on.

Chairman—continued.

There are no cases of hardship that you know of except when farms have been sold?—No.

44,061. Then sometimes, no doubt, that does occur?—Yes.

44,062. It often occurs, I suppose?—It is very often the case.

44,063. The rent is 14*s.* to 16*s.* an acre?—Yes.

44,064. You do not mind carrying some coal up to the mansion once a year for the convenience of your landlady?—No.

44,065. You have no objection to that?—No, not in the least.

44,066. You are on very good terms?—And all the tenants the same.

44,067. When do you pay your rent after it becomes due?—Generally we pay the rent due Michaelmas, say, in the month of January, and the rent due 25th March we pay after what we call Lawrence Fair at Kilgerran, and that is always held on the 19th of August.

44,068. You get four or five months to pay it in?—Yes.

44,069. The farms, you say, average in rent from 50*l.* to 80*l.*?—Yes, generally through the union.

44,070. You say that that is about the proper size for a farm to be in this district?—Yes.

44,071. And that people can work that to the best advantage?—Yes.

44,072. No doubt a great deal of land has been laid down to grass on account of the corn fetching such a bad price?—Yes.

44,073. Who paid for that?—The tenant.

44,074. Does the tenant pay always?—Yes.

44,075. The landlords never gave them the seeds nor paid them for doing so?—Not to my knowledge.

44,076. I suppose there are a great many roots in this part of the country?—Yes, a great many.

Chairman—continued.

44,077. On Mrs. Brigstocke's estate are the buildings in good order, so far as you know?—Yes, generally in good order. May I add one word, that Mrs. Brigstocke used to give some prizes for the best crop of roots, amounting, about Christmas time—say in the January rent—to over 20*l.* to the tenants for the best crop growers.

44,078. Is that continued now?—Yes, every winter.

44,079. Then do you get too much ground game?—No, nothing of that sort to interfere with us.

44,080. Of course you complain of railway rates?—Yes.

44,081. Then, with regard to the proprietor farmers, you tell us the same as we have heard several times to-day?—Yes.

44,082. That they have bought their farms very dear, and they have had to pay a high rate of interest on the money that was left on mortgage. Then the tenant farmers, I take it, are a very hard-working lot of people?—Yes.

44,083. And their children work hard on the farms?—Yes.

44,084. When do you think the depression began?—In 1883 it began first. We had good times after that for a little while, but then 1893 was very bad, owing to the dry season and every thing.

44,085. 1893 was a disastrous year—very bad?—Yes.

44,086. Shocking?—Yes.

44,087. What do you think is the cause of the depression amongst farmers at the present moment?—According to my opinion, what we call the demand and supply rules the markets. When the supply exceeds the demand, of course, you cannot get a buyer for your goods, and no doubt foreign competition succeeds to that extent when the markets are too full of beef and every sort of thing for the British seller to make any profit out of his cattle or anything.

44,088. Have you any remedies to suggest that you think would make things a little better for the farmers?—I have made some notes if you would like to hear them.

44,089. Will you tell us what you think will do any good?—The first, in my opinion, is that we ought to have fair trade, or something of that sort.

44,090. Yes, and fair seasons—we want good seasons?—That depends on Providence. In good seasons I do not think it would be so bad. If it were not for the bad season last summer, things would not be so bad. In my case I was obliged to spend over 30*l.* in bran and barley meal and everything, and I had to sell 40*l.* worth of corn and everything. That was my case.

44,091. Besides what you consumed on your farm?—Yes, and many farmers were worse off than me, in my neighbourhood.

44,092. Are rents, especially in the Cardigan Union, too high?—I cannot say that they are too high. They do not quite agree with each other. Some landlords rent higher than the value, and as long as the rents are made on the gross estimate of rental, it is too much. There ought to be some justice done to these highly rented farms. We have had a great deal of fighting over this question on the board of guardians and at the Assessment Committee of the union, and there have been many fights in the Assessment Committee, because many of the members of the Assessment Committee stick to the original rule we passed to the board, and then it amounts to this, that many landowners give false receipts to their tenants when appealing before the Assessment Committee.

44,093. Then you think that the rate book and the rent book do not agree?—I am afraid not, my lord. I think that is quite true. There should be readjustment of tithes also. Whenever you find that an apportionment is made of the tithe, you will find that the arable land is charged more tithe than the good meadow land generally. I have known instances of land which is worth at this time 2*l.* an acre, and is charged less tithe than land which is worth 15*s.* an acre. The apportionments have been made during the high price of corn.

44,094. That wants looking to?—Yes, in my opinion.

44,095. Is there anything else?—Yes, a less expensive system of transferring land. When a man buys his own farm, of course the solicitors take a good slice out of his pocket for preparing the deeds, or something of that sort.

44,096. Is there anything else you wish to suggest?—Yes, the Government to lend money to farmers and labourers to purchase their holdings at a reasonable rate of interest. That is the whole.

Mr. Griffiths.

44,097. You say with regard to cases of hardship, that there are no such cases, except perhaps where property has been sold?—Yes, to my knowledge.

44,098. Do you know of cases of hardship where the property has been sold?—Yes, I know of cases where tenants have been noticed and their rents put up before the estates have been sold so as to show to the buyer of the farm rents are so much.

44,099. You say, again, in your statement that arbitration is not used; is it ever resorted to?—I do not know of any case.

44,100. There is one thing I cannot quite understand; you say in your statement that the price of corn has fallen greatly and that of live stock has risen since. When has live stock risen?—I recollect the question before me in the syllabus was as to taking the average over 50 years. During that period the live stock had risen but during the last season and some seasons before they have been very low.

44,101. That is what I was thinking of myself?—I remember at other times during my lifetime they were very much lower than what they are now.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

44,102. What aged man are you, may I ask?—I am over 50.

44,103. I am that, too, but I do not always remember it. What about wages?—Wages are much higher.

44,104. Very much higher?—Very much higher—very nearly double what they used to be 40 years ago.

44,105. You say that the fences are not as good as they might be. Why are not the fences as good as they might be?—Because it is very difficult to get labour—very difficult in some neighbourhoods. In my neighbourhood they are old sailors most of them, and the other labourers, if they could not get very high wages, went to Glamorganshire where they think they can do better.

44,106. So that the very best labourer leaves you?—Yes, but we have a lot of good labourers. I have a lot of good labourers myself.

44,107. Do you think the labourers as competent now as when you commenced farming, as a rule?—Well, they must be treated now much better than they were.

44,108. I did not mean with regard to their treatment; but are they able to do work; can they hedge and ditch as they used to?—Yes, but they do not know the way to thresh with the old flail. The use of the machinery has done that for them.

44,109. You say with regard to the land being laid down, the tenant lays down the land, but inexpensively. How do you explain that?—Only just leave it out to pasture, say, after a crop of potatoes and turnips, or something of that sort.

44,110. But if you want to lay down land to some profit you must manure it afterwards, must you not?—Yes, but if you knew our neighbourhood you would know that we have generally arable land. It does not pay us to turn it to pasture. It is good land for corn but not good land for pasture. If you leave it at rest say for three or four years, you must plough it up then and put something in it.

44,111. We have heard about that—the land goes to sleep; you leave it for long and then plough it up again?—Yes.

44,112. You say that poultry keeping pays. Have you any experience in regard to that that you can mention?—So far as my knowledge goes I can give you instances where a farmer of 15 acres has made over 20*l.* and he has made a tale of it that poultry keeping pays, but he goes to a good deal of expense.

44,113. Does he understand it thoroughly? As a rule we find that they do not know anything about it; some of them keep their hens till they are 10 years old?—Yes, I think they do understand as a rule, but about the farms where we are they only keep poultry to eat up what is left.

44,114. How do you explain, again, that a bad landlord is better than a good mortgagee?—I will tell you that. You need not go to a mortgagee, and need not apply to him for abatement. You need not go to him, say, for a new roof upon a pigstye—only just pay him the mortgage money, and that is all. If you want to get something back, the answer you generally will have is, "You pay the money up and I will find some-"one else to pay the same interest as you do."

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

44,115. But would it not be the same with a bad landlord?—Well, sir, you can leave the farm to the landlord if he is a bad landlord, but with the mortgage the farm remains to you.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,116. I suppose fallowing has been abandoned after you have increased the quantity of roots that you grow? Is that so?—Yes. Generally they put rapes where they used to keep fallow now for the sake of the stock in the autumn.

44,117. Do you find that land generally is as well cultivated now as it was when corn growing was more profitable?—No, I do not think the present system of manuring does it so well. Artificial manure is not quite as good as the old system of liming, or something of that sort. But the old system is too dear now. A farmer could not get on with that.

44,118. It is too expensive?—Yes, it is a great deal too expensive.

44,119. You want to put something cheap, and have a quick return?—Yes.

44,120. We might call it a more spirited style of farming, but possibly you might say that it is injurious, and you must take the future into consideration. Is that so?—Yes; but if we had spent the same amount of money for lime as we spent for manure, I think we would be just as well off then as we are now. But there is a great deal of trouble in liming because of carting and spreading, and so on.

44,121. Of course you must take that into consideration?—Yes, we must consider the labour connected with it.

44,122. Where do you get your lime from?—Aberporth. I used to live within a mile of Aberporth, and I live now within two miles or two and a half miles. There is plenty of lime burnt there.

44,123. I suppose liming has generally gone into disuse. There is very little used now, is there not?—Very little indeed.

44,124. How much a ton do you pay for it?—We pay 13*s.* to 14*s.* a ton for the lime.

44,125. What do you pay for basic slag?—About 2*l.* 15*s.* a ton I paid this year.

44,126. Where do you get it?—I get the slag from Mr. Thomas Thomas, Plas, Aberporth.

44,127. You do not know what is the quantity of phosphate in the slag. It would be from 38 per cent. to 42 per cent., or something like that, would it not?—Not so high as that; it is lower than that. See 44,176A.

44,128. Then somebody gets a profit somewhere?—I think it is about 26 per cent. I have been led to understand the other night by Professor Parry, of Aberystwith, who was delivering a lecture on the subject, that it must be a good slag if it amounts to 26.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,129. With regard to depression, you say that the period of depression commenced in 1883?—Yes.

44,130. Was it not a time of depression in 1879?—I have looked over my diary, and I find th I have been obliged to sell my cattle at a v'e low price in 1883.

44,131. Did you keep a diary in 1879?—Yes.

44,132. Did you lose any sheep owing to fluke in 1879?—Yes, I have lost 42 sheep which were grazing on the same field the same winter.

44,133. It was generally regarded as a very bad year?—It was regarded as a very bad year, but prices were not so very low.

44,134. Of course in 1883 you began to feel the depression?—Yes.

44,135. Has the depression continued ever since 1883?—No; we had some good years after that. About five years ago we got good prices.

44,136. In 1890?—Yes, 1890; but ever since the barley has been very low, for the last 15 or 16 years, and the wheat you could not get a market for at all, the flour is so cheap.

44,137. I suppose you have no prescription, have you, for bad seasons?—Well, prayer meetings would be the best.

44,138. Do you pay any rates for your farm in Cardigan Island?—No.

44,139. Why not?—I cannot tell you; I could not make out to what parish and what county the land belongs. It has been a hard case fought before the magistrates here once.

44,140. What is the extent of the island?—From 30 to 40 acres.

44,141. And you occupy the whole of it?—Yes.

44,142. Do you corroborate this fact, that it is common property—that it does not belong to anybody?—It is the property of Mrs. Brigstocke, and I believe she gets the rates to her pocket. If there were rates and tithes upon that land. I would not give so much rent for that island.

44,143. The difficulty is this: it has not been settled in which county it is; is that so?—I cannot tell you in what county it is; it ought to be attached to the parish of Verwig, in the Cardiganshire part of the union.

Mr. Griffiths.

44,144. Have you any paupers on this island?—No, there is no living soul there. Plenty of gulls and gull's eggs, and things of that kind.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,145. I have one question to ask about the rates. You have mentioned a point which is an important one. Your view, as I understand it, is that if you take a farm at too high a rent, and the rent is taken as the basis of the rates, you are doubly punished?—Yes, you burn the candle at both ends. That is what they call it here.

44,146. Now you are a freeholder, I think?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

44,147. How is the rateable value with regard to freeholds ascertained by the board of guardians?—Well, I bought a farm, say about four years ago. The rent used to be 70*l.* a year. I was under a very hard landlord, I think, and the building was very poor, and to save them from the expense of building they sold that farm, and I bought it, because it was the next farm to my former farm. Now, what will be the result I do not know. I intend to appeal. Most likely they will stick me to the former rent of 70*l.* Well, according to what I bought that at, I ought to appeal to get a reduction of, say, about 10*l.* The rent was 70*l.* I bought that farm for 1,650*l.* Well, according to 4 per cent., it would be much under the rent. I do not pay full 4 per cent. for the mortgage—for the part I had on mortgage—I pay, in fact 4*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

44,148. Then you think the rateable value ought to be ascertained on the land, irrespective of whether the rent is too high or too low?—I consider the basis wrong altogether.

44,149. But what other basis could you suggest; valuation, or what?—Valuation. You know there is a great deal of difference between some landlords and others in the renting of their farms. Say, a landlord is worth 2,000*l.*, or 3,000*l.*, or 5,000*l.* a year; he can afford to let the farm much under what a landlord can that does nothing beyond, say, 100*l.* a year. That is the case in the parish of Blaenporth. The north side of the turnpike road is generally owned by small landowners; every farm there. The other side is on the Noyadd and Blaenpant estates. I believe the rent of these estates ought to regulate the rent of the lower part of the parish.

44,150. That high-rented estates ought to be brought down to the level of the others?—Yes. Well, we can appeal, and mention some farms upon the Noyadd estate, but the Assessment Committee, as a rule, are very stiff.

44,151. Do you pay income tax?—No; oh, no.

44,152. There is no income tax gathered on your land?—No. I have been a collector of the income tax for many years.

44,153. Do you know whether the income tax assessor goes by the actual rent?—Yes always.

44,154. Always by the actual rent?—Yes.

44,155. He never puts it higher than the actual rent?—No, not in my knowledge. I know it has never been put higher in the parishes of Aberporth or Blaenporth.

44,156. Then does he simply go to the rate book and take what is down there on the rate book?—Well, the assessor usually draws the duplicates for the surveyor, and the gross is always taken as the basis for income tax in cases where income tax is charged.

44,157. Do you think that that is general; that the income tax assessor takes the poor rate assessment?—Well, if they get a reduction in rents, of course for the sake of paying rates they will bring it before the Assessment Committee and be reduced.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

44,158. Do they in the case of one year's abatement?—I do not know of a single case where the income tax has been reduced on account of abatements. I know it has not been reduced in the parish of Aberporth or Blaenporth.

44,159. Then you think, generally, the income tax assessment is the same as the gross value in the rate book?—Yes, always.

44,160. Are you a guardian?—Yes.

44,161. I think you said that a good many people who have bought their own farms rather regret it now, these bad times; is that so?—Oh, yes.

44,162. What interest do they pay?—Four per cent., as a rule.

44,163. That is about the average?—Yes.

44,164. If they could get money at 3½ per cent. or 3¾ per cent., which would include the repayment of the capital, you think that would be a great relief to them, do you?—Yes, I do; much relief, too.

44,165. And would probably enable a great many more to go in the same way and buy their own holdings?—Yes.

44,166. Do you think that land bears too many burdens?—Yes, by far.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,167. Do you have any difficulties in regard to tithes in your parish?—No, we have but very little difficulty in my parish, but I live on the brink of the parish of Penbryn; there is a good deal round there, but we pay tithes, all of us, as a rule in the parish of Blaenporth.

44,168. Is your island subject to tithes?—No, and if it was, Mrs. Brigstocke always pays the tithes for the tenants, for a long time.

44,169. Living on the island as you do, I suppose you do not mind so much about railway rates?—Yes, I do. I have more cattle and more sheep to send away somewhere, if I could find a purchaser for them, than any in the lower part of this county.

44,170. Sir John Llewelyn asked this morning how it was that you do not make more use of sea conveyance for the cattle from this part of the country?—The only place we can send them by sea to is Bristol, and they flood up the market there.

Mr. Grove.

44,171. There are plenty of other places?—No. These things always go to Bristol.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,172. Could not you start a boat to some other port?—Well, to have a particular steamer for some other port would hardly do. There is not so much there to be had in the country.

44,173. But if you had a little more co-operation among you you might manage that?—Well, it might be, but we do not know exactly where to send them. We generally sell our cattle to dealers or butchers in the neighbourhood.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,174. Are prices any better now than they have been?—Prices of what?

44,175. Prices of cattle and farm produce generally. Are they improving at all this spring?—Well, they say they are. There is some call for store cattle, more than there used to be last autumn.

44,176. So that there are hopes of better times?—I hope so, too.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,176A. Before you go out of the box I want to correct myself. You are quite right with regard to the amount of phosphates in slag. I got mixed over slag and superphosphates.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM PICTON EVANS re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

See 43,898–43,094.

44,176B. We will now have the shorthand notes of that portion of Mr. William Evans' evidence, that has been referred to, read.

The shorthand writer read the following extract from the evidence of William Evans:—

"43,898. Did you consult any lawyer about this question?—No, I did not. It was only a month before I left that I understood there was anything wrong about the tithe.

"43,899. But did you have any talk with any lawyer or solicitor about it?—Yes, I mentioned it to a solicitor when I was settling the arrears.

"43,900. What did he say?—After I had told him of the wrong which had been done to me during those years, he said he thought that I should have some compensation.

"43,901. What was it he said?—After I had explained the wrongs which I had suffered, he said that my case was an extraordinary one—that was his own word, and he thought that I ought to have compensation, and he believed also that I would have compensation.

"43,092. That, of course, was from your own account of the case?—Yes.

"43,093. Was he a solicitor of any standing—a man of any weight?—Yes, he was my landlord's solicitor.

"43,094. What was his name—you need not answer if you do not wish?—Mr. Picton Evans."

Chairman.

44,177. Did you ever say what he alleges you said to him, or anything like it?—No, certainly not, with reference to compensation. I might have made the remark, "Well, it is an extraordinary thing," but certainly not with regard to any encouragement for compensation.

Chairman—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

44,178. You have heard what Mr. Picton Evans has said?—Yes.

44,179. Have you anything to say on that?—Yes, you have misunderstood me. You have mixed up the water wheel on the first farm and the last farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,180. Was the water wheel paid for?—Yes.

44,181. There was nothing about the water wheel in that part of your evidence. You did not consult Mr. Picton Evans about the water wheel?—No, not at all. That was the farm of Llangranog, in 1869.

Chairman.

Then that clears it up completely.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,182. You explained to Mr. Picton Evans the story of your wrongs, as you believed them to be?—I explained to Mr. Picton Evans with regard to the last farm and not the first.

44,183. Yes, but it was the story of your wrongs—your own story of your wrongs, with regard to the acreage and the tithe on the last farm, not with regard to the water wheel in the first farm.

Chairman.

44,184. The mistake is quite cleared up, and we perfectly see how it arose; it is all right?—My two brothers could give the same evidence with regard to Mr. Picton Evans.

44,185. There is no need of any further evidence. The whole thing is quite satisfactory?—Thank you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Saunders Davies called and examined.

Chairman.

44,186. Where do you live?—At Maensaeson, St. Dogmaels.

44,187. How far is that from Cardigan?—About four miles.

44,188. What personal history can you tell us?—I have been married about 10 years. I have been farming down Pembrokeshire.

44,189. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes, I have got 292 acres or thereabouts.

44,190. What rent do you pay?—169*l.*

44,191. Who is your landlord?—It is rented under the trustees and agents now.

44,192. Trustees of whom?—Of the late R. Ll. James, Esq., Captain Jones-Parry and Lawrence Jenkins, Esq.

44,193. What can you tell us about your farm?—Well, I have got two farms, one of 242 acres, at 94*l.*

44,194. That is besides the 292 acres, or is it included in that?—It is included.

44,195. You have two farms?—Yes.

44,196. And two homesteads?—Yes.

44,197. And two sets of buildings, and two houses?—Yes; one farm averaging 7*s.* 9*d.* per acre, and the other about 30*s.* an acre.

44,198. One farm is 242 acres; what proportion of rent do you pay for that?—94*l.*

44,199. Then the other, what do you pay for that?—75*l.* for 50 acres. That includes the tithe and the rates.

44,200. How have you done on this farm? What has happened on it? Have you made it pay?—Yes. Well, last year it did not pay very well.

Chairman—continued.

44,201. Last year was a bad year, of course?—Yes.

44,202. What else can you tell us about the farm?—Well, nothing particular.

44,203. Have you anything to complain of in your agreement? Have you got an agreement, or a lease, or what?—I have not an agreement at all, and I do not want one either.

44,204. You do not want any agreement?—No.

44,205. You are satisfied with your landlords?—Yes, quite satisfied.

44,206. What would you like to tell the Commissioners?—I should like to give my evidence in Welsh, and I can do it better.

[The remainder of the evidence was taken through an interpreter.]

44,207. Will you state what you wish to say?—No kind of denominations influence the landlords at all between landlord and tenant. If you ask me any question I will answer it.

44,208. What is the general condition of the farming population?—In what way do you mean?

44,209. Are they prosperous or not?—Yes, some of them.

44,210. Are they a hard-working lot of people?—Yes.

44,211. Are their rents too high?—The average of the estate is from about 7*s.* up to 30*s.*

44,212. Do you consider that too high?—Some are too high, and some are possibly too low.

Chairman.

44,213. Are you in favour of a Land Court?—No, I am not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,214. Have you got two farms?—Yes.

44,215. Two farm-houses?—Yes.

44,216. Who lives in the second one?—No one lives there now, but I have been keeping a female servant there, but she died.

44,217. One farm of 242 acres?—Yes.

44,218. And the other 50 acres?—About.

44,219. The average rent per acre of the large one is 7*s.* 9*d.*?—Yes.

44,220. The average rent of the small one is 30*s.*?—Yes.

44,221. Is that what you mean by some too high and some too low?—Yes, as the average of the estate.

44,222. Does it not depend on the quality of the land?—Yes.

44,223. And the suitability of the buildings?—Yes.

44,224. Are these two farms close together or not?—Yes, very close, about 400 or 500 yards off.

44,225. Is it a popular thing in this country for one man to hold two farms?—I do not know.

44,226. Have you many workmen on your farms?—I have got six altogether.

44,227. Any farm servants?—Well, four farm servants and two labourers.

44,228. Where do the farm servants live?—Two of them in the house, and the other two are in the loft of the storehouse.

44,229. What is the usual arrangement with the farm servants. Where do they sleep in this part of the country?—Outside, in the yard—on the top of the stables—in the stable loft.

44,230. Do you make them a fairly comfortable room?—Yes.

44,231. Is it not too cold for them in winter?—No, I do not think so.

44,232. Are they able to read at all there when they have any time?—Yes, as much as they like.

44,233. We have heard of one man reading the whole Bible through in his bed place. Do your servants do that sort of thing?—I really cannot tell you.

44,234. You do not know?—No.

44,235. Do you welcome them at all in the kitchen in the evenings?—Yes, up to 10 o'clock at night.

44,236. Not after 10 o'clock at night?—No.

44,237. You have got room for them?—Yes.

44,238. They are not in the way?—No.

44,239. And is that the usual thing in this part of the country?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Grove.

44,240. The quality of the land of your two farms must be very different?—Yes.

44,241. Do you know the average price of them both, thrown together; it is 11*s.* 7*d.* an acre; I do not know whether you ever worked it out. The reason of the difference in price is that the quality is quite different, I suppose?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,242–3. Which is the cheaper of the two?—The one at 30*s.* an acre.

44,244. The higher priced land is the cheaper of the two?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,245. You told us that farmers in your district were prosperous, did you not?—Yes, as well as they can be, some more successful than others.

44,246. What do you mean by saying that they are prosperous?—Do you mean to say that they make a profit out of their farms, and are satisfied with their lot, and have no grievances?—Some of them put money by in the bank.

44,247. Do you speak of your own knowledge?—Yes.

44,248. Are they people who have money coming in from other sources besides farming?—No, I do not understand that they are.

44,249. What is the character of the farming of those people; I would rather like to know?—Corn of about 40 or 50 acres, and the rest pasture.

44,250. Do they pay any special attention to the breeding of horses or to high class of cattle?—To stock, yes.

44,251. But do they give special attention to the breeding of good horses, and so on?—I cannot speak of horses, but I can speak of cattle.

44,252. Where do you go on Sundays?—To church.

44,253. Were you once a Nonconformist?—Yes, before I married.

44,254. Was it then you seceded and went into the Church?—Yes.

44,455. Did you get a farm then?—Yes, after my father-in-law, before I married 44,256. Did you go to live in the farm where your wife was?—Yes.

44,257. Was your wife a member of the Church of England?—Yes.

44,258. Was there any chapel convenient?—Yes, but not of the denomination to which I belonged.

44,259. Was it a condition that you would have to go to church before you would be accepted as a tenant?—Not in the least.

44,260. Did you think it policy on your part to be a Churchman after becoming a tenant farmer; was it a matter of policy?—Well, I knew that it was a good thing for me.

44,261. In what sense?—In every sense. In a religious sense, and——

43,262. In what sense did you mean to say that it was good for you?—In consequence of many things.

44,263. But tell us of one?—Because there is so much hypocrisy among these Nonconformists,

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,264. Was it when you went to the farm that you made this discovery?—No, a long time before.

44,265. Why did not you leave the Nonconformists and go to the Church, then, before?—Because of my poor mother.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,266. What about your mother?—She did not choose that I should go.

44,267. She thought the Nonconformists were sincere?—No, I do not think so.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I am obliged for the information which has just been handed up to me. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, by their legal representative, stated at St. Clear's that, in regard to the Treventy case, they elected to give their evidence in London, through their Secretary. They are local landlords, and in consequence they must be heard in the country, where tenant farmers will have an opportunity of hearing their evidence, and, if necessary, of rebutting it. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, therefore, if they intend to come before the Commission, must be heard in the county in which they hold property. Are there any more witnesses to come forward? [No response.] The list of witnesses has been gone through, and we are much obliged to those gentlemen who have come forward and given evidence.

[Adjourned to Newcastle Emlyn.]

FIFTY-THIRD DAY.

Assembly Rooms, Newcastle Emlyn, Cardiganshire, Tuesday, 24th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.
Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Dr. ENOCH DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

44,268. You are a retired surgeon?—Yes.

44,269. Where do you live?—Bryn Teifi, near Llandyssil.

44,270. How far is that from here?—6½ miles.

44,271. Will you be good enough to read your statement?—I am a retired surgeon, residing at Bryn Teifi, near Llandyssul, in the county of Cardigan, and a member of the Cardiganshire County Council.

At a public meeting of tenant farmers held at Newcastle Emlyn, which meeting afterwards resolved itself into a committee of which I became chairman, I was requested to tender evidence before the Commission on behalf of tenant farmers in the Newcastle Emlyn poor law union, which has an assessment of 53,673*l.*; an acreage of 102,765, and a population of 19,108.

Being the son of a small freeholder in this county, and having farmed some 70 acres of land on my own account for about 18 years, I am well acquainted with agriculture in this district.

The public meeting I have referred to was well attended, several farmers volunteering to come forward to give evidence; only a few of them, however, have done so. Doubtless they had good reasons for dropping off. One large tenant farmer who has received exceptionally bad treatment, and had promised to come forward, ought to appear to-day. At first he attended our committee meetings but has thought fit to discontinue his attendances lately. We have found it very difficult to obtain documentary evidence such as agreements, leases and receipts for rents. It may appear strange to those living outside West Wales, that farmers should be afraid to come forward and tell their own story. But those who are acquainted with all the circumstances do not think it so.

Chairman—continued.

They know what farmers have had to put up with for the last 25 years. They dare not show any independence of spirit, their manliness has been crushed out of them. They cannot look an agent in the face, much less approach their landlord. It is only fair to state that Sir Marteine Lloyd, of Bronwydd, is the only landlord that I am aware of who has told his tenants he would be pleased if any of them came forward to give evidence. Immediately on hearing Sir Marteine's pleasure, two tenants recorded their testimony.

Sir Marteine Lloyd did this through the Farmers' Committee, and directly it was communicated at one of the meetings two of the Bronwydd tenants were appointed by their fellow tenants to come forward to give evidence.

LAND TENURE.—I am convinced that the land laws as administered in this district are unjust both towards tenant farmers and a hindrance to good farming. The question was prominently before the public during the general election of 1885. I well remember the dissatisfaction expressed at the views stated by the late Mr. David Davies, once M.P. for this county, and a Liberal. With characteristic shrewdness Mr. Davies later on deemed it judicious to consult the feelings of the electorate again before the polling day, and it was gratifying to see that he made rapid strides towards the "Three F's."

Recently I have made it my business to ascertain the views of farmers on the subject. A few suggested "Protection" as a remedy; some went in for "lowering workmen's wages where possible," but the bulk strongly advocated "security of tenure, and fair rent and compensation for capital invested in the soil."

Few can speak better from experience of the insecurity of tenure than the Cardiganshire farmers. There are but few estates on which evictions have not taken place during the last 25 years. On some estates the least pretence sufficed. The large majority, however, it is believed, had a political origin, and most of them occurred after the memorable election of 1868.

There was a widespread rumour that a conclave composed of landlords and their satellites was held at Aberayron in the spring of 1869 at which it was agreed (1) that all tenants who voted for a Liberal candidate in the November previous should be evicted; (2) that all who remained at home that day should have their rents raised; (3) that, where possible, no farm should be let to Nonconformists; (4) that new churches should be built in several districts.

To prove to demonstration that such a conclave was held, or that such resolutions were passed is a difficult matter, but the unanimity with which landlords from that time on, evicted their tenants and raised the rents of others, the new churches that sprang up, and the difficulty which Liberal Nonconformist applicants found to obtain farms on Conservative estates, lend much support to that rumour. Some land agents during the summer of 1869 did not attempt to conceal the new policy. One, an agent for three large estates, went so far as to say he meant "to exterminate Nonconformity in Cardiganshire and starve the damned preachers."

All those, with one or two exceptions, who voted Liberals in 1868, were evicted, and those who remained neutral had their rents raised.

Here is the list; it is simply concerning those in this Union who were evicted.

44,272. This is a list of those who stayed at home and who had a rise in their rents?—Those were at home on the day:—

Mr. Morris, Deinol - -	14*l.*
Mr. Morris, Pantseirif - -	10*l.*
Mr. Owen, Alltcorde - -	5*l.*
Mr. Evans, Alltcordeisaf - -	5*l.*
Mr. Griffiths, Havod - -	3*l.*
Mr. Jones, Penrallt, on same estate voted Tory, and did not have any rise in his rent.
Mr. Davies, Ffos Esgob - -	23*l.*
Mr. Jones, Cwmbarre - -	13*l.*

See 44,505 and 44,559.

I ought to say, to be fair, that although Mr. Jones, Cwmbarre, voted for the Liberal candidate, he was not evicted, but had his rent raised 13*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,273. What is the explanation?—Well, I cannot tell you; it is impossible to explain the actions of those days. I could explain some of them, but Mr. Jones is giving evidence himself in this court. Then there were some evicted on the Alltyrodyn estate.

44,274. Who was the landlord?—John Davies Lloyd, who came of age in 1871; and the following of his tenants were evicted at the end of September 1871:—

Mr. John James, Camnant.
Mr. David Thomas, Llwynshop.
Mr. Davies, Gilrachronw.
Mr. Jones, Blaendyffryn.
Mr. Jenkin Jones, Pwllaubryn.
Mr. Titus Jones, Domen.
Mr. Thomas, Rhyd Owen Mill.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Mr. David Jones, Ffynon Llywelyn.

The following tenants of other estates were also evicted at the same time:—

Mr. Evan Evans, Parke, on the Maes Crugiau estate.

Mr. James Jones, Alltfawr, on the Maes Crugiau estate.

Mr. Evans, Pantteg, on the Pentre estate.

Mr. David Jones, Cwrt Mill, on Col. Lewes, Llysnewydd estate. See 73,175 and 73,191.

Mr. Sam Jones, Dolgoy, on the Llanfair estate.

Mr. Thomas Thomas, Pantdefaid, on the Llanfair estate.

Mr. Evans, Cardigan, on the Pigeonsford estate.

Mr. David Evans, Pwllyrheirn, on the estate of Mrs. Brigstocke, Blaenpant.

Mr. Watkin Jones, on the estate of Major Rice, Llwynybrain.

Chairman.

44,275. Now please proceed with your evidence?—Those evictions that followed the election of 1868 were attended with exquisite cruelty. People who had spent a lifetime on their farms were turned adrift, young people just started in life were made homeless. Women within a month of their confinement had nowhere to lay their heads.

The pecuniary losses of the farmers were very great, and a few dropped into premature graves. As a result, a feeling of indignation was roused throughout the country; public meetings were held to protest against the landlords' conduct and express sympathy with the victims. One such meeting was held in London on February 7th, 1870, presided over by the late Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., one of the principal speakers being the late Serjeant Parry, the latter remarking "that it was almost "incredible that things which had taken place "in Wales could occur in the latter half of the "19th century." Another such meeting was held at Aberystwyth at which the following resolutions were passed. I produce the resolution passed at the meeting.

44,276. Please read it?—"That this meeting "deeply sympathises with the anxieties and "sufferings of those who have been evicted from "their holdings or otherwise injured in their "circumstances in consequence of the conscientious exercise of the franchise at the late "elections, and pledges itself to aid the fund "that is now being raised with the view of "compensating them so far as possible for the "losses they have sustained." The other resolutions are very much to the same effect.

It is not for me to hold the parties who caused the evictions responsible for their consequences. One thing, however, is certain, that the impressions they left will never be forgotten in Cardiganshire.

The case of David Jones, of Ffynnon Llewelyn, on the Alltyrodyn Estate, was peculiarly sad. After his eviction David Jones failed to get a farm anywhere, and having a wife and three grown-up children determined to emigrate to the States. Mr. and Mrs. Jones had buried four children in this country. Having taken ship their three children were stricken down with small-pox, and died previous to their reaching New York. The parents returned by the same boat, and Mrs. Jones died broken-hearted three months after.

This dark cloud, however, which after 1868 hung over Cardiganshire had its silver lining. Notwithstanding the fact that 50 families were rendered homeless, some to seek shelter in cow-sheds, others in disused and roofless cots, there was not a single act of incendiarism or of violence committed. When the spring assizes came round the judge—the late Mr. Justice Hannen—was presented with a pair of white gloves.

Rent.—Now, especially, the question of rent presses heavily upon the farmers. Complaints are general among farmers that they cannot pay their way. In order to meet the audit some draw money from the bank at a high rate of interest; others sell their stock at a disadvantage, while a few are driven to utilize what private means their wives brought them as dowry. A brother-in-law of mine has been obliged to use from 30*l.* to 40*l.* of his wife's money every year to pay rent to Mr. David Jones Lloyd, of Gilfachwen. A young farmer of my acquaintance, though he had four sisters who worked hard to assist him, who live and dress very plainly, is not able to pay his rent even then without using 40*l.* a year the interest on 1,000*l.* left them by their mother's will. These cases are typical. The manager of a local bank told me only last week than an incredibly large number of farms borrow money out of the bank to meet the rent. Mr. Thomas E. Ellis, M.P. for See 16,917. Merioneth, stated in October last year that rents in the county of Cardiganshire since 1814 have advanced 70 per cent. I believe the per-centage in this district is higher than that even. This would be difficult of proof. I have receipts in the case of one farm on the Alltyrodyn Estate, which show that the rent there has increased since 1842 at the rate of 103*l.* per cent.

This, I believe, is an index to the whole estate.

44,277. To whom does that estate belong?—It did belong to John Davies Lloyd.

44,278. To whom does it belong now?—Every bit of it has been sold to different people.

44,279. You have the receipt of this one farm which shows that the rent has increased there since 1842 at the rate of 103 per cent.?—Yes, and I believe that is an index to the whole lot. On the Bronwydd estate there is a farm, named Bryngwyn. The lease expired some 40 years ago. I am not in a position to say the date of the lease; previous to its expiration the rent was 25*l.* a year. Then the farm was divided, the rent of the two portions amounting to 70*l.* Now it is 86*l.*, an increase since the lease was granted of 244*l.* per cent. A great-grandfather of mine leased a farm called Blaenythan, on the Pentre estate, about 1808. I am not sure of the date—

Chairman—continued.

I heard my father say it many times; but I know the rent—71*l.* per annum. The lease has expired, and the rent is now 146*l.* 10*s.* per annum, an increase of 105 per cent. Then there was Penallt, 80*l.*, 62 years ago, now 170*l.*, or 112 per cent.

Rents were increased mainly on tenant's improvements and when times were good. Farmers now find themselves helpless. There is no kind of combination among them. Naturally fond of rural life they cling to their old homes. It is to be feared this affection, be it weakness or otherwise, is often taken advantage of by landlords, so that rents are raised especially on the smaller farms. Things would be much more serious were it not for the industries in East Carmarthenshire and Glamorganshire which offer outlets for the population. This is so at a great self-sacrifice and inconvenience. There are scores of families in this union where the husband works in Glamorganshire, and the wife and children live in Cardiganshire or Carmarthenshire. The husband longs to return, and would remain at home if any chance of permanent employment presented itself, or a small allotment could be got.

44,280. I should like to ask one question on that. Have the landlords set apart any portions of their estates for small allotments for labourers?—I do not know of any.

44,281. That is not the custom in this part of the country?—That is not the custom. There may be a labourer here and there keeping a cow and working on a large farm.

44,282. But it is not the custom to have small portions of the land let at the same rent as it would be let to a farmer, and let as a small holding?—It is not the custom.

44,283. As a small piece of land it is generally sub-let by the farmer?—There are many who take it direct from the landlord too, and I believe they would just as soon.

44,284. Of course they would sooner take it from the landlord?—By "allotments" I mean plots.

44,285. One-tenth of an acre, and that sort of thing?—Yes; I misunderstood you before.

44,286. There is nothing of that sort in this county?—There are some fields where they keep a cow or two.

44,287. That is beneficial?—But you will hear evidence to-day complaining bitterly of the high rents. As to compensation, it is difficult to give the exact number of farms sold within this union during the last 15 years. The Alltyrodyn, Blaendyffryn, and Llanfair Estates have been entirely disposed of, and large slices of the Falcondale and Gogerddan Estates. These sales involved great loss to the tenants. To some it meant the loss of the labour of generations, of many years. The capital invested cannot well be estimated. All was sold with the land, and when a farmer bought his own farm he had to pay dearly for his own improvements, which the agent never forgot to advertise. Even tenants themselves, when they were

Chairman—continued.

"substantial men," were advertised. I have a number, if you wish to see them.

44,288. That has been done in England, too. I have known that?—I do not deny it. These changes, and the general uncertainties of tenure have made farmers shy and cautious. Owing to this, the land goes without proper cultivation, and is not made the most of. As to past legislation, the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 is a dead letter in this district. The unseemly hurry with which all the landlords in South Cardiganshire contracted themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875 (I produce the notices) had had its due effect by the time the Act of 1883 was passed. Tenants knew well their landlords' feelings in regard to all such legislation. I have agreements here where they contract out of the Act of 1883 as well. Is this the proper time to put them in (handing them)?

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,289. Do they contract out of anything except the 33rd section?—Yes, they went the whole way.

Chairman.

44,290. This agreement which you have handed in, is on the Pigeonsford estate. Is this the agreement in force now on the Pigeonsford estate, or is it an old agreement?—It is after the Act of 1883.

44,291. "And it is hereby lastly agreed be"tween the said parties hereto that the terms
"and provisions of the Agricultural Holdings
"Act, 1883, shall not apply to this tenancy."
That is the Pigeonsford estate?—That is so.

44,292. Have you any more?—I have a copy: I cannot prove the correctness of the copy, but I will bring the man who copied it to meet you at Aberayron on Friday.

See 44,561. 44,293. It is as well not to put anything in that you cannot prove up to the hilt?—Then I ask Mr. Saunders Davies, Pentre, to put in the original. That is on the Pentre estate.

44,294. This is a copy of a memorandum of agreement?—Do not mention the date, my Lord.

44,295. Between R. S. Davies, and so on?—It is a memorandum of agreement made on the Pentre estate.

44,296. "And it is further agreed that this "contract of tenancy shall not be affected by
"nor be subject to the provisions of the Agri"cultural Holdings Acts (England), 1875 and
"1883"?—Whatever the principle of the Act in Cardiganshire and Carmarthenshire it is unworkable.

44,297. That is your practical opinion?—Yes there is no benefit derived from it by the farmers. I do not mean to put the blame of it on one side more than the other, but it is the fact that there is no benefit derived from that Act.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,298. You say it is inoperative?—Yes, that is what I mean. When the notices of contracting out of the Act of 1875 were served, landlords insisted upon their tenants signing strict agreements. I produce the agreements, but they are very much to the same effect. There is one that the tenants shall deliver to the landlord every year one ton of hard coal, the tenant to pay for it.

44,299. To pay for and deliver it?—Yes.

44,300. Have you any objection to giving us the name?—Not in the least. It is very seldom we are able to give the names, and I am glad to have one to give. (The agreement was handed in.)

44,301. This is between Evan Evans, of Nether Stowey, in the county of Somerset, surgeon, of the one part, and David Jones, of Hafod, in the parish of Clydau, in the county of Pembroke, farmer, of the other part, dated the 28th day of January, 1888: "Will yearly render "and deliver unto the said Evan Evans, his "heirs or assigns, without being paid for the "same, one ton of hard coal, three fat ducks,
"and two loads of potato manure, at such times
"and places on the said premises as the said
"Evan Evans, his heirs or assigns, shall from "time to time direct." "And will pay all tithe
"or tithe rentcharge"—"and will yearly spread
"not less than from six to eight tons of lime
"over such parts of the said farm and lands as "shall most require the same." "And will not "hire, occupy, carry on, or be concerned in "occupying or carrying on any other farm or "land without the previous consent in writing"
—is that objected to?—No.

44,302. The chief thing in that, I think, is the delivering of one ton of hard coal free?—It has all the other clauses that are contained in other agreements. Some of these agreements contain clauses, the like of which, if enforced to-day, would go far to ruin many tenants. The excuse is made that they are never enforced.

44,303. We have always been told that?—But the fact is they hang over the tenant's head like the sword of Damocles, and must have a very demoralising effect. I say that, no doubt, the number of subscribers to the petition against the Suspensory Bill was much increased by the very existence of these clauses in the agreements, and I maintain further that they have a most demoralising effect. As to the relations between landlord and tenant, there does not now exist the same homely feeling between landlord and tenant that there used to be 40 and 50 years ago. My father never seemed tired of telling us of the kind and courteous bearing of the Lloyds, of Bronwydd, of Mr. Saunders Davies, of Pentre, and of the Lloyds, of Alltyrodyn and Dolhardd. There were no middlemen in those days, and mischief makers had not the ears of landlords. An old saying, still current in this neighbourhood, is credited to the "old Lloyd," of Bronwydd. It is: "Cursed be the first Lloyd who will evict a Bronwydd tenant." I have not heard of a single eviction ever having occurred on that estate.

Chairman.

44,304. Not up to the present time?—No.

Our old squires did not ignore the people's language or sneer at their religion. They granted chapel leases at nominal rents, and without obnoxious clauses. No favouritism was shown to Churchmen. The result was that tenants worshipped their landlords, each boasting that his landlord was the best. There grew up a fine race of men, straightforward, honest, independent, in fine contrast to their present degenerated descendants, who are nervous, timid serfs.

Agents seem to think that ignorance of the tenants' language is no disadvantage to the landlord. It is to the agents' interest that the landlord is ignorant of Welsh, as otherwise they would lose much of their power. It is fair to add that the best landlords are at variance on this point with their agents, and express their regret at their inability to speak Welsh.

On several estates, notably those of Earl Cawdor, and of Col. Lewes and Mrs. Lewes, Llanerchaeron, there are a number of tenants who have left Nonconformity and Liberalism.

44,305. Do you verify that statement?—Yes. It is on the paper I handed to you first. I have no desire to make it public, but I am quite prepared to stand by it.

44,306. It is either a fact or it is not. There are a number of tenants who have left Nonconformity and Liberalism, and you produce a list of those?—Yes, but I have no desire to hurt anyone's feelings. I consider it a matter of duty, because we do maintain that the Nonconformists have not fair play. They do not stand on the same footing as the Churchmen when they go for farms. This goes far to prove that people are wide awake, and they notice it, therefore they go.

44,307. You do not wish in any way to bring any charge against these people?—Not of undue influence, but simply that the public have found out that it is the easiest way to get a farm. It is simply a question of opinion where they get the light from, or the enlightenment, for their souls, on the question of the Church and Nonconformity; it might come from Heaven, or it might come from the agents' office.

44,308. On these estates there are a number of tenants who have left Nonconformity and Liberalism?—Yes. Several of these live on good farms.

Clergymen have been known to interfere greatly between landlords and their tenants. A tenant, who is a Churchman, in the parish of Bangor-ar-Deifi, proposed at the vestry last year a farmer, who is a Nonconformist, to be a guardian of the poor for the ensuing year. Some months after, the rector of the parish wrote to the landlord complaining of the farmers' conduct, requesting him, as landlord, to use his influence so as not to have such conduct repeated. Fortunately the landlord was a gentleman, and sent the rector's letter to the tenant, telling him to do as he thought best at the next vestry.

Chairman—continued.

In too many cases there is quite a gulf between landlord and tenant, the former despising the latter. The least offence calls forth a notice to quit, or at least a threat which almost amounts to it.

I maintain that the landlords do not treat their tenants with the respect due to a hard working-man, however ignorant he is of the English language. This is a letter (handing same). I am not allowed to use the names.

44,309. We will take it for what it is worth, but your evidence is so very clear and straightforward that I think it would be better only to speak of what you know?—I do know this. Shall I put in my own way the contents of this?

44,310. You are permitted to bring this forward, only not permitted to give the names?—Yes, to bring it forward, but not to give the names. I do not wish to press it. I think my second letter will prove what I have stated. I am able to produce this simply because this tenant leaves the estate this year.

44,311. Is the name given with that?—Yes. (handing letter).

44,312. This is the letter:—

"Gilfachwen, Llandyssil, S. Wales,
"SIR, October 22, 1883.

"I BEG to give you notice that if you employ Tom Harries in any capacity on your farm again I will at once give you notice to quit.

"Yours truly,
"JOHN LLOYD.

"Mr. John Rees,
"Bircoeduchaf."

Tom Harries was a working man, and he had worked on the home farm at Gilfachwen for months previously, and the tenant of Bircoeduchaf did not know that he had had any quarrel with Mr. Lloyd, but took him on in good faith. Without in any way consulting the tenant on sending a message he writes him that letter which I call an arrogant letter.

Some landlords would seem to think that they govern by a sort of divine right; that the land with all that therein is was made for their convenience and pleasures. They have done next to nothing for the improvement, social and moral, or the education of their tenants.

HOUSE ACCOMMODATION, &c.—The neglect of landlords for years has left much to be done in the way of improving farmers' and labourers' houses. Some in the county of Cardigan are a positive disgrace. I have photographs of two on two separate large estates. In visiting different districts, I came across several equally bad. In several instances I found there was only one long room upstairs, sometimes with only one window, the remaining apertures walled up. There was no attempt whatever at sanitary provisions.

I will hand you these photographs. There is nothing private about these, and I am quite willing to give you the names.

Chairman—continued.

e 45,560 44,313. On what farm is that first one?—The first is Park-y-Trap, on Colonel Lloyd's estate, Llysaeron. Colonel Lloyd is an officer in the Cardiganshire Militia. It is close to this town.

44,314. And what is No. 2?—That is Gaerwen in the parish of Llandyssul, on the estate of Mr. Rogers, Abermeurig.

44,315. And where is No. 3?—That is Cwm-annerch on the same estate again, in the parish of Llandyssul. Those are three farm houses.

44,316. They are farm houses?—Yes, you can see the churn in front.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,317. I hope they are not typical?—Yes, there are plenty of them. I took those most convenient for the photographer.

General Dealing.—There is a feeling everywhere that a crisis has come in Welsh farming, and that the present lot of tenant and labourer must have an end. Also a general cry that the Legislature should interfere.

Buoyed up by hope, the Welsh farmer as yet has not experienced the courage which comes of despair, and Wales has its hands clean from agrarian crime.

That is my evidence.

Chairman.

44,318. I have but very few questions to ask you, Mr. Davies, your evidence is so clear, but I will just ask you this. Do you think that language and religion are in any way accountable for the gulf between the landlords and tenants?—I do.

44,319. Are the landlords unapproachable? Do the tenants find it difficult to approach their landlord?—They find it best, I believe, not to go by the agent.

44,320. Because they are afraid to incur the displeasure of the agent?—That is it.

44,321. What remedies have you to suggest now for this state of things?—I have been entirely in the hands of the farmers. Since they appointed me chairman as I said I thought it my duty to mix up with them and talk to them, and talk freely to them which I can do very well at different times, and whether they are right or wrong they have set their minds, that is a large majority of them, on some sort of Bill which will contain these things which I have pointed out. They do not wish to call it a permanent fixity, but certain security in their homes. They feel that there ought to be some means devised by Parliament to let them have their farms at a fair rent. They consider it very unfair that the landlord should select a man to value their estate and the tenant have no voice at all in the selection of this man. The tenant is not consulted or spoken to, but they simply value it just as they like, and then he is informed at the due date that it is so-and-so. They often ask me, Why should we not have the power to select another man with him, and some other body to select an umpire? They have such faith in the Cardiganshire County Council that they are very anxious that the Cardiganshire County Council should nominate the umpire.

Chairman—continued.

44,322. Opinions vary a good deal as to the Cardiganshire County Council. We had one man yesterday who objected to the Cardiganshire County Council having anything to do with the appointment of an umpire. Is the competition for farms very keen here?—Oh, dear, yes.

44,323. I suppose the tenants often find that when they are treating for a farm they are not able to contract on equal terms with the landlord because of the keen competition?—Yes, that is it.

44,324. They know that if they do not give the rent that the landlord demands, other people will give it, and they will have to yield?—Yes. Some landlords advertise their farms and receive tenders in the county of Cardigan. I know one, but I had better not say There is evidence to be produced to-day about it.

44,325. Does it occur very frequently that landlords advertise their farms to let—not of necessity to let by tender?—No, I do not think that is common, because there is plenty of rush for them. Landlords are only human, and it is very natural that they should, seeing that there is such a demand for this article, and the farmers are helpless, do what they choose. I do not blame them.

44,326. I take it the contention of the farmers is this, that really a farm will not pay at the competition rent?—That is it.

44,327. And they want a fair rent fixed; that is such a rent as will leave a margin for profit on the working of the farm?—Yes, they do not want a very big margin or a big profit. The Cardiganshire farmer is a man who lives very plainly.

44,328. Being a surgeon of course you know a great deal about their habits?—Yes.

44,329. You are able to testify that they really live hard and thriftily?—I have spent the last four years entirely in this county as a retired surgeon. I spent 21 years in a colliery district in Glamorganshire. I ought to say that during 18 of the 21 years I was in Glamorganshire I farmed a farm here between this point and Llandyssul, which brought me into contact on market and fair days with the farmers. It was a silly hobby of mine; but, however, it is a fact. During the last four years I have mixed a good deal with them here, and gone in and out of their houses, and I do find things as I say.

44,330. That they live hard and are industrious?—Yes.

44,331. And really make the best of their farms?—Yes, I believe so. I do not pretend to say that they are highly educated in agricultural chemistry, and those things.

44,332. But according to their knowledge?—I say they are a keen, and shrewd people, and sober and very industrious. I do not care what any agent says, or any one here before this Commission, I maintain, and I assert it, I am not afraid of doing so, that the Cardiganshire farmer is very industrious, possessing an average amount of keenness and shrewdness in his calling.

44,333. Do you find the Cardiganshire farmer ready to migrate into fresh districts?—No. I do not know whether it is a weakness, or a good strain or weak strain, but it is a fact.

44,334. You would consider his language and also his religion would have much to do with his attachment for his home?—Yes, and his relations.

44,335. He does not like to break up his connection?—No.

44,336. And really the landlord profits by this attachment to his home?—Yes, largely. I do not mean that in any unfair way, but that must run up the demand for land, and the price of land.

44,337. I take it you have no cut-and-dried scheme for fixing fair rents?—No, I must leave that to far wiser men than myself.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,338. Do you mean, Dr. Davies, that the love of home is stronger here than it is in England or in Ireland or Scotland?—It is very strong in Ireland and very strong in Wales—in Cardiganshire. It is a weakness of the Celts.

44,339. I feel it very strongly?—I know you do, Sir John.

44,340. May I ask you if you are a landowner yourself?—I do not know what a landowner is exactly. I own two very small farms.

44,341. Do you let them?—Yes.

44,342. May I ask you how you arrive at a fair rent? Is it by freedom of contract between yourself and your tenant?—No. As to the first one when I came into possession I found that the rent had been fixed 60 years ago and it is just the same still.

44,343. That is by mutual agreement between yourself and your tenant?—No, we never spoke about it. I had this place left me with the rent fixed upon it 60 years ago.

44,344. That is the case with many landowners, is it not?—I daresay, but we have had these professional valuers about here. I do not know of a single estate on which they have not been.

44,345. Have the professional valuers been round this neighbourhood to a great extent?—Pretty well.

44,346. And have rents been raised in consequence?—Yes. Bronwydd was re-valued in 1865 and in 1871, and the rents raised each time.

44,347. Have the rents been raised in consequence of re-valuation?—Yes. I gave you the figures. But there is a tenant of Sir Marteine's who is going to give evidence upon that.

44,348. The difference between yourself and those cases would be that you allowed the tenant to remain on at the old rent?—Yes. In one instance the farm was taken 2½ years ago when the times were very nearly as bad as they are now—perhaps not quite. We settled it amongst ourselves. I said that if he did not agree with the rent I was quite willing for him to name a man. I do not know whether he thought it too high.

44,349. As a matter of fact, it was arranged between yourself and your tenant?—That is a fact.

44,350. You had no difficulty, I suppose?—I had farmed the place myself for 18 years and I knew what was the value of it pretty well.

44,351. But you had no difficulty in settling the matter amicably between yourself and your tenant?—No.

44,352. In regard to these political evictions of which you speak they were in the year 1868?—Yes.

44,353. And in the spring of 1869 and subsequently. That was in the days of open voting?—1868 was open voting.

44,354. Since those days the Ballot Act has been passed, has it not?—It has.

44,355. In your opinion is that a protection against any political influence with regard to the tenants?—Oh, yes, the fact that we returned our member last time with 2,000 majority proves that.

44,356. You also spoke of the general election of 1885?—Yes, I did.

44,357. That was between two Liberals I think?—No.

44,358. Was it not?—No; I am glad to say that the Conservative candidate then has become Liberal since.

44,359. May I hope that political evictions have now become obsolete. There are none. Do you know of any?—No, I do not know of any political evictions, and I doubt if there is a landlord that would really have the face to evict a man now for it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,360. But do you find a spirit of persecution?—There is the same terror. I do not know when it will be obliterated, and that is the reason. I could not tell you if I had two hours in which to do it, the difficulty I have had to get these bits of evidence up for you. Only yesterday I called on a tenant of Lord Cawdor and asked him if he would kindly allow me to copy an old receipt simply for curiosity. It was in the year 1600 odd and I wanted it out of curiosity. "No," he said, "I know you very well—there is that meeting to-morrow."

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,361. But I wanted to elicit from you what your opinion of the Ballot Act was—whether you consider this was a complete protection to the voters?—It was a great protection.

44,362. Later on in your very interesting evidence you speak of relations between landlord and tenant, and you say, "On several estates, "notably those of Earl Cawdor, and of Colonel "Lewis, and Mrs. Lewis, Llanercharon, there "are a number of tenants who have left "Nonconformity and Liberalism. Several of "these live on good farms." Is not that an insinuation that Lord Cawdor has influenced his tenants in the direction of being Churchmen and Conservatives?—I did not mean it in that sense; what I meant to say was this, that the men were shrewd enough to find that out.

44,363. The inference appeared to me rather strong?—I did not mean it in that way. What I meant, and I did say it, I think, in explanation, was that the people are shrewd enough to see on which side of the bread the butter is.

44,364. Are there no old Nonconformist landowners in the county?—Very few. I do not know of them except somebody who farms his own farm; I do not remember now.

44,365. Are there any instances of sub-letting of land in this neighbourhood?—By the farmers?

44,366. Yes?—I do not know. I could not speak of that; I do not remember any now.

44,367. There was a question I wished to ask you particularly; you say there was a fund raised?—Yes.

44,368. It does not appear upon your statement what the amount of it was. It was in 1870. Can you give any account of it and say whether it was a large amount?—The list was published now and again, and I copied this list from the "Baner," but I am not in a position to tell the Commission whether this list is the first, or the second, or the third.

44,369. It is not a complete list?—It is not, and I failed to get it.

44,370. I will not ask you more than that, then. With regard to house accommodation I should very much like to hear from you your professional opinion of these houses of which you put in some photographs, by which you show us that some of the houses are in a very dilapidated condition?—Yes. I visited many.

44,371. Are there any which, in your opinion, are dangerous for human habitation?—Yes, certainly, several of them.

44,372. Have you no machinery now existent by which you can remedy that?—You mean the Sanitary Board?

44,373. I do?—Quite so. I am afraid it turns very slowly in Cardiganshire. I am not a member of it, or an officer, or anything else.

44,374. Do you think that the machinery wants stirring up?—Yes; a little oil.

44,375. Can you suggest a better form? There is the election of guardians which is in the hands of the people?—The form of the election of guardians is rotten.

44,376. That is about to be reformed, I think?—I am very glad to hear it.

44,377. The medical gentlemen, I think, can give very great assistance to the existing authority?—No doubt. I should like to mention one thing, Sir John, if you will allow me. I believe that many landowners, owing perhaps to the laws of primogeniture and so on, are very much handicapped in making good buildings, but I cannot defend the owner of No. 1, that gentleman is one of the wealthiest in the county of Cardigan.

44,378. On the large estates are they not usually the first to repair their buildings?—The larger landlords?

44,379. Yes, the larger landlords?—I do not think any of them can boast of the high state of repair of the farm-houses.

44,380. In most parts of Wales we have been to I think we have found that the largest landowners are the first to put the buildings on their estates into repair. Take Lord Cawdor's estate?—I daresay it is so, I do not speak of Lord Cawdor. I know nothing about his estate or how it is managed.

44,381. We have had that evidence?—I will mention one fact which I mentioned before, namely, that a great grandfather of mine leased Blaenythan, and I can remember Blaenythan since I was a boy; that is 40 years ago, and the dwelling-house was in a bad state then.

44,382. How is it now?—It is just being repaired for the first time. I have not seen it for many years; but even then it was in a most dilapidated condition and it was not appropriate for a farm of that description.

44,383. I was speaking principally of the labourers' cottages. These photographs appear to be labourers' cottages?—They are farm-houses.

44,384. Is that a farm-house (producing photograph)?—Yes, it is Park-y-trap, the tenant pays 65*l.* a year.

44,385. What is the acreage of his land?—39½ acres.

44,386. Is that a farm-house (producing another photograph)?—Yes; he pays 5*l.* a year.

44,387. What is the acreage of that farm?—I could not tell you, nor of this one, but I can tell you the rent of them all. This is 18*l.* a year.

44,388. 5*l.* is a very small rent; it is not much more than the house rent?—No, I do not say that it would pay to build: but what I say is this, that it is demoralising for a man in the position of that gentleman to let a hovel like that on his estate. That is what I mean.

44,389. In a case of this kind do you know whether any representation has been made to the Sanitary Authority as to the unsanitary condition of the house?—No, I do not know about that. I am not in a position to say; but I can say this, that the man has spoken many times about it, Mr. George, the clerk of the Union, has been to see it, and it has been a general complaint on the part of the tenant for 12 years, he tells me. But he will speak for himself upon that.

44,390. I rather wished to get what was in your mind as to the procedure under which remedies ought to be applied?—The ex-officios are so strong on the Newcastle Emlyn Board of Guardians that I do not think any officials could make any way.

44 391. Is not that again being remedied by the new law?—But it has not come into force yet.

44,392. No, but steps are already being taken. I wanted rather to know whether you wished this Commission to take any further steps than are already existing or are already being taken?

—My simple object in getting these photographs taken at my own expense was this, to give you as much knowledge as we possibly could upon your visit through Cardiganshire. That is the only reason.

44,393. I also wanted to get what was in your mind as to the remedy?—I would rather not force my opinion upon that subject.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We may hope, I think, that remedies are being taken that will satisfy everybody.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,394. You mentioned one farm there of which the acreage is 39½, rent 65*l.*?—Yes.

44,395. What kind of land is it?—It is very fair land. It does not come up to the River Teivy, but it is on the side hills half a mile from the river.

44,396. It is from 37*s.* to 38*s.* an acre?—It is.

44,397. What is the nature of the farming that is pursued now on that farm? Is it grazed?—Yes, and butter-making is done there, I expect. I do not know whether he sells milk; I cannot say; but what he complained to me of, if I am in order in stating it, was the impossibility for him to carry on his duties as a farmer in such a house as that. There are only two rooms in it; they have taken the stairs away as a pre caution to stop anybody going up because if anyone does go up he will certainly go down.

44,398. In a house of that kind it seems impossible to carry on a dairy or anything of that sort?—If you will allow me to use the farmer's wife's words they were, "We can only "do things, Dr. Davies, by removing the same "articles 12 or 20 times in the day and shifting "about with them." Those were her words.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,399. In your experience over many years the buildings have been improved, but not with sufficient rapidity to satisfy you?—Yes, they are improved, but what I mention is that there are lots, especially on the side hills, which are a disgrace to civilized people.

44,400. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, as to which you used some expression, you said it was inoperative?—Yes.

44,401. Is that because it is unknown?—Oh, dear, no.

44,402. Is it known?—Yes, very well known.

44,403. Tell me why it is inoperative, then?—It is a very mild article to begin with, and there is the fact that they have to get permission from the landlord for all improvements in Schedule I., if I remember right.

44,404. Yes, quite right?—That is enough in itself. If a farmer cannot do what improvements he is able to do without the written permission of his landlord—that is to say, reasonable improvements—I do not speak of extreme things of course—I do not mean to say that the farmer has a right to do anything he likes on the farm and make the landlord pay for it.

44,405. It is too cumbrous a machinery you think?—It is too mild altogether.

44,406. Then you did not mean that it was inoperative, because it is unknown?—Oh, no.

44,407. It is known, but still it is inoperative?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,408. I may take it that you think that a tenant does not have sufficient liberty to act so that he can really carry out the improvement he wishes, and you think that when an incoming tenant, say, is taking his place it should be assessed on the value to the incoming tenant?—Yes, but what has militated against it a good deal is the fact that our landlords do not approve of it and the fact that several of them have contracted out of it. I cannot express to you in words this feeling of terror that has eaten up the life of farmers in Cardiganshire.

Chairman.

44,409. Mr. J. E. Vincent asks, "Do you "know the farm of Gilfachronow?"—Yes, very well.

44,410. "Were you a party to an action "against Mrs. Elizabeth Jones in respect of this "farm?"—My eldest brother was evicted from that farm after the election of 1868 without a farthing compensation. He had his mother-in-law in the house with him, 80 years of age, and his wife was within a fortnight of her confinement, and he had not a place to go to. He pleaded hard for the old woman and for his wife and they refused him a day—refused to allow him to stay till her confinement was over. That farm was put under the hammer in 1881.

44,411. Whose property was that?—John Davies Lloyd of Alltyrodyn. It was put under the hammer in 1881 and my eldest brother bought it.

44,412. Was that the one that was living there?—Yes, the one that was evicted. I think he bought one of these. I think he bought one of these close agreements—it was presented to him with the farm for the money. The tenant that was in it at the time of the sale had signed a very strict agreement, they were all the same on the Alltyrodyn Estate. This agreement was handed to my brother when he bought the farm. Some time after that he told me that it was a very heavy burthen to him, and he had a large family of young children, and he asked me if I would become partner with him in the farm. I said I would if my other brother with whom I stayed would take a third and that we would take a third each, and we did. Then there were five years of lease unexpired at the sale. We gave notice to the tenant and reminded her of the agreement which she had signed which was very strict, and we asked her to keep to it. Instead of that, out of vindictiveness—I do not blame them of course—she did her best to work out the farm and cut it up in every way and in every form, although she was made acquainted with the provisions of this agreement. We offered her very fair terms, not I personally, because I had nothing to do with the management of the business, but my brothers that were down in Cardiganshire had. However, it was not settled and litigation was started, but at the end she made an offer herself, we accepted it, and we paid our share of the law costs. That is all I know; those are the facts.

See 45,641–45,722; and 47,611–47,664.

44,413. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Did you receive the following letter, marked "'A,' from Mr. J. Howell Thomas, of Car- "marthen, in respect of that action?" The letter marked "A" is as follows:—

"Carmarthen,

"Dear Sir, January 26, 1886.

"Gilfachronow.

"I have carefully inspected the buildings, fences, and general condition of this farm as requested, and beg to report as follows: I have no hesitation in stating that the buildings still in existence are in quite as good a state of repair as they were when I saw them previous to the lease being granted to Mrs. Jones in 1877. The buildings at that time were in a very bad state, and it was upon the promise of reinstating some of the buildings and houses that the rent was agreed upon. Under all the circumstances that are within my knowledge, I do not consider that Mrs. Jones is liable for any sum for dilapidations excepting, perhaps, a trifle for gates. I think the sum of 2*l.* might be allowed for this, provided the gates now put on one side and disused are given over to Mrs. Jones. The house and several of the buildings have recently been pulled down, therefore it is manifestly impossible for one to value any dilapidations that may have existed upon them. The state of the fences and the cultivation of the farm generally is quite as good as when Mrs. Jones entered upon her occupancy, and equal to the general condition of the surrounding farms. I am informed that Mr. Rees Thomas, in order to avoid any litigation, made an order, without prejudice, of about 15*l.*, but I am quite unable to agree to his figures. In conclusion, I may observe that there appears no sort of doubt but that when Mrs. Jones agreed to surrender the lease to the present owner and occupier, she was under the impression that it was an absolute surrender; and I consider the claim now made, under these circumstances, to be both unreasonable and unjust.

"I beg to remain, dear Sirs,

"Yours faithfully,

"J. Howell Thomas.

"To Messrs. Price and Lloyd,

"Solicitors,

"Lampeter."

That is the letter marked "A" referred to in Mr. Vincent's question. You received that letter from Mr. Howell Thomas, at Carmarthen, in respect of the action?—I presume our solicitor received it. I cannot speak to it because it was all carried on apart from me.

44,414. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Is 'B' a copy of the Statement of Claim and "'C' a copy of the Particulars?" "B," the Statement of Claim, is as follows:—

Chairman—continued.

"1886, D., No. 651.

"In the High Court of Justice, Queen's Bench Division.

"3. The said buildings, gates, watercourses, drains, and hedges &c. were during the term out of such repair and the land was not cultivated in the manner required by the covenants of the said lease.

Chairman—continued.

That I take it was your claim?—They were drawn up by Mr. John Francis, the valuer of Carmarthen, I believe. I know so very little about it myself, but I believe Mr. Francis was called in.

44,415. We can take it that that is correct?—Yes, I think it is; I do not know otherwise.

44,416. Did you instruct Mr. Walters, of Carmarthen, to write letters "D" and "E"? "D" is dated the 20th February 1882 and "E" is dated the 7th December 1885?—I cannot say I did, my Lord.

44,417. But have you any reason to doubt that that is the fact?—Oh, no.

44,418. "D" is from Mr. Thomas Walters, solicitor, Carmarthen, and is as follows:—

"Carmarthen,

"DEAR MADAM, "20th February, 1882.

"Gilfachronow.

"I ACT for Mr. Davies of Bargoed Farm, the purchaser of this farm at the recent sale of the Alltyrodyn Estate. The sale was made, as you are aware, subject to the lease which is vested in you and which is unexpired. My client would have no objection to take the farm up next September if convenient for you without having regard to any breaches of covenant (if any) which may have been committed by you. Of course you must not understand me as suggesting that there has been any breach, for I know nothing of the matter. If, however, you continue in possession till the expiration of the lease, as I presume you have a right to do, you will be expected to conform strictly to the terms of the lease, which I am told is a somewhat stringent one. I think it as well to apprize you of these matters at this early period, so that you may have an opportunity of making your arrangements.

"I am, dear Madam,

"Yours truly,

"Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, "THOMAS WALTERS.

"Gilfachronow,

"Bangor Teifi, near Llandyssul."

That, I think, we may take as correct?—Yes, my Lord.

44,419. Then "E" is another letter from Mr. Walters, of Carmarthen, written upon the instructions of the same three gentlemen apparently and is as follows:—

"Carmarthen,

"MADAM, "7th December, 1885.

"MESSRS. DAVIES, the owners of Gilfachronow, have consulted me relative to the dilapidation on this farm which, according to the lease, ought to be made good by you. Mr. Francis, the land agent, has made a valuation of the dilapidations on behalf of my clients, copy of which I understand you have had, and which seems to me most reasonable. Mr. Francis' estimate is 33*l.* 17*s.*, and unless you pay me this at once I shall have no alternative but to take proceedings against you, a course which I assure you my clients would very much regret. Please let me hear from you by Thursday next.

"Yours obediently,

"Mrs. E. Jones, "THOMAS WALTERS.

"Rhydowenfawr, Llandyssul."

Chairman—continued.

Those letters "D" and "E," I may take it, were written?—Yes.

44,420. Mr. Vincent's questions continued:—"As a matter of fact, did you and your brothers "outbid Mrs. Jones at the auction for this "farm?"—Yes, my brother did. My brother bought it and afterwards asked us to join.

44,421. Your brother bought the farm, having been the previous tenant?—Yes, and having been evicted from it.

44,422. And over the head of Mrs. Jones, the sitting tenant?—Yes.

44,423–4. "Do you know, as a matter of fact, "that the agreement with the original landlord "had never been acted upon?" You cannot know that?—No, I cannot.

44,425. "Do you know that 'G' represents "the estimate by Mr. Rees Thomas, Mr. David "Lloyd, and Mr. John Jones, in respect of the "dilapidations of Gilfachronow?" "G" is as follows:—

"Valuation of repairs required to be done at Gilfachronow made by Messrs. Rees Thomas David Lloyd, and John Jones.

	£	s.	d.

I suppose you cannot answer that?—No, I know nothing about that.

44,426. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Did you on the 24th March 1885 give Mrs. "Jones notice to quit on the 24th March "1886"?—I cannot tell that.

44,427. Is this the notice marked "H"? The notice is as follows:—

"To Mrs. Elizabeth Jones.

"We hereby give you notice to quit, yield, and deliver up unto us or unto such person as we shall appoint to receive the same on the twenty-fifth day of March 1886, or at the expiration of your lease quiet possession of all the messuage and premises called Gilfachronow situate in the parish of Bangor in the county of Cardigan with all the appurtenances thereto belonging, which you hold under us David Davies, John Davies, Enoch Davies as tenant, otherwise you will be proceeded against as the law directs. Dated this twenty-fourth day of March 1885." (The notice was handed to the witness)?—Yes, I signed this.

44,428. "Was Mrs. Jones a widow"?—She was.

44,429. Mr. Vincent asks: "Why were the "particulars nearly three times greater than "Mr. Francis' estimate"?—I cannot say.

44,430. Mr. Vincent asks: "Do I understand "you to say that the lease (Evans to Jones) "contracts out of the Act of 1883 as a whole?" The lease says: "It is hereby agreed and de- "clared by both parties hereto that section 33 "of the Agricultural Holdings Act (England), "1883, shall not apply." You know that you can contract out of section 33?—Yes, but it was as to the length of notice that I put that lease in. See 44,298.

44,431. Yes, it was so. You are quite right about that. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Is the case of Cwmbarre amongst those of "Mrs. Brigstocke's estates in which you suggest "that rent was raised for political reasons"?—It is. See 44,272 44,505–44,559.

44,432. "What grounds have you for saying "that the revaluation and rise in rent were for "political reasons"?—I ought to say that the tenant is coming to give evidence to-day, and he has all the proofs with him; but I made that statement with his knowledge.

44,433. And on his behalf?—Yes.

44,434. But he is coming to substantiate that statement?—Yes, he is going to give evidence.

44,435. I do not think I need ask you the rest of the questions on that subject then. The following questions are also by Mr. Vincent: "You have spoken to the farm of "Blaenythan saying that it has now for the first "time in 40 years been placed in repair?" You remember you said something about the farm in question?—Yes, that is the farm. I was speaking of the farm-houses.

44,436. "Do you know that the lease under "which the tenant was bound to repair has "only expired recently?"—It expired some years ago.

44,437. A question from the chair: Do you know how many years ago?—No, I do not remember.

44,438. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Has not the landlord in fact begun to repair as "soon as he had authority to do so?"—I cannot say more than that the dwelling-house has been repaired this summer.

44,439. The following question is by Mr. Lloyd: "Will you allow the letter to be seen "that was put in as written by the late Mr. John "Lloyd to John Rees?"—Yes, with pleasure. (The letter was produced and handed to Mr. Lloyd.) See 44,312.

Re-examined 45,719.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Enoch Jones, called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

44,440. Does the paper which has been handed in contain the statement of your evidence?—Yes.

44,441. Has it been examined, and do you vouch for it as being correct?—Yes.

44,442. Where do you live?—At Ffynondafolog, in the parish of Trelech, Carmarthenshire.

44,443. Where is that?—About 9 miles from here—between 9 and 10.

[The following statement of the witness was read]:—

My evidence is entirely concerned with my life in Cardiganshire. Until last Michaelmas I lived as tenant farmer in Cardiganshire. I now live on a small farm of my own. I have spent all my life on the land. I have been farming on my own account the last 26 years. I commenced farming at Penbeilybach, in the parish of Llandyfriog, as yearly tenant, without any agreement. This farm contained 73 acres of land, mostly arable, and I rented it for 68*l.* a year. It was only 55*l.* a year two years previously. In about five years the owner died, and I received "notice to quit" from the children who were seven or eight in number, each having a share in the property, and each appeared equally anxious to receive what was due. The trouble I had to come to some sort of terms with these eight is really more than I can tell. At last I rented it at 80*l.* My dwelling-house was in a wretched state, snow and rain coming in, and the boardings upstairs were in such a rotten condition as to be very dangerous even to walk on them. I had often requested them to repair it, and at last they consented to do so on condition that I was to defray all expenses, which would be allowed to me in future rents. The summer had now far advanced before any steps were taken in repairing the house. Whilst the house was being repaired I had to remove my family to the barn. We had to unroof a part of this temporary dwelling-house to allow the smoke to escape, and, of course, rain, snow, and wind entered as well. Yet my poor wife gave birth to a child in this hovel, and the season was very cold, being far advanced in winter. After this event, we thought the sooner we should return to the dwelling-house the better, and the baby was only three days old when I carried my wife from the barn to the house, which was in a shocking state, and quite unfit for a strong healthy person—even the walls were dripping wet, and as there were no stairs my wife and baby were huddled in the room downstairs. Before we had finished repairing the house I heard it rumoured that I was to receive "notice to quit," and I did receive two notices before the end of March—one was dated 20th and the other 25th March (produced).

44,444. Tell us the year that happened in?—1879.

I felt the same difficulty this time again, no possibility of getting any definite terms from the different owners. All told me to go on, that I was not to leave, but an advance was understood. I walked to them 17 times before I could get them all to re-let it to me again. At last I had the offer of it for 95*l.* Nothing but sheer necessity compelled me to promise this exorbitant price for it. I had no place to turn to, and, besides, I had paid for all the repairs on the understanding that the amount expended would be repaid in rent. My wife was much attached to the place, having been brought up there. Some time after taking the farm again for 95*l.* I was asked to sign an agreement binding me to keep all the houses in good repair. This was unreasonable, because the cow-house, pig-styes and carthouse were just tumbling down. I said I would sign to keep those that were in good repair, and nothing else. Just then (in August) I received "notice of ejectment," which I produce. My opinion was, and is, that it was nothing but a plot to frighten me to sign the agreement. I have received some lawyer's letters for rent which have been already paid (produced). During my stay here I received three notices, and my rent was advanced from 68*l.* to 95*l.*, and as there were no hopes of being able to live in peace and quiet, and pay my way in this place, I looked out for another.

Chairman—continued.

After a deal of treating and talking, I rented Blaennant, in 1881, of Mr. Fitzwilliams, of Cilgwyn, for 220*l.*

44,445. How many acres was that?—212.

44,446. And the rent 220*l.*?—The rent was 220*l.* I spoke often to the agent about the terms; and I never heard a word from him that I should be called upon to sign this hard agreement. (Agreement handed in.)

Mr. Richard Jones.

I have read the agreement.

Chairman.

Is it a very harsh one?

Mr. Richard Jones.

Yes; there are over 30 conditions there.

Chairman.

44,447. There are 36 conditions, of which these are some of them:—

"9. To paint with two coats of best oil colour, and in a workmanlike manner, in every third year of the said term all the internal wood, iron, and other work in or about the said premises previously or usually painted, and in every seventh year all the internal wood, iron, and other work in or about the said premises previously or usually painted.

"10. To repair and paint on three months' notice.

"11. To consume and spend every year (save the last year of the tenancy) upon the said premises in a husbandlike manner all the hay, straw, clover, fodder, roots, and green crops, muck, dung, and compost which shall be there produced or made.

"12. To spread every year upon the said premises in a husbandlike manner 20 tons of well-burnt lime.

"29. To insure the said farm house, and all buildings for the time being on the said premises in the joint names of the landlord and tenant in the Westminster Fire Office, King William Street, Covent Garden, or some other insurance office approved of by the landlord, for the sum of 800*l.* at least, and to produce when required by the landlord or his agent the policies of insurance and receipts for premiums and other sums payable for effecting and keeping on foot the said insurance, and to expend all moneys received in respect of such insurance in repairing and reinstating the premises damaged or destroyed by fire.

"30. To insure all the dead and live stock on the farm in such fire office as aforesaid for at least two-thirds the value thereof, and to produce when required by the landlord or his agent the policies of insurance and receipts for premiums and other sums payable for effecting and keeping on foot the said insurance."

44,447A. Do you consider this a harsh agreement?—I do.

We did talk over the number of acres that should be tilled and about the buildings, &c. When everything had been agreed upon, and when it had been well known that I was to have Blaennant, and that I was to leave Penbeilybach, I was informed at the office that I was to sign this agreement. If I knew in the beginning I should be called upon to sign such a document, I should never have dreamt of sending in such a high tender for Blaennant. It was let by tender. Now I was entirely in Mr. Fitzwilliams' hands. I had no alternative but to sign it.

Blaennant measures 212 acres, and is naturally a corn-growing land; therefore, it is impossible to farm it and to pay my way with such a strict and severe agreement. I well remember I had two nice ricks of hay to spare one spring, and many a good offer I had for them. At last the Rev. Rees Lloyd, the rector of Troedyraur, and a good friend of my landlord, wished me to sell one of them. I was willing if Mr. Fitzwilliams was agreeable. Mr. Lloyd went to him himself, and this is the communication I received.

44,448. Will you put in the letters?—Yes, (Handed.)

Chairman.

The letter is as follows:—

"The Cilgwyn Estate Office,
"Newcastle Emlyn,
"South Wales,
"23rd May 1885.

"Estate Steward, T. Robertson,

"Dear Sir,

"Mr. Fitzwilliams desires me to let you know that he will not allow any hay to be sold off your farm.

"Yours truly,
"Thomas Robertson."

That letter is addressed to "Mr. Enoch Jones, "Blaennant Farm, N.C. Emlyn."

Yet Mr. Fitzwilliams bought hay and straw of tenant farmers of other estates, and flatly refused to buy any of me.

Chairman—continued.

I have suffered very heavy losses from rabbits during the twelve years I was there. I do not wish to exaggerate, but I feel positive it would amount to from 40*l.* to 50*l.* annually. I killed some hundreds every year in my spare time, and I kept an account one year of how many I killed, and the number amounted to 1,000 (of all sorts, of course, as my sole object was to destroy), and that, I believe, without making perceptible diminution, for my landlord never made any remark to me. A short time before I kept this account he remarked that the rabbits were never so few. If it is taken into consideration the number my landlord and his party killed, the poachers, the foxes (which were numerous), the weasels, polecats, and the cats of the district, the number must have been enormous every year; yet I had to feed them all, and that without any compensation.

In the year 1887, the times being exceptionally bad with farmers and when I hardly made the rates out of Blaennant, the tenants on Mr. Fitzwilliams' estate, all except one, agreed to petition our landlord for an abatement.

The following is the petition:—

"Sir,

"We, the undersigned, being tenants of yours, beg most respectfully, though earnestly, to submit to your kind notice the following considerations:—

"The unprecedented and still continuing agricultural depression has dealt most severely with us for some years now. We are obliged to sell our cattle for less than half the prices they fetched years ago.

"This year's drought has aggravated our sufferings by diminishing our crops, in some instances by considerably more than half the usual amount. Fodder for the cattle will be extremely scarce, and very dear, if bought.

"Add to this the difficulty, almost the impossibility, of selling our cattle at any price, as witness our sad experience in last Tuesday's Fair, and, so being compelled to keep them when we have nothing like a sufficient quantity of fodder for them, the outlook for the coming winter you will allow is exceedingly gloomy for the poor farmer. The scarcity of fodder owing to the long drought has been the last straw to break the camel's back. We are thus, dear Sir, driven by the horse of straitened circumstances to implore your kind sympathy with us and generous consideration for our deplorable condition. We are not indulging in exaggerations at all; all our statements could be literally verified by an appeal to facts.

"The best of feeling has hitherto subsisted between us as landlord and tenants respectively, and we feel confident that we shall not now appeal in vain to your generosity, and sense of justice, when we earnestly though respectfully request you to give us a substantial abatement of our respective rents, in order to enable us to tide over the unprecedented depression, owing to the great reduction in the price of cattle, and especially the extreme lightness and scarcity of this year's crop, caused by the long drought.

Chairman—continued.

"You are well aware that this is being done these years very generally by a good number of landlords, and we feel sure it will be the means of perpetuating the good feeling that has always characterised the relation between landlord and tenant in our land.

"Trusting and praying that you may see your way clear to comply with our present urgent request,

"We are,
"Dear Sir,
"Yours respectfully,
"DAVID EVANS,
"ENOCH JONES."

All the tenants, as I said before, with the exception of one, promised to sign it. When it was taken round, however, all refused, except David Evans, Pwllyrheirn, and myself. We both signed it, and sent it in to Mr. Fitzwilliams. The first Sunday after that I met him, and he informed me he would not return anything to us: he would make no difference on the estate.

According to my agreement I was to pay 10 per cent. for all new buildings done at my request; therefore, I did not ask for any. My landlord had often been at me to have them, but I put it off. However, he agreed to reduce the interest to 6 per cent., and cattle sheds and other sheds were built; also pigstyes. I refused to build until he threatened to take away part of the land from me.

I did a lot of repairs and improvements to dwelling-house and outhouses at my own expense, though he supplied some of the timber. He also supplied the milk-pans (stone) to fix in the dairy.

I pulled down some 1,000 yards of fencing at Mr. Fitzwilliams' request—that it might be more convenient for him when crossing my land.

Mr. Fitzwilliams never considered my interest and convenience. The first week I went there I found one morning his cart carting stones across my grass field to build a fence, which was continued for several days. I remember these carted away again before I left, and this time in the middle of summer. The end of 1884, or the beginning of 1885, a road was cut out to haul timber through my seed field, without even asking me, nor did I receive any compensation for the damage done.

During the summer of 1887, when there was a great drought, a drain was cut across one of my fields, and pipes were laid, and all the water taken from that down to Cilgwyn, leaving my beasts without any. All this was done without even asking my consent. In the year 1892 my landlord's men cut up a good deal of another field of mine whilst trying for water.

During my 26 years of farming life, I received four 'notices to quit,' and an advancement in rent each time, or leave. Another time Mr. Fitzwilliams took some land from me to give to another man, without notice even. If I refused I should have probably received one in due time, and have to quit: in fact, the agent said I should have it in due course if I refused. I gave in at once. With the loss from rabbits,

Chairman—continued.

the loss through foxhunting (here I beg to produce some short notes I made of foxhunting over Blaennant during the season, showing imperfectly the trouble and worry, as well as the loss to me, through this sport alone), the numerous 'notices to quit,' strict agreements, and the constant harassing, I was pretty nearly tired of my life. (The notes were produced.)

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,449. Are they taken from a local paper?—Written down at the time.

Chairman.

44,450. They were made when the hounds came across your holding?—Yes.

Whilst at Penbeilybach I was in daily fear of having my rent raised; at Blaennant daily fear of being ejected.

At last I made up my mind to try and get a place, however small, which I could call my own. When my landlord heard I had bought the place I live in now, he presented me with a 'notice to quit' and a letter, which I produce. (The documents were handed in.) 44,451. Are these the notices to quit?—Yes, the notices to quit and the letter.

44,452. This letter had better be read, I think. It is as follows:—

"Cilgwyn Estate Office,
"Emlyn, South Wales,
"DEAR SIR, "12th September 1892.

"MY reason for giving you notice to quit your farm at Michaelmas 1893 is, that you having, as you told me, bought a freehold and having to raise money on mortgage, will probably have to withdraw your capital from working my land.

"Unless you have proper security that you will work Blaennant advantageously I do not think it advisable to re-let the farm to you.

"Yours truly,
"CHAS. FITZWILLIAMS.

"Mr. Enoch Jones,
"Blaennant, Emlyn,
"South Wales.

"P.S.—I wish you success, but am bound to see to my own interest, otherwise I am sorry to part with you.

"C. F."

The notice to quit says, "You are hereby "given notice to quit and deliver up the farm "and land."

Last April I met the agent, and he informed me that the rent of Blaennant for me was 270*l.*, but it was rented to an utter stranger for 46*l.* per annum less than I paid—another entered into my labour.

44,453. They asked 270*l.* of you?—Yes.

44,454. As against 220*l.*?—As against 220*l.* which it was before. There is one thing that would explain this matter, and it is this. It was because I had taken some extra land. I took in some more land two years after the first taking, and that accounts for the advance in the rent.

Mr. Fitzwilliams has said more than once that he would rather reduce the rent to strangers than to the old tenants. I may say that the third tenant is already at Penbeilybach. He rents it now for 75*l.*, but, I believe, only paid 70*l.* last year.

I have bought my experience dearly. I have no hesitation in saying that it is out of the question to farm to any profit when tied down by strict agreements, and in continuous fear of an advance in rent or eviction, and when harassed in different ways. I still believe it would be better for farmers to live as tenants, provided they are adequately protected by law. Nothing but security of tenure, fair rents, and compensation for improvements can give us that. I can assure you, gentlemen, that there is a very strong desire in the country for such a law.

44,454A. I suppose this is what you complain of in the agreement: "The landlord "agrees to let and the tenant agrees to take "from the 29th day of September 1881. all "that messuage or farm house and farm with "the several fields, closes, pieces or parcels "of land, outbuildings and cottages thereunto "belonging commonly called and known by the "name of Blaennant, situate in the parish of "Llandyfriog, in the county of Cardigan, containing together by admeasurement (exclusive "of woodlands) 212 acres 3 roods and 25 "perches, or thereabouts, and more particularly "described in the map annexed to these presents "and therein coloured pink. To hold the same "for one whole year and so on from year to "year until it is determined at the end of the "first or any subsequent year by either party "giving to the other six calendar months' "previous notice in writing at the yearly rent of "220*l.* payable quarterly on the 25th day of "December, the 25th day of March, the 24th "day of June, and the 29th day of September "in every year, the first payment to be "made on the 25th day of December next, "and the last payment to be made in "advance one calendar month before the expi-"ration of the tenancy, and at such further "rent as shall be equal to 10*l. per centum per "annum upon all money and expenses which "may be laid out or incurred by the landlord at "the request of the tenant in or otherwise inci-"dental to the erecting of any new building* or "the improving of existing buildings on or in "under draining the said premises, such last-"mentioned rent to commence and be payable "from the quarterly day for payment of rent "which shall happen next after the day on "which any moneys or expenses shall be laid out "or incurred as aforesaid."

Mr. Vincent.—That 10 per cent. was reduced to 6 per cent.

Chairman.

44,455. Yes. I might repeat that; you never asked for any improvements when 10 per cent. was demanded?—No.

Chairman—continued.

44,456. Mr. Fitzwilliams had to come down to 6 per cent.?—I did not ask him to do that.

44,457. You did not ask him to do that, but he came down to 6 per cent. and then some improvements were made on those terms?—Yes, my Lord.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,458. When did you leave Penbailybach?—In 1882. That is when we finished at Penbailybach.

44,459. You say that there was a request to repair and consent by the owner to do improvements on your defraying all expenses?—No, it was not like that.

44,460. These are the words I have here?—Penbailybach you refer to, I think?

44,461. You say in your statement: "I had "often requested them to repair it and at last "they consented to do so on condition that I "was to defray all expenses which would be "allowed to me in future rents?"—That is so.

44,462. Did you defray all expenses?—I did.

44,464. Did you get nothing of that when you went out of the farm?—I was paid the carriage; I was allowed the haulage.

44,465. What was that?—About 17*l.*, but I was not paid the carriage in respect of the buildings that I had put there before.

44,466. Do you consider you were out of pocket in respect of permanent improvements?—Not much, only the trouble. It was not a proper time in the year to build.

44,467. I do not know whether you clearly understand me. How much money were you out of pocket in respect of permanent improvements?—They were their improvements, not mine.

44,468. Were the expenses allowed out of the future rents?—Yes.

44,469. Did you ask Mr. Fitzwilliams for an abatement?—Only the memorial that we sent to him.

44,470. Would you have been satisfied with your landlord if abatements had been made?—Yes, because I wanted it, of course.

44,471 Then you are not dissatisfied with the principle of abatements?—No.

44,472. You had no objection to the principle of abatements?—No, I had not.

44,473. How large is your present holding, Ffynondafalog?—About 93 acres.

44,474. You are a freeholder?—There is a little mortgage on it—a little money raised on it.

44,475. Do you think it would be a good thing if Government would lend money at a low rate of interest to enable men to be freeholders?—It would be very good for people who have bought their places too dear. I cannot say exactly, but I think it would be a very good thing for those who have bought their places at a high price.

44,476. You feel that you have got fixity of tenure now as a freeholder?—I do not quite understand.

44,477. No one can turn you out of your holding now?—No, I can do just as I please now.

44,478. Who has to do the repairs; you have, I suppose?—I have.

44,479. Then you can do them to your own liking and whatever improvement you choose you can make?—They would not allow me to put a gate where I wished before, but I can put it now.

44,480. When you bought Ffynondafalog did you propose at the same time to retain Blaennant did you wish to keep both farms—both Ffynondafalog and Blaennant—when you went there?—No, not altogether.

44,481. Did you mean to keep a part of it?—No, I intended going to Ffynondafolog if I could not get a reduction in the rent of Blaennant.

44,482. You did not intend to keep both on at the same time?—No, I did not.

44,483. So that you and Mr. Fitzwilliams both thought the same thing that it was not desirable that a man should hold two farms?—I should think so.

44,484. It was nothing unreasonable in Mr. Fitzwilliams to give you notice under those circumstances when you had become a freeholder elsewhere?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,485. When you left the other farm where you paid 95*l.* rent, who took it after you?—I cannot say.

44,486. How long did the tenant stay there?—Two or three years.

44,487. Have there been many tenants there since?—The third is there now after me.

44,488. Three tenants in how many years is that?—It is 12 years since we left Penbailybach.

44,489. Then it is three tenants in 12 years?—Yes.

44,490. Do you know why the other tenants have left?—The first and the second failed, I believe.

44,491. Was that because the rent was too high?—I cannot say.

44,492. Do you know at all what the rent is now?—I believe it is about 80*l.*, only that he had an abatement last time. It is about 75*l.* or 80*l.*, I cannot say which.

44,493. With an abatement last time, was that it?—Last time there was an abatement.

44,494. That is what you have heard?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,495. With respect to Penbailybach did you get any money in return for the buildings which you erected on that farm?—We built a shed and a cart-house; the landlord gave timber for the hedges.

44,496. Did you get anything for the shed and the carthouse?—No.

44,497. So that really you had to pay for the shed and the carthouse, and your rent was advanced, while you were there, 27*l.*?—Yes, according to that.

44,498. Is it customary to let farms by tender on Mr. Fitzwilliams' estate?—All I know is that I was told by the agent to send in a tender for it.

44,499. Are we to understand that it was advertised to be let by tender?—I did not say it was advertised. I know nothing about that. Pengelli on the same estate was advertised.

44,500. I take it that what you mean is this, that it was to be let to the highest bidder?—That is what I understood, and by tender.

44,501. To go back to this Penbailybach farm, have you the receipts for the rents which were claimed by the lawyers?—They are here.

44,502. Because you say in your statement, "I have received some lawyer's letters for rents which had already been paid." (Witness produced letters.) Had you paid the 7*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* which is claimed?—Yes.

44,503. Does this often occur that landlords reduce the rents to new tenants?—Yes, I think so.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

44,504. Is there anyone in the room representing Mr. Fitzwilliams?—(No response.)

Some witnesses' names were here called in order that their evidence might be taken in the second Court, amongst which was the name of Mrs. Margaret Jenkins.

Dr. Enoch Davies.—Maggie Jenkins has sent word to me this morning to say that she is afraid to come forward.

Chairman.

We have been informed that a witness has stated to Dr. Davies that she is afraid to come forward.

Dr. Enoch Davies.—I received a message to that effect.

Chairman.

You received a message that she was afraid to come forward.

Dr. Enoch Davies.—Yes.

Chairman.

It cannot be too well known in the county of Cardigan that the Commissioners are unanimous on one point and that is to afford all protection to witnesses, and if any case of intimidation or stopping of witnesses comes before our notice we are unanimously resolved to act up to the strictest letter of the law. That cannot be too widely known, and I hope that every gentleman in the room will scatter that information wherever he goes.

Mr. Samuel Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

44,505. You live at Cwmbarre in the parish of Penbryn?—Yes.

44,506. How far is that from here?—Seven miles, my Lord.

44,507. Is this your statement? Has it been examined by Professor Rhŷs, and is it correct?—Yes.

44,508. It is accurate? Do you vouch for it in every particular?—Yes.

I am 72 years of age. I commenced farming on my own account 44 years ago, on a place called Baily, on the Pentre Estate, as a tenant from year to year, and no agreement of any kind. Had to haul for new buildings the first year of my tenancy—carried timber all the way from Pentre, and the slates from Cardigan. I had to pay even the turnpike gates. Spent 10 years of my life here, and left much labour behind me—no compensation. I left in order to get a larger and better farm. I took Cwmbarre, where I live at present, of my father-in-law, who had a lease on it. I paid him 40*l.* a year for it—the acreage is 100, and it is mixed land—5 acres only of permanent meadow land. The lease expired in three years after I went there, and I rented the farm of Mrs. Brigstocke, at an advance of 20*l.* per annum.

I asked a gentleman of position in the neighbourhood to go down with me to Blaenpant to rent the farm. I took it on condition I was to have new buildings when I desired, and no advance in rent when they were built. I worked hard here, and most of the time I had two or three children assisting me. There were 20 acres of boggy land here, which I drained all at my expense—built 70 perches of new fences.

Late in the autumn of 1868 Mrs. Brigstocke called herself to see me. She talked very pleasant to me about the buildings and other things. I told her I would rather wait another year or two before building, and that was agreed upon. In course of nine days after this Mr. George, the agent, called and informed me that he had to call by order of Mrs. Brigstocke, to ask me to vote for the Conservative candidate, Mr. Vaughan. I was requested to join the other tenants of the estate at Blaenpant at breakfast at 8 a.m. on the morning of the poll, and then drive all together to Cardigan to vote. I told him I could not possibly vote Tory after having professed Liberalism and Nonconformity all my life. I voted for the Liberal candidate. In March I received 'notice to quit.' In May following I received a letter from Mrs. Brigstocke, telling me to go down to Blaenpant, and I went, and took the same gentleman with me this time, a Mr. Morris, who had been so well received at Blaenpant when he came with me the first time. On arriving at Blaenpant Mr. Morris was refused admittance to the house, and as it was a very wet day he had to take shelter in the stable. This was a very bad omen. When I was shown in to Mrs. Brigstocke's presence I was immediately told by her that my rent was to be advanced by 13*l.* per annum. I tried to reason with her, saying that this advancement was entirely on my own improvements, and that the place was already very dear enough. I was informed that those were the terms if I wished to have it. I then told her I would rather go away if she would kindly allow what was fair, and no more, for my improvements. She said, 'No, and if you do not want it you may go.' I felt I had no alternative but to take it. I have paid the same rent ever since. I had to haul everything to build dwelling-house, back kitchen, stables, cart-house, and pigstyes. I put water-power to turn the machinery, and again built 45 perches of new fences. When all was pretty complete, I was informed that my place was to be sold by private contract. I asked her to allow me to buy it. She flatly refused. It was sold to another gentleman; and I have no hesitation in saying that at least 300*l.* of my money was left in the land. Cwmbedw, Glanceri, and my farm are the same on the rate-book, and have been for years. Their rents are 50*l.* and 47*l.* respectively, whilst my farm has been since the election of 1868, 73*l.* This last advancement has completely broken my heart. I consider I have paid since then close upon 400*l.* more than I ought to. I should be a poor man to-day only for the labour of my children and the little private property my poor wife had.

Farms are generally too high in rent to meet the rate of farm produce these days. I consider we should have protection from the harsh treatment some farmers like myself have received. There is a strong desire for security of tenure, fair rent, and compensation. We have no heart as things are, to work on the land; therefore, the land is not cultivated as it should be, and the farmer suffers in consequence. This, with the state of the market, have brought many of us to very straitened circumstances. We look patiently to the British Parliament for better laws as to land tenure.

See 44,272.

44,509. You say that you consider you have left 300*l.* of your own money in the land?—Yes, and more too.

44,510. And that you have been paying for some years 13*l.* too much?—It was more than that.

44,511. For how many years did you pay those additional 13*l.*?—Since 1869. It was raised in 1869.

44,512. Then that would make how much? Have you calculated it?—No.

44,513. It would be over 300*l.* anyhow?—Yes, for 24 years.

44,515. Then that with the money which you consider you have left in the land would make over 600*l.*?—Yes.

44,516. Do I understand you to mean that you consider that you are to that extent out of pocket on that farm?—Yes, and I ought to have had interest for the money that I paid. I ought to have had that back in interest. She raised the rent and I got nothing for my work, and I ought to have had interest for the money that I left there. When I took it she said she would leave me there, and that she would not disturb me in any way while I was there. I could call a witness to prove that if necessary.

44,517. Do you mean a witness who heard that promise?—Yes.

44,518. Who was the witness?—Samuel Morris.

44,519. That was the gentleman you took with you to see Mrs. Brigstocke?—Yes, he was there with me twice.

44,520. Is he here to-day?—No, his paper is here.

44,521. I should like to hear that paper read if it bears upon the question. (The witness produced the document referred to.) Is the gentleman alive now?—No, he is not alive.

44,522. I misunderstood you. I took it that he was alive. Is that paper in English or Welsh?—It is in English.

Professor Rhŷs.

Might we have it read, my Lord?

Chairman.

Certainly. It is a letter addressed to the editor of the "Welshman," and signed by Mr. Samuel Morris.

Mr. Richard Jones.

It is rather interesting, and I think it bears on the case.

Chairman.

The letter is as follows:—

"The Alleged Political Evictions.

"To the Editor of the 'Welshman.'

"Sir,

"Will you allow me to offer a few "remarks in your widespread (and considering your Tory bias) impartial paper; they "may not be very palatable to you, or to a "section of your readers, but I shall endeavour "to state them in as inoffensive a manner as I "possibly can, consistently with telling the "truth, and nothing but the truth. In the "'Welshman' of last and previous weeks you "write in defence of Mrs. Brigstocke, who "has been charged with evicting Mr. Evans of "Penwernfawr for refusing to vote for Mr. "Vaughan at the last Cardiganshire election. "I have nothing to say in regard to that particular case, as my knowledge of it is imperfect,

Chairman—continued.

"but I beg leave to state a few facts bearing on "the defence which you are instructed to offer "for Mrs. Brigstocke. You say that Evans was "not evicted for refusing to vote, and you support "that assertion by stating that another of Mrs. "Brigstocke's tenants voted for Mr. Richards "and that he was not disturbed. I have some "facts to state with regard to 'this other te-"nant' which, I think, ought to receive publicity. "Eight or nine years ago the father-in-law of "this 'other tenant' died at a very advanced "age. He was born and bred on the farm, and "so were his father and grandfather before "him; he held it under an old lease for ten "pounds yearly rent, and he used to say that it "was offered to his ancestors 'tra para'r dwr i "redeg' (so long as water runs) for that sum. "The lease expired with him, and his son-in-"law, who lived in the place, went to Mrs. Brig-"stocke, accompanied by a friend, to apply for "it; they were received very courteously, and "it was let to him for sixty-five pounds a year, "five pounds more than he was willing to give."

Professor Rhŷs.

44,523. That is yourself?—Yes.

Chairman.

The letter continues: "But Mrs. Brigstocke "promised to make a new road to the upper "part of the farm, as well as build all that was "required at her own expense, without charging "extra rent; she also assured him that pro-"vided that he worked well upon the farm she "would give him every encouragement, and he "should never be disturbed by her. The man "did work as if it had been his own property; "he drained hundreds of perches filling them "with stones; he pulled down the zigzag hedges, "which covered acres of the best land, and "built new ones, converting the small enclosures "into square and good-sized fields; in fact, he "spent hundreds of pounds upon it in labour, "and I have heard that his landlady and her "agent should say that he was the best farmer "on the estate. Things went on very pleasantly "until the last election when he refused to vote "for Mr. Vaughan and voted for Mr. Richards; "he deemed himself more free to follow his own "convictions as he had a small freehold property "of his own. Last March he received notice to "quit, Mr. Blathwait was sent to revalue the "farm and the rent was advanced to 73*l.* a year. "These are the facts of the case, and I leave "you and your readers to draw your own "conclusions from them. Should any one con-"descend to notice this letter let him do so "openly, for anonymous writing on such "questions as these is cowardly and worse than "useless.

"I am, Sir,

"Yours sincerely,

"Samuel Morris.

"Rhyd-lewis, Newcastle Emlyn,

"Jan. 20th, 1870."

44,524. So your rent was raised after a valuation?—Yes.

44,525. But you think it was too high before?—Yes, if it had not been for the children that I had working upon the farm I should never have been able to pay for it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,526. Are you in Cwmbarre still, Mr. Jones?—Yes.

44,527. Has the rent been altered since 1868?—No, I tried several times, but they refused.

44,528. Have you a lease?—No, I have not a lease.

44,529. Have you an annual tenancy?—Yes.

44,530. Have you had any abatement?—No, I asked for 5*l.*, but she refused; she would not give me a shilling I asked for—I asked her to reduce it, at least I asked her if she would give me a shilling and she refused.

44,531. Has Mrs. Brigstocke sold this property?—Yes, it was sold two years last spring, and so was my work and all.

44,532. To whom was it sold?—To Dr. Powell.

44,533. But the rent has not been raised?—No, they could not raise it very much.

44,534. Have you a freehold property of your own in addition?—My wife has got a little freehold property.

44,535. It still belongs to your wife?—Yes.

Chairman.

44,536. The following questions are put in by Mr. Vincent: "What grounds have you for "saying that the re-valuation and rise in rent "were for political reasons?"—Because everything was so comfortable until that day, and she told me that I was the best farmer on the estate, and she promised that she would not raise the rent at all while she lived. I should not have drained at all if it were not that I thought I should have peace and quietness there.

44,537. "Was it not the fact that the rise was made on the understanding that Mrs. Brigstoke would do the following repairs?"—No.

44,538. I will read the repairs which are referred to: "Re-roof the dwelling-house; re roof the barn, rebuilding some of the walls"?—The barn was to be new altogether.

44,539. "Building new cattle shed"?—I know.

44,540. Does "I know" mean "yes" or "no"?—Yes, it is quite right.

44,541. "Building new pigstyes"?—Yes.

44,542. "And rebuilding part of the stable"?—She built the whole of the stable and moved it.

44,543. "Was it not the fact that the rise in the rent was made on the understanding that those repairs should be done"?—No, it was not the understanding at all; she was the nicest lady in the world till within a week of the election.

44,544. What is the answer to this question: "Was the rise made on the understanding that "these repairs should be done or not"?—When I took the place first of all the buildings were all to be new. Mr. Morris was with me when I took it. Mr. Morris' letter says so.

44,545. A question from the chair: The understanding was when you took the farm that all these repairs should be done at that time?—Why did she want to send Mr. Blathwait to value my property if that was to be so?

44,546. Do I understand you to say that when you took the farm it was understood that these repairs were to be done?—Yes, it was without any right at all.

44,547. Were all these repairs done?—Yes nearly all. I had to build two sheds myself and they were sold last year. I had to pay for two beams myself and she took them; she did not make any allowance at all for them and the place was sold. I could not get any timber from the estate. I had to pay for them myself and she refused to give any timber from the estate.

44,548. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Have you not received an allowance during all the bad times"?—I had half the tithe allowed me and that was all—like all the others.

44,549. "Was the reduction formerly of 10 per cent"?—I did not get it.

44,550. "Did you get a reduction afterwards of the tithes which are equal to 10 per cent."?—No, I did not, only the vicar's tithe and I did not get it back—the clergyman of the parish.

44,551. "Did you more recently get 15 per cent. as well as the tithes"?—No, my Lord.

44,552. "In fact 25 per cent. altogether"?—No, I had left her then.

Chairman.

44,552A. "Was it not the fact that 43 acres of the farm was undivided land of which one moiety belonged to the purchaser?"—I am afraid you will not understand that question.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Would you put it in this way: Whether the man who bought it had an interest in the land before he bought it?

Chairman.

44,553. Did the man who bought the land have an interest in it before he bought it?—Yes, there were 40 acres which belonged to a joint owner.

44,554. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Was not an allowance of 5*l.* a year made to "you in respect of draining for five years from "1865"?—No, she did not do any such thing. She allowed 5*l.* of the 65*l.*, which was the first year's rent. There was an abatement of 5*l.* See 44,635–44,643A.

44,555. You say that you have left a large sum of your money in the land?—Yes.

44,556. Are you still clear about that? I think you said that she did the repairs?—The improvements were all done by me, and I hauled the goods and materials for the buildings myself.

44,557. You did all the hauling?—I did all the hauling.

44,558. And ditches and hedges?—Yes.

44,559. How much do you reckon all that would come to?—I could not do it for less than 300*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 44,641A.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Grismond Saunders Davies called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,560. What is your address?—Pentre Estate Office, Boncath.

See 44,293–6. 44,561. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—I should like to explain to you, before I commence my general evidence, about the agreement which Dr. Davies handed in this morning with regard to contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883. In 1885 when I took over the management of the estate I certainly put that clause in and I confess it was through ignorance. In 1889 when we altered the arrangements with the tenants and merged the tithe into the rent I altered the agreement and scratched out the "1883" and told my clerk to send it to the printers. He did scratch the "1883" out, but the printers put it in. I have absolutely no objection at all to the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, but still when I came home I found that many of the agreements were signed and had gone to the Stamp Office, and as the Agricultural Holdings Act is more or less what I call a dead letter here and is never resorted to I left the agreements as they were.

44 562. You are aware that the contracting out is illegal and that you cannot do it?—Yes, perfectly.

44,563. Except so far as the 33rd section of the Act is concerned?—Yes.

44,564. So that it was a clerical error you say?—A printer's error.

I act as agent to the Pentre estates in Pembrokeshire, Carmarthenshire, and Cardiganshire. In Pembrokeshire they consist of 2,819 acres; in Carmarthenshire of 1,595 acres; and in Cardiganshire of 1,881 acres. The average rent of all the farms per acre is about 12*s.* 7*d.* The entry is at Michaelmas, although I personally wish it was at Lady-Day. Tenants I find will not take leases during bad times. As to agreements a copy is produced which has already been put in and of which I have not got another copy with me. I lent it to Dr. Davies to substantiate the copy that he put in. He put in a written copy of the agreement if you remember.

The rent is generally fixed per acre on a valuation. I always like to inquire into the tenants' means before letting them a farm. The last valuation on the Pentre Estate was in 1867, and abatements of 10 per cent. have been given during the last year of which I have sent out notice when I noticed them for the rents. The tithes are paid by the landlord; they are merged into the rent. Land-tax and rates are paid by tenants and income-tax, Schedule A., by the landlord, and Schedule B. by the tenant. The size of the farms is from 10 to 200 acres. There is no consolidation and labour is rather scarce. There has been a good deal of arable land laid down to pasture at the tenant's expense which has caused probably the foreign importation of corn. With regard to improvements the landlord does all the building and supplies gates and posts, in many cases the tenants erecting gates and posts and in some cases the landlord doing so. In several instances when I have had vacant farms I have taken tenants on the recommendation of other tenants.

44,565. A very important question arises out of that, I think; that is whether any money passes in those cases or not?—I do not think so; I do not think I have ever had a case where money has passed.

44,566. Of course being your brother's agent I do not suggest in any way that any money passes between the tenant and the landlord, but I mean as between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant?—I do not think so; it may be so, but I am not aware of it.

44,567. Have any suggestive cases come to your knowledge?—No, never.

44,568. Suggestive cases have come to my notice and I have always put my foot down upon it as much as I possibly could?—I have never had such a thing suggested to me.

44,569. Then that is sufficient. The words in your statement are these:—"In some cases "witness has taken tenants recommended by "outgoing tenant"?—Yes.

44,570. Is that outside of the same family?—Yes.

44,571. The ordinary custom would be that some one of the family succeeds?—I have had many cases the other way—the father going out and the son coming in.

44,572. Yes?—With regard to game, what game there is is preserved, but there is not much of it. The Ground Game Act is used and there is very little damage. Beating is not expected. In many cases the tenants send to me to tell me that the rabbits are doing them damage and I immediately send over the keepers to ferret and to keep them down as much as they can. In those cases we always give the tenant a certain number of the rabbits that are killed.

Poultry.—I think poultry keeping might be made a greater source of profit than it is. Railway rates are high. With regard to insurance there are some few cases where buildings are not insured at all, but the landlord always pays for the insurance except in the case of leaseholds. Probably in leaseholds there is a clause to the effect that the lessee should insure the buildings. In three or four instances on the Pentre Estate when we have had sales the tenants have purchased their holdings. I think that yearly tenants are better off than freeholders who have had the money to buy their holdings with. It is generally the case that the tenant farmers works very hard himself on his farm, he drives the plough, and in fact he works himself as a labourer. The wife looks after the house and the dairy, and the children work. I do not think I know of any cases where wages are paid to the children, but they have their clothes given them and they have occasional pocket money when they go to fairs or anything of that sort. As a rule they start them in life. With regard to labourers the single men are lodged on farm premises and the married in cottages. They are generally all fed by the employer. They feed in the house. The women servants sleep in the house and the men generally outside over some buildings in the yard. Cottages are held of the farmer. There is generally restriction for employment, but always for harvesting. The depression I think began in 1885 which was caused chiefly I think by foreign importations, and I think perhaps as a remedy that if manufactured goods were taxed it might help to relieve the depression. The relations between landlord and tenant I have found to be most friendly. I cannot quite agree with what has been said before, namely, that the farmers are afraid to go either to the agent or to the landlord. I find that plenty of them come down to me at home to see me there, where they can also see their landlord if they wish, and they very often do. But as for their being afraid to come I think they would simply scout the idea, that is, with regard to the estates that I look after.

44,574. That was a very small per-centage upon the outlay of 170*l.*?—Yes, it was really nothing.

44,575. Is that the only instance?—That is the only instance where we have charged any per-centage upon buildings. That is in my own time; I cannot speak outside of my own time.

44,576. There is one question that I should like to ask you on my own account. That is, the Pentre estate has sold and has also bought a considerable amount of land, I believe?—Yes.

44,577. We had some evidence in Carmarthenshire when we were at Llandovery, as to the sale by Mrs. Saunders Davies, your mother and I think it was under power of attorney for your brother. Was it so?—Yes, that was so. See 39,272.

44,578. I should like to ask you one question as to what was done with regard to the sites for chapels that existed upon that estate?—We had two leaseholds of chapels; one in the parish of Myddfai, and the other in—I forget what parish; but there were two altogether, and at the time of the sale their leases were presented to them. We handed over the sites to the different congregations, and at the same time there was a debt of some money (I do not remember the sum) paid off on a school there.

Mr Richard Jones.

44,579. I think you say that the last valuation that was made on the Pentre estate was in 1867?—Yes.

44,580. Were the rents advanced then?—Some were advanced and some were reduced.

44,581. Has there been any alteration in the rents of those places since?—The only alteration has been in 1889, when we merged the tithe into the rent, and I may say in two other cases where the farms have been given up, the rent has been reduced.

44,582. The rents were not advanced from 1872 up to 1875 or 1876, during those good times?—No, not at all—not one of them.

44,583. Was it in the last year only that you have made abatements?—The last two half years.

44,584. Did you make no abatements in 1885?—No.

44,585. You state that the depression began in 1885?—Yes, I have no doubt it did begin then. It might have begun before, but I only came back from America then, where I had been in 1885, and I returned just before I took up the agency 44,586. I do not know what is the reason, but we have been told several times that the depression began in some parts in 1879, and in others in 1883?—Yes, I have heard that.

44,587. I suppose these depressions did not affect this part of Wales—Carmarthenshire and Cardiganshire?—They may have in 1879 and they may have in 1883, but I can only speak on my own experience as a land agent. It was before I took up the management of the property, which was in January 1885.

44,588. Do you think that really an abatement of 10 per cent. is adequate to meet the present depression?—I think so on our rents.

44,589. Have you had any applications for reductions on the estate?—None at all.

44,590. The tenants seem to be satisfied with their lot?—They are most grateful for the 10 per cent. that I have given them in the last two half years.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,591. But if they are very grateful does not that show to some extent the need of abatement?—I think if they really wanted it they would ask for it.

44,592. You think they are not too timid to ask for it?—I think not.

44,593. Do you get many applications for additional accommodation for the stock?—I have in one or two instances.

44,594. Of course you will acknowledge that more accommodation is required now than was formerly, say in times when corn was grown to a greater extent than it is now?—Certainly.

44,595. You have fairly met the requirements that are needed?—I have never refused a farmer a building in the last nine years.

44,596. Without charging any interest?—With the exception only of the case I told you of just now.

44,597. You say that you have accepted tenants who have been recommended by a tenant farmer. Unless there was something in the shape of goodwill why should an outgoing tenant be so anxious to appoint a successor?—In one case I can tell you of that was down near Eglwyswrw a man gave up his farm very foolishly, I think, and he went into Cardigan to start a public-house, he told me he must go, that he had no fault to find with the rent or anything else. He left his farm and he went into the town and I took his recommendation for the man who succeeded him.

44,598. Are you in a position to say that really the incoming tenant did not pay him something in the shape of goodwill?—I could not positively say so, but I do not think it

44,599. What do you say about the practice of giving goodwill. Do you approve of it?—No, certainly not.

44,600. You think that if a tenant gets compensation for any unexhausted improvements that is all he is justly entitled to?—I think that is all.

44,601. And that in the interests of the tenants themselves that is the best thing for them?—No doubt.

44,602. Do you make any provision for the breeding of poultry? Do you erect any poultry houses?—I have not done so because I have never been asked.

44,603. I suppose poultry keeping is not carried on to such an extent as to justify the erection of poultry houses?—It is not carried on in a very scientific way down here.

44,604. Are you in a position to say that tenant farmers since the year 1875, when you say the depression began, have started their sons in life with money that they have saved since 1875?—I do not know that it is quite that. When I say that they start their children in life we will say that a farmer has a daughter who is going to be married to another farmer's son, they will take a farm and they will on each side provide them with so much stock—help them to stock their holding.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,605. Do you think that they supply the stock with money that has been saved since the year 1875, or is it with the money that has been saved in previous good times from 1872 to 1876?—I really cannot say. They have the stock, but they may be overstocked themselves, and that would be a way of getting rid of it.

44,606. Do you find that tenant farmers really start life with sufficient capital?—A good many do not.

44,607. What is the cause of that; have you any idea?—I should say that we are short of money in the country altogether.

44,608. A result of bad times, of course?—Yes, of course, in a great measure.

44,609. What proportion does the expenditure on your estates bear to the income, are you in a position to say, Mr. Saunders Davies?—Do you mean the improvements—the buildings?

44,610. Yes?—About 12½ to 15 per cent.

44,611. You have worked it out?—Yes, I hope it will decrease as the buildings are put up, but at present it seems as if it will go on at the same rate for some time.

44,612. We have been told over and over again that the Agricultural Holdings Act is inoperative in this district. Is it because the machinery is too cumbersome and that there are too many pitfalls in it, or what?—I think not. I think the tenant farmers more or less know the provisions of it, but I have never had a case in my time of any tenant giving me notice of putting up a building or anything of that sort; he comes and asks for it, and in every instance I have given him permission.

44,613. Do you know of any claims made by tenant farmers for compensation for unexhausted improvements?—No, not one.

44,614. Not for anything except the tillages?—Except the tillages of course. They get the manure, the seeds, and everything from the incoming tenant, otherwise I do not know of a single case.

44,615. Of course we may conclude that really there is no claim to any compensation; that is, they do not make it?—I presume so; they do not make it, and they simply get paid for what they have put in the ground and what they have made on the ground.

44,616. What is the course usually adopted to settle the amount of the compensation?—In many cases it is done by arbitration. Sometimes I myself have taken it over personally and charged the incoming tenant the amount that was awarded in the arbitration.

44,617. The tenant appoints an arbitrator and you appoint an arbitrator?—Yes, he appoints a farmer and I generally take a farmer.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,618. Is that a general principle that you would advise in arbitration?—I think so between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,619. What is the usual succession of tenants on your estate; does the son of a deceased farmer usually get his farm?—He would always get it if he wanted it.

44,620. Or one of the nearest relatives?—Yes, or some relative in preference to anybody else.

44,621. In fact they are not disturbed?—They are not disturbed at all.

44,622. I have been asking questions here and there about servant men. I think you said that as usual they sleep in the loft of an outhouse?—Yes, generally.

44,623. Do they behave satisfactorily or do they go about the neighbourhood very much at night. There have been complaints in some parts of Wales that the farmers cannot exercise any control over them?—I think if a man is hardworking he is only too glad to get rest at night, but I cannot really tell you, I do not know.

44,624. You have not heard any complaints about that?—No, I have not; none at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,625. The following question is handed in by Dr. Enoch Davies: "What was your rule in "adding tithes to the rent? Did you add the "minimum standard or maximum tithes"?—I took the average of 10 years and deducted 5 per cent. from that.

44,626. The following question is handed in by Mr. Bowen Rowlands, M.P.: "What is the "object of attempting to exclude the operation "of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883 in "the agreements between landlord and tenant on "your estate"?—I have explained that to you.

44,627. That it was a printer's error?—That it was a printer's error. I am perfectly ready to accept the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883. I must do so in fact.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,628. Do you not think it was your duty under the circumstances to withdraw those agreements for fear of any misunderstanding?—Yes, perhaps you are right.

44,629. It was an error?—It was an error, but a lot of the agreements were stamped, and I paid for all the stamping of them. I have never had any discussion over them, and I have never had anybody refuse to sign an agreement on account of it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,630. Mr. J. E. Vincent asks the following questions: "Is there the slightest reason for "saying that any tenant on your estate has "ground for fear if he gave evidence"?—No, certainly not.

44,631. "Do you, in fact, believe personally "that any tenants are really afraid"?—I should be very sorry to think so on my account.

44,632. "Do you not believe that this allega-"tion of fear is an invention to cover absence "of evidence"?—No, I do not know.

44,633. You cannot say?—No.

44,634. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Has there not been another influence, which is "certainly not fear of the landlord, to prevent "Nonconformist tenants coming forward"?—I cannot say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. C. E. Morgan Richardson recalled and further examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,635. What is it you wish to state?—Mr. Chairman, I wish to rebut two statements made by Samuel Jones of Cwmbarre. I should begin by explaining that I am not Mrs. Brigstocke's agent and therefore I am at a disadvantage, but I have Mrs. Brigstocke's rent books here with me to-day. Mr. Samuel Jones made two statements to which I take exception. He told us that his rent was 65*l.* per annum, and that the whole of the draining was done at his sole expense, except that on one occasion he was allowed 5*l.* from one year's rent. I have Mrs. Brigstocke's rentals here, and I wish to refer to the books to show the actual payments.

See 44,554 and evidence of next witness.

44,636. Is Mr. Samuel Jones here?—Yes, he is present.

44,637. We will have your evidence interpreted to him?—He stated that his rent was 65*l.* and that he had only an allowance from that in one year towards his draining. Then I have the rental book here before me and I find that at Lady Day 1865 the rent was reduced to

30*l.*, and in the rental book there is a memorandum as follows: "Rent reduced to 60*l.*—"paid also 1*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* for bills in draining—"with part of 5*l.* to be allowed in draining bills." That is Lady Day 1865, and at Michaelmas 1865 I see that he paid the 30*l.*, and there is a note here: "Balance of allowance of 5*l.* for "drainage." At Lady Day 1866 the rent is still reduced to 30*l.*; the draining still continuing, at Michaelmas 1866 the rent still reduced to 30*l.*; Lady Day 1867 the rent still reduced to 30*l.*; Michaelmas 1867, the rent still reduced to 30*l.*; at Lady Day 1868 the rent still reduced to 30*l.*; at Michaelmas 1868 the rent still reduced to 30*l.*; and this was after the election I might add. Lady Day 1869 the reduction is still made of 5*l.*, and at Michaelmas 1869 a reduction again made of 5*l.*, the rent remaining at 30*l.*; total 25*l.* allowed towards draining. That was the first statement.

44,638. The explanation is that in those various reductions that you have read out the total amount of reduction is 30*l.* on account of drainage?—25*l.* I make it—it covered five years, I think.

44,639. Upon a rental of 30*l.*?—Upon a rental of 65*l.* a year, the rent was reduced 5*l.* a year for five years. Then there was another statement made, namely, that he never had any abatement from his landlady, with the exception of a small item for vicar's tithes which might have been paid in one year. Since lunch I have gone through Mrs. Brigstocke's rentals. I have already explained to you that I am not her agent, and I am unable to give the information without referring to these books, but I have gone through these books, and I have extracted the following items of abatements made to this tenant: Lady Day 1886, 15 per cent., 9*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; Michaelmas 1886, 1*l.* 10*s.*, which was only 5 per cent.; Michaelmas 1887, 7*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* Afterwards I find that Mrs. Brigstocke gave to all her tenants the whole of the tithes, rectorial and vicarial, making only one condition, that they produced the receipts upon the rent day. The tenant does not appear to have paid the lay tithes, he was only allowed at the rent day on most occasions the vicarial tithes, but on one or two occasions the lay tithes were allowed to him, although he does not appear to have paid them on the ground, as it appears in the margin of the rent book that the lay rector had not yet called for his tithes. I find that the actual cash allowed beginning in 1888, was vicar's tithes, 1*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* at Lady Day 1888; Michaelmas 1888, 3*l.* 13*s.*; at Lady Day 1889 the whole tithe, including the lay tithe, was paid, 4*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*; and at Michaelmas 1889, 1*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*; Lady Day 1890, 1*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* That, unfortunately, is the last rental book I have here, I do not know whether the tenant continued a tenant of Mrs. Brigstocke after that date or not.

44,640. The following question is handed in by Dr. Enoch Davies: "Did Samuel Jones get any "abatements or allowance for improvements "after 1869?"—I have already explained that I am not the agent, and I have only taken those items from the rent books. I know of nothing more than I have already stated.

44,641. Not of your own knowledge?—Nothing of my knowledge.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Samuel Jones recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,641A. I will now call upon the shorthand writer to read the evidence which has just been given by Mr. Morgan Richardson, and the interpreter will translate it sentence by sentence to the witness.

[The shorthand writer read the answers given by Mr. Morgan Richardson to Questions 44,635, 44,636, 44,637, and 44,638, which were interpreted to the witness.]

See 44,554 and 44,635.

44,642. Do you admit that is true or not?—No, I never got a penny of it. I was never allowed 5*l.* except that 5*l.* which I was forgiven, and there is the drainage since the election in 1868. She only reduced the rent. Mr. George would have said the same thing if he was alive to-day.

I said that I had paid 65*l.* for one year, but I was forgiven the 5*l.* afterwards; I was not allowed the 5*l.* that I paid for drainage afterwards—not a penny.

She never gave me 14*d.* She never offered them to me—she only gave the 5*l.*

She only gave me the 5*l.* She will not face me; she cannot say such a thing. Why should she value my farm if she were allowing that money continually to me?

Professor Rhŷs.

44,643. How much were you paying then?—I never paid the 5*l.*; it was 60*l.*, except one year. It was raised in 1869, 13*l.*

The shorthand writer then read the answer given to Question 44,639, which was interpreted to the witness.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,643A. Do you admit that?—There was no allowance for work. She paid nothing for the work that I had done.

I have never had a penny of it except half the tithe. That was about six years ago.

I only received half the tithe; I did not pay Mr. Price tithes, so that I suppose she gets it back.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Mr. Richardson, you will put in the books showing the abatements of rent.

Mr. Richardson.—I will put in the rent books if I may.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Simon Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,644. You have been through your evidence before Professor Rhŷs, have you not?—Yes.

44,645. Is it correct?—There is much more to be added, but as it is down it is all right.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Evidence of Simon Davies, of Aberarthen, in the parish of Penbryn.

I have been farming all my life, and I have spent my life in this district. I wish to speak chiefly on the uncertainty of tenure, and the unsafety of the Welsh farmer's capital when he puts it on the soil.

I lived 55 years at Pantybettws, on Sir Pryse Pryse's Gogerddan's Estate. Pantybettws measures 210 acres, for which my father before me paid 105*l.* He had a lease on it. I rented it of my father for the same rent, and when the lease expired (20 years ago), I rented it of Sir Pryse Pryse, but at an advance of 25*l.* per annum.

I spent a very active life here, and worked very hard to improve the farm, as I flattered myself that I was equally as safe on my farm as if I owned it myself. I well remember Mr. Davies, of Cardigan, who was then the agent, telling me that the Gogerddan tenants were as safe in their tenures as if they were freeholders.

I wish here to give some particulars of the improvements I did during my tenancy. I drained altogether some 667 perches.

	Perches.
In Parkcilfargen I drained -	35
„ Parkffynon „ -	37
„ Parkmain-uchaf „ -	160
„ Parkclôsglâs „ -	110
„ Parkgwair-uchaf „ -	25
„ Parkgwair-mawr „ -	154
„ Parktywyll-bach „ -	36
„ Parkglanyrafon „ -	65
„ „ „ -	45
Total number of perches -	667

I built three new fences. One was 28 perches and I put white thorn in it. This was alongside part of the road to the house. I put the cost of this at 10*s.* per perch. I enclosed some fields, and built 30 perches of new fences here. I built 10 perches another time. I estimate the cost of these 40 perches at 3*s.* per perch.

I made three new roads to the house. The first led to Bettws Church, and was 300 yards long. Another led to the Glyn road, and was 400 yards long. The third led to Pilbach road, and this was also 400 yards long, making a total of roads 1,100 yards.

I put up 12 gates, with stone pillars each side, and rounded off the fences with dry wall. I put up six more, with one stone post rounded off the fence, the same as before. I put up four more with oak posts. I consider 22*l.* a small sum for these.

I made three ponds to collect water enough to work all the machinery by that power, cut a pit for the wheel 8 feet deep, and the outlet for water, all in solid rock. These cost me, 70*l.*

I hauled towards all the buildings, and, if you will allow me, I will give a few particulars:—

The total number of perches built are 654. Two loads, at least, of stones will go to each perch. Therefore, I hauled 1,308 loads of stone. When the barn and cowsheds were built I had to carry water half a mile away to mix all the mortar, owing to drought. I hauled 10 loads of pebble stone from the beach, 11 miles away, for flooring stables; 10 loads of surface-stones for cow-sheds; 30 loads of flagstones (paving) from Kilgerran, a distance of 9 miles; 12,000 slates, hauled from Aberporth and Llangranog the former three miles away and the latter five miles; lime was hauled from Aberporth; all the timber was from Cardigan, a distance of nine miles; and the sand was a mile distant. I had to pay all the turnpike gates out of my own pocket.

It took me and my men two weeks to open up the quarry. I had to give all the men whom Sir Pryse Pryse paid their "Gwlyb." This is an old local custom. About the year 1877 Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, came round to value the estate, and my rent was raised in consequence to 178*l.* (receipt produced). I paid this heavy rent for two or three years, but I could see it was a hopeless job to try longer, and I told the agent so. I said that after all my trouble and labour and money put out I must leave, unless the rent was reduced, and it was reduced to 140*l.* (receipts produced). In 1881 Mr. Francis, an auctioneer from Carmarthen, came to value again, preparatory to the estate being sold. In the year 1882 my farm was put up by public auction in this very room and withdrawn, as the highest bid was not up to the reserved price. I afterwards offered 4,000*l.* for it privately. It was put up again in a year or two, and I made a bid of 4,040*l.* for it, but it was knocked down to a stranger for 4,050*l.*, only 10*l.* more than the tenant who had spent years to improve the farm, who had hauled all for the buildings, and who had, I venture to say, 800*l.* sunk in the place; yet my claim was set aside for the paltry sum of 10*l.*

This is the experience of very many tenant farmers on the Gogerddan Estate. We were encouraged to farm well, to haul for new buildings, &c. The agent (Mr. Davies) told me when I spoke to him about some agreement about compensation for haulage if I lost the farm at any time, 'Once on the Gogerddan Estate, always there"; and I believe that had been the case long ago. Yet many of us saw our labour and capital put up for sale by Mr. Francis in this very room, and knocked down to the highest bidder, Sir Pryse receiving the benefit. In fairness to the head agent, Mr. John Vaughan Pugh Pryse, I ought to add that he gave me the handsome sum of 5*l.* as compensation when I had to turn out. I could not legally claim a penny; the custom of the country nor the law of the land does not give us anything. I may venture to say that there is a strong and a unanimous desire amongst farmers that Parliament should as soon as possible consider our grievances and pass an Act to make it impossible for such a case as mine to be again repeated. From the want of such an Act farmers suffer, the farm labourers suffer, and the consumers suffer. The land does not produce what it ought, and will not until some drastic changes are made in the law of land tenure.

Here I beg to submit a table of all I have done, and the cost of some things. I cannot estimate the cost of all, such as food to the workmen of Sir Pryse Pryse, and the haulage, &c.:—

Professor Rhŷs.

44,646. What is the name of that farm on which you spent that money?—Pantybettws.

44,647. When did you leave Pantybettws?—About 10 years ago.

44,648. Did you leave as soon as it was bought by the new man?—No, I did not.

44,649. You remained under him some time?—For one year. To be fair to my landlord he did not give me notice, so I was allowed to remain for another year under the new landlord.

44,650. Did you have notice as soon as the new owner could give one?—No.

44,651. Or did you give notice?—It was he gave me notice.

44,652. Did he want to get rid of you, or did he want to raise your rent?—He wanted to get rid of me.

44,653. Did he want to live in the farm himself?—His son came to it I had repaired it well and it was worth his while to have it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,654. Supposing that you were to go to a new farm under the same circumstances as you went to this farm Pantybettws, what is the first thing you would do?—I would try to improve it.

44,655. Would you write to the landlord to obtain his consent or give him notice at any rate to drain?—I spoke to Mr. Davies, the agent, and he told me that it was perfectly safe, and I drained accordingly and relied upon what he told me.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

44,656. You had nothing but a verbal promise of course?—That was all.

44,657. Would you have as much faith in human nature now as you had when you started farming?—No, never more. The old landlords were good, but they are not now. There are some good landlords now. I remember three good ones as landlords. The first two landlords were good, but I doubt the third.

44,658. Are you aware that in order to get compensation for draining it is necessary to give notice to the landlord that you are going to drain?—Yes, according to the new law I am aware of it, but I received notice from him that I was not to come under the Act.

44,659. Can we see the notice? That would be contracting out of the Act of 1875, I take it?—Those are the two notices I received (handing in documents).

44,660. They are contracting out of the Act of 1875?—One is a notice to quit.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,661. Are you a Churchman or Nonconformist?—It makes no difference at all which I am.

44,662. You do not suggest that the eviction was on political grounds at all?—No, it was only owing to the sale of the property and that I and everything were sold.

44,663. It is one of those cases, I think, that every honest man would like to see made impossible?—There is a letter (handing in letter).

Professor Rhŷs.

44,664. Perhaps you have thought of some remedy for that state of things?—I should not like to follow Ireland, but what I should like to see is some competition—you must have some one between the two.

44,665. What do you mean by competition; you mean arbitration?—Yes, arbitration, owing to the landlord being not straightforward and the tenant so bad and the auctioneer coming in occasionally between them and things being so awkward.

44,666. You say "the auctioneer being un-"principled;" is that what you mean?—Yes; he has no principle at all, because he kept people to work for him all over the country—people sending in prices and trying to compete for the farms—puffers—people who come to sales to bid when they do not mean to buy at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Lewis called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,667. Will you kindly give your evidence to the Commission?—Yes.

I am John Lewis, of Meiros Hall, Llangeler, a woollen manufacturer by trade, and an alderman of the Carmarthenshire County Council. I have been appointed at a public meeting held in this district on April 14th, 1894, to give evidence before you here this day.

(I.) I wish to give evidence with regard to the enclosure of common land, and the hardships suffered thereby by squatters, farmers, and labourers.

Waun Meiros in this parish, was enclosed in the year 1855. It measures 140 acres. To the small farmers residing on its borders, its enclosure resulted in great loss, as it was utilized by them as grazing land for their young cattle during the summer season. Many a labourer also took advantage of it as grazing land for his cow, on which he depended for help to maintain his family. These advantages were always taken into consideration and the landlord pleaded for higher rent on small holdings, on this account; but I am sorry to say, after its enclosure, no reduction whatever in the rent was made in the small holdings on its boundaries.

44,668. Did the enclosure take place under Act of Parliament?—I believe so.

Its enclosure was also a great loss to the neighbourhood, as the inhabitants made free use of it as a place to procure clay, which they mixed with culm for burning purposes. For this material, they have now to pay from eighteenpence to two shillings per load. The children of the district also gathered there to play. Not an inch was left as a recreation ground.

Rhos Llangeler, common land, 722 acres in measurement, was enclosed in the year 1873. This has resulted in great loss; first to farmers, who kept scores, and in some cases hundreds, of sheep grazing upon it during the summer months besides all their young cattle, thus leaving the farm with only milch cows grazing upon it. In the second place, it proved a great loss to labourers as most of them kept a score of sheep and a couple of cows to graze upon it in the summer time, which assisted them greatly in bringing up their families. Further, this common before its enclosure, was a source of employment, —many labourers were employed to cut peat,— hundreds, if not thousands, of loads of which were carried away, for miles around, every year. In those times this peat was used instead of coal.

In my opinion, the greatest sufferers of all were the squatters, or those who had built cottages on encroachments of this common. In a few years after the enclosure, all such cottages were sold by the lord of the manor. I cannot say whether it was a matter of necessity, but anyhow, such was the case. With your permission, gentlemen, I will give you one instance out of several which I know of. As an example of how these poor people suffered at the hands of the lord of the manor, I shall briefly state the case of John Mathias, Penffordd newydd. This man was a carpenter by trade. Eighteen years before the enclosure he bought a house and an acre of land from another man for 14*l.*; for this he had also to pay an annual rent of 5*s.* to the lord of the manor. In a few years after the purchase he set about building a new house as the old one was tumbling down. His eldest daughter told me, only last week, that during the time of rebuilding, the family had nothing to eat but plain barley bread, without any butter, cheese or meat. The new cottage cost him 40*l.* in cash, besides his own labour. In the year 1881 (John Mathias having died a few years previously), the agents of the lord of the manor called upon the widow, and were so hard hearted as to inform her they intended selling the house and the land attached, and that the price of the same was 60*l.* What a crushing blow the news must have been to the poor benighted widow! alone and unprotected in the world. Here, she was informed her home was not her home. The fruit of her husband's hard toil was claimed by the lord of the manor. The poor widow must either quit or pay the required sum of 60*l.* She told the agents that the thought of leaving a home which had cost them so dearly was unbearable, and that she would pay the sum asked, provided she could get the loan of the money from any of her neighbours.

As another instance of the hardship inflicted by the lord of the manor, I may mention the case of two cottages called Bwlchygroes and Pantywaun. Attached to each of these, there was about a quarter of an acre of land. One of these cottages was purchased of Mr. Davies, Froodvale, surveyor, who acted in putting the Enclosure Awards into effect,—for 1*l.* 10*s.* The other was purchased from the lord of the manor, for which the sum of 23*l.* was paid. I have been told that what accounted for the vast difference was, that Mr. Davies charged for the land only, whereas, the lord of the manor charged for the cottages also, which had been built by the owners themselves, and at their own cost.

These, as I have said, are but few instances out of numerous others which I could mention, of hard toiling men deprived of the fruit of their labours.

(II.) I wish to give evidence with regard to the wrongs and disadvantages inflicted upon Nonconformists and Liberals owing to their creed and party.

"Clerical interference has been prominent to the district. The inhabitants are not allowed in carry out their convictions, but undue pressure was brought upon them to favour the Church and support the Tory party: for instance, during the first County Council election, the Rector of Penboyr (now Bishop Suffragan of Swansea), walked the parish showing a letter said to be from Lord Emlyn, urging the claims of the Tory candidate upon the tenants. Throughout the polling day he stood by the entrance gate, and escorted voters to the polling-booth, old women were taken by the arm, and all power brought to bear upon them, that they might be enticed to vote for the Tory candidate. So ardent was Mr. Lloyd in his interferences with voters that he could not spare the time even for his meals. About two years previously, an election for the Board of Guardians took place in the district, David Jones, butter merchant, holding a small farm by the name of Penralltddu, and John Davies, weaver, living in a cottage called Blaenllain, Llangeler, were both served with notices to quit, and compelled to leave their premises, because they voted according to their convictions. The first of these gentlemen, viz., David Jones, fared but a little better after his removal to Dyffryncourt. Being still a prominent Liberal, a little previous to the last County Council election, he was one of a deputation which waited upon the Liberal candidate and urged him to contest the seat. But a few days previous to the election, a rumour was circulated that Mr. Jones had been warned not to record his vote, and such rumour was confirmed to a great degree by his non-appearance.

See 73,182 and 73,198 –73,209.

And with your permission, gentlemen, I will give you another instance where politics and creed have been detrimental to farmers in this district. About five years ago, one of the largest farmers in our parish, by the name of Benjamin Phillips, Cwrt Farm, determined to leave the farm and go to a place of his own near the town of Carmarthen. Being a great favourite with his landlord, he introduced as his successor a very respectable farmer of middle age, who had been brought up on the Llysnewydd Estate, and who belonged to one of the most respectable families in the parish. The landlord (the late Col. Lewes), his wife, and his younger son, all being present, accepted this respectable farmer as a new tenant to Cwrt Farm. Everything being arranged satisfactorily, he was instructed to go to Carmarthen the following Tuesday, to Mr. Barker the agent, to sign the agreement. But all of a sudden, the secret leaked out, that the Cwrt Farm was let to a Nonconformist, and immediately the Tories became aware of this, everything possible was done to upset all the arrangements. Tories of every grade pulled the wires, and that with such success, that by Monday morning everything was undone, and the proposed tenant received a message that he was not to have Cwrt Farm, and that he need not go over to Carmarthen to see the agent. In a short time afterwards the place was rented, this time to a man, who, I need not say, was a Churchman and a Tory. Several tenants are generally believed to have left the chapel for the Church in order to obtain the tenancy of farms. On certain estates in this parish, all the farms that have become vacant during the last 10 or twelve years, have been rented to Churchmen, Tories and turncoats.

And as to Game Laws I beg to hand you this poster, which will speak for itself, and to compare it with the statement made by Mr. Mousley at the sitting of the Commission at Pembroke.

44,669. How do you connect this with Mr. Mousley?—Mr. Mousley is an agent of Lord Cawdor, and that applies to Lord Cawdor' estate in this district. Mr. Mousley said at Pembroke that the tenants have now a joint right in the rabbits, but I maintain according to that poster they have not in this county.

44,670. How do you connect Mr. Mousley with this? His name does not appear?—He is the agent of that estate.

44,671. In what way do you connect it with Mr. Mousley?—I maintain this, that the Earl of Cawdor has given a deputation to William Price Lewes to preserve and kill game, fish, hares and rabbits on his estate in this district.

44,672. How do you connect it with Mr. Mousley?—Because he is the agent of the estate. They cannot go and kill them in the face of a poster of that sort.

44,673. I ask how you connect Mr. Mousley the agent of the estate, with this poster?—I think it is plain enough itself.

44,674. I do not see his name upon it?—But I assume he knows of it. I do not suppose the gentlemen of our district would take upon themselves to print it, and I do not suppose Earl Cawdor would do anything without the knowledge of Mr. Mousley, his agent.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,675. I should like to get the statement referring to Mr. Mousley first of all?—This is it. (handing a cutting from a newspaper).

44,676. If there are two gentlemen authorised to speak on the same subject and who give directions which are contradictory to one another on the same estate I should like to know how that is?—These have been sent to the tenants of Earl Cawdor.

44,677. Who is Mr. William Price Llewellyn Lewes?—Colonel Lewes of Llysnewydd. See 44,735

44,678–9. Colonel Lewes has issued it?—By that paper he preserves on the estate of Lord Cawdor, and if he preserves how can the game be free to the tenants.

44,680. What has Lieut.-Col. Lewes to do with Lord Cawdor's estate? I am a stranger, I do not understand it?—By that poster he says he has to preserve them.

44,681. I suppose he is the shooting tenant?—It is the parish of Penboyr.

44,682. It is some part of Lord Cawdor's estate?—Yes, in this district.

44,683. Let me read you the official short-hand note of Mr. Mousley's evidence. He says: "On the Stackpole estate game is preserved, of "course, to a very considerable extent, and only "on that estate. The tenants do not make any "complaint or grievance of it. They will admit "that Lord Cawdor is very generous with his "game. He never sells a head of game. The See 28,701.

" game is always given away, chiefly to his " tenants and tradespeople and neighbours and " friends. All that he does not consume is " given away to one or the other. He never sells " a head. There are no complaints about game. " According to the Ground Game Act, the " tenants have now the joint right of rabbits " and hares. If we have any complaint to " make as to that, it is that they do not keep " them down close enough." You maintain that this poster is not in harmony with that statement as to the estate of Lord Cawdor?—Yes, I maintain so. If you can convince me the other way I shall be very happy.

44,684. You cannot tell me what position Lieut.-Col. Lewes occupies on the estate?—I cannot say.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,685. I suppose he is the shooting tenant?—I do not know.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,686. The poster has the same announcement in Welsh and English; the following is the English part of it:

"Game Notice.

I, William Price Llewellyn Lewes, Lieut.-Col., holding a Deputation under John Frederick Vaughan, Earl Cawdor, to preserve and kill Game, Fish, Hares, Rabbits, and Wild Fowl, on his Estates, in the Parishes of Penboyr, Llangeler, and Cilrhedyn, in the Manor of Emlyn Uch Cych, in the County of Carmarthen, with authority to prosecute all poachers of Fish, Game, Wild Fowl, &c., Do Hereby Give Notice, That all persons found trespassing in pursuit of Game, Fish, Wild Fowl, Hares, Rabbits, &c., within the said Manor, will be prosecuted as the law directs.

Signed this 1st day of June 1893, William Price Llewellyn Lewes, Llysnewydd."

You maintain that that limits what Mr. Mousley has led the Commission to understand about the treatment of game on this estate?—Yes, in this district.

44,687. In these parishes?—Yes.

44,688. It seems to me you are about right?—If you are satisfied I do not wish to press it at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,689. Did you take the trouble to inquire whether Col. Lewes is really the shooting tenant of the estate in this district with regard to that notice?—No, I did not.

44,690. The Chairman calls my attention to the fact that Mr. Mousley in his evidence was speaking of the Stackpole estate. This is an estate in this parish of Penboyr, Llangeler, and Cilrhedyn. In that case you would like to be treated as liberally in these parts of the estates of the Cawdor family?—Yes, I should like the tenants in this district to have the right to shoot a rabbit when they see it.

44,691. Do you maintain that they have not now?—In the face of that poster they have not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,692. But that is not the law?—If it is contrary to the law it ought to be put a stop to.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,693. You know the law?—Yes, but the tenants do not.

44,694. This is contrary to the law?—So I have been told by more than one lawyer.

44,695. If the tenants knew it was contrary to the law do you think that they would be quite at their ease in treating the hares and rabbits according to the law when they have a thing like this staring them in the face?—I do not think they would.

44,696. You spoke in your evidence of people being compelled to leave their premises because they voted according to their convictions. What date do you allude to? We all know of 1868, and so on?—About five or six years ago.

44,697. What evidence have you got?—That the men were obliged to leave. I spoke to the man John Davies, Weaver, Blaenllain, who had notice to leave because he voted according to his convictions in the election of guardians.

44,698. Was the reason assigned?—That was the reason assigned.

44,699. In writing?—I cannot say in writing.

44,700. Is he present?—He promised to be present, but he is not here.

44,701. Why has he not come?—I do not know. I have been looking for him all day, and he has not come.

44,702. Further on your statement is rather sweeping: "In a short time afterwards the " place was rented, this time to a man, who, I " need not say, was a Churchman and a Tory" Is that literally true?—I have a list (handing in a list). You may read it if you like, but I do not press it.

44,703. Is this the list of men who have changed their religion on taking a new farm?—This is a list of farms which have become vacant and rented during the last 12 years.

44,704. How many?—Eight.

44,705. What were the tenants who left? Would they be Churchmen or Dissenters?—I should say some were Churchmen and some Dissenters.

44,706. What are the successors, all Churchmen?—All Churchmen.

44,707. Are you sure of that?—No. One is a Nonconformist, but he is a rank Tory. I have no hesitation in naming the places I have, but I do not wish to press it.

44,708. I will not ask you for the names; you have the names if required?—Oh, yes.

44,709. You know all these men yourself?—Yes. This is the list:—

Farms that have become vacant and rented to churchmen and conservatives during the last 10 or 12 years in the parish of Llangeler:—Penyffynon, Coedstrefuchaf (Twice), Penlan, Danralltddu, Cwrt, Llwynderw, Blaenantrhys, and Penralltfadog.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,710. On what estates are those farms?—Llysnewydd, Llanayron, and one at Penralltfadog.

44,711. You would not go so far as to say that really it was made a condition that they should be Churchmen in order to become tenants of those farms?—I can only let you know the fact.

44,712. I suppose the impression was so strongly in the minds of these people that they would be more likely to have the farms, and not so likely to be disturbed in the farms if they did become Churchmen?—That is my opinion.

44,713. With reference to this man at Rhos Llangeler, I suppose the complaint you have to make is that the lord of the manor permitted these people to build cottages on the common without allowing them to know that they had no right to do it—that they should have informed them?—Yes.

44,714. Whereas there was an impression abroad, I dare say, among the people, that they had a right to do it?—That is it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,715. There is one question I should like to put to you upon it. You say clerical interference has been prominent in the district, and you instance the rector of Penboyr. You object to clergymen interfering in the elections of the County Council, and so on?—No, I do not; but I do object to some of them carrying letters which are said to be from the leading landowners in the district. I am quite willing that they should do their best.

44,716. What do you mean by clerical interference has been prominent in the district as a grievance?—As to the one I alluded to, I think I have stated the case; he walked the parish with a letter and said it was from Lord Emlyn.

44,717. Do the clergy generally take part in the election?—I think the rector of Penboyr now takes very little part in it.

44,718. I hope it will apply to all ministers of religion. If they would confine themselves to their spiritual influence, do you think it would be better for the country?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,719. Do you think that clergymen interfere with the relations between landlord and tenant?—Well, I could not bring you sufficient evidence on that point, but it was said that our late rector did; that he often wrote to the landlord, Lord Cawdor, but I could not confirm that.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,720. As to ministers of different denominations; we know what excellent men they are, and how hard they work. Does it not happen now and then that a man leaves one denomination for another on account of religious convictions?—I do not know what convinces them, whether it is the farm or the eloquence of the preacher of the district.

44,721. You do not understand me. Have you ever known instances of a man leaving one Nonconformist denomination for another?—Very few, I believe; there are some.

44,722. You would give them credit for sincere convictions, would you not?—It depends a good deal on the circumstances.

44,723. You would grant it is possible that a man left one denomination for another without having a farm in view?—Quite possible.

44,724. Would you not think this possible in the case of some of the people who become Churchmen?—Of course I cannot answer that question.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,725. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent: "Who was the lord of the manor," I presume that means in the instance of Rhos Llangeler?—Lord Cawdor.

44,726. "Did not these squatters know that "the land on which they built was not their "own"?—They had to pay 1*s.* to 2*s.* 6*d.* rent for it.

44,727. "Is not the document (poster) simply "the copy of the deputation from the lord of "the manor"?—I do not know that.

44,728. "Do you suggest that the poster "purports to deprive the tenants of the con-"current right to rabbits"?—I know some of the tenants have complained because they received it.

44,729. "By whom was the reason (i.e., voting "for guardians on principle) assigned as the "cause of turning the men out"?—By the man who was turned out.

44,730. "How, by word of mouth"?—Yes.

44,731. Who was the person who was turned out?—David Jones, Penralltddu, and John Jones, Weaver, Blaenllain, Llangeler.

44,732. I will read the question again: "By "whom was the reason (i.e., voting for guardians "on principle) assigned as the cause of turning "men out"?—By the one who served the notice, I expect.

44,733. By word of mouth?—Yes.

44,734. What was the name of the person at Llysnewydd whom you meant?—I did not say that one of the Llysnewydd tenants was turned away.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 73,198.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. P. Llewellyn Lewes called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,735. Do you wish to rebut the evidence of the last witness?—I beg to say that this poster is an exact copy of the deputation I received from Lord Cawdor. It was pointed out to me after I had had the bills printed that the words "exclusive right" of shooting were mentioned in the notice. Well, it was never my intention that I should rob the tenants, and they know that perfectly well, of any of their rabbits. They know they are allowed to shoot the rabbits by Act of Parliament. The fact of the matter is I do not think I shoot a single rabbit on Lord Cawdor's property, and so far I have not had the least complaint of any sort made to me, but there is the greatest good feeling existing at the present moment between myself and Lord Cawdor's tenants.

44,736. Mr. Lewis, Meiros, rather connected that with an absent man, Mr. Mousley, I do not know whether Mr. Mousley's name need have been brought into the matter?

Mr. John Lewis.—No, I do not think that it need.

Sir John Llewelyn.

As the evidence, which has been quoted, referred directly to the Stackpole estate I rather wish his name should not have been brought in, as you do not connect his name with it.

Mr. John Lewis.—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,737. When did you discover you were in error in putting the words "exclusive right"?—This is an exact copy of the deputation I had from Lord Cawdor. At the time I thought it best to put in the exact words of the deputation.

44,738. You will admit that the words should not be in the notice, "the exclusive right" to the rabbits?—I admit that the tenants have as much right as I have to the rabbits—the ground game.

44,739. The word should be "concurrent" right?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,740. You copied it from the document you had from his Lordship?—Yes.

44,741. You admit it is a mistake?—I admit that the tenants have a concurrent right with myself, and they know that perfectly well, to the ground game.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,742. What is the impression likely to be left on the tenant's mind when he saw the words "exclusive rights"?—Indeed I do not know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,743. You have stated publicly that you know and they know it is a concurrent right?—Yes, and I hope that they will always act upon it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lloyd Davies called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,744. Do you understand English sufficiently well to read your statement?—Yes, I can do so.

Evidence of David Lloyd Davies, of Cefnceirw, in the parish of Penbryn.

I was appointed at a public meeting of farmers which was held in our parish last summer to give evidence before the Royal Commission on Land.

See 73,215 and 73,221.

I farm Cefnceirw on the Gogerddan estate jointly with my mother, who is a widow. We had 183 acres of ordinary mixed land. My mother has been living there 50 years and I was born there. My father was born there also upwards of 80 years ago. When my mother first went there the rent was 92*l.* 15*s.*, this included Blaenwaun 6*l.*, Cwmllwydrew 5*l.*, and Tynewydd 21*l.*, all of which were attached to Cefnceirw. I remember building a good deal there and my mother remembers building all the houses.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

We carried lime, sand, timber, slates, &c., and gave the workmen some 'gwlyb.' The cow-house was built 45 years ago, and the agent demanded 40*l.* of my mother, who was a widow at the time, for it; although she pleaded hard, she had to pay. In the year 1858 a Mr. Edwards was sent round to value the estate. He took Tynewydd from Cefnceirw which he allowed in the rent (21*l.*), and he advanced the rent of our place by 13*l.* 5*s.*, so that our rent now stood at 85*l.*

In the year 1877, or thereabouts, a Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, came round to value, and our rent was raised again by 37*l.* a year, so it was 122*l.*

In the year 1880 as near as I can remember Mr. Francis of Carmarthen came next to value as the estate was to be sold. He took Blaenwaun (6*l.*) and Cwmllwydrew (5*l.*) away from Cefnceirw, though they allowed us for it as Mr. Edwards had done when Tynewydd was taken from Cefnceirw, but the great inconvenience of having a large farm without a cottage of any sort for a labourer to live in was left to us. Our farm is made up as follows: 26 acres of unenclosed land which was pared and carted away some fifty years ago, this is valueless, there is nothing left; there are then 20 acres again adjoining the above but enclosed, and is of some value; there are 12 acres of meadow land; the remainder, 123 acres, is poor arable land on high elevation. Our rent is too high in comparison with the rates of the produce of the land these years. Our landlord has given us several abatements of 3*s.* and 2*s.* in the pound, but we could not pay our way with that only. I have two brothers and a sister working hard on the land, and that without any pay. I may say that this is the general complaint in my district. We have also lived in such suspense the last 12 years that we have no fair play to make the most of the land. I remember six notices to quit, but my mother remembers from 15 to 20. Our farm has been in the market the last 12 years. In 1890 we received the last 'notice to quit' and the farm was again put up for sale, 1,800*l.* being the highest bid. We then rented it again for three years—same rent, but 10 per cent. abatement. An agreement was made which I produce; we have strictly kept to the agreement, yet we are once more under notice to quit, and the agent has several times refused to re-let it to us. The agent of Mr. John Vaughan Pugh Pryse is an uncle of our landlord and father of Major Rice Pryse, who owns part of the tithe of our parish. Mr. Pugh Pryse has added to our rent some arrears of tithes which he owed his son. I called his attention to this, when he swore severely at me and told me to deduct it myself, which I did, and received a receipt in full for rent. We have kept a dog for Mr. John Vaughan Pugh Pryse for 30 years, so have most of the tenants on the estate. In the spring we always take the dog to Mr. Pryse and receive a pup again to rear up. My brother when returning the dog a few weeks ago took advantage of this and asked Mr. Pryse to let us go on as before when he again refused. My brother then asked him if we had better sow seeds, and he said yes, and take him the bill. My mother is 77 years of age, she has spent most of her life at Cefnceirw, and she has toiled hard to bring her children up and pay her way. She had little money after her father, and the interest of that has been going for years to the Gogerddan coffer, yet the reward she receives for all this is to lose her old home, which means to a person of her age and state of health nothing but death.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,745. What is the reason you have notice to leave?—We do not know what the reason is.

44,746. Have you done anything to offend the landlord or his agent?—I have done nothing.

44,747. When you asked for the deduction he told you to deduct it yourself, and he allowed it?—Yes.

44,748. The way in which he did it was not exactly perhaps what you expected, but you had nothing to complain about that?—He wanted what was in the contract originally.

44,749. You cannot tell why you are under notice to leave?—We cannot tell.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 73,221.

Mr. Evan Rees called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,750. You know sufficient English to be able to give your statement to us?—Yes.

44,751. Will you kindly do so?—I am a butter merchant, carrying on business in Swansea; lived entirely until my brother's death (five years ago), in Cardiganshire, and still visit the markets of the west to buy butter.

In the year 1863, my father took a farm called Wernnewydd, on the Bronwydd Estate, measuring about 66 acres; I believe the rent was 35*l.*; the previous tenant paid only 25*l.*, he had a lease, at 7*s.* 6*d.* per acre, but it was too dear for him, he could not pay. In the year 1865 the rent was advanced to 42*l.*; not long after this 16 acres were taken away from Wernnewydd, or about one fourth of the farm, leaving only 50 acres, and the rent was only reduced 4*l.*, and not 10*l.* 2*s.*, according to the proportion; as I maintain that the land taken away was equally as good as what was left, making the rent again 38*l.* My father farmed very well, and spent a lot of money in improving the land, and putting the fences and everything in good repair, and worked very hard during the first six years he was in this farm, especially in improving the land that was taken from us. And I well remember my mother being called upon to sign an agreement, the contents of which she could not understand, and never had a copy of the document, the landlord keeping it to himself entirely for his own safety; and she was compelled to keep a dog for the landlord.

My father was promised that about 11 acres of land, near to the farm houses, should be added to Wernnewydd, but this promise was never fulfilled, and no allowance made.

In 1871, Mr. Davies, Froodvale, came to value the whole estate; my father was then very poorly, and died before this valuation was made known; then my mother, brother, and myself carried on the farm, and after this valuation the rent was again raised 6*l*, making it 44*l.* Taking into account the 16 acres of land taken away, the rent of Wernnewydd was raised over 100 per cent. in less than 10 years.

Mrs. Jones, Llandyssul, was supposed to benefit by this lease, and became responsible for the repairs of Wernnewydd, and when the lease expired in 1863, she paid the landlord the sum of 40*l.* in satisfaction of his claims, on account of the houses not being in proper repair. The dwelling house was very bad repair in 1863, but 10 years elapsed before anything was done to it, and the tenant had, even then, to pay for everything except timber.

Game.—Our farm swarmed with rabbits, which caused a great deal of damage to our crops; I remember acres of corn completely destroyed by them. Sir Thomas Lloyd, father of the present landlord, gave my father permission to shoot them; but I well remember the gamekeeper of the present landlord seeing my brother and myself killing two or three rabbits, one morning, I believe, in September, 1878, and we were soon summoned to Bronwydd. I went, and took with me my uncle, John Jones, Ffynonwen; when we got there Sir Marteine Lloyd was too busy to see us, I did not go again, but my uncle went by himself, and we were pardoned that time for this heinous sin, on making a promise never again to use a gun; we were to ferret the rabbits, and not kill with a gun.

In the year 1880, we left the farm because the rent was too high, and no hope of getting a reduction; rents were advanced in good times, but not reduced during bad times.

The farm was not too dear in 1865 for 42*l.*, but after taking the fourth away, it was too dear even in those good times, because if my father had to pay servants for working, he could hardly pay his way, but now when the market value of cattle and farm produce has fallen 40 per cent., and the rent being the same, there must be a loss every year to the present tenant. The attendance to the landlord is increasing every year, such as coal hauling, &c. Many have been compelled to fetch four or five loads of coal in one year, and a day was spent on each by one man and two horses. The landlord did not take much interest himself, in the estate, but left it all to the agent, who gave no encouragement whatever to the farmers.

I have been for years doing large business with farmers in the neighbourhoods of Newcastle Emlyn and Llandyssul. Many and many a time have I advanced money to farmers—on different estates—to pay their rents, and they repaying me, some time after, in butter. Also, I used to sell them farm seeds, and found it most difficult to get paid; I have not sold any since 1890, but several farmers have not paid me yet for seeds sold previously. I have had sufficient experience of the farmers to know that they are at present in very low circumstances, and unless some relief will soon come, most of them, no doubt, will be compelled to seek shelter in the bankruptcy courts.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,752. Being a butter merchant, I will ask you your opinion with regard to the preferential claim for rent. Would you be more ready to give credit to farmers if the preferential claim for rent was abolished?—I believe I should; at any rate as things are at present, I would not care much to give them credit under any circumstances.

44,753. You are in a position to know their circumstances?—Well, I think I know their circumstances just as well as they know them themselves—many of them anyhow.

44,754. That is your opinion, that they are in very low water?—That is my opinion.

44,755. What is their character as farmers; are they intelligent and industrious people?—

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Well, I cannot say that they are very intelligent, because they have not had the chance that children get now, but I believe they are industrious.

44,756. What about the butter that is made down in these parts. Is it fairly marketable?—It ought to be better. I am sorry to say that I remember, some time about 13 or 14 years ago, when I and my brother started business, Welsh butter used to advance 1*d.* or 2*d.* per lb. on foreign butter. Just at present the foreign has improved so very much that it is almost higher than the Welsh.

44,757. The Welsh butter has not improved?—No.

44,758. Do you think it is owing to the poor dairy accommodation?—Well, in many places it is so.

44,759. There are no buildings suitable?—No, not healthy enough.

44,760. Do you think that the farmers' wives would pay more attention to dairies if they were provided with better buildings?—Well, I believe they would.

44,761. Do you think that the farmers' wives benefit by the dairy classes that are held by Aberystwyth College?—That is what I cannot say. I believe so. Take Ireland, for instance, the Irish butter has improved now these last 10 years very much. I do not think there is a hamlet or village in Ireland that has not a dairy or a creamery, or a creamery manufactory, and by those means, I believe, they are much ahead of us in Wales.

44,762. And the butter is made, of course, upon modern principles?—Yes, on the centrifugal system, most of it.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,763. You know that there is a dairy school in this place, do you not?—Yes, I have heard about it.

44,764. Do the dairy schools do any good, do you think?—Well, I cannot say that, but they ought to do good anyhow.

44,765. It is rather early to judge?—I should think too early.

44,766. Is it one of the faults of the butter in these parts that it is too heavily salted?—Yes, they used to salt it to keep for six or nine months very often, and they make it just now the same as they did then, but they do not keep it so long as they did many years ago.

44,767. Now you do not want it salted to be kept, but to be eaten?—Yes.

44,768. So you would not venture to say that the farmers were a very intelligent class in these neighbourhoods?—I cannot say that they are.

44,769. I am sorry to hear that; those we have seen before us seem to be quite on the spot, I think. Do they keep any accounts?—Some of them.

44,770. How many of them have banking accounts?—I do not think many of the farmers have.

44,771. I am told that the farmers on a large scale do not have an account for themselves, but they rely on the banking account. How do they keep their accounts?—Anyone keeping a banking account must keep an account.

44,772. These farmers, it is said, do not keep an account?—I do not think they do much.

44,773. You say you sometimes advance money to them?—Yes.

44,774. How long have you had to wait for it?—It depends upon the circumstances. If they can sell soon they will repay in a month or two, or perhaps six months.

44,775. You do not go on with a long account with the same man for a series of years?—No, not if I can help it.

44,776. You do not advance to a man who fails to meet your demands year after year?—No.

44,777. You do not lend in such cases?—No, I do not.

44,778. Do you think there are such cases?—There are many.

44,779. Who advances the money in those cases?—I know they go together to the banks very often, and one is security for the other.

44,780. How many years have you known that?—The last few years—the last four or five years, I can say, at any rate.

44,781. And then they have to wait for a sale?—Yes, to get the money out in a month or so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,782. Do you feel the competition with foreign butter to be very severe?—Yes, it is so. Allow me to quote some figures. In 1889 we received from Australia the first very very small consignment of butter. I have the figures from 1890 to 1894 now before me, that is for January, February, and March. In the year 1890, during the first three months of the year—that is the Australian season; it comes in in December now—there were 8,712 packages. In 1891 there were 23,339 packages.

44,783. What does a package contain?—It means a package of 56 lbs., or thereabouts, rather more perhaps—about a half cwt.

44,784. Are those importations into the United Kingdom?—Yes, into the port of London entirely. There is no Australian butter coming into any other port. In 1892 there were 64,193 packages. In 1893 there were 128,953 packages.

44,785. Constantly increasing?—Yes, and in the corresponding three months of this year there were 227,031 packages.

44,786. That is Australian butter?—Yes, without New Zealand I have the figures of the New Zealand as well.

44,787. And the Danish butter is in addition to that?—Yes, the Danish commenced before this. This is only within the last five years.

44,788. That all tends very seriously to depreciate the value of our own local produce?—Yes, and I believe, if you will allow me to say a few words more, there is another consignment—the first consignment—of butter coming in from India just this last week, or the week before last, and according to "The Grocer" of the week before last, it says:—"In 'The Grocer' of February 24 last, page 459, we mentioned that 'an experimental consignment' was on its way here from Bombay, and it having just arrived, we find, from personal inspection, that the parcel—a small one, packed in round four-pound tins—has turned out very well, considering that it came by the overland route, and had not the advantage of having been preserved in a refrigerator during the journey. The butter itself is of a bright yellow colour, pretty firm in texture, and perfectly pure and sweet in taste. The label on the tins bears the name of 'The English Dairy Company, Bombay,' and also says it is 'under European management.' Its present market value in London is about 94s. per cwt., and the article promises in time to become a valuable addition to our supplies of colonial butter. As now imported the packages are unsuited to the taste of the home trade, and Messrs. H. Trengrouse and Co., the consignees, have already sent out to the Company in Bombay full instructions for the proper packing of East India butter in future, accompanied by boxes of the Australian pattern, with an inside lining of vegetable parchment, and all the necessary information respecting the customary mode of shipment and delivery of goods of a perishable nature brought from a distance across the tropics." So I believe in the next four or five years the Indian butter again will be quite as heavy as the Australian butter.

44,789. Will you tell me the quantity you carry away from here in this district weekly?—The quantity I carry away now is not what it used to be five years ago.

44,790. Not one-twentieth?—No, five years ago I was buying only Welsh butter entirely. During January, February, and March I confine myself to Australian, and at the end of March I commence with Waterford Irish butter.

44,791. You buy Welsh, besides?—Yes, and if I could help it I should sell nothing but Welsh, but I am obliged not to be behindhand.

44,792. Where do you deal in Swansea?—I live in Union Street, Swansea.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,793. Do you think there is much butter made now in the neighbourhood?—Not in this neighbourhood.

44,794. Is it sold in casks?—Yes, in very large casks, which are not very saleable.

44,795. How large, 100 lbs.?—120, 140, and some of them even 160 lbs.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,796. Then it would be a great advantage to this immediate neighbourhood if a creamery manufactory were established?—Yes.

44,797. There would be still more co-operation amongst the farmers than now exists?—Yes.

44,798. Do many of the farmers sell the butter fresh?—Yes, more than years ago; they must not keep it till the winter because the Australian butter is coming upon them. They see that now.

44,799. Where do they find the market?—There is a market here and in Carmarthen, and there is a market almost in every village.

44,800. Of course these markets would not be so good; but in a populous place like Swansea there would be more demand for it?—Yes. The buyers in Swansea come here.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Bowen called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,801. Where do you live?—At Llwyn Einon in the parish of Cilrhedyn.

44,802. You have a statement to give us, I believe?—Yes, at a public meeting of farmers held at Cilrhedyn last autumn I was deputed to appear before you to give evidence on their behalf.

Extent and Nature of Soil.—The parish of Cilrhedyn comprises about 7,088 acres of land exclusive of unenclosed commons. About two-thirds of the land is poor, consisting of light and peat soil. It is tilled, but requires a great deal of labour to make it remunerative.

Tenancy and Agreement.—The tenancy in the few cases that exist is from year to year. The agreement between landlord and tenant in some instances is hard and restrictive for the latter. He is bound to carry all materials for repairs and drainages without any compensation in return, and is further debarred from taking advantage of the Agricultural Holdings Act."

44,803. You refer to agreements in which they contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, several. I was only permitted to make a rough copy of that. The tenants are allowed a copy of the agreement, but the greater number of them are wholly ignorant of the nature of the clauses which they have subscribed their names to.

Erection of Buildings.—A great number of landlords erect houses and outbuildings but the tenant is charged with interest on the outlay at the rate of about 5 per cent.; and is obliged to do all the haulage without receiving any remuneration.

Rents in several instances during the last 30 years have been advanced from 30 to 60 per cent. Would advocate the appointment of a land court well represented by experienced agriculturists to determine rents.

Cause of Depression.—No doubt the present depression in the agricultural districts is due to the fall in prices of cattle, sheep, and dairy produce, and the advance in labourers' and servants' wages, together with high rates and taxes.

Labourers' Cottages.—Labourers on the whole have fair dwelling-houses, with garden plots attached. But a large number of these cottages are allowed to fall to ruin owing to the labourers migrating to the colliery districts, the farmers being unable to employ them, and pay them a fair rate of wage. I am of the opinion that it would be a strong inducement to labourers to stay at home if small plots of land were granted to them for cultivation during leisure hours for their own benefit.

Commons.—I beg to call your attention to the great injustice suffered by two squatters in the parish of Cilrhedyn, which I am sorry to say is contrary what Mr. Mousley, Lord Cawdor's agent, said at the Pembroke meeting. I have a copy of the 'Welshman' here which I shall take in my hand, and from which I read the following:—'The Carmarthen-'shire estates contain about 50,000 acres and 'the Pembrokeshire estate about 20,000 acres. 'On the former estates there had been appli- 'cations for inclosures in the manor of Emlyn. 'They were in the parishes of Penboyr, 'Llangeler, and three or four others. They 'were enclosed under the Act and squatters 'were required to pay a small rent. Some of 'it might have been increased after a time, 'especially where the landlord had laid out 'something in restoring cottages that went out 'of repair.' I am going to traverse that, because there was not a single halfpenny spent in the parish of Cilrhedyn. (1.) The first case I shall mention is that of Basil Jones of Pantypedyll. Between 30 and 40 years ago this man held a piece of common land at a rental of 1*s.* per annum. About 29 years ago, and two years after the death of Basil Jones and a similar period after the appointment of Mr. Mousley as agent to the Earl of Cawdor, the rent of the said plot was advanced from 1*s.* to 3*l.* to the daughter of the said Basil Jones. (2.) The second case is that of John Evans, of Blaentrench, who paid a rental of 2*s.* 6*d.* per annum for a similar quantity of land, between 5 and 6 acres.

See 28,622 –28,627.

44,804. Those were squatters?—Yes; taking it from the mountain but not without permission. He was permitted to take it. About 14 years ago these two plots were advertised for sale by the lord of the manor, the Earl of Cawdor, and the respective parties who occupied them purchased their allotments at the rate of 26*l.* per acre, which was exorbitant no doubt. Not a farthing was expended by the lord of the manor in the erection of buildings or repairs on either of the allotments mentioned. I also beg to call your attention to a violation of the 28th section of the Commons Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 56) which has reference to field garden allotments in the parish of Penboyr. In fact I was appointed at the public meeting to inform you about this affair. I was advised to bring the matter before you gentlemen as Commissioners.

Evicted Tenants.—Instances have occurred of tenants being evicted from their holdings. One particular case can be cited—that of Evan Beynon, of Blaencwm. Before the parliamentary election of 1868 this tenant and his landlord (Mr. Thomas Davies of Cardigan) were on terms of intimate friendship. A few days before the poll took place the tenant was requested by the landlord to record his vote in favour of the Conservative candidate. The tenant refused his promise to do so, and publicly voted in favour of the Liberal candidate. Next term day, the said Evan Beynon received notice to leave the holding. He received a compensation of 30*l.* from the Evicted Tenants Fund.

Small Freeholders.—But the greater part of the Cilrhedyn parish is tenanted by small freeholders. These people purchased their holdings some 15 or so years ago when times were good. The greatest inducement they had to purchase their lands was the wish of becoming the owner of the property and not be removed from the place where their ancestors for several generations had resided, and where their best energies had been spent in cultivating the land. The majority of those who purchased their holdings were obliged to mortgage them to the extent of two-thirds or more of the purchase money, and some had barely the deposit money in hand. The most of these lands, owing to competition, were purchased at such high figures that the interest paid on the mortgage is considerably higher than the rent actually paid before the sale of such lands. Owing to lack of means to employ labourers these farmers are obliged to employ their own children on their farms, paying them no wages further than their bare maintenance, and very often they are obliged to borrow money to pay the interest due on the mortgage. Whereas tenants receive abatements in their rents from their landlords in depressing times the small freeholders receive no abatement whatever in the interest payable to the mortgagee. Last May (1893) a memorial was presented by

J. Lloyd Morgan, Esq., M.P. (of which I have a copy here), to Parliament asking it to grant to Welsh farmers money on mortgage of their lands at a low rate of interest. A copy of the memorial is herewith presented to you. The petition was five yards long and signed by agriculturalists in the counties of Cardigan, Pembroke, and Carmarthen. I shall allow the memorial to speak for itself.

Gentlemen, what these small freeholders wish to get is something similar here to what there is in Ireland. I understand that they have farms there at 17 years' purchase, or they pay 4 per cent. for 49 years, and they become entitled to their own property, being the full amount of interest; but here, if they pay 4*l.*, they are only tenants at the will of the landlords afterwards, and taking the amount of expenses in renewing mortgages one time after another, and so on, puts these sort of farmers in a most depressed state, even more than the tenant farmer is in at present. Here is a copy of the memorial. (The witness handed in memorial.)

To the HONOURABLE the COMMONS of the UNITED KINGDOM in PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED.

The HUMBLE PETITION of your MEMORIALISTS resident in West Carmarthenshire, North Pembrokeshire, and Lower Cardiganshire, showeth:—

That most of the peasant proprietors of the above districts have, during the last 15 years or thereabouts, become the owners of their respective farms—the same being purchased by them at a period when times were good. Most, if not the majority of them, however, were obliged to borrow money on mortgage to enable them to complete their purchases, and have ever since been paying interest thereon at the rate of four pounds per centum per annum, which, having regard to the great depression in trade and the present low prices on farming stock, is considerably more than the several mortgagors are able to pay, and they consequently become greatly involved.

Your petitioners therefore pray that your honourable House will take into consideration this question, which is of considerable importance to agriculturists and others in Wales, and endeavour to pass a Bill to enable the Government to advance money to Welsh farmers on mortgage of their property to the extent of about three-fourths of their value, and at such a rate of interest (say three pounds per centum per annum) as will relieve them from the great hardship they are now suffering.

And your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,806. Are you in a position to say that a good deal of the mortgagees have called up their mortgages owing to the land agitation that is going on in Wales?—No, I do not mean to say that. I am speaking personally about our district.

44,807. What is the date of this agreement?—1881.

44,808. So that really, when it mentions that the Agricultural Holdings Act is not to apply, it refers to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875?—Yes.

44,809. Still, there is an attempt here to contract out of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, and there are other things too; if a certain portion of the rent is not paid in 60 days the landlord can take possession himself for the rent. I have seen a lot of agreements in our parish from time to time, but that is the only one of which I have a copy now.

44,810. You put this in as a sample?—Yes.

44,811. Was there no compensation paid to those two persons who had erected their cottages when the places were sold?—Not a single penny. They have had to pay 26*l.* an acre for land which they cultivated themselves. They were taken out of the bare common of Cilrhedyn, one of the worst commons that there is.

44,812. We may take it, I suppose, that these people have bought their holdings owing to the insecurity of tenure, in order that they might be perfectly sure in their holdings?—Yes. They would never have spent that money if they thought they were not working for themselves.

44,813. Do you think there would be a desire among farmers to buy their own holdings if they had security of tenure?—No; with fair rents they would never do so. They are much better off, too. There was a feeling among them after the evictions in 1868 to buy their own holdings.

44,814. Was it after the year 1868 chiefly that these holdings were bought?—Yes, the whole of them that I am speaking about now.

44,815. And you think that the evictions of 1868 had something to do with it?—A lot, no doubt about it.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,816. Do you mean to say that the competition for those lands which those freeholders have bought was greater and keener on account of the evictions of 1868?—I must be careful in that respect, but I should say this, that owing to the eagerness of farmers to become their own freeholders there was a competition.

44,817. But does that mean the same thing?—I cannot say.

44,818. What made them so eager, then?—Well, they wished to become their own freeholders themselves to be satisfied, that whatever they worked upon it should be for their own benefit.

44,819. Was it the events of 1868 that quickened their eagerness, do you think, to become freeholders?—Yes, in my opinion, but I cannot prove it.

44,820. With regard to the two squatters, I think you said one of them put up his house after permission given?—All of them were put up with permission.

44,821. The squatters I mean?—Yes.

44,822. With whose permission, the lord of the manor?—Yes, the lord of the manor of course.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,823. What is the date of this memorial? Was it made this year?—No, about a twelvemonth ago.

44,824. Was this the petition which is referred to in this memorial that you sent up to Parliament, which petition you said was five yards long?—Yes. It might have been a twelvemonth ago.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Beynon called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,825. Is this your statement?—Yes.

44,826. Is it correct?—Yes.

44,827. Where do you live?—Clyncoch, Cilrhedyn, Newcastle Emlyn.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows:]

to buy or leave the farm, and in order not to lose our farm this time, we purchased. Prices were high at this time, and trade was brisk, and land like everything else fetched a high price, but we had next to nothing to pay for it, so we had to borrow money on mortgage at 4 per cent., and the majority of the farmers of Cilrhedyn have bought their farms in the same way without much capital to do so. This, then, is my request and wish before you to-day that the Government be induced to give us a helping hand and assist us as a class by lending us money at 3 per cent. or thereabouts. We as a class are harder pressed than many tenant farmers. Some landlords make abatements in the rents in bad times and grant repairs, whilst we as a class obtain neither. I am now obliged to build a dwelling-house without assistance from anybody and to pay the full value of the land in my possession in interest. It is my firm belief that if the Government could realise the condition in which we are it would grant our request without any objection.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Stephen Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

44,828. What is your address?—Morlogws Uchaf, Cilrhedyn.

44,829. Is this your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

Before I bought my present holding I was a tenant under a Colliery Company near Pembrey. The rent was very high, notwithstanding which I received notice that the rent would be further advanced. At the very time the farm in which I was brought up was put up for sale.

44,830. Whose property was that?—The Colliery Company's, near Pembrey.

44,831. It belonged to the Colliery Company?—Yes.

"Finding that I could not possibly pay the advanced rent at Pembrey I ventured to purchase my present farm."

44,832. What is your present farm?—Morlogws Uchaf, Cilrhedyn.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

The farm which I left was let to a person who had a number of grown-up children, and thus he could manage to pay the advanced rent. At the time I bought my present farm trade was brisk, and though the purchase money was high I managed to pay the interest on the mortgage. But since trade has slackened I find it very difficult indeed to get two ends to meet. The worst part of it is that I have been obliged to change the mortgage three times, thus entailing great expense and greater difficulty in getting two ends to meet. I should be very pleased if the Government would advance money on land in Wales so as to spare us the trouble and expense of continually changing the mortgage.

44,833. That is, the mortgagors called in the money?—Yes.

44,834. May I ask what the rate of interest has been; has it remained the same, 4 per cent.?—Yes.

44,835. It has remained the same, but still there has been expense attached to the change?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Thomas called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,836. You live at Wernnewydd, in the parish of Llanfair Orllwyn?—Yes.

44,837. Is this your statement, and do you vouch for its accuracy?—Yes.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows:]

I, David Thomas, farm some 50 acres of land on the Bronwydd Estate. I was requested by my fellow tenants to give evidence before the Land Commission. Our complaint on the Bronwyd Estate is that the rents are really too high to meet the present value of farm produce. There have been two general advances in rents on this estate, one in 1865 and the other in 1871, when things were very brisk. Besides, I feel that it is hardly fair that the tenants have never a voice in choosing a valuer. I believe that the tenants should have a voice in a business of such vital importance to him. It is unknown to me that anything like this would be tolerated to settle the value of any other article except land. Another complaint is that rents are raised in good times, but never reduced during bad times. We certainly receive abatements of 10*l.* per cent., but this is quite inadequate to meet the depression. We, in this district, depend mostly on butter, store cattle, and pigs to meet the demands on us. Butter has fallen from 30*l.* to 40*l.* per cent., cattle 100*l.* per cent., and pigs 10*l.* per cent., whereas labour has risen 100*l.* per cent. Rents have gone up during the last 30 years from 40*l.* to 50*l.* per cent. I farm 50 acres of ordinary land, 20 acres of wet clay soil partly drained, 5 acres of good meadow land, 10 acres of good arable land, 15 acres of hillside (seven acres of this, according to Mr. Davis, the valuer, is not worth anything). Therefore I pay for the remaining 43 acres over a pound an acre.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Besides it is a most inconvenient place. The farm-house is situated on the flat part of the farm at an altitude of about 330 feet, whilst I have 10 acres at the altitude of 570 feet, and this at a distance of three-quarters of a mile from the farmyard. We tenants on the Bronwyd Estate feel quite safe as long as Sir Marteine Lloyd lives; but we have seen such fearful changes in Cardiganshire that we cannot but think often of the safety of the capital and the labour we put in the land. There is a very strong desire among the tenant farmers of the whole district that we ought to have a thorough change in the laws of land tenure. The insecurity of tenure, the high rents (these bad times), and the doubt of ever receiving any compensation for the improvements we make, are permanent hindrances in the way of the farmer to fulfil his agricultural duties. I speak freely, I am not afraid, because Sir Marteine Lloyd sent to us to let us know that he would be pleased if any of his tenants came before the Land Commission. There are scores of farmers who are much worse off than the Bronwydd tenants, and they talk freely of their grievances on market and fair days, yet I do not see any of them here to-day—why?

Professor Rhŷs.

44,838. You ask a question there, but we are not here to answer questions. Perhaps you would not mind answering it yourself?—I think it is that they are afraid to come.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,839. Do you think that they would be turned out of their farms because they came here?—I cannot say that exactly, but there are different ways of getting rid of a tenant besides turning him out.

44,840. Are there any cases to your knowledge of capricious eviction in the county?—No, I have never seen such things before.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,841. Such a thing as a Land Commission do you refer to?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,842. That is not the question I asked. I asked you if you knew of any cases of capricious eviction—of a man being turned out of his farm?—No, I do not know of any cases of the kind.

44,843. You think men are afraid?—I know of a good many who have been turned out for voting.

44,844. How long ago?—1868.

44,845. Is there anything of that kind now in late years?—No, I am not aware of that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,846. Is the feeling of 1868 still alive in the minds of the people?—I think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,847. The following question is handed in by Mr. Vincent: "When did you write that sen-" tence, 'yet I do not see them here to-day,' " which appears at the end of your statement?" —At the same time as I did the rest.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,848. When was that?—About a week or nine days ago.

44,849. To what place did you refer to then?—I knew that they would refuse to come at that time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

44,850. You knew that they would not appear here to day?—Yes, I knew that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lewis called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

44,851. Is this your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

"The evidence of David Lewis, Trebedw Factory, Llandyssul. I am a weaver by trade, and have worked at my trade for many years. I have come here to speak for myself of my grievance, but I believe my complaint is common enough. In 1880 I wanted to get a place to build a woollen factory of my own, to be worked by water-power. I saw Mrs. Jones, of Maescrugiau, as to a plot of land on Pengraig, a small farm on Maescrugiau estate. Mrs. Jones dictated me the terms, and unless I wished to fall in with those I should not have it. I had to pay 6*l.* a year ground rent for 1,815 square yards, which is something like 16*l.* per acre, and only 60 years lease. No allowance was made for this to the tenant of Pengraig. The little farm came vacant some time after, and I was wishful to have a few acres of land also to have control over the leat that carried water to work my machinery. I rented it for 14*l*, and it measured just four and a half acres, and very ordinary land. Some nine years ago the Railway Company took half an acre of it, and the railing goes through the middle. For this I received no reduction during Mrs. Jones's life. Two years ago I had 1*l.* a year reduction from the trustees. I still pay 4*l.* an acre for very common land, and that in the middle of the country. I asked the late Mrs. Jones to reduce it, but she always refused, taking undue advantage of my position as to the water. I do complain that money earned by me in the factory should go to pay this unreasonably high rent."

44,852. Does the rate at 4 per cent. an acre include the building lease—does it include the house?—No, it does not, they charge 6*l.* ground rent besides.

44,853. That is what I wanted to get. What is the total amount that you paid?—The place itself is 13*l.*; ground rent 6*l.*

44,854. Is that in addition to it—13*l.* and 6*l.*, making 19*l.* altogether?—Yes.

44,855. Anything else?—Nothing more.

44,856. How many acres?—About three acres.

44,857. Then you had to build the house?—Yes.

44,858. And put up the machinery?—Yes.

44,859. And you had the water power?—Yes.

44,860. So that it is accommodation land?—I do not see it so. It is a separate farm.

44,861. It is a building lease really. Have you a long lease?—60 years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

It is short for a building lease, I should say; I do not know what the custom in this county may be.

Professor Rhŷs.

44,862. What is the custom as to the length of a building lease in this county?—Some 60, some 99, some 999, and some under 60.

44,863. Do you think your rent is too high?—I should think so.

44,864. How much ought to be your rent according to your own idea?—About 1*l.* an acre, I should think, judging from the quality of the land and what large farmers pay.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Lampeter.

FIFTY-THIRD DAY.

Second Court.

The County Court, Newcastle Emlyn, Cardiganshire, Tuesday, April 24th, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D. F.S.A.

Captain S. H. JONES-PARRY called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

44,865. You are Captain S. H. Jones-Parry, of Tyllwyd, Newcastle Emlyn?—Yes.

44,866. And you are a landowner?—I am.

44,867. About 1,200 acres; is that so?—About 1,500.

44,868. Have you a statement written out that you would like to proceed with?—Yes, I have. It depends entirely upon what you would like to hear.

44,869. We shall be glad to hear you as to your general evidence, and then we can ask you questions upon it afterwards?—Very well. Shall I commence according to the schedule?

44,870. Yes?—So far as I am aware, and I have known the estate now for 50 years, the holdings have always gone from husband to widow or son, or to whoever has the greatest claim. A daughter, if there is no son, would succeed, and even where a widow has married a second husband, I have never allowed the second husband to have the farm without the written consent of the wife. In the same way, if a son farms a farm of his father, when he applies to me for the farm I never would allow him to have the farm, for fear there might be a quarrel, and he might turn his father out.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,871. Without the consent of the father, you mean?—Without the consent of the father; in fact, the fixity of tenure in the estate is greater than that in our own class of society, because when a husband dies the widow generally has to go, and the elder son succeeds, whereas, so far as I know, in this county, and certainly in my own case, the fixity of tenure actually goes in the female line, unless there is somebody who can succeed. There has never been a death vacancy that has not been immediately applied for by several people; more than that, when people have been lying dead, before they have been buried, applications have been made for the farm, and I may say that before they have been dead I have had applications. Yes, it is a scandalous fact. The tenants seem to have done fairly well, and their children have bettered themselves; so far as I know they have, I know my tenants, I think, pretty well. I go and stay with them sometimes, and my children go and stay with them—absolutely live in the house—and I think I may say that their children are doing fairly well, at all events I hope they are. Reductions have been made in bad seasons. That, of course, is the fact.

Lord Kenyon.

44,872. Have you any details as to the reductions which you would like to give?—I could have brought my rent book, but I thought it would be more satisfactory to give you this. I always receive my own rents, but in 1892 I happened to be abroad, and I asked my banker to receive my rents for me, and here is the memorandum that I sent to him, and there is the rent roll (producing documents).

44,873. Is this for 1892?—1892. 1893 has had exactly the same reduction with the same result. I bring you this because that is another man's document, it is not my own. That is my written memorandum which is attached to it. I order the banker to give back 10 per cent., and I give him certain instructions. Then you can look at the rent roll, which is made out in my own hand. I always make out my own; I always receive my own rents, but you see the banker received the money and gave me the credit.

44,874. Your arrears do not seem to have been very troublesome to you?—I am proud to say that I have not an arrear in the world. I never have had such a thing, except accidentally. I think that is good evidence; you happen to have hit it off. Before I left I sent the banker that, and I made it all out ready for him to save him trouble. I daresay he is in the room now, for the matter of that.

44,875. May I take it from this that the gross rental of your estate is 492*l.*?—No, because I have got Cardigan town property. You will come to that.

44,876. But this is the agricultural land?—Yes, that is the agricultural, and if you divide that into 30 you will see it is not very much more than 10*s.* an acre.

44,877. You have given, I understand, 10 per cent. abatements the last two years. Is that it? Oh, for more than that. Originally I gave five, then I went to 10, and then I kept it 10, and I have given my tenants notice in order that they should be prepared beforehand that they will receive their 10 per cent. again this year, because I consider it far more important for them to know in advance that they will not have to pay the full rent; it saves a forced sale very often. As to leases, there are leases for 7, 14, and 21 years. I think there were 19 tenants, and about 1873 or 1874 I gave every tenant notice in writing that I was prepared to give them leases for 7, 14, and 21 years. Only two of them availed themselves of it, the others all said that my word was as good as a lease, and they declined to take it. I think they were very wise. The two that did take it were the two largest tenants that I have. One died last year, and immediately he was dead many applications came in for the farm. The widow thought that the lease had expired, which was quite incorrect, because the 21 years had not run out, and she applied for a renewal of the lease. I told her that she was still the tenant by virtue of the document that she held, and as soon as that is out I have not the slightest doubt she will be the tenant on. As to difference of creed and politics, no difference of the kind is ever made in the selection of a tenant. On my word of honour, I do not know the creed of any one tenant that I have; I do not know the creed of one single tenant; I fancy I might make a shot at it, but I do not know. Politics have nothing whatever to do with it. I believe in days gone by they might have, but with me they never have. As to the next question, on suitable occasions the goodwill of tenants has been conspicuously shown. It has been shown on dozens of occasions. In the case of marriages in the family, and so on, the tenants have been most liberal in their presents, and have shown the utmost good will. No vails or duties exist. I did away with all of them. There were many that were very burdensome, and I did away with every one of them. They do not exist.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,878. What do you mean by a vail?—A vail is a sort of acknowledgment in the way of giving something—a tip if you like to call it so. It is generally given, I think, to professional people. The duties were absurd. No agent is employed save for Cardigan house property.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

As to the Cardigan house property, it would be impossible for me to collect that myself. Some even go as low as 3*d.*, some are 1*s.* 6*d.*, and so on, and Mr. Morgan Richardson, whom you saw yesterday receives those. I have never had any complaint about those. Now, I go to the leases. Personally, for 30 years, taking good years with bad, I have found farming pay. It is a very long subject to go into, and I do not know how far you would desire that I should go into it. I may tell you that I bank with a different banker for my farm from the house, so that the accounts are never under any circumstances mixed. I keep my books as strictly as I did when I served Her Majesty—a great deal more strictly really—well, I will not say more strictly, but about as much—and I know by my banker's accounts, and I know by my own banker's books, that taking good years with bad, I have not lost. Then I have written down, "I farm in rather an extravagant manner." I farm 201 acres, and my labour bill, including my bailiff, dairy maid, and farm servant, comes to about 220*l.* a year. That of course is farming extravagantly, but these men have been employed for year after year, and it does not break me to employ them on. As to the rent that I pay for my land, as I told you I keep my accounts very correctly, at least I hope so. I debit myself with the rent of 1*l.* an acre. I make the house pay for everything that I supply.

Lord Kenyon.

44,879. At market prices?—At market prices, when my wife will give me them. Well, we have compounded. For several years I kept a very strict debtor and creditor account between the house and myself, and I found it amounted in the rough to about 200*l.* a year. Therefore, now I debit myself with 201*l.* rent, and I credit myself with 200*l.* a year for the supply of the house, which I think is a very moderate one, considering that I have rather a large establishment to keep up—horses and so on. Now we are talking about the rent. That I put down at 1*l.* an acre. I find that my rateable value is much less than that. It is 16*s.* an acre, but the rateable value is put down by gentlemen who are very anxious that I should pay the utmost to save the rates, and I find that whilst I am charged 16*s.* an acre, one surveyor that I employed, and one that the Board of Guardians sent themselves, put me down respectively at 12*s.* 6*d.* and 13*s.* 6*d.*, but I, moreover, find, for I have taken the trouble to go into the thing, that four adjoining freeholds are at 12*s.* 11*d.* an acre, and six rented farms that absolutely abut on my own land, and are only divided by a hedge—and therefore, for all practical purposes you may say that the value of the land is somewhat the same if it was farmed in the same way—I find that they are 10*s.* 1*d.* Those documents are of great importance, because they are absolutely taken from the parish registers and maps, and they show exactly what the rented farms are, and what the freehold farms. The freehold farms are all put up highly because there is no possibility of making a case to get a reduction. A tenant pays his rent, and he says, "That is my rent," and he is rated upon that; whereas a freeholder pays no rent, and one of the most iniquitous parts of it to my mind is that anyone on the Board of Guardians can get up and say, "He is not sufficiently highly rated, shove him "up," and then to go to appeal would be a very great deal of trouble. I think that gives you a very good idea of the way in which I keep the accounts and so on. I have made out a tabular statement for 23 years of my profit and loss on the farm.

44,880. That would be very valuable. Would you give us that?—I can give you that, and I can give you the book from which it is made up.

44,881. Will you just read the summary of those years, so that we may get it on the evidence?—I will read the summary. Here I put in a statement for 10 years, by which you can see at a glance what I have made and what I have lost in each year.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,882. What year do you begin?—I begin in 1870. May I make one remark before I go on? In all these documents I am giving, please to remember that I am excepting 1893 altogether. It was an exceptional year. You must not be biassed in any way by my accounts in reference to 1893 or 1894, in fact 1892, because we have had very bad times.

Lord Kenyon.

44,883. Will you just read out, then, every year the profit and loss?—Well, that will not give it you accurately, because I had a different amount of land in hand in 1871 to what I had in 1870.

Mr. Grove.

44,884. But you have still debited all the charges against it?—I have debited all the charges against it, but still it makes a little difference.

44,885. Not appreciable, I think?—Very well, if you are satisfied I am. In 1870 I gained 43*l.*, in 1871 I gained 58*l.*, in 1872 I gained 128*l.* (I can account for it if you wish it), in 1873 I gained 70*l.*, in 1874 I gained 90*l.* I will call it plus and minus. In 1875 plus 1*l.*, in 1876 plus 37*l.*, in 1877 plus 70*l.*, in 1878 plus 27*l.*, in 1879 minus 34*l.* (I lost all my sheep that year by rot), in 1880 minus 23*l.*, in 1881 plus 6*l.*, in 1882 plus 83*l.*, in 1883 minus 128*l.*

44,886. What was the reason of that?—Well, I did badly all round, I had a very bad dairy-maid to begin with. 1884 minus 4*l.*, 1885 minus 31*l.*, 1886 plus 27*l.*, 1887 plus 8*l.*, 1888 minus 16*l.*, 1889 plus 98*l.*, 1890 plus 82*l.*, 1891 minus 41*l.*, 1892 plus 158*l.* I was so astonished at the result of 1892 that I verified all the larger amounts by my banking book, and I cannot find out that there is a mistake in it, but it seems incredible. I cannot make it out at all.

44,887. This is 201 acres, you say?—Yes.

44,888. Except the first two years?—Except the first one year. About 1892 I was so dissatisfied with my own accounts that I have compared them with the averages that I have shown to you now, and I cannot find any discrepancy. The only way that I can account for the large balance in 1892—because I think it is necessary to try and explain such a thing—is this. I sold 254*l.* worth of cattle, and I did not reduce my stock, but I think that I sold cattle that would have come in 1891, when I had a deficiency of 42*l.*

44,889. You must average the two years?—Yes, averaging the two years would make a certain amount of difference.

44,890. Then it would depend how you valued the cattle on the previous year?—I do not value them. This is as I sell them. In the previous year I only sold 204*l.* worth of cattle, and in 1892 I sold 254*l.* worth. I sold sheep very much better, sheep 37*l.* the one year, and 59*l.* the next year. Butter was slightly better, but the expenses of working the farm were not so great.

Mr. Grove.

44,891. The average is 28*l.* for the 23 years?—I have just jotted down the prices of animals within different years. The highest price I ever got for two-year-olds was 19*l.* a head. That was the highest price. That was in 1874. The lowest price was this year, when I got about 13*l.* for the same class of animals. I sold heifers in 1879 for 23*l.*, but then that was a fancy price, because they were very breedy animals.

Lord Kenyon.

44,892. What class of stock were they?—Shorthorns.

44,893. What were the others—steers?—The others I sold to Mr. Elkington, of Llanelly. He bought the whole lot at an average of 19*l.*

44,894. What were they—mixed?—Heifers and steers, yes. The average I make out to be about 16*l.* for that class of animal. Now in giving the accounts that I have produced before you, I have not debited myself with any interest on the principal. I value the stock, say, at 1,500*l.*, and I think you may take off a certain sum for interest upon that. Of course I do not pay it; I inherited it; and therefore I have never carried it into my accounts.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,895. That would turn it into a loss, would it not?—It would turn it to a loss undoubtedly. That is the reason I am more particularly bringing it to your notice. It would turn it into a loss, but then taking into consideration the rent I am paying, which no farmer would pay, and the rate of wages I am paying, which no farmer would possibly pay, I consider unquestionably that taking the two together, the farm has paid its way.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

44,896. How many men do you keep?—I keep three farm servants, the bailiff, the dairy maid, and the farm boy. Then I keep two carters, a cowman and a labourer.

44,897. Do your labourers do any other estate work besides the farm work?—Yes, they do a little, for instance, keeping the roads tidy and so on, and they cut timber occasionally, but when they cut timber the house repays the farm; it would be shown in that account. For instance, this very year the house repaid me 10*l.* that I had paid these men for cutting timber which was sold at the public auction.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,898. May I ask whether this includes the bailiff's salary?—Yes.

44,899. Of how much?—The bailiff gets 32*l.*

44,900. Which of course the tenant farmer would get for himself?—Yes, exactly. The dairymaid, the farm boy, and the bailiff get between them 52*l.* 10*s.* and their keep. That is where I say that the farm pays. If you take my accounts, I am quite willing to admit that they show that there is a balance against me, but I am not going into what I am doing; I am going into agriculture—what A, B, C, and D ought to do.

44,901. So that what it comes to is the average according to your figures is 28*l.* a year; if we added another 50*l.* for a fourth of the rent, that would bring it to 15*s.* instead of 1*l.*?—Why would you add a quarter of the rent?

44,902. I think you said you thought 15*s.* would be more like the rent than 1*l.*?—Well, I let out at this present minute 20 acres of the very land for which I am debiting myself 1*l.*; I only get 1*l.* an acre, and I pay the rates as well, so that I really only get 15*s.* for it.

44,903. That would raise it to 78*l.* Then, if we deduct the interest at 4 per cent., that would take 60*l.* off; that would leave 18*l.*, besides the 22*l.* 15*s.* for a tenant farmer?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

44,904. Now you have something to say about depression in farming?—Yes. There is not the slightest doubt that there is very considerable depression. You need not come from London to find that out. Then the question is what it is due to. There are a great number of causes. The first is bad seasons; we have had some very bad seasons lately, and no matter what the crops were we could not harvest them. Then, in the next place, we have no outlet as we used to have formerly. We have not the same outlet. A railway has been in construction for 60 years here, and there is where Government can do something.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

44,905. Still in course of construction?—Yes, still in course of construction, and it will be in course of construction probably when I am somewhere else. It is scandalous, and that is a point where you really can do some good to the tenants down here. Other countries have State aid for railways. Why, after a Bill has been promoted 60 years in this county, the farmers have spent their money to bring the railway down, the poor fellows have put in 10*l.*, 20*l.*, 30*l.*, 40*l.*, 50*l.*, according to their means, the gentry have subscribed from 100*l.* to 500*l.*, and so on, and here is 60 years and that railway has not come. But it is kept warm; no one else can go in, because they go on renewing their Bill.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,906. Is that a contractor's line?—It is the Great Western's supineness in bringing that railway down.

Lord Kenyon.

44,907. Where is that railway to and from?—It is coming from Llandyssul here; I say coming. Tenants have been unable to cultivate their land, because they did not know what year the railway would come through that bit of land. Men have bought in this very town—perhaps there are some here now—land at enormous prices in hope of the railway coming, and they cannot turn land into coal yards or anything. No railway has come, consequently we have no outlet for our produce. In consequence of no railways our field of sale is very much limited. Drovers will not come down here. Why should they? Why, my cattle have to travel 14 miles before they can get a truck. The drover will say, "I am not going to drive cattle that have "been pampered 14 miles," they will not come. I asked the other day how a fair was going on at Llandyssul, and the drover there said, "Newcastle Emlyn—where is it?" and there was a general laugh. Nobody knew where it was. Nobody comes down. When we get a railway we shall have a better chance. Now there is one point I want to call your attention to particularly, because I think a great deal hinges upon that. Agricultural depression arises in a great measure down here from agricultural depression in England. England, as you know, used to be a great corn-growing country, and we used to send thousands of cattle away to be used as oxen, first of all to plough that land in England, to tread the straw, and to eat it. Now that there is no corn grown in England there is no outlet for all that great quantity of our black cattle, and that has a great deal to do with the present depressed prices.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,908. Did those black cattle go chiefly to the south of England, to Sussex, and so on?

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

—Yes; I have seen hundreds and hundreds of them, and men have made their fortunes in this town simply by driving them up there. Well, that has gone. That is another cause of depression. Then another is this: the Welsh farmer is a very hard-working man and a very good farmer—I have been in every country in the world, and I have looked up agriculture pretty nearly everywhere—he is a very good man all round, but he has not got capital to farm up to date. Farming is not now what it used to be, where one could keep cattle going for three or four years. If you do not have the thing in the London market quick, and at the right time, it is no good. It is no good selling four-year old sheep and four-year old cattle; you must have them in the market, and you must turn your money upon them in two years, or else it is no good. I do not think the tenant farmer has enough money to do that. I do not think he has as much building as he ought to have, and I do not think he has enough capital to put manure in to raise the crops quickly enough to feed the animals. I have nothing more to say. I shall be very glad to answer any questions.

Lord Kenyon.

44,909. I wanted to ask you one question. Do you find the widows farm their land well unless they have some son to help them? Do you find any difficulty in dealing with widows?—I do not think I have a widow who has not a son.

44,910. You have no case in point?—But I would like to tell you this. I am sorry to say it for the sake of the gentlemen here, but all my best tenants are widows. The women all farm better than the men, taking it through and through, and all the estates in Cardiganshire I think are pretty well the same.

44,911. That is a great tribute to the Welsh widow, is it not?—I think a woman has a much better chance in farming than a man.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,912. She looks after the dairy better, I suppose?—She looks after the dairy better, and the men will obey her, and they will take something from her which they will not take from a man.

44,913. I did not quite understand whether you prefer yearly agreements or leases yourself?—I have a form which has been used, but I really have not given anything of that kind for so long. It is a very haphazard way of doing things, but they simply, when a man dies, step into his shoes. There is no further engagement.

44,914. It is simply a verbal agreement?—Simply a verbal agreement.

44,915. I have only one other question to ask you. I do not quite understand why this railway is not completed. Is it from want of funds?—Well, the Great Western ought to have funds enough. They think it will not pay, and they do not care to hurry it up.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

44,916. But they are the promoters of the Bill, are they?—Someone in the room I daresay can tell us.

Lord Kenyon.

44,917. They have been working at it?—Oh, yes, they have been working at it.

44,918. I thought it was simply a pigeon-holed Bill?—But if you put a spoke in their wheel, I think it might be finished.

Mr. Grove.

44,919. We can do that. One of the directors is on this Commission, so that we can say a word about that?—I am a shareholder, and I would most willingly give up all my interest. Then in reference to agricultural depression, we are over-handicapped by the railways charging so much for home produce, and so little for foreign. I should like you to make a remark about that. I daresay you have had evidence about it before.

Lord Kenyon.

44,920. Yes, we have had a great deal of evidence as to that. This is a line, I understand, which is promoted entirely by the Great Western?—Originally it was a line promoted by Welshmen down here. I forget what the capital paid up was, but it was something enormous, and it was all squandered. Then it went into Chancery, and the Great Western bought it up under a promise that they would continue the line on to Newcastle Emlyn. I sold my shares at half-a-crown apiece—a large sum—on the understanding that they were to complete it at once, whereas it has been going on for something like 10 or 15 years again.

44,921. Do you think there is any possibility of a competing line from the north from the Aberystwith direction?—I should think not. I do not see that there is any possibility of any profit. There would be a profit to Newcastle Emlyn I think without a doubt, but there is not room enough for two.

44,922. You think there is no connection with Manchester by that line that calls itself the Manchester and Milford line?—You go on a portion of the Manchester and Milford to-morrow, but there seems to be no money and no inclination. I do not see that it is possible for a competing line.

44,923. Is there any chance for light railways in this district to be of any service?—If Government would only encourage it, there would be at once, they are most absolutely wanted, there is the Vale of Ayron, about which you will have evidence to-morrow, a line might be constructed there, and there is a great portion of Pembrokeshire that is absolutely devoid of railways.

44,924. And you think the gradients are not too steep, they would admit of such railways?

—Nothing is too steep in these days, when they go up Mont Blanc.

44,925. I think exceptional cases like that hardly bear upon the matter?—Possibly not.

Mr. Grove.

44,926. Just one question if you please. You say that all the tenants have done fairly well?—Mine—of course not all—many are ruined. There are plenty of people who will come after me, but to my mind the freeholders are the worst off in this country out and out. If I had to begin life again, I would begin life as a tenant, and not as a freeholder.

44,927. Then you think that those freeholders who bought their land and have to pay interest on the money, regret it, do you?—I think they ought to. I know of one case where, if the gentleman had not bought his land, he would have a much better rent from it, but I think he will give evidence to you presently.

Mr. Grove.

I will not ask you any further questions, as you have given us such clear evidence.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,928. I only want to ask you about these black oxen which you were speaking of. How long is it since oxen were used here for ploughing generally?—Never in my time. I can remember 50 years. There are plenty of people here who may remember.

44,929. What I want to get at is this. How much do they reckon to plough in a day now?—What, with oxen?

44,930. No, with horses, the way they plough now?—If you go to any book on farms, or to any authority, you will find they ought to plough under ordinary circumstances an acre a day, they do not do anything like that now.

44,931. Why is that?—I do not know. I cannot answer you that.

44,932. Is it the pace of the oxen?—No, I am not talking about oxen ploughing.

44,933. But the man who goes behind the plough now is the same man, perhaps, who went behind the oxen, and he lets his horses go just as slowly as the oxen used to go?—Oh, no. I do not know about that. I never had oxen ploughing, and know nothing about them. I do not know how much they plough in a day, but I certainly should not think more than half-an-acre.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

44,934. Is not that very much against the paying of the farm?—Well, they plough very deep, and the oxen fatten and come to profit, whereas from the horse you get nothing at all.

44,935. But as farming is now conducted is it not the want of greater energy and rapidity in things like ploughing, that prevents their paying?—Well, I should say so. I do not suppose anybody ploughs with oxen down here now, and I never could tell why they did in England until I was told that they did a certain amount of work, and that the six oxen eventually, after a certain number of years, were sold at 20*l.* a head.

44,936. Do you think there is room for improvement in the little farmers here as regards these things—as regards energy in ploughing and saving time?—Well, I think the farmers here are very good, but they have not the capital. For instance, if a bad year comes, the man has to pay his rent. He cannot go to the bank and keep his animals, he must sell. If he had a little capital to back him out, then he would not be obliged to have a forced sale. That is the reason why I think all landlords would do well to give notice beforehand of all reductions that they are going to give. It may save from settling at a forced sale.

Lord Kenyon.

44,937. What do you call notice? How long notice should be given in your opinion?—We know that 1893 was a bad year. They never pay their rents until three or four months in arrears here. When you see that really a bad year is passed, I think that it is time to say to the tenants, "Well, at the next rent you will have a "reduction." This year I gave my tenants notice, I think in January, that they were to have a reduction when they paid their September rents, I told them that they were to have a reduction when they paid their June rents, and that they would also have a reduction when they paid their September rents, which they pay about January again, so that they have got a good year in advance. I may say, my Lord, that any document I have in the world you shall have a copy of if you wish.

Lord Kenyon.

Thank you. We are very much obliged to you for your very interesting evidence.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Mary Marles Thomas called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

44,938. Have you a statement of your evidence?—Yes.

44,939. Will you kindly read it?—I am the widow of the late Rev. William Thomas, M.A., who was for 20 years minister of the Llwynrhydowen congregation, in the parish of Llandyssul, and I have been requested by the members of that congregation to give evidence on the subject of the eviction of the minister and congregation in 1876.

The history of this congregation dates back to the early part of the last century. It was a branch of the church founded at Pantycreuddin, near Gellifaharen, Llandyssul, by the Rev. Stephen Hughes, M.A., of Mydrim, Carmarthenshire, one of the ejected Two Thousand of 1662, the first chapel at Llwynrhydowen having been erected in 1726, when, owing to a divergence of theological belief among the members of the mother church, a new cause was founded under the leadership of the Rev. Jenkin-Jones. Mr. Jones was succeeded by men distinguished as scholars, poets, divines, and orators, and the congregation has always been recognised as consisting of members of marked intelligence and advanced Liberal views.

The present church, therefore, had already had a distinct corporate existence for 150 years. The ground on which the chapel stood was held on a lease of 99 years at a nominal rent of 12 pence, to be paid every Michaelmas, but on the 28th October 1876, immediate possession of the chapel and burial-ground was demanded by the heir of the Alltyrodyn lessor of 1781, Mr. John Davies Lloyd, of Alltyrodyn, on the following grounds:—(1) That all the trustees named in the lease of 1781 were dead, while no successors had been appointed. (2) That, as alleged, though no explanation of the statement was given, the chapel had been used for other purposes than the worship of God. Notices were served on the minister and three of the leading members, forbidding them to enter the burial-ground or chapel. The writs were served late in the afternoon of Saturday, October 28th, so that there was no time to inform the members of the congregation before they assembled as usual for the Sunday morning service. This was, consequently, held in the open air; the minister announced from the steps outside the graveyard gates the facts of the case, and delivered an address, taking for his text the writ he had received the previous afternoon.

The first intimation of the notice had been received by the late John Jones, Esq., solicitor, Llandyssul, who was a member of the congregation. It was written by Mr. Mason Allen, agent of the estate, and was as follows:—

"1, John Street, Bedford Row,
"DEAR SIR, London, 20th Oct., 1876.

"I BEG to call your attention to the lease herein dated the 19th March, 1781, and to inform you that I am instructed, and intend forthwith to take possession of the above chapel, and I forbid any person to trespass therein. I shall bring action against any person entering the chapel from this date.

"In explanation of the above, it is but fair to you to mention that the lessees being all dead, and no successors having been appointed, the tenement reverts to the landlord, against whom all persons are trespassers. Had even the succession of trustees been kept up, I should have sought to eject them for breaches of the covenant to use the chapel for the worship of God and to 'no other purpose whatsoever.'

"I am, &c.,
"S. M. ALLEN.

"John Jones, Esq., Solicitor,
"Llandyssul, South Wales."

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Jones, on behalf of the congregation, wrote in a most kindly spirit to remonstrate with Mr. Allen. The following is the latter's reply:—

"DEAR SIR, London, 30 Oct., 1876.

"I AM in receipt of yours of the 28th instant. I should not have thought that you would have considered that I was very much given to trifling. I assure you I am perfectly serious in my intention to fight the question about the possession of this chapel, and I hope you will speedily bring your mind to realise the fact. I fail to see what I have to do with the 'congregation.' If there are any persons legally entitled to possession other than my client, that would be another thing. I can only say, that if any person having had notice not to trespass, shall be found trespassing, after that notice, I shall ask you to accept service of writ on his behalf.

"I shall, however, be glad to conduct the proceedings in an amicable spirit, so that the matter may be determined upon the strict legal rights of the parties.

"I am, &c.,
"S. M. ALLEN.

"John Jones, Esq., Solicitor,
"Llandyssul."

Since the General Election of 1865 and 1868, especially the latter, the congregation at Llwynrhydowen, had been subjected to a great deal of petty oppression and persecution, which culminated in the eviction when the young heir of Alltyrodin attained his majority. The minister was a very pronounced Liberal, and took a prominent part in politics. Being an effective platform speaker, he was in great request, and frequently addressed public meetings on political and social questions. This made him a marked man, and the object of strong dislike to the Tory agents especially; they were frequently heard to express their determination to remove him from the district, where they believed he did so much to awaken thought and enlighten public opinion on general, and particularly, on political questions.

It is to be noted that in 1870, four tenants on the Llanfair estate; and in 1871, eight tenants on the Alltyrodin estate, who had all voted for the Liberal Candidate in 1868, were compelled to leave their farms. One of them was a deacon, three others were prominent members of the Llwynrhydowen congregation, and all were well-known staunch Nonconformists and Liberals.

Both the estates were in Chancery at the time, the heirs being minors, but the sole subordinate management was in the hands of agents, known to be of strong, and even ultra-Tory proclivities, who were, it is believed, urged on and misinformed about the sayings and doings at Llwynrhydowen by spies and sub-agents, who hated the political principles of the minister and congregation.

Early in 1877 Capt. Lloyd came to reside at Alltyrodin. On June 15th he sent an express messenger to invite my husband to call upon him. On the morning of the 16th I accompanied him to Alltyrodin. We were received most cordially by Capt. Lloyd, who explained that he wished for a personal interview to talk over affairs connected with the closing of the chapel. He stated that he was in California at the time, and he knew nothing whatever of proceedings on his estate until he came home, when he was told by his agent and sub-agents that they 'had 'closed the chapel because the minister regularly 'abused him every Sunday from the pulpit and 'sought to prejudice the tenants against him.' He was glad the agents had done so, and felt that it was right; he would not be abused on his own estate. My husband explained to him that the report was utterly false, and he accepted the explanation, but added that he could not interfere, as he left his affairs entirely in the hands of his agent. As a matter of fact, Capt. Lloyd was staying in the neighbourhood at an inn, called 'Alltyrodin Arms,' opposite the chapel, and within a quarter of a mile of the mansion, three weeks before the eviction, and a week after the event he was staying at the same place. During this latter visit a deputation waited upon him, with an attempt at conciliation, but they only met with a coarse rebuff. That week the doors of the chapel were locked and the graveyard gates were fastened with a padlock. During the interview at Alltyrodin Capt. Lloyd talked a great deal in a glib, incoherent fashion; his whole manner and statements were so erratic and contradictory that no reliance could be placed upon what he said, but throughout he frequently declared that he left all the management of his affairs to Mr. Allen and his agents, so he did not consider himself responsible for evictions or anything else.

44,940. Have you any copy of the covenant or of the lease?—I have not.

44,941. I see in this letter it refers to "breaches of covenant to use the chapel." I suppose there must have been some such document?—Well, it is usual in the rural districts in Wales to hold meetings connected with the Sunday school and with social and political questions at the chapels. They have no other place.

44,942. But I mean is there no copy in existence, or is that document in existence which contains that covenant?—Yes, I think it would be in the office.

44,943. There must be some document, I should think, otherwise how could he say that the covenant was broken. There must have been a covenant existing?—Oh, it existed; there is no doubt about that.

44,944. Is Capt. Lloyd alive now?—No, he died in 1878.

44,945. Two years afterwards?—Yes.

44,946. You say that he talked in an incoherent sort of way and that his manners were erratic. Was there anything strange about him in any way?—Well, he was weak in intellect, at least that was our impression, but his agents did not acknowledge it. He talked a great deal of how he had travelled, he said he had travelled all over the world; one minute he was in Australia and another minute in California. Then he showed us a revolver, and there was not a sentence without oaths and imprecations.

44,947. He was supposed to be somewhat weak in intellect, but not sufficiently weak to be deprived of the management of his estate?—Oh, no. He told us that he had put everything into the hands of his agent. I am sorry both are dead. I am sorry that of the evicted tenants there are only two living, so that I can only just barely make these statements. I daresay there are many to corroborate me. There will be evidence on the subject, I think, given later on.

44,948. You say that some of the tenants were compelled to leave their farms. Can you give us details as to those?—There will be several who will come and give details during the morning. There is one present now.

44,949. Would you rather they should give it for themselves?—I can name them if you prefer, but you will have them later on, I know.

44,950. It is far better to get it first hand?—Very well.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,951. Could you tell us the date of the lease for 99 years?—1781. There were only three years of it to run. Mr. Allen stated to Mr. Jones, the solicitor, that he had no idea we should have accepted the writ so readily. He thought we should have gone to law. His expression was that he expected to have a nice bone to pick.

44,952. The lease had expired?—No, there were three years to run.

44,953. Then legally, of course, he must have gone on the question of covenant?—That was the pretext made.

Lord Kenyon.

44,954. Do you think you could obtain us a copy of that covenant, or the actual lease itself?—Yes, I think we can.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,955. May I ask are you still in possession of the chapel, or is it still withheld from you?—Captain Lloyd made a very extraordinary will, bequeathing all, in the event of his dying childless, to Allen. The case was tried in London. The will was disputed by his only sister, and she won the trial, at least there was a compromise effected before the trial closed. When Mrs

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Massey, his sister, returned to Wales, she was publicly received at Llandyssul, and had rather an ovation given her. In passing the chapel mentioned she alighted from her carriage, unlocked the gates, and brought the keys to us, giving us back the chapel; but in the meanwhile we had built a new chapel. A new chapel was built about a mile distant.

Lord Kenyon.

44,956. She did what she could to make reparation?—She did what she could. She had been totally ignored in her brother's will.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,957. That is still retained?—It is in our possession now. A new lease was granted at the expiration of the 99 years.

44,958. So that now you have a lease without the obnoxious covenant?—Yes. I believe there are certain stipulations in the new lease.

Mr. Grove.

44,959. What rent under the old lease did you have to pay for this chapel?—12*d.* a year.

44,960. Was that paid regularly every year?—Yes, regularly.

Lord Kenyon.

44,961. Kindly speak of your own knowledge. We cannot have any prompting of the witness. You can always say to the best of your knowledge?—I was not quite sure, and this gentleman is one of the trustees.

Mr. Grove.

44,962. There was an obligation, I suppose, in the lease to appoint new trustees if the old trustees died?—Yes.

44,963. That was not done?—That was not done. It is a very common thing in our district.

44,964. Yes, it is too common, I am sorry to say?—The whole family had been exceedingly popular in the district until this young heir came into the property.

44,965. Then I notice at the end you say that Captain Lloyd said that he left it to Mr. Allen, and he did not consider himself responsible for anything that was done?—Yes, he said so repeatedly.

44,966. Surely Captain Lloyd would be responsible for the acts of his agents?—He told us distinctly that he was in California at the time, whereas he was really staying in the neighbourhood, opposite the chapel, three weeks before.

44,967. You think, then, that the agent must have been in communication with him at the time of the eviction?—Oh, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Grove—continued.

44,968. We must assume that, I think?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,969. May I ask one question. Is this an entirely isolated case? I hope you do not know of any other case at all similar?—Well, I do not know of one so painful, but I think you will judge, before the day's evidence is over, that there are tragedies connected with this case.

44,970. Within the last 20 years?—Yes, since the election of 1868.

Lord Kenyon.

44,971. Was it a fact that no more trustees had been appointed?—Yes, it was, and that is a common case, I am sorry to say, in Wales.

44,972. A question is sent up by Mr. J. J. Jones: "What restrictions are there in the present lease?"—I think something similar to the old lease.

44,973. Restrictions as to the chapel?—As to the chapel not being held for political meetings.

44,974. May I ask this question of my own: Do you think it is a good thing that political meetings should be held in chapels?—Well, in districts like that one there is no place to hold them in. They either cannot be held at all or must be held in the chapels. I know it is an every-day occurrence.

44,975. I suppose, if another place could be found, ministers would prefer not holding political meetings in their chapel, in the same way that we should prefer such political meetings not to be held in our churches?—Oh, decidedly. They had, for instance, a meeting in the schoolroom connected with St. John's Church. I think I am right in saying that schoolroom was built by the parish rates. That was on a political question connected with the school board test, when party feeling ran very high in 1871. Though the one side had the use of it, the other side were refused.

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—May I suggest, my Lord, that we are getting rather into the realm of hearsay.

The Witness.

The vicar of the parish said the place belonged to him.

Lord Kenyon.

44,976. Is this your own knowledge?—My own personal knowledge. That was early in 1871, and they all had to go out, and the Liberals held their meeting out in the open air in a drizzling rain.

Mr. Grove.

44,977. I suppose no schoolroom is attached to the chapel?—No, there is none.

44,978. If there were a schoolroom available, you would naturally go to that instead of to the chapel for political meetings?—Oh, yes, decidedly, but we have very few schoolrooms. The Sunday schools are always held in the chapel.

44,979. Do you think that the holding of a political meeting at the chapel interferes at all with the aspect of the matter?—I do not personally, as there is no other place for it to be held.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,980. I thought that legally now the public elementary schoolroom is bound to be at the service of everybody for political meetings?—Yes, but that was early in 1871.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

44,981. I have some questions sent up by Mr. Stephen. "Is Mrs. Massey still alive"—that is, Captain Lloyd's sister?—I believe she is. She lives at Tenby.

44,982. "Have you informed Mrs. Massey that you were coming to give this evidence"?—No, I have not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

44,983. You are Mr. William Davies, of Rhydowenfach, Llandyssul?—Yes.

44,984. And you wish to give evidence with regard to David Jones, Prengwyn?—Yes, my Lord.

44,985. Who is David Jones? Is he alive?—He is alive, and here present to-day.

44,986. Can he not give his own evidence?—No, not very well.

44,987. We much prefer evidence at first hand if we can get it?—He can give it in Welsh. He cannot give it in English.

44,988. There are a number of Welsh witnesses. I think it would be much more satisfactory if he would give his evidence himself?—He is here present, and will answer any questions.

44,989. Does he understand English?—He does not.

44,990. Then he would not understand what you are saying to me?—He has faith, I suppose, in me?

See 45,054. 44,991. But it would be more satisfactory if he would give it himself?—I am quite willing.

44,992. Then you also wish to give evidence on behalf of Mrs. Mary Jones, of Rhydyfen?—I am sorry to say that Mrs. Mary Jones died and was buried last week. When I took her evidence she promised to be here present.

44,993. Will you give us her evidence?—Mrs. Mary Jones, Rhydyfen, Llandyssul, took a farm of 38 acres at 30*l.*, in 1869, from John Thomas, Esq., Llanfair, who was a minor at the time. His brother took a great interest in the estate. He did all the work for him—that is Captain Thomas, the landlord. In the year 1871, two years afterwards, she received notice to quit.

44,994. Had the heir come of age then?—No, he had not. She retook the farm at 32*l.* a year rent, with a promise to have the house she lived in and the outbuildings rebuilt. They were in a bad condition at the time, very bad indeed. In the year 1875, a new dwelling-house was built, with a promise to have the out-houses completed by November of the same year. In the meantime after the dwelling house was built, and after all the slates, lime, and gravel for mortar had been carted by herself for the out-houses, but before the out-houses were built the rent was raised to 35*l.* No notice had been given at that time, only she allowed it to be raised in that case. Instead of completing the out-houses, in the same year, the year 1875, all the slates and mortar were carted away to another farm, Ffosesgob, under the same landlord or the same owner. The next year, 1876, she had to cart fresh slates and lime for mortar the second time, and the out-houses were built, but not completed until very far into the winter, in consequence of which her cattle had suffered very much from exposure—from frost and snow. In the year 1879, the farm was sold by auction, when she sent in a bill for carriage and labour in clearing the ground, and doing other work in regard to the new buildings to the amount of 63*l.* for expenses incurred by her, but she could not get any compensation whatever.

44,995. Has her rent been raised under the new landowner?—Yes, at present her rent is 42*l.*, but the landlord and Mrs. Jones were getting on very nicely; occasionally there was an abatement made.

44,996. What was the abatement?—10 per cent.

44,997. That is a largish increase. She was willing to pay that?—Well, she did pay it.

Mr. Seebohm.

44,998. Till she died?—Till she died, with the exception of an abatement.

Lord Kenyon.

44,999. When did the abatement take effect?—I believe last year.

45,000. She paid 40*l.* from 1879 to 1893?—I believe so.

45,001. Not 42*l.*?—No, 40*l.*

45,002. I suppose you would say that you want better compensation for improvements than she had there?—Quite so.

Lord Kenyon.

Mr. Stephen, with regard to this case of David Jones, of Prengwyn, would you prefer to have this evidence given by the man in Welsh, or to take it as it is given by this gentleman?

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—I should be content to take it from this gentleman—of course I am speaking in the dark as to what the evidence is, but I think there is great advantage in having an English-speaking witness, if I may say so.

Lord Kenyon

Oh, yes.

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—I understand that the other witness is in the room, and can be referred to in case of necessity.

Lord Kenyon.

Very well.

45,003. Then we will take this other evidence from you, fully understanding that you are willing that the other tenant should substantiate anything you say?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

45,004. I should like to ask two or three questions first of all on this case of Mrs. Mary Jones. We understand the history of that case to be this, that there were 38 acres at 30*l.* a year?—That is so.

45,005. That in 1871 notice to quit was given?—Yes.

45,006. Why was notice to quit given?—On purpose to raise the rent.

45,007. I suppose it was known that that was the reason, was it?—That was the reason.

45,008. Then it was raised to 32*l.*?—Yes.

45,009. And afterwards to 35*l.*?—Yes, without any notice.

45,010. Then it was raised to 40*l.*?—After the sale.

45,011. After the sale by the new landlord?—Yes.

45,012. There are 38 acres. What sort of land was it?—Well, middling, not extra good.

45,013. Then you think 1*l.* an acre rather dear for it?—Rather dear.

45,014. You know the land yourself?—I do. I live the next farm to it. If the time had been as good as it was this last few years, of course it would not be dear, but taking one year, I consider it too high, especially when the bad years come in.

44,015. Then you also complain of the slow way in which they did the buildings, having to cart the stuff away, and then bring it back, and all that sort of thing?—Yes, the second time.

45,016. And, as the Chairman has asked you, you would consider that there ought to be compensation for improvements?—Yes.

45,017. Now they made a claim for 63*l.*?—63*l.* was the claim.

45,018. Can you tell us what that was for? What was the nature of the improvements?—For the expenses incurred in the buildings.

45,019. Haulage?—Haulage, clearing the ground for building the houses, and pulling down the old houses, and clearing the place where it was. The new houses were built on a new plot of ground. She made a very careful calculation at the time, and sent in the bill, giving it to Mr. Chapman.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,020. You have not got a copy of that bill, I suppose?—No, I have not.

45,021. Are you a farmer yourself?—I am a farmer. I am a retired master mariner, and I have been a farmer since 1882.

45,022. What way does it occur to you would be best to get compensation. Do you think by lease—by having a long lease, say for 14 or 21 years, or by what process do you think the farmer could get the protection that you think desirable?—I think the farmer, if he kept a correct copy of his accounts, should always be paid that amount when he is sent away, or when he leaves his farm. Whatever the improvements he has made are, that should be paid if they are real improvements.

Lord Kenyon.

45,023. Subject to their wearing out of course?—Subject to their wearing out.

45,024. There are some questions sent up by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Can you tell us what "improvements were made on Mrs. Jones' farm "by the landlord"?—There were no improvements whatever, but he paid for the slates and timber and lime and the masons.

45,025. "Do you know what they cost"?—I cannot tell you, but if you would ask me for an estimate I should say the cost, roughly speaking, would be about 150*l.* possibly.

45,026. The building of the house?—The building of the house and the outhouses.

45,027. Not more than that?—Well, of course, she had to do a good deal of labour herself. Including Mrs. Jones' own account, of course it would amount to over 200*l.*

45,028. Did she do any carting for the house; I do not see that stated here?—She did all the carting, all the haulage.

45,029. For the new dwelling-house?—For the new dwelling-house and also for the outhouses.

45,030. Twice over for the outhouses?—Yes, she did all the cartage and prepared the ground for the masons to build on.

45,031. I suppose it is usual in this country for the tenants to do the cartage?—It is.

45,032. Now will you take the other case of David Jones, of Prengwyn?—I wish to inform you about this man; first of all that he had been a farm servant for some years, and then be got into trade as a mason. He is a mason by trade. He saved a little money, and took it into his head that he would build a small cottage for himself to live in, as he thought, as long as he would live, for himself and his family. In the year 1863 David Jones had a small plot of ground about 120 yards square under a promise of lease from Mr. Rees Thomas, of Dolaullawr, the trustee to the same estate again. See 45,054.

45,033. What was the name of the owner?—John Thomas, of Llanfair. He built it under a promise to lease when the heir came of age. The building cost him about 45*l.*, at the yearly ground rent of 10*s.* When the heir came of age, about the year 1876, he renewed the promise of a lease, but afterwards said that he would not need to draw up a lease, as he would never be sent away from his house as long as he lived, but in 1879 the property was sold, and his own house was also sold, without giving him any compensation whatever for the loss he had suffered through the sale. Now what this man complains of is that the law is in such a loose way; of course he knew he had no claim whatever; in fact he employed a solicitor, Mr. John Jones, of Gellifaharen, Llandyssul, a very respectable man, to apply for compensation for the house of some sort or another, but the compensation was entirely refused. He could not get a farthing.

45,034. Is he living in that house now?—No.

45,035. Was he given notice to quit?—He took the same house from the same landlord

45,036. He took his own house?—Yes.

45,037. At what rent?—2*l.* 10*s.*

45,038. Was there any document?—No document, only word of mouth.

45,039. You do not know what price the property sold for, do you?—It was sold with a small place there, about 8 acres of land altogether. It was all sold together. Captain Thomas, the brother of this John Thomas, took a very active part in politics at the time, and when he went to him to ask him to influence his brother to get him a lease he says, "No, "if we give you a lease you will get a vote "then, and I do not want to give you a vote." That was put as an excuse, that he should not get a vote.

Mr. Grove.

45,040. Then was the landlord different in politics to David Thomas?—He was.

Lord Kenyon.

45,041. But the landlord was a minor?—He was of age at that time. That was after he came of age.

Mr. Grove.

45,042. When the landlord made a promise to give a lease, did he say that he would send a letter in a few days—"In a few days I will "send you a letter." Was anything said about a letter?—No; nothing was said about a letter at all.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,043. Nothing at all?—No, not as far as I remember To the best of my knowledge there was no letter. There was no promise of a letter.

45,044 David Jones seems to have built this house entirely on the promise—the verbal promise—of the landlord?—Of the trustee first, and of the landlord when he came of age.

45,045. And they did not fulfil that promise?—They did not fulfil that promise. That is the pith of the evidence.

45,046. Who was the landlord that came of age in 1876?—John Thomas.

45,047 Is John Thomas still alive?—No, he is dead.

Mr. Seebohm

45,048. Would you recommend that the law should be altered to give effect to a verbal promise in such a case as that?—I would.

45,049. Do not you think it would lead to a great deal of difficulty unless there were witnesses?—I consider myself that the law ought to be made in such a way that if a house is built on my land or on anybody else's land with the knowledge of the landlord, that should be taken in good faith as consent, and as good as a lease. That is my opinion.

45,050. But do you know that there was a statute passed, called the Statute of Frauds, in order to prevent fraud, which required written instead of verbal agreements?—Very possibly.

45,051. Do not you think we should get into just as much difficulty the other way if we made verbal agreements legal?—I think not. Of course I cannot say, but that is my opinion.

45,052. Certainly that law was passed to protect everyone. Do not you think now in Wales that it is one of the great faults of the Welsh tenants that they do trust to these verbal agreements?—I do.

45,053. And that they do not, like men of business, insist upon proper agreements in writing?—I hope you will understand, gentlemen, that in Wales very often there is a difficulty in getting these arrangements, and we have such faith in one another that we never think that they would do us out of our rights in that way; but certainly it is very wrong. I think with the education that we have now in process we shall get into better and more business-like ways than at present.

Mr. Seebohm.

It would be rather going back to legalise a verbal agreement, which cannot be substantiated. One man says one thing and another another. I do not think you would gain by it in the end.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,054. Are you David Jones, of Prengwyn?—Yes.

See 45,082.

45,055. Did you build a house in 1863 upon a plot of ground?—Yes. I am not quite sure of the year, but about that time.

45,056. Under a verbal promise of Mr. Rees Thomas?—Yes.

45,057. There was no document?—No.

45,058. Did it cost you 45*l.*?—I would not sell it for that. I put it up myself.

45,059. You put it up with your own hands?—As much as I could.

45,060. Have you got any bills for materials, and so on?—No; I have nothing.

45,061. You have no bills to show?—No; I have not.

45,062. When you applied for compensation, had you nothing to show in that way at all?—Yes, I gave them to Mr. Jones of Llandyssul, and I have never seen them since.

45,063. Is that the solicitor?—Yes.

45,064. What documents did you give Mr. Jones?—What I paid to the carpenter, and for timber, and so on.

45,065. In 1879 the property was sold; is that so?—Yes.

45,066. Are you living there now?—No; I am not.

45,067. Where are you living?—There is a house between that and mine.

45,068. Which you rent?—Under my landlord, who bought it.

45,069. Do you pay rent for the house you are living in now?—Yes.

45,070. How much?—I have two and a half acres of land, and I pay 7*l.* 10*s.*

45,071. To whom?—Mr. Thomas, of Ffoshelyg.

45,072. Is that the same gentleman who bought your house?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,073. Before you sold the house, did you apply to the seller—to the landlord who sold it?—No, I did not.

45,074. But why not?—Because I thought he would pay me.

45,075. You do not understand my question. Why did you not apply to him?—I thought that he was too much of a gentleman—that he would be sure to pay for the work.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

45,076. At that time or afterwards did he dispute that he had promised?—No, he did not deny that he had promised to pay.

45,077. He had promised a lease, had he not?—That was before then, when I worked there.

Mr. Grove.

45,078. When the sale was made, was it by auction?—Yes, by auction.

45,079. Were no bills of particulars put about on the walls and places?—Yes.

45,080. Did you see on those bills that your own cottage was included for sale?—I saw that the whole of it was.

45,081. The whole must include the lesser of course?—Yes.

45,082. You say that you built on a piece of ground 12 yards square?—I am not sure; I cannot say. It is about that.

45,083. Who was it that measured and showed you the boundaries of the land that you were to have?—There had been an old house there before, a long time before, and I was building on the same site.

45,084. Why did you build the house and depend upon word of mouth, when perhaps you might have had a letter by asking for it?—That was foolish on my part.

Lord Kenyon.

45,085. This is a question by Mr. H. L. Stephens: "Did you have your old house when "it was sold"?—No, I did not for two or three years.

45,086. How was that?—Because my landlord rented it and did not want it himself.

Mr. Grove.

45,087. What rent did you pay then?—I had paid 7*l.* 10*s.*, but I had taken a field then. The other houses adjoining it cost 2*l.* 10*s.*

Lord Kenyon.

45,088. Another question by Mr. Stephen "If "you had a lease of your present house, would "you not be as well off as if you had had a lease "of the old one"?—I do not mind which house, but the money has been lost.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,089. You are Mr. Evan Thomas, of Penrallt, Llandyssul?—Yes.

45,090. Is this a translation of your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I farm about 170 acres of mixed land in the parish of Llandyssul—farms vary in size in this district from 10 to 300 acres, the average 70 acres or so. The farms are let from year to year—no leases, but agreements. Many of the farmers own their farms, but they are mortgaged, and some very heavily so at 4 per cent. or so. Landlords invariably contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875, and very strict agreements were forced upon the tenants.

My belief is, that it would be better for us all if all were tenants with some proper protection than freeholders in name only. We had no choice but to buy, as our homes were entered in the market for sale, or about to be sold. I was brought up all my life on farms, and have been farming on my own account the last 30 years. I was born at Blaenpant, on the Alltyrodyn Estate. My father took Rhydyceir, on the same estate, 43 years ago. In the year 1858 my father died, and I assisted my mother on the farm. Then I had it on my own account. I lived there in 1868 as a tenant from year to year, and no agreement My landlord, John Davies Lloyd, of Alltyrodyn, was a minor then. I well remember being canvassed, before the general election in the autumn of that year, by my young landlord, and he was accompanied by his guardian—the late Mr. Phillips, of Havodneddyn—and Mr. James Davies, the agent. They pressed me very hard to vote for the Conservative candidate. I promised to do so. I invariably voted tory, for fear of my landlord and agent, until I had the Ballot to protect me. Since the passing of that Act I always voted liberal. The children, against my will and directions, were deprived of the protection of the 25th clause of the Education Act, 1870, at the local National School—being the only elementary school in the district. I withdrew my children from the school, and a few others followed my example. I sent my eldest boy to the grammar school kept by the Rev. W. Thomas, M.A., who was at one time my pastor. Not long after this, Captain Thomas, of Llanfair, and James Davies came to me on the same subject, and told me that I must take my boy at once from the grammar school at Llandyssul. I asked them if they did not exceed their right in asking such a thing of me. They replied that the Rev. W. Thomas was objectionable to my landlord, and that I must obey or lose my farm. I felt convinced that this was not an empty threat, and I did remove him to the Rev. Thomas Thomas' school.

Some time after my landlord came of age I was pressed very hard by Captain Thomas, of Llanfair, who was a particular friend of John Davis Lloyd, to go to church instead of chapel. This was very much against my will, and I did not go then; but soon the agent, James Davies, called upon me with Captain Thomas, and I was told plainly I would have to choose between my home and the chapel. "Gwell i ti fyn'd i'r Eglwys, neu yr wyt ti yn sicr o golli dy ffarm." ("You had better go to church, or you "are sure to lose your farm.") I felt reluctant to go. I felt they interfered with my religion, and that evidently they wished to crush the remnants of independence out of me. And I well recollect the treatment those tenants on the estate received for daring to show the least independence at the polling booth in 1868. Having a wife and young family, with no place to go to, I obeyed the mandate—left the chapel, where I was brought up from childhood, and attended the Church of England.

In the year 1875 I received notice to quit.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I was charged at the time, for reasons only known to the agent, James Davies, of being a slovenly farmer and not keeping the terms of the agreement signed in 1871. In July, 1875, a stranger was sent to walk my farm, and that very afternoon it was re-let to me again by Mr. Allen, the head agent, who lived in London. I was only informed a few days before the 29th of September that my farm was already rented to another, and that I was not to have it on any terms, and I had to turn out—there was no mercy to be had.

I never received a fraction of compensation for all I had done during my tenancy of 17 years.

Not long after I got married, my mother, who had resided with me, wished to have a little place of her own. I spoke to the agent, James Davies—my young landlord (a minor then) and Mr. Phillips, Hafodneddyn (his guardian) and asked their permission to build a house for my mother, and give her 13 acres of land as well out of the one I farmed, that she may have something to engage her mind, she having spent all her active life on a farm. They all approved of it, and even praised my proposal. In 1875, when I was obliged to leave Rhydyceir, my mother lost the land and they charged her 3*l.* a year rent for the house I had built for her.

The tenants on the Alltyrodyn and Blaendyffryn Estates, during the life of the previous landlord, had annually to cart lime from Carmarthenshire, 25 miles away, for his home farm and pay ourselves for the lime and turnpike gates. Also so many loads of coal from the pits, 30 miles away, for his mansion, pay for it out of our own pockets, and the turnpike gates as well.

I well remember when I was at home with my father, having to haul so many loads of material towards building a new church in the parish called St. John's. The church was named after my landlord. The vicar of the parish came round to the tenants first and requested them all to send their carts and men on certain days, this one this day and the others to-morrow. As far as I remember no one went, then the gamekeeper of Alltyrodyn came round with the same request. No one responded again—the farmers felt that too much was asked of them. Ultimately Mr. James Davies (the agent) came and told each farmer that he had so many loads to carry according to the size of his farm. The terms were that so many loads were to be carted of stone, timber, slates, and sand, and each load was to be as much as two horses could take; that each farmer must go when the contractor told him, no matter what the weather was, or that he should certainly receive notice to quit. The reason I remember that so well is that on one of the many days I had to go the weather was not fit for man nor beast to be out, yet I had to be out 12 hours.

My father took Rhydyceir for 60*l.*, then it was raised to 68*l.*, afterwards to 75*l.* In the year 1871 it was raised by 20*l.* All these advances were made on the improvements made on the farm by my father and myself; and my successor's rent was advanced again in 1875 by 25*l.*, so the rent of Rhydyceir was doubled in 35 years. It is quite possible my successor could for a while pay this advance for he entered into my labour. I do not hesitate to say that I left 500*l.* in capital and labour there for others.

The mansion of Alltyrodyn was rented with the game and rabbits on all the estate to the highest bidder. Wealthy sportsmen from other parts of the country came there for sport. Every effort was made to increase the game. They kept several game-keepers who killed our dogs and cats. I well remember having a few words with one of these for killing a cat of mine. He told me it was his calling and that he was paid for doing it, and that I had better speak to his master.

Wearied of such a life—a life of toil and anxiety, of coercion and persecution, a life of drudgery and serfdom, I could hardly say I owned myself, all that was manly and independent in me was about to be crushed out. I determined to buy a farm for myself, but had to give much more for it that its real value.

The first thing I did after I bought this farm was to go back to the old fold, and left the Church of England, and the first thing I received for such a daring act of independence was a "Notice to quit my farm and home."

I maintain that it is out of the question for farmers to make the best of the land under such circumstances as I have gone through. The time has long arrived when Parliament should pass some law giving the farmer a security in his home with just rent and surely adequate compensation for his improvements.

Those like myself who have been compelled to buy farms, labour under great disadvantages because we have to pay high interest on the mortgages. It would benefit us much if the Government would advance us money at low interest, say at 2¾ or 3 per cent.

45,091. Is this the same Mr. Lloyd that we heard of before in connection with the chapel at Llwynrhydowen?—Yes.

45,092. Was that Mr. Lloyd of weak intellect?—I cannot say. I never spoke to him. He was often drunk.

45,093. Were your dealings chiefly with the agents?—Yes, with the agents.

45,094. What sort of man was this man James Davies?—He was a workman to start with, and worked his way up.

45,095. Is he alive?—No, he is not.

45,096. The grammar school at Llandyssul was kept by the same Mr. Thomas who was ejected from his chapel, was it?—Yes. See 44,939.

45,097. Was it James Davies—who particularly did not like Mr. Thomas?—There was an agent before James Davies—before Mr. Lloyd came of age. There was always an agent before Mr. Davies.

45,098. Did the previous agent also differ with Mr. Thomas?—No, he was a nice sort of man.

45,099. The one who objected then to Mr. Thomas was James Davies?—Mr. Blaithwait had left the estate before they were turned out from this place.

45,100. Who was Mr. Blaithwait?—He was head agent under the court.

45,101. James Davies was his sub-agent, was he?—Yes.

45,102. Do you think this landlord knew anything about it?—Very little, I think. He was always going about.

45,103. Generally drunk?—He was generally about.

45,104. What do you mean by that expression—about the place or what?—He was either abroad or else in London.

45,105. He was not on the place?—No, he was not in the neighbourhood.

45,106. Was he a sea captain?—No, he was not a captain. I do not know that he was a captain of anything. He kept a pack of hounds yonder.

45,107. I do not think you have answered the question whether the captain was about the place?—That question is too difficult to answer.

45,108. I will put it in another way. Did you ever see your landlord and mention these facts to him?—I saw him before he came of age.

45,109. Did you mention those facts to him then?—No.

45,110. I do not quite understand this. You say in 1875 you received notice to quit. Did you take the farm again yourself?—Yes, I took the farm afterwards from the agent.

45,111. Mr. Allen?—Yes.

45,112. Was it at the same rent?—Yes, 95*l.*

45,113. It was Mr. Davies who gave notice to quit on his own account, was it?—No, Mr. Allen gave notice, I have got the notice in my pocket.

45,114. But further on you say "Mr. James "Davies came and said the farmers should have "notice to quit"?—Yes, that was with reference to the hauling towards the church.

45,115. There is another thing I do not quite understand. You say, "The first thing I did "after I bought this farm was to go back to the "old fold." Then you say, "The first thing I "received for such a daring act of independence "was a notice to quit"—a notice to quit from what?—I received notice to leave the place.

45,116. But you had bought it?—I had not gone to the place I had bought.

45,117. Then you meant to leave anyhow?—I did not intend to go if I was allowed to remain, but I was obliged to go to church before that.

45,118. I do not want to refer back to that. I quite understand that. What I want to know is why you bought the farm if you did not mean to go there?—I bought the farm in order to have a place to go to, because I could not stay in the church.

Mr. Grove.

45,119. You say you took your children away from school a good many years ago?—From the church school.

45,120. Why? Tell us very briefly the reasons why?—I did not care that they should learn too much of Church doctrine.

45,121. With regard to the grammar school that was kept by Mr. Thomas—Captain Thomas and James Davies, the agent saw you?—Yes.

45,122. Can you remember the words that they made use of to you?—Yes.

45,123. What were they?—He said it was better for me to take my son from William Thomas, or I would be sure to lose my place.

Mr. Grove.

45,124. Mr. Thomas was a Master of Arts, and able to give a good education, was he not?—Yes.

45,125. And you supposed that the reason why they wanted you to take your son away from the grammar school was because it was kept by a Nonconformist?—Yes.

45,126. Then as to the next paragraph, about leaving the chapel, you say, "James Davies "called upon me with Captain Thomas." What words did they use?—They said that it would be better for me to take the boy from Llandyssul School, or I would be sure to lose the place.

45,127. I am speaking about the next portion, when James Davies and Captain Thomas called upon you?—No, they did not say anything about a chapel at that time.

45,128. [Question repeated]?—That was not at the same time as when the boy was in school.

45,129. You say that those were the words that were made use of?—Yes.

45,130. Do you know about the time that happened?—Would you like to know about the time?

45,131. Yes, about?—What do you wish to know?

45,132. I want to know just about the time of that conversation. It was before you received notice to quit, was it not?—Oh, years before I received notice to quit. This is the time he told me about going to church in 1873.

45,133. In the next paragraph it says: "The "agent accused you of being a slovenly farmer?"—Yes.

45,134. What would be the opinion of the neighbours as to the way in which you farmed?—The opinion of the land surveyors and those who valued the farm was that I was about the best farmer on the estate. Mr. Blaithwait had been valuing the estate and had told me so.

45,135. Did you demand any compensation for this money that you had left behind you?—Yes.

45,136. What reply did you get?—They said that I would not have it.

45,137. Did you consult a solicitor?—No, because I knew I would be no better.

45,138. Now as to the hauling of materials for the church. You say that if you had not hauled them you would have had notice to quit?—That was my father. I was working, but this was said to my father.

45,139. We will let that pass for what it is worth. It is hardly worth while to take that up. Now what rate of interest do they pay on borrowed money when they buy their farms?—4 per cent.

45,140. You think if the Government would lend money at something less than 4 per cent., including the repayment of capital, it would be a very great relief?—I consider it would be an exceedingly good thing. They could not do anything better for the farmers.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,141. How long ago did this affair about the building of the church take place—about?—About 38 to 40 years.

45,142. Was it a very exceptional thing at that time?—It says in the paper that James Davies and the vicar came to me first——

45,143. That is not the point. I will put it in another way. Could such a thing have happened during the last 20 years?—I was obliged to go when I was a tenant always.

45,144. But could such a thing as this happen at all in our time?—I would not be at all surprised where the estates are complete—where the whole parish belongs to the same estate.

45,145. Do you know of any similar case, within the last 10 years?—I do not live near any of the gentry now.

45,146. Is there any fear of such a thing happening within the last 10 years?—I have not seen a church being built in the last 10 years, but I am sure it would be so in any place where there are estates around—in places where they want to build—I do not think that there is a single tenant who would dare to refuse if his landlord wished it.

45,147. To cart the materials for building the church, though he himself was a Nonconformist?—Yes; not to build the church itself, but to build a wall around it as well.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,148. In your evidence you speak of the tenant having some proper protection, and you say that they prefer to be tenants rather than to be landlords and pay heavy mortgages. How do you explain that?—When holdings are sold as a whole they fetch higher prices than they are rented for.

45,149. I suppose they are not able to get the abatements that tenant farmers receive in times of depression?—I have never heard of a tenant receiving an abatement in our neighbourhood. It has always been a kind of raising the rents.

45,150. Do none of the farmers in this neighbourhood have abatements of rent now in the present season?—I do not know. There is no one in my neighbourhood, at least I have never heard.

45,151. [Question repeated]?—I have never seen that. I cannot speak of other districts.

45,152. Then you speak about your boy leaving school. Was this a National school where your boy went to?—Yes, a school belonging to the church.

45,153. Was there no conscience clause in use in those days?—No, they wanted everybody to go to church.

45,154. Then you say they told you that you must take him away, and that it was not an empty threat. How did you come to conclude that it was not an empty threat?—I knew that I would have to go unless I took him away, just as the other tenants had to go after the year 1868.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

45,155. Were there many tenants who had to go after 1868?—About eight. I cannot remember exactly now. I think there were about eight.

45,156. Why was that?—Because they had failed to vote with the Tories.

45,157. Then you were afterwards compelled to go to church or leave the farm, were you?—Before leaving my farm.

45,158. You had to leave your farm or else go to church?—Yes, I had to go to church or leave the farm.

45,159. Why did you feel reluctant to go. Did not you like the services of the Church of England?—No, I did not. I knew them very well. I lived there.

45,160. For how long did you worship there, though you did not like it?—I was there perhaps three or four years.

45,161. Were you a regular attendant?—No, I was not a very regular attendant; I went there often; but I did not go anywhere else besides.

45,162. And your conscience told you that you ought not to be there, did it?—Yes, it told me plainly.

45,163. Did you take your wife and children to church as well?—Oh, no, they were quite contented with my going.

45,164. Who was this stranger that was sent to walk over your farm?—I could not find out. He was an Englishman.

Lord Kenyon.

45,165. A valuer?—No. James Davies had complained, and this was done in order that I might have to leave the place.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,166. What had you done to offend James Davies?—I had gone back to chapel.

45,167. You had gone back to chapel then?—Yes, and then he found another excuse.

45,168. You say in 1875 a stranger walked your farm "and that very afternoon it was relet to me by Mr. Allen"?—Yes, the stranger had given me a good character.

45,169. What time was that; was that in July?—Yes, about the beginning of July.

45,170. Then how could they tell you on the 29th of September that your farm had been let to another when you had taken it in July?—Well, I had it so—a man came down from London afterwards, and I was to pay double rent. I had been there a week beyond the time.

45,171. Did you have a proper agreement with Mr. Allen when you took it in July?—No.

45,172. It was only an agreement by word of mouth?—He only promised that I should be there for a twelvemonth.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

45,173. Was there anybody present who heard him give you this promise that you should take the farm again?—Only James Davies.

45,174. James Davies was present?—Yes.

45,175. How did he alter his mind and let it to somebody else afterwards?—James Davies was the one who wished me to leave. Mr. Allen did not wish me to go away.

45,176. Then it was through James Davies' influence that he cancelled the terms that you had made with Mr. Allen?—Yes, through the influence of James Davies.

45,177. You had to turn out—they compelled you to leave the farm?—Yes, and I had very little notice.

45,178. Not a month, I suppose, had you?—Well, about a week.

45,179. For how long did your mother live in this house that you built for her?—Eleven years whilst I was there.

45,180. What did the house cost you?—About 150*l.* I have built several buildings there—a dwelling-house and outbuildings.

45,181. What expense do you consider the tenants went to in fetching a load of lime 25 miles?—I would not care to go for it for less than 10*s.* without paying for it.

45,182. You paid for the lime and turnpike gates and all, did you?—When I took the farm for my landlord, yes, I paid everything.

45,183. Were you allowed that money which you paid out when you went to pay your rent?—No, nothing.

45,184. You recommend that "Parliament "should pass some law giving the farmer a "security in his home with just rent, and surely "adequate compensation for improvements." Would you not add to that liberty of conscience too?—I consider that farmers should not be treated as they are now—that the landlords should take the money away from them in form of improvements.

45,185. Would you not add to that liberty of conscience?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

45,186. Was James Davies popular in your neighbourhood?—Yes, whilst the estate was intact, but as soon as the estate was sold he dropped—he went a long drop.

Mr. Grove.

45,187. Was he considered a very tight man in the interests of the landlord?—No; he looked well after himself, but he was not so good either to the landlord or the tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

45,188. I have some questions to put to you from Mr. H. L. Stephens: "Am I right in sup-"posing that the 435*l.* you have mentioned "represents the original cost of the repairs you "did"?—Well, it is a rough guess; it would probably cost more than that.

45,189. "If this is so, have you anything to "show the value of the improvements at the "time when you left the farm"?—They are to be seen yonder now.

45,190. "When was lime last carried for a "landlord"?—At the time of the death of Mr. Lloyd Davies.

45,191. What date was that?—From 34 to 35 years, but I am not quite sure.

45,192. "When was lime carted for St. John's"?—From 38 to 40 years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,193. Was this at a time when farmers were distrained upon for church rates?—No, only the tenants of Alltyrodyn hauled towards the church.

Lord Kenyon.

45,194. "Can you give us any account of the "improvements made by your father"? When were they done?—The improvements were made between my father and myself. I worked with my father, and I worked at these improvements afterwards.

45,195. What date were they done, as near as possible?—Not at the same time. I made some improvements every year.

45,196. Beginning when and ending when?—When I thought I had to leave I left off.

45,197. When did you begin?—I began to make the improvements when I went there.

45,198. When was that?—It is stated in my evidence.

45,199. Did your father do any improvements separate to your own?—No.

45,200. "Had you bought your new farm "before you had notice to quit the old one"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Davies called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,201. You are Mr. John Davies, of Pantgwyn, in the parish of Llandyssul, farmer?—Yes.

45,202. This is your evidence which has been translated to you by Mr. Griffiths, and it is correct?—Yes.

I am prepared to give evidence for the immediate district where I live. I am 65 years of age—have been brought up on a farm, and have spent my days in farming. I remember the state of agriculture for the last 35 years.

My own holding is about 100 acres, for which I pay 120*l.* with rates and taxes, except the usual income-tax and tithes.

My experience and opinion are that tenant farmers labour under great disadvantage because of the uncertainty of their tenures. We are afraid to go in for the improvements we should like, owing to our being liable at any time to a notice to quit or an advancement in rents.

This is my own experience, and I believe I speak the minds of very many others. In my district all tenant farmers are tenants from year to year, and often very little excuse is required to raise our rents, and in the large majority of cases these are upon our own improvements. In my own case the rent was repeatedly raised, and on my father's and my own improvements. The rent, for instance, of Pantgwyn used to be 60*l.* On the death of Mrs. Nicolls, the late owner, a Mr. Jones, of Maesycrugiau, became owner, and very soon after—about the year 1863—the tenants on this estate received notices to quit. At this time my father was old and very feeble, and felt the notice most keenly. We were informed some time after that we could continue on the farm, but by paying an advance in rent of 40*l.*, although no one had been looking over the farm to see what was its fair value, and what improvements we had made on it.

My parents were much attached to the place, and my father was very anxious to die there. We determined to take it again at the advanced rent. I often complained to my landlord of the high rent, and that my sister and myself were getting nothing for working hard there. I well remember, some time after, Mr. Jones's servant coming for me in great haste, saying that his master wished to see me at once at Maesycrugiau. He informed me that Mr. Jones was seriously ill, and not likely to live to see the morning. On my arrival at Maesycrugiau I was hurried up to the sick chamber. I found Mr. Jones very ill and excited, but he did not seem to me to be delirious. He told me he was dying, and that he would soon be in eternity. He further said, "John, your rent is too high, and I now on my "deathbed reduce it by 10*l.*". I inquired if it was 10*l.* each audit or for the year. Before he could reply Mrs. Jones shouted rather loudly, "Each year, of course." Mr. Jones never said a word. I departed, having thanked him. The next audit I paid 45*l.* instead of 50*l.* In the meantime Mr. Jones got quite well again, and when the second audit came round he told me I must pay the old rent again—that he had reduced it in a weak moment. And he was as good as his word this time, for we had to pay 100*l.* a year regularly. In the year 1871 my father died, and my aged mother and myself received notice to quit again, and an advance was again made in the rent of 20*l.*, and for no other reason than that my aged father was dead. I have paid 120*l.* for it up to 1892, when I was allowed the tithes, and received no abatement, although I had asked for it several times. I do not think my case of notices to quit in order to advance the rents is at all an exception, for Tancoedbach, on the same estate, has been raised from 30*l.* to 60*l.*, Troedrhiwffenyd from 30*l.* to 75*l.*

Rates have advanced considerably in our parish, and of course have all come on the tenant. Labour has increased some 40 per cent. I depend chiefly on butter, cattle, and pigs to pay the rent and other demands, and the rate of prices for these produce were a good deal higher 25 years ago than they are to-day. It is my honest opinion that farmers as a class are in very straitened circumstances, and must soon be totally ruined unless some change is near at hand. Those who, like myself, have children assisting them on the farm—thus saving a very heavy labour bill—have been able to struggle along so far. I have three sons and one daughter working on the farm, and they receive nothing for their labour but their clothes and food. It seems to me that rents must be greatly reduced unless a very decided improvement in the agricultural market takes place.

In my opinion a farmer should have some security of tenure and compensation for his labour and capital if he desires to leave or dies, and that some means should be devised to give us also fair rents. An Act of Parliament embodying these three things would give us new heart, new lives, and fresh energies, and I believe there would be a marked change in the state of agriculture in this part of the country at any rate.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,203. Do you think that the land could produce more if we had security?—There is no doubt about that.

45,204. Have notices to quit been very frequent in your neighbourhood?—Two neighbours of mine received the same kind of notice—the same thing.

45,205. Then you speak of an advance of rent of 40*l.* Did anyone value the farm at that time?—No.

45,206. Have there been any new buildings put up on your farm?—No, not then. Mr. Beynon, of Newcastle Emlyn, was the landlord when we had the dwelling-house.

45,207. How long ago was that?—That was before Nicolls' time. Mrs. Nicolls did not have a higher rent than Mr. Beynon.

45,208. Who was this Mr. Jones?—I cannot say. He lives between Lampeter and Tregaron.

45,209. Did he purchase your farm?—No, he inherited through his wife or somehow.

45,210. Was he a big landlord?—He became a large landowner through her.

45,211. When he was taken ill, what was his greatest trouble?—As a disease, do you mean—as an illness?

45,212. No. What was most on his mind?—He asked me to leave the holding, or else to have an increase of the rent.

45,213. But were you called to his bedside when he was ill?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

45,214. What was it that troubled him then?—I should say it would be his conscience.

45,215. Why?—His conscience had been awakened, because he had charged me too much rent.

45,216. But he did not die, did he?—No.

45,217. Did his conscience trouble him as long as he lived?—His conscience returned where it was again when he recovered.

45,218. Then he became hardened again?—Yes, and the rent was at the same again.

45,219. What is meant "by a weak moment"?—It is he who refers to the weak moment—that he had reduced my rent at a weak moment.

45,220. What did he mean by that?—In straitened time.

45,221. When his conscience pressed him, you mean?—Yes.

45,222. How would you get at these fair rents that you speak of at the close of your evidence. What is there that you would recommend?—There ought to be an ordinary rent between landlord and tenant, not too high.

45,223. We quite understand that, but how are we to get at it?—I leave that to those gentlemen in Parliament who have justice so as to receive security.

45,224. Would you be satisfied to have a valuer to go over your farm?—Yes.

45,225. That is, if your master employs a valuer to go over your farm and say what it is worth, would you be content with that?—Yes, if the valuer was an honest valuer.

45,226. But are not they all honest valuers?—Perhaps that may be so; and also an assurance that if the man left his holding he should be paid for those improvements.

Mr. Grove.

45,227. You have three sons and one daughter working for you on the farm?—Yes.

45,228. If you had not children like that to work, could you manage to live on the farm?—I could not pay them in these days. I could not pay wages to them in these times, unless times improved.

45,229. Then the profits of the farm are too small to enable you to pay that labour to anyone else?—Yes, the children are working in hopes of better times.

45,230. Then you consider farming is very bad now?—Yes, very bad.

45,231. Would you think it well if the Government lent money to purchase farms. Would you think it desirable to enable the tenants to purchase the farms?—Yes, it would be a very good thing.

Lord Kenyon.

45,232. Is Mr. Jones still alive?—No, he has been dead many years.

45,233. When did he die?—I am not quite certain of the year.

45,234. Was it 10 or 20 years ago, or what was it?—Oh, no, not anywhere near that—10 or 12 years.

45,235. Do you know the size of the estate?—No.

45,236. Who is the owner now?—The daughter's son; it has been divided. Mr. Walters, solicitor, of Carmarthen, is a trustee, and Mr. Young is another trustee.

45,237. Are most of the people in the parish of Llandyssul, Welsh speaking?—Most of them are Welsh speaking.

45,238. Do you speak for any other parishes in the neighbourhood?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,239. How much less than the wages your children deserve do you give them? In the first place I will ask you what they really do have?—They receive nothing but food and clothes, and I hope I may be able to give them something if times improve.

45,240. But what is the value of the clothing and pocket money that they have?—They do not get any pocket-money but they get plenty of clothes.

45,241. How much?—I cannot go in to those details.

45,242. Do you give them three suits of clothes in the year?—No, I consider that two are quite enough.

45,243. Would they cost 5*l.*?—Yes.

45,244. Supposing that you had servants instead, what would they cost you?—Before my children worked I had to pay the head servant 22*l.*

45,245. How long ago was that?—It was about 1870 or 1871. My father died in 1871.

45,246. Would they be more than that now?—No. Times are worse now.

45,247. Are not the wages higher now than they were in those days?—No, they are not. In 1882 I had another notice of a further rising of my rent.

45,248. Then you pay your children to the value of 5*l.*, and if you had a servant you would have to pay 22*l.*?—Yes.

45,249. That is 17*l.* difference?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

45,250. Do you give them no pocket-money whatever?—No, not at all, until they will have gone away from me.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,251. What becomes of the 17*l.*, the difference between what you would have paid the servant, and what you pay them?—I say that I cannot keep a servant. Times are too bad, and it is a good thing that I have children with me. I could not keep the farm on if I was obliged to pay a servant.

45,252. Do you consider then that you sink the whole of that?—Yes, I go on working because the children work freely.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN PHILLIPS called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,253. You are Mr. John Phillips, of Danderi?—Yes.

45,254. Has this statement been read to you this morning by Mr. Griffiths in Welsh, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I was asked at a meeting of farmers and workmen to come before the Commission to say how small farmers and working men holding a few acres of land are treated on some estates.

I am a carpenter by trade, and hold 10½ acres of land as well on the Maes Crugiau estate. My parents before me lived at Danderi, and I am somehow very much attached to the place. My father was also a carpenter, and he, like myself, lived by it. The rent then was 9*l.* a year, and my mother, after him, had it for the same rent as long as Mrs. Nicolls, the owner, lived. When she died, a Mr. and Mrs. Jones came into possession of the estate some 30 years ago. Soon after this change our grievances and troubles commenced. My aged mother was summoned to Maes Crugiau a little before 25th of March, Lady Day, to settle about the place, as there was to be an advancement in the rent. My mother felt she could not give any more for it, therefore she did not go near. As I had my mother to keep in her old age, I went up myself. I was informed that the rent would be raised from 9*l.* to 15*l.* I tried to argue with them on the subject, but I was informed very soon that if I did not want it at that rent 'that a man 'living just above me there had offered more.' I rented it for 15*l.* (Receipt produced.)

In about seven years after this my mother died, and I, for some reason or other, received a notice to pay another visit to Maes Crugiau. I was informed that my rent was to be raised once more, and by 5*l.*, and if I did not give it 'that 'there was a man living just above me willing 'to give it.' I refused to take it at first, and Mr. Jones said I should have it for 19*l.* instead of 20*l.* As I lived in it he would rather let me have it 1*l.* cheaper than this man who 'lived just above.' (I produce receipt.) Some time after this I received a notice to quit, signed by Mrs. Jones. I went up to speak about it, but Mrs. Jones was so ill that I did not see anyone. Next audit Mrs. Jones told me (Mr. Jones was dead now) that I must pay the even money 20*l.* or leave, and that Mr. Jones was too kind in letting me have it all this time for 19*l.* I asked for time to consider, but this was refused me, and I took it for 20*l.*

Near my house there was a piece of waste land called 'allt,' where trees had been growing but was running wild now. Mrs. Jones was very anxious I should take this and clean it up nicely, and this I did for 1*l.* 10*s.* My total rent now was 21*l.* 10*s.* or 10*l.* 15*s.* half-yearly. (Receipt reproduced.)

After I had nearly cleaned this 'allt,' Mrs. Jones took it from me, without giving me notice even, to plant trees in it, but the worst of it all was that she refused to reduce my rent by the 30*s.* which I was paying for the 'allt.'

In the year 1880 Mrs. Jones built me a dwelling-house which was very much wanted, and she had promised it often. The terms were that I must haul everything for it, although I had not a horse of my own. I was also to pay the railway charges for the carriage of lime and slates. Near my home there were the ruins of two cottages and very good gardens. Mrs. Jones said she would not build, and for me to enclose them; that I should have them very reasonable. I cleaned them, put green crop and permanent seeds in and added them to the little hay field; they measured just half an acre. When I had done this I talked to Mrs. Jones about the rent, and she charged me 4*l.*, or at the rate of 8*l.* an acre. I remonstrated with her, and her reply was that I must pay for the new house I had just had. I had to pay it. (Receipt produced).

The last rise I had was 5*s.* I should not venture to say this only my receipts prove it. She had a mania for raising rents. My rent was raised from 9*l.* to 25*l.* 15*s.* in less than 20 years. Of course I had about half an acre added to it, but before I had it added I paid 21*l.* 10*s.* rent—which amounts to something like 140 per cent.

I need hardly say that the larger portion of the rent came out of my hard-earned wages every year.

This is the life of an industrious, hard-working, and sober artisan workman in Cardiganshire.

45,255. Do you produce the receipt you refer to?—This is it (producing same).

45,256. Do you pay the same rent now?—No, I have had a reduction.

45,257. How much?—From 25*l.* 15*s.* to 24*l.* and the tithe. The tithe is about 15*s.* to 18*s.*

45,258. Do you know how much land Mrs. Jones has got or had on the whole property?—Down there, do you mean?

45,259. I want to know what the estate was?—I cannot say.

45,260. Is it a big estate or small one?—She has six or seven farms where I live. Some of them are small farms. One farmer has four horses and ten cows.

45,261. Has she treated all the other tenants in the same sort of way?—Pretty well the same, but I think she behaved worse towards me than anybody else.

45,262. She is dead now, is she not?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

45,263. What sort of land is this 10 acres? What is the quality of land?—Various kinds of land. Some is pasture land and some is very stony rocky land, not worth 5*s.* an acre.

45,264. How much really good land is there out of it?—About six acres, or 5½ acres, including the gardens.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,265. And you have the house as well?—Yes.

45,266. And you have a workshop as well?—Yes, of my own workmanship.

45,267. You built it yourself?—Yes. It is a wooden workshop.

45,268. Then you think you have had to pay more rent than was proper and right for this place, do you?—Yes, 9*l.* is quite enough rent for it. It is about 13*l.* more than it ought to be.

45,269. Did you ever ask for a lease?—No.

45,270. Do you think that she would have given you one?—No. I had no time to ask for a lease. She raised the rent too often.

45,271. Then when the rent was up too high you did not want a lease?—No.

45,272. Who is your present landlord?—The trustees now—Mr. Walters, of Carmarthen, and Mr. Young. They are nice good men—but they have not given a reduction in the rent.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,273. Do you bring this evidence forward as anything more than exceptional evidence?—Yes.

45,274. You do not believe there are many landlords like this?—Oh, yes; they are all very high—too high.

45,275. You misunderstood the question. Are there many landlords that raise their rents?—They have been valuing the land and raising the rents.

45,276. What, all the landlords about here?—No, I do not think they all did that.

45,277. Do not you know of any good landlords in this part of the world?—Oh, yes.

45,278. Are there some large estates which are well managed, and where there is no hardship of this kind?—Large estates are better than smaller ones.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,279. You say when you went to apply for a reduction of rent they wanted to charge you 15*l.* You say in your evidence that you were informed that if you did not give the increase "there was a man living just above you willing "to give it." Does that mean above you in the estimation of your landlord or above you in situation?—I mean as far as position goes—just above my house.

45,280. You complain, too, that your landlord refused to give you time to think over the question?—No, he did not give me time.

45,281. Why would he not give you time?—I do not know.

45,282. Were you afraid that this man who lived above you would come forward and give it?—I do not know.

45,283. Then your landlord was very anxious that you should clean a piece of ground, and you say "I did it for 1*l.* 10*s.*" Did she pay you 1*l.* 10*s.* for cleaning this ground?—No, she did not give me that.

45,284. Then what do you mean? Did she charge you 1*l.* 10*s.* for the privilege of cleaning that bit of gravel?—She asked that rent for "allt."

45,285. Is it from your trade that you are able to pay your rent?—Yes, I do not get much of the 24*l.* from the place, indeed.

Lord Kenyon.

45,286. This is a question by Mr. H. L. Stephen, "Do you think that your neighbour "would give as high a rent for your house as "you do"?—No, he would not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,287. You are Mr. Davies, of Ffosesgob, in the parish of Llandyssul?—Yes.

45,288. This statement has been read over to you this morning in Welsh, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I farm Ffosesgob along with my father, who is 85 years of age. It measures 116 acres. I wish to speak of the unjust way we were compelled to pay over again for our own improvements.

Up to the year 1859 the rent of Ffosesgob was 60*l.* per annum. (Receipt produced.) Then it was raised to 70*l.* (Receipt produced.)

Our young landlord's brother, Captain Thomas, of Llanfair, took a very active part during the election of 1868 on behalf of Mr. Vaughan, the Conservative candidate. Captain Thomas pressed my father very hard to vote for Mr. Vaughan. My father did not vote at all that day, but stayed at home. Captain Thomas was very much annoyed at this. He had great influence over his young brother, our landlord, who stayed with him at Llanfair. The end of it was that we received notice to quit, and had to pay an advance of 17*l.* a year (Receipt produced.)

In the year 1877 a valuer was sent to walk our farm as it was to be sold soon. The rent this time was advanced by 23*l.* So the total rent now was 110*l.*

In the short space of 18 years our rent was advanced by 83 per cent. in three stages. All these advances were made upon our own improvements. The last advance was made simply in order to get a large sum for the farm, which was sold for 4,150*l.* in the year 1879, and we bought it.

We paid upon our own improvements in the advanced rents, and we had to pay again for those improvements when we bought the farm. Such hardship is not very uncommon, but farmers do not now put their money and labour in the soil as they used to years ago.

I beg to submit the particulars of money and labour laid out by us:—

	£	s.	d.
Drains—1,200 perches at 5*s.*	300	0	0
Hedges, new and repaired—700 perches at 5*s.*	175	0	0
The dwelling-house—my house was too small, and I built an addition myself. I had timber from Llanfair woods	90	0	0
Barn—had timber again from the woods	70	0	0
Stable—new, for three horses	30	0	0
Boiler-house	40	0	0
Two cattle sheds	30	0	0
Three ponds for driving machinery	30	0	0

All the above was done within 30 years of the time our farm was sold.

45,289. How soon after the landlord came of age was the estate sold?—I do not quite remember, but not long afterwards.

45,290. Did many of the tenants buy their holdings?—Some of them.

45,291. Will you produce your receipt?—Yes (handing same).

45,292. Who was the valuer who valued the place in 1877?—Mr. Blathwait.

45,293. Was he a land agent?—Yes, at that time.

45,294. Was he agent to the estate?—I cannot say with regard to that time. David Davies was the agent at that time.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,295. Is it the fact that in consequence of your father not going to the poll and voting, he had notice to quit?—Yes.

45,296. He had 17*l.* added to his rent?—Yes. The receipts are to be seen there.

45,297. How was it you purchased your farm? It was sold at something like 38 years' purchase?—The old people were so anxious to remain where they were.

45,298. They were in hopes of dying there, were they?—Yes.

45,299. Had you sufficient money to pay for it?—No, not anything like enough.

45,300. Then you were obliged to borrow?—Yes.

45,301. At what per-centage did you borrow?—Four per cent.

45,302. Which is the greater, the interest you paid for the money you borrowed, or the rent you paid before?—I paid more rent than the last time.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,303. I see you estimate that the improvements that you made on the farm during the 30 years amounted to 795*l.*?—Yes.

45,304. And the farm is 116 acres?—Yes.

45,305. That makes your improvements worth nearly 7*l.* an acre?—Yes.

45,306. Are you sure you are not over-estimating the amount of those improvements?—Yes, I am sure I am not charging enough.

Mr. Grové.

45,307. How did you hold the farm, yearly, or by agreement, or lease, or what?—A yearly tenancy.

45,308. Did you ever ask for an agreement or a lease?—No, the estate was in Chancery.

45,309. Was the farm offered to the sitting tenant before it was sold?—No.

45,310. Was it sold by auction?—Yes.

45,311. Were you present at the auction?—Yes.

45,312. Were there many bidding for it?—Yes.

45,313. Was there another bid close to your home?—Yes, within 10*l.*

45,314. A lot of this improvement seems to be for buildings. Could not you get the landlord to do some buildings for you?—Only what appears here.

45,315. Do you regret having bought your own holding?—I would rather be without it.

45,316. But if the Government would lend money at a reasonable rate, do you think that a good many tenant farmers would like to buy their own holdings?—They would have their farms for what they were worth then.

45,317. But put it in another way, is there any general wish amongst the tenant farmers to try and buy their own holdings?—If they had assurance of being left alone to work on them.

45,318. Do you mean that if they had security of tenure they would rather remain as tenants?—Yes, provided they were left alone.

Lord Kenyon.

45,319. Are these perches square perches, or is it lineal measure?—Eight yards.

45,320. Some questions are handed up by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Did you not know that Mr. "Blathwait was the agent for the estate "appointed by the Court of Chancery; I believe "he lived at Narberth"?—He valued the place at any rate.

45,321. Do you know that he was the agent appointed by the Court of Chancery; that is the question?—I am not sure about that.

45,322. Do you know what he valued the farm at?—Before it was sold?

45,323. Yes, before it was sold?—No, I do not.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,324. Do you know whether the reserve price was the same?—No, I do not know anything about that, beyond the rent that I was obliged to pay.

Lord Kenyon.

45,325. "Have you not offered 2,440*l.* for a "farm called Abercefel of 59 acres since you "bought Ffosesgob"?—I do not know anything about that place.

Witness.

45,326. Have you offered 2,440*l.* for any farm?—No, I have not offered anything for any farm.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,327. Do not you consider these prices were high taking them all through?—No, I think they are low.

45,328. Did you take them from any copy-book or from any book?—No, it is what I knew I had done myself.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. D. C. Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,329. What is your address?—Tanffynnon, Llandyssul.

45,330. You have heard the evidence of Mr. Davies, of Ffosesgob?—Yes.

45,331. Have you anything to say to us as to Mr. Davies' evidence?—Only that I have a witness to call forward to-morrow to say that he offered 2,440*l.* for the farm of Abercefel.

45,332. Do you say this of your own knowledge?—Yes.

45,333. Is there anything more?—No, nothing.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,334. Does it often occur that one man tries to buy over the head of another?—Well, it so occurred there.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,335. Can you tell me the rent of that place for which you say he offered 2,440*l.*?—40*l.* was the rent I always paid.

Mr. Grove.

45,336. Are you the tenant of that farm?—I was the tenant.

45,337. Was that offer made in writing?—It was made at a public auction in the "Salutation" Hotel.

Lord Kenyon.

45,338. Was this offer made for Abercefel after Mr. Davies had bought Ffosesgob?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Davies recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,339. Did you follow the evidence of the last witness?—I understood the evidence.

45,340. Did you offer 2,440*l.* for this Abercefel or not?—No, I never offered a shilling for the place, and never uttered a word about it.

Mr. Grove.

45,341. Were you at the auction?—Yes, I was at the auction.

45,342. And made no bid?—No, I did not say a word about it.

Lord Kenyon.

45,343. You never made a bid at all?—I never uttered a word; did not say a word.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,344. And no one else did for you?—I cannot say anything about that, but I did not bid anything.

45,345. Did you authorise anybody to bid for you?—I do not know but that I spoke afterwards about it just like any other thing.

45,346. The question I asked was whether you authorised anyone to bid for you at that auction?—No, I gave no one permission to bid.

Lord Kenyon.

45,347. This is a question by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Did you not authorise Superinten-"dent Williams, of Llandyssul, to bid for you?" —No, I did not give him my permission.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Samuel George called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,348. You are Mr. Samuel George, of Coedycwm Uchaf, Cwmcoy, near Newcastle Emlyn?—Yes.

45,349. Will you give your evidence in Welsh or in English?—I am not very well up in English.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

Differences of language, creed, or politics have not the least effect on relations between landlord and tenant.

Prefers yearly tenancy, for the reason that if he found a better farm he could leave at end of 12 months' notice.

Tenancy is secure.

Has copy of agreement and is familiar with terms. Has not heard of penalising clauses being put into force during the nine years he has been on the estate.

Objects to land court. Such a court would disincline landlords to spend money on estates, and mutual friendly relations would disappear.

Landlord does all buildings, tenant hauls. Drainage done half by landlord, half by tenant; sometimes wholly by farmer.

On tenant's death, farm is let to nearest relative if wished. Good farmer desired, irrespective of creed.

No knowledge of farmers being afraid to give evidence, unless from bashfulness.

Will speak as to injury from foreign competition and unjust railway rates.

45,350. On whose estate are you a tenant farmer?—Mrs. Brigstocke, of Blaenpant.

45,351. What is your acreage?—109 acres.

45,353. For what parishes do you speak?—Llandygwydd.

45,354. Is that a Welsh-speaking district?—Yes, for the most part.

45,355. Do you think the majority of the landowners in this country try to help their tenants, or are they mostly harsh?—I do not know that they are.

45,356. I want to know whether the majority of the landlords are good landlords or not?—I should say that they are good landlords, but they do not show too much sympathy.

45,357. You say you do not know of farmers being afraid to give evidence?—Not to my knowledge.

45,358. You have not heard them say so?—They have not said so to me.

45,359. Have you got anything further to say about injury from foreign competition?—Yes, we cannot make both ends meet, with taxes and everything.

Mr. Grove.

45,360. You say "tenancy is secure." Is it secure on the death of the present landowner?—Yes, as far as I know, but I cannot speak of the future.

Mr Grove—continued.

45,361. Is there no danger of properties being sold?—He can do as he likes, to sell or not.

45,362. In those events, tenancy would not be secure, would it?—No, not unless the man who held the farm was able to buy it.

45,363. The tenancy would be secure then, but you are speaking of tenancy as it exists to-day?—Yes, at the present day.

45,364. Then, which do you prefer, to have security of tenure, or to trust to the present existing state of things?—I myself should prefer to rely on the present state of things.

45,365. Have you a copy of your agreement?—No.

45,366. Are you under an agreement?—A lease.

45,367. Are you satisfied with the clauses in it?—Yes.

45,368. Do you get any abatement in your rent at all?—Last rent 20 per cent.

45,369. Although you have got a lease?—Yes.

45,370. You object to a land court?—Yes.

45,371. But a good landlord and a reasonable tenant need not go to a land court, even if a land court was formed?—I cannot say anything as to that.

45,372. But if the landlord and the tenant first tried to agree between themselves, there would be no need for them to go to a land court, although it existed?—As far as I am concerned I would prefer fighting with the landlord myself, and then having recourse to arbitration.

45,373. Who would you like to be the arbitrator between the landlord and the tenant?—A competent man, an honest man, and a man who understood his business.

45,374. Then you would like for the landlord to pick out one, and the tenant, I suppose, to pick out one, would you?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,375. Have you heard the evidence of the last two or three witnesses?—Yes.

45,376. Do you know of many cases of hardship of that kind?—No, I did not know anything about them till I came to this court.

45,377. You think they are quite exceptional?—I had no idea of any such thing having taken place. I did not know anything about it before coming to this court.

45,378. Are there many landlords in this district who are looked upon as bad landlords?—I cannot say anything about it.

45,379. Do you think that anything is required to deal with these cases of hardship when they arise?—As far as I am concerned I should like to see them have recourse to arbitration.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,380. You state that creed and politics in your opinion have not the least effect upon the relations between landlord and tenant?—Not during the time I have been there, nine years.

45,381. That was the case very likely on the Blaenpant estate. You are not speaking of other estates when you say that, are you?—No, I am speaking of that only.

45,382. Then you would not go so far as to say that the people who have come before us are speaking an untruth?—Oh, dear no. I would not for the world.

45,383. You say that sometimes the draining is done wholly by the farmer?—Yes, and sometimes wholly by the landlord.

45,384. When is it done wholly by the farmer, suppose he finds that his farm is too dear after he has drained it, what is he to do for the draining he has done?—Well, apply to the landlord.

45,385. But we have seen just now that others who applied to their landlords have never succeeded in getting payment of their money; what would you suggest then?—Arbitration, that is what I would suggest.

45,386. You had 20 per cent. abatement although you had a lease?—Yes.

45,387. A very good landlord indeed. It is not very many landlords that do that?—Not many.

45,388. But do you think that there are any landlords who give abatements without leases?—I cannot say, with the exception of the Manorabon estate. They give back sometimes 25 per cent.

Mr. Grove.

45,389. You speak about unjust railway rates. Will you just tell us what you mean by that?—Suppose I had some cattle at Whitland to send up to London; well, there are foreign cattle coming in exactly to the same place, and they would charge me on my truck dearer than they would charge on the carriage of the foreign cattle.

45,390. That is, competitive rates for foreign produce?—Yes.

45,391. But do you complain of the local rates?—No, I do not complain of that; but all home produce ought to be charged the same as foreign.

Lord Kenyon.

45,392. I have some questions handed in by Mr. J. J. Jones: "Are you a landlord yourself"?—Yes.

45,393. "How much land do you own"?—57¾ acres, or thereabouts. It is not quite 58.

45,394. "Are you a Churchman or a Non-"conformist"?—I am a member of the Church, but I do not deal in politics at all. I do not care at all about it.

45,395. "If religion has nothing to do with "the relations between landlord and tenant in "your neighbourhood, how do you account for "the reduction of membership of Bethesda "Chapel from about 180 members to about 100 "members within the last 20 years"?—I do not know. I cannot account for that.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,396. I suppose you have always been a Churchman, have you?—No; if the chapel was nearer to me I would go to the chapel. I used to attend Sunday school in chapel as well, although I am going to the church at present.

45,397. You state you do not live on your own farm?—It was after I came there that I bought my own farm, about four years ago, or thereabouts.

45,398. Are you able to put all the money that you profit from your own farm on one side now?—I do not know about that exactly. was not last year. It was all gone.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,399. Do you farm your own farm?—No, not the one that I bought.

45,400. You let it?—Yes, I let it.

Lord Kenyon.

45,401. What rent do you get for it?—42*l.* 10*s.* I rent it at.

45,402. You seem to prefer to remain a tenant farmer, although you have got a freehold of your own?—This is the thing. My father-in-law was in the place before I came there. He was there these 45 years, I believe. I married his daughter and went in there with him. Of course, I did not wish to shift the old man. He is about 78 or 79 years old, and I did not wish to be the cause of his shifting. If I had had that first I should go to it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,403. You are Mr. David Jones, of Llwyngwyn?—Yes.

45,404. Is this your evidence which has been translated to you this morning by Mr. Griffiths, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I am a workman myself and have been selected by workmen to represent them before the Commission.

We workmen are by far the largest class of people in this country; we have many grievances because of the burdens borne by us.

Most farmers complain of foreign competition, that our markets are crammed with foreign produce, which is sold for less than is possible to sell home produce. As a remedy for this, fair trade and protection is suggested by many. But we the labouring class, are of opinion that fair rents and security of tenure is the proper remedy. And as to foreign competition we suffer quite as much as they if not more. So many foreign goods are imported to this country and are sold cheaper than they can be produced here; for instance, labouring instruments, clothes, furniture, come from France, Belgium, and Germany, and we can venture to say that there are enough shoes in Cardiganshire for the next five years at least, and most of them made in foreign countries. Yet there is a worse competition immediately in the labouring market that is between different nationalities, such as the Irish, Jews, Germans, Hungarians, they work in every trade, and that according to the sweating system at such low wages that home labour is nearly at an end. The same is also true of farmers. They do most of their labour by means of machines, and thus to some extent save the service of labourers. In consequence every class of workmen suffer from the same complaint. Farmers say they cannot pay labourers as well as the rent, the consequence is that the labourers must move to the towns and villages to look out for something to do. As a result of this, some 215 workmen have been leaving the county of Cardigan annually during the last 10 years according to the Government census. Many of the best men left are ready to follow them if they could see an open door. But where will they go? If they turn to the west, there are thousands half starving there, if they turn to Glamorganshire and Monmouthshire, there are plenty there already. If they go to Yorkshire and Lancashire, we find that there are in those counties hundreds of unemployed. What are we to do with these unemployed? If they are turned out to beg, that will be a burden on the country; if they are placed in the workhouses there is not enough room for them. What is to be done to the half-idle workmen in this country and in this neighbourhood? There is only one remedy that I can see, and, when mentioning it, I know I express the feeling of the great majority of my fellow workmen, and that is, that we petition the Parliament to pass a law that everybody that desires it shall have a small portion of land according to his circumstances, say 3, or 5, or 10 acres as the case may be, and that for reasonable prices. Now it is difficult to get any land at all, and when it is offered it will have a very high price and many conditions. I have some experience of this. I had a small holding for a few years, but the land was too high, viz., 2*l.* per acre without a shadow of a building on it.

When large farms are let at from 15*s.* to 30*s.* an acre it would be only fair that small farms should be let at the same rate; at present this is not the case. But there are also very queer conditions such as I have experienced. The conditions on which I held land were ridiculous in the extreme. The soil is light with pebbles, yet one of the clauses in the agreement was to the effect that I was not to raise peat from it, I am of opinion that if small holdings were granted to workmen, there would still be a hope for the workman to have food for his family, and work when his service is not required by the employer, but some say there is not enough land for everybody, that Great Britain may be compared to a garden, there are 77 million acres of land in Great Britain, some good and some middling. This comes to more than 2 acres for every man, woman, and child—10 acres for every family of five. I am of opinion that this country, if properly cultivated will yet produce sufficient food for all the inhabitants. Why do small farms produce per acre more than large ones? Because they are cultivated better, the improper cultivation of the soil is a great loss to the workmen of the country. If a workman earns 24*s.* a week, he has to pay 15*s.* for foreign goods such as flour, butter, meat, &c., whereas it would be much cheaper for him to raise such on a small holding of his own, and every penny that is paid to foreign countries is a loss to this country. It is also said that the produce of this country fetches higher prices in the market than that of any other foreign country because it is of better quality. If small holdings were made throughout the country there would not be such call for foreign goods—eggs, for instance—this country paid for eggs during the year 1893 3,562,690*l.*, and it is the same with everything else. Again, we must have better houses to live in, it is true that there has been great improvement in this direction during the last 20 years, but we require more improvement still. Moreover, we want to have these houses on better conditions. When a young workman settling down desires to build a house for himself he soon finds that it is very difficult to secure a plot of ground to do so. Many have utterly failed to get ground, and among others I have failed myself. Some 30 years ago I went to a gentleman to ask for a plot of ground to build a house. He promised me to have it with the greatest of pleasure, 'Call again,' he said. I did call a second time and again. The last time I met the agent and after a short talk I saw that nothing was to be expected from him because we were living too far apart. In 27 years I made the same request on the same estate, and I received the following reply:—

I have not the least intention of letting you have any of my land, nor do I believe a word of what you say, viz., that my father promised you a piece of ground for building on."

Many succeeded in getting some ground, and leases are granted varying from 21 to 60 years, and the ground rent varies from 4*l.* to 16*l.* per acre and when the lease expires the property must be handed over to the landlord in good condition. Cases of this kind are seen every day.

Land is let for building purposes which has never produced one shilling in the year by way of rent or rate, and yet 16*l.* an acre is asked for it.

I know of many cases, but take one example. A man has laid out 400*l.* in building. The lease is 60 years, the ground rent 6*l.* (or 16*l.* an acre) when similar land is let for less than 1*l.* an acre to farmers. Now in 60 years this man will have paid 360*l.* for the loan of the ground, add the other 400*l.* and it will make the handsome sum of 760*l.* for the landlord at the end of 60 years, without taking into account the interest, and the true owners are left without anything. The children will see their father's labour for life handed over to the landlord. Is not this enough to make any workmen complain bitterly?"

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—The next paragraph, my Lord, I object to as hearsay. The matter is not important, but I think there is a rather serious allegation made.

Mr. Griffiths.

If you refer to the word "robbed," I think that is modified in the translation.

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—In this story which he tells about Mr. John Thomas, he says that a promise for a lease was made, and that the promise was improperly broken. I think that story ought to come from Mr. John Thomas.

Mr. Seebohm.

Is Mr. John Thomas in the room?

Witness.

No, he is dead. That is stated further on.

Lord Kenyon.

45,405. How do you know anything about this? Is John Thomas a relation of yours, or what?—He was a near neighbour of mine.

45,406. As Mr. John Thomas is dead we cannot take his evidence strictly, but perhaps we had better take it for what it is worth.

Mr. H. L. Stephen.—As your Lordship pleases.

Another instance of the way workmen are deprived in connection with building on leases. There was one Mr. John Thomas, a mason by trade, who had saved a little money and was anxious to lay the same out on building labourers' cottages and by doing so to gain a little money. About the year 1856, there were several houses in ruins in the main street in the town of Newcastle Emlyn. Mr. Thomas offered the agent of the Cawdor estate to rebuild the houses if he granted fair conditions. The agent answered that Lord Cawdor's word was as good as a written lease, and that he could go on with the building. Six houses were finished and they were rented as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
1 for - -	13	0	0
1 „ - -	10	0	0
2 „ 6*l.* - -	12	0	0

Everything went on happily for 14 years, when the agent died. Another came into his place who knew that John Thomas had no lease, so four of the houses were taken from him worth 24*l.* a year, and the other two were left to him as long as he lived. He died about five years ago, and then all the houses were taken, his widow and orphans were left without a penny compensation. It was hard for John Thomas to see Lord Cawdor depriving him of 24*l.* a year for 20 years which amounts to 480*l.*, but I believe, that it is more painful to see them reaping the harvest of 40*l.* a year from the labour of John Thomas while his widow and orphans are half starving.

Whether the landowners are aware of these things or not, I know not. There are many instances of this kind, and we, the labouring class, hope that the system of building houses on leases under circumstances of this kind will be swept away for ever.

Lord Kenyon.

45,407. Who was the agent?—When I started to build, do you mean?

45,408. Yes?—Mr. Thomas, I believe, of Gelliorlas.

45,409. Who was the other agent who succeeded?—Mr. Thomas Jones.

45,410. Thomas Jones of where?—Of Newcastle Emlyn.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,411. Is he now the agent?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

45,412. Have they attempted to make use of the Small Holdings Act at all in this part of the world?—I do not know.

45,413. It seems to me you are asking for a law which is actually in existence?—Yes, I know, but it has no power. It is not worth anything here.

45,414. There is another Act, the Parish Councils Act, which gives a further power?—Well, perhaps something will come out of that

45,415. Then as to the peat. I suppose there was not any peat on your farm?—No.

45,416. So that part of the agreement was not much used one way or the other, was it?—Exactly.

45,417. When you refer to 77,000,000 acres of land, do you realise that it includes a good deal of mountain land? I mean you would not like it if your 10 acres were on the top of Snowdon, for instance?—No, it would be no good to me.

45,418. You cannot divide it into equal portions at any rate?—No, there is no necessity for that.

45,419. Do you think it is the fact that more is produced on smaller farms than on large ones?—I know it.

45,420. Per acre?—Yes.

45,421. But it cannot be true all over the world and all over England?—I cannot say as to that.

45,422. You speak very generally, but I do not think it is the case?—It must be so everywhere, because it is better cultivated.

45,423. I do not agree with that at all. It may be the case here?—It is so undoubtedly in this district.

45,424. The bigger farms may employ more expensive machinery, and so can cultivate their farms better?—But as far as that is concerned, manual work is better than machinery.

45,425. Do you not think that the agricultural produce of this part of the world might be improved—the butter, for instance?—I believe so. There is room for improvement.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,426. You say you have come to represent some workmen. How many workmen? Did you have a meeting at all?—Yes, we had a public meeting.

45,427. Did many attend this meeting?—From 35 to 40.

45,428. What parish are you living in?—Llanfair Orllwyn.

45,429. Are they mostly Welsh?—Yes, in Cardiganshire.

45,430. And they are mostly Welsh?—All of them Welsh.

45,431. Am I to understand that you are of opinion that every man should have a plot of ground and keep a cow or more than one if he likes?—I think it would be an advantage, taking things as they are now.

45,432. Do you think it would be a means of inducing them to stay in the country instead of going into the towns?—I believe that those who have gone to the towns will come back.

45,433. You say that the land on these small holdings is let much higher than on large farms. It is at the rate of 2*l.* an acre, and on the large farms only 15*s.*?—From 15*s.* to 13*s.* an acre for similar land.

45,434. And you have no houses at all, have you?—No, I had no house at all on the land that I held.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

45,435. But as a rule we find that there are cottages on this land?—Yes.

45,436. Do you consider that all the food of this country is of better quality than the foreign?—Yes, all the food that can be produced here. Of course there is a good deal that cannot be obtained in this country.

45,437. You prefer the home-made bread, then, to the foreign?—Yes.

45,438. Are there any conveniences in the cottages to keep poultry?—Wherever there may be a small holding there are several hens.

45,439. Do you think the cottager's wife, as a rule, is more able to attend to poultry keeping than the large farmer's wife?—Yes.

45,440. Then you complain that you cannot have ground to build on. On what estate did you try to have ground?—Colonel Lewes, Llys Newydd estate.

45,441. What reason did they give for not giving you the ground?—Well, he gave no real reason.

45,442. He only delayed the answer?—Yes.

45,443. Then you made an application to him again?—Yes.

45,444. To whom did you make that application?—To the present colonel.

45,445. What did he say?—This is the letter:—

"SIR, "Tenby, 7th October.

"I HAVE not the least intention of letting you have any of my land, nor do I believe a word of what you say, viz., that my father promised you a piece of ground for building on.

"Yours,

"W. LEWES,

"Col. (of Llysnewydd)."

45,446. What is the date of this letter—what year?—1890, I think it was.

45,447. You say in regard to John Thomas that it was told him when he built the houses, that Lord Cawdor's word was as well as a lease?—Yes.

45,448. And it was considered so in those days, was it?—Yes, and he built on the strength of that.

45,449. But he found to his sorrow in less than 14 years that he would have to pay over again for that land?—It was in 14 years afterwards that the houses were taken from him.

45,450. Though he had laid out all his money?—Yes.

45,451. They were let after?—Yes, those who occupied them then held them.

45,452. That is four of the houses?—Yes.

45,453. There are two remaining?—Yes.

45,454. What amount do you consider he lost on the whole?—During the 20 years, I think, he lost about 400*l.*

45,455. And his widow suffered also?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,456. We are very glad, indeed, to get the evidence of a labourer, because we have not had very much evidence from agricultural labourers. What do you call a big farm when comparing it with a small one?—In our part of the country a farm is considered a very large farm if it is 200 acres.

45,457. When you spoke of the yield of a small holding being larger than that of a big farm, what kind of small holding were you talking about?—From 5 to 10 acres.

45,458. What were you thinking of doing with that? Keeping a cow upon it, or making it almost into a garden?—Keeping a cow on it.

45,459. Then why should it produce more than a big farm, if it was pasture?—It is not intended that it should be always pasture land.

45,460. Some of it would be garden land?—Yes.

45,461. I can well understand that a small piece used for a garden would produce more than the ordinary acreage of a bigger farm. We have been told that the wages of labourers during, say, the past 30 years have been very much increased?—That is correct?

45,462. We have had some instances given of labourers rising into the position of, say, tenant farmers?—Yes, quite possibly.

45,463. Do you know yourself a great many who have risen in that way?—I know of some.

45,464. If you had these inducements to stay on the land, would not the competition for farms become greater?—That I cannot say.

45,465. Everybody cannot live on the land, can they?—We all live on the land, do we not?

45,466. We do not all live by tilling the land, do we?—No.

45,467. It would increase the land hunger, would it not?—Yes.

45,468. Do you know at all what you would expect to get per acre out of the land—the gross produce of the land per acre?—It would be very difficult for me to answer that. A farmer would know better than a workman or a labourer.

45,469. Would you expect to get anything like as much out of a small holding of 30 acres as you would expect out of some other trade?—I answer that as I have before stated, that there is no work to be had, and it would be a great blessing for the workmen to have the work at home.

45,470. But it is only recently that there have been a great many people out of employment?—It occurs during these last years, and thus hundreds have left this county for Glamorganshire.

45,471. But may we not hope that with returning good trade we shall have people employed again?—What is to bring about this better state of things—farming?

45,472. Well, I suppose only about a sixth of the population of England are connected with farming at all?—I suppose that the farms in England are very large farms, and that workmen can have nothing to do with them.

45,473. But I mean that there are a great many trades other than farming?—Yes, but they are half idle I think most of them.

45,474. I think the happiest thing we have heard of in Wales is the rise in the value of the labourer, and the good position of the labourer, and the chance he has of rising in life, as compared with other parts of England?—It is to be hoped that it is so.

45,475. And at the same time everybody would be glad that the labourer should have his little piece of land, so as to make his home as happy and as comfortable as possible?—Yes.

45,476. And it would have the advantage possibly of keeping the best men on the land, instead of the best men going away?—Yes; I am of the same opinion.

Mr. Grove.

45,477. The more men settle on the land the better it would be, you think?—Yes.

45,478. Are there many other working men of the same mind as yourself?—I believe so.

45,479. There is the Small Holdings Act. Who is the county councillor for your district?—Mr. Evan Davies, of Gilfachronow.

45,480. Have you ever discussed with him the question of this Act?—I mentioned it to him about a twelvemonth ago, and the answer I received was that it did not contain the power.

45,481. It does not contain power for compulsory purchase?—No.

45,482. But if the county council were to put it in force, and go as a large body like that to a landlord, perhaps he would let them have the land at a reasonable price?—I should like to know the landlord.

45,483. Well, a good many of us would like to know that of course. Has any application been made to the county council to put this Act into force?—I have asked these two county councillors here.

45,484. But you do not know whether it has ever come before the county council, and been decided by them whether they will put it in force or not?—They told me that there was no power in it.

45,485. Question repeated?—I have not heard that.

45,486. Under this Act anyone wishing to buy a small plot of land has to pay one fifth of the purchase money. Do you think many working men would be able to do that?—I believe many of them could.

45,487. I am glad to hear that. My advice to you would be to write a letter, and have it signed by five or six working men, and send it to the clerk of the county council, and the matter would then be properly discussed by the county council. It appears to me that this Act is passed on purpose to try and help men exactly like yourself. Now you say that for 27 years you tried to get a bit of land to build a house upon. Was there no other land available anywhere that you could get at?—Yes, there was, and I got some land elsewhere with another poor man like myself.

45,488. You mention farmers using machinery, and you do not object to that of course?—No. The only thing is that there is less demand for workmen.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,489. The use of machinery I suppose would have that effect in anything?—Oh, yes.

45,490. Just one more practical question. Do you think there are more public-houses in Newcastle Emlyn than there need be?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

There seem to be a fair number.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,491. Is it possible that Colonel Lewes had any reasonable objection to your having that special plot of land that you selected to build on?—In the first place, I think that the Colonel had nothing against me personally. There may have been something between me and the agent, or something of that kind. I do not know; we are not quite of the same colour.

Lord Kenyon.

45,492. Some questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Can you say that "there was not a written agreement between "John Thomas and Lord Cawdor's agent"?—Well, I cannot prove it. I only say what I have heard.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

45,493. "On what terms as to tenure did "John Thomas build his house"?—For what rent, do you mean?

45,494. No; on what terms. Were there any terms mentioned?—This is what John Thomas told me: that he was building the houses, knowing that the words of Lord Cawdor were as good as a lease.

45,495. But were there no terms as to whether they should revert to the estate at a certain time?—I did not hear anything.

45,496. "What did John Thomas pay to "Lord Cawdor"?—According to what I understood, 4*l.* a year of ground rent for the 14 years, I have the receipts for the other years.

45,497. Is that the ground rent of the whole of these houses?—No; for two alone.

45,498. And anything for the others?—Nothing for the others.

45,499. This is a question by Mr. J. Jones: "Has the widow of John Thomas had the same "loss on the Nantgaran Estate"?—No.

45,500. "Is it not a fact that many of the "houses at Newcastle Emlyn have been built "without leases"?—I think that it is so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. GRIFFITH DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,501. You are Mr. Griffith Davies of Alltycorde, in the parish of Penbryn?—Yes.

45,502. Is this your evidence which has been translated to you, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I farm 95 acres of land, which I bought in 1885, but it is heavily mortgaged. I was appointed at a public meeting held in our parish in June last year to give evidence before the Commissioners. Our parish is 8,112 acres, with a population of 1,300; 400 houses. There are 102 of the farmers who are freeholders, but I am sorry to say in name only—90 of these bought their farms within the last 12 years, and about 70 others were bought by tradesmen as investment—times were good then. We have suffered severely throughout the parish by all these sales, thousands and thousands of the farmers capital and labour were put up for sale and then dropped nicely into the landlords' pockets. Our own improvements were advertised and made a show of to get more for the farms; those of us who bought our homes had to pay dearly again for our own frugality and hard labour, I admit at once it would have been better for us not to have bought them from a monetary point of view, but we are passionately fond of our homes, our farms, our parish, our chapels, and even of the brooks, hills, and trees of Penbryn. We had witnessed cruel evictions in our parish. We have seen good farmers (David Davies, Penpontbren) turned away on Sir Pryse Pryse's estate for no other reason than that he had given some trifling personal offence to the head agent, Mr. John Vaughan Pugh Pryse, over the assessment of another farm on the estate—David Davies the evicted tenant being a member of the Assessment Committee. When we had seen such occurrences and knowing what a good farmer David Davies was and what a large amount of capital he had invested in the land, when we remembered how frequent and how imploring were his and his poor wife's entreaties for the agent's forgiveness—which were of no avail—we were almost panic stricken when it was rumoured that the whole parish, as it were, was about to be sold up. Here I beg to put in a statement showing how much money and labour David Davies had spent on his farm the last six years of his tenancy.

45,503. Is David Davies here?—David Davies is dead.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,504. Is he a relation of yours?—He was a very near neighbour of mine. I was very well acquainted with him, and I have a bill with his signature.

Lord Kenyon.

45,505. Have you got that statement?—Yes (producing same).

"I farmed my own place before it was sold. I was working on it with my uncle for 14 years previous to that; my uncle having no children it was understood I should succeed him, which gave me heart, and I worked very hard there for 18 years before it was sold. My uncle did all the haulage to build dwelling-house and stables; he built sheds and pigstyes and paid for them himself. He made 400 yards of lea jointly with his neighbour on the same estate; he also built a pond, put the water power to work all his machinery, I estimate these things at 50*l.* He drained a good deal there from time to time; kept his farm very tidy. I kept it on during the four years I had it previous to the sale quite as orderly—laboured hard there. All the tenants on one portion of the Falcondale estate received notices to quit, September, 1884. The head clerk of the agent brought them himself in order to explain to us that they were only formal. The estate was not to be sold, but perhaps we should be called upon to sign an agreement which again was only formal. Mr. Morris of Deinol, one of the tenants, had a copy of the agreement to show all the tenants—this was some time after the notices. We all met at Penrallt, being a central place, to discuss the clauses of this supposed innocent document. Fortunately we had by this time a clue that the whole of the Falcondale Estate in the parish of Penbryn was to be sold in the summer of 1885. We found that if we signed this agreement we should be simply putting the rope around our own necks, and therefore helpless in the hands of those who might buy our farms, but it was quite evident that the agent intended to catch us napping and get us to sign that the farms might sell better. Early in the summer of 1885 we waited upon Mr. Joseph, the head clerk, and expressed as tenants a desire that the sales should take place as soon as possible that we might be relieved of our anxiety and know our fate. He informed us that as we had not signed the agreement our convenience could not be consulted, and that they would sell when it suited them, and the sale did not take place before August 15th simply to force us to buy at any price. We were close upon Michaelmas, and under notices to quit, which expired September 29th. We were refused to offer for them privately. I had walked a good deal during the summer to look for a farm and had quite failed. I had a family of young children and in a way I had no choice but to buy; some of my co-tenants who did not buy were turned away from their old homes. I paid 2,040*l.* for my place of 99 acres, it was a deal too much. If we had security in our tenure, or even if we could legally claim compensation, we should not pay the exorbitant sums for our farms that we did, nor would the farms fetch these big sums then. My case is only one specimen out of 90. There are some who had hauled for building, drained the land, but were not paid even a penny when farms were sold. I beg here to give a few instances. It seems to me that our cases are exceptionally hard. The landlord's agents took us by surprise—they took advantage of the good times—of the land hunger which was then at its height—our strong sentiments for our homes and country by the panic struck in every heart by seeing the whole of a very large parish, as it were, sold up. I say again, they took advantage of all these things and put the reserved prices on the farms very high. Having bought our homes under these conditions we are now caught by the exceptionally bad times and we struggle hard for life in this gulf. I have been deputed to come before you gentlemen to tell you in a plain and crude way of our troubles, and respectfully ask you to favourably consider them, by recommending the Government to advance us money for a number of years at a low rate of interest to save us and our families from utter ruin. Another question which pressed hard on us then was the great expense in the transference of the land to us by the previous landlord. I beg with your permission, gentlemen, to hand over a few instances of the lawyer's bills paid by us, and hope that a change in this direction will be brought about.

See 45,537–45,558.

45,506. Will you produce those lawyers' bills?—Yes (producing same).

45,507. What was the rent of your farm before it was sold?—It is not the same rent as when it was sold. 17 acres of it was taken away.

45,508. I want to know what was the rent when it was sold?—It was 80*l.* when it was compact, when it contained 17 acres besides that.

45,509. It contained 17 acres more, did it?—Yes.

45,510. Do you mean it is 17 acres less than 95 now?—No, it was formerly 112 acres. It is now 95 acres.

45,511. What did you buy? Did you buy 95 acres, or did you buy 112?—95.

45,512. Did Mr. David Davies get any compensation whatever from Sir Pryse Pryse?—He received about 30*l.* for the things which were left on the farm, such as manure, seeds, and so on.

45,513. Anything else?—Such as the flags in the kitchen, and so on; that is all.

45,514. Did he get anything for the draining?—Nothing.

Mr. Grove.

45,515. I suppose your sole object in buying your own farm was to have security of tenure?—Yes.

45,516. And you considered that you had to pay over again for the labour and the improvements that you had made upon it?—Yes. We had to do so.

45,517. Have you any idea of the money you spent on the farm before you bought it?—I, together with my uncle, had spent all the money which is there for the water-wheel alone, and that was put down on the paper as belonging to the place.

45,518. Your suggestion is that the Government should be asked to lend money at a cheap rate to enable them to pay off their present mortgages. Is that it?—Yes, that is what we ask for.

45,519. And also to enable other tenants to buy their farms if they have the chance to do so?—Yes, if they are obliged to do so; that is, if they are being sold.

45,520. I say if they have the chance?—Yes.

45,521. Then, in addition to that, you want a simple and inexpensive mode of transfer of land?—Yes, cheaper than it is now at any rate.

Mr. Seebohm.

This is one of many cases that we have had brought before us showing the evils and the hardships that come about when a sale is made of property; I do not think I need ask any questions upon it; it, of course, will have consideration as it deserves along with others.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,522. Can you give us any information as to this trifling personal offence that David Davies had given to the agent? What was the nature of the offence?—It arose from the valuation of two places in the neigdbourhood.

45,523. Could not they agree about the valuation, or what was it?—He was one of those who had been valuing the holdings, and the valuation was not satisfactory to those who occupied the place.

45,524. Was it considered that he had done his duty?—Yes.

45,525. And yet he could not forgive him?—Mr. John Vaughan Pugh Pryse had something to do with this.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

45,526. What?—He had been one of the parties with these two men, and wanted the two holdings to be equal.

45,527. But did you consider that they were equal?—The parish valuation was not going to make them equal.

45,528. Who made the parish valuation?—About six or seven men whom the vestry had appointed.

45,529. And with all that is it the fact that Mr. Pryse would not agree to their valuation?—No, it was referred to the Assessment Committee.

45,530. And how did they settle it?—In the same way, according as the parish valuation was.

45,531. Then you consider he ought not to have been offended?—Yes.

45,532. You say with regard to farms that are sold you are prepared to give us a few instances. Will you give us one or two instances?—This is an instance from Mr. Morris, of Deinol (handing document).

Lord Kenyon.

45,533. Is this gentleman here?—Yes.

45,534. We will take him if we have any time at the end, but we must go on with the witnesses who have given us notice to attend to-day. There are two or three questions put in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Have you told Sir "Pryse Pryse or Mr. Pugh Pryse that you were "coming here"?—Yes, I sent him a letter.

45,535. When did you send the letter?—Last week. Here is a copy (handing same).

45,536. "Can you describe to us the contents "of the agreement of which a copy was given "to Mr. Morris, of Deinol"?—I do not remember it, but we read it together, and after we had read it we returned it, because we only had the loan of it.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. PICTON EVANS recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,537. We have got four or five witnesses still to examine, so I must ask you to confine yourself strictly to the rebutting evidence. You are Mr. Picton Evans?—I am Mr. Picton Evans. In 1885 I became the agent of the Falcondale Estate in the parish of Penbryn. There were two estates, one was called the Falcondale Estate, and the other was called the Reverend Alfred Harford's estate. I should like you to divide those.

45,538. Were you agent for both of them?—I was agent for both in 1885. The last witness was a tenant on the last estate, the Rev. Alfred Harford's estate.

45,539. Were they both the properties of Sir Pryse Pryse?—No, nothing to do with Sir Pryse Pryse at all. This last witness speaks of it in his statement. In 1885 the Rev. Alfred Harford's estate was sold. I was connected with that sale professionally as a solicitor. The solicitors at Bristol were Messrs. Isaac Coate and Sons and they had the entire management of the sale. Previous to that sale a nephew of Mr. Morris, of Deinol, whose name has been mentioned, and who is also a tenant on the same estate, in pursuance of instructions he received from the solicitors, went over the estate, and made a valuation, and prepared the particulars of sale. The property was sold, and as the witness says he bought his lot in for 2,040*l.* I know of no agreement, nor do I know the contents of any agreement that is referred to as being handed up to Mr. Morris, of Deinol, to be shown to the rest of the tenants. There may or may not have been such an agreement, but I never saw it, and I do not know the purport of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,540. Then you are not in a position to deny that there was one?—No, I should not like to deny it. I do not know what the purport of it was in the least. I may say that the agent previous to me was my partner Mr. Jenkins who had been agent for many years. He was my partner in the same office that I was, and the agency was carried on in that office, and it is probable that if such an agreement had been in existence, I should have seen it, but I will not undertake to say that there was no agreement, because I am not in a position to say so.

Lord Kenyon.

45,541. I think you are confirming the evidence at present?—Well, I want to confirm it as far as it is true.

45,542. Our time is rather limited?—I should tell you with regard to that sale that there were no claims whatever sent in to me as agent for compensation from any of the tenants. I know as a rule on that estate the buildings—the permanent improvements—are always done by the landlord, the tenant doing the haulage.

45,543. Do you say that no advantage was taken of the tenants' improvements then?—I do.

45,544. You say they did not buy their improvements twice over?—Certainly not. I say that all permanent improvements are done by the landlord at his expense, excepting haulage.

45,545. Have you anything to say about David Davies' case?—No, not that case. I want to go to the other estate.

45,546. David Davies was before your agency?—No, David Davies is on Sir Pryse Pryse's estate. I was never agent to the estate. I had nothing to do with that estate. With regard to this estate of Alltycorde we never received any claim from Mr. Davies of Alltycorde previous to the sale, or at any time, nor did he make any claim for compensation for improvements done by him.

45,547. He could hardly expect to get anything if he did not put in a claim?—No.

Mr. Grove.

45,548. How many of the tenants were affected by that same sale. It was rather a large sale of property, was it not?—There were 10 lots sold.

45,549. Does that mean 10 tenants?—Yes, 10 tenants. There may have been under-tenants. Of course I cannot say.

45,550. But there were 10 direct tenants?—10 direct tenants.

45,551. In your opinion, then, none of those tenants had done any permanent improvements that they might have claimed for?—Not permanent, certainly not. It is the rule for the landlord always to do those.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,552. Do you consider that 2,040*l.* was a high price for that land?—Well, I think it certainly was its full value.

45,553. Do you happen to have the reserve price?—Well, I do not know, because, as I told you just now, I had nothing to do with the conduct of that sale. The apportioned rent was 68*l.*

45,554. This man in his evidence says, "My case is only one specimen out of 90." I thought you said there were 10 tenants only?—Yes, on that estate; then later on there was another estate sold belonging to the Harfords, called the Falcondale Estate. You do not propose to go into that one, I suppose? That was a sale in 1887. He might have been referring to that.

Lord Kenyon.

45,555. A question is handed up by Mr. Enoch Davies: "Are you prepared to deny "that Mr. Morris, Deinol, built a stable for 10 "horses at his own expense"?—Not within my knowledge, not when I was agent, certainly not.

45,556. You are not prepared to deny that?—Certainly not.

Mr. Grove.

45,557. Does the same remark apply as regards the Falcondale estate, that no claims were sent in for improvements?—Yes.

45,558. You think the same remark applies to that?—Quite so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Thomas called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,559. You are Mr. James Thomas of Parkytrap, near Newcastle Emlyn.

45,560. This is your evidence which has been read over to you in Welsh by Mr. Griffiths, and it is correct?—Yes.

See 44,313.

[The following statement of the witness was read:]

I, James Thomas of Parkytrap near Emlyn, have lived in this place for 20 years. I have come here to-day to speak on my own behalf. I do not represent anyone else. My farm measures 39½ acres for which I pay 65*l.* rent. My landlord is Colonel Lloyd, of Llysayron, and an officer in the Cardiganshire Militia. My land is dry and shallow with a blue shale as sub-soil. Last summer was an exceptionally dry one, we had to carry water a distance of over a mile for all the stock, I had no hay and very little straw. My stock this winter has been fed mostly on gorse which I have carried a distance of three miles, my rent is too high. I have often spoken to my landlord about it and have begged and begged of him to reduce it. The same reply I have always received: "You can give it up if you do "not like it at that rent, I can get plenty to give "it." Besides the land being too dear, I am much handicapped by the state of the buildings, they are too small and in a disgraceful state of repairs. The dwelling-house, stable, barn and cowhouse are streaming wet inside after every storm, there is not a house there that keeps the water out. I have to carry on the work under great difficulties, we do it by shifting the same articles about a dozen times a day. Our dwelling-house contains two rooms downstairs —we dare not go upstairs for fear; these rooms measure as follows: kitchen, 13 ft. × 6·9½ × 7 in height—we have to put a bed here. The parlour as it is called—the name is the best part of it, gentlemen—measures 13ft. × 9·3½ × 7, but height from floor to joists is 6·9—props inside and outside to keep it up somehow. I have props also keeping stable, cowhouse, and barn up. There is a slaut at back of dwelling-house which we call a dairy. I spoke to my landlord first of all about a new house 12 years ago. His reply then was that he was putting some pipes down in a meadow of Mr. Elias Thomas, another tenant of his, and that he had no money to do both the same year. In about a year after my landlord called and was convinced that my house was rather out of repair, and said he would build me a dwelling-house. I pointed out to him the state the out-houses were in, but he made no observation, he promised to call next day to settle all the arrangements for starting the building, but I am sorry to say he never came. The next audit I spoke to him again about the house, when he told me he would not build for me, and that he could get the rent for it without building. Hardly an audit passed that I did not ask him for a new house and he as often refused. Last autumn I asked him to call and see his property. He and Dr. Lloyd came. He asked what I wanted him for? I told him I wished to know where I and my family were to go to live if we were fortunate enough to survive the collapse of the house. Dr. Lloyd said he should not like to sleep there. The Colonel never made any remark. In a day or two after this Colonel Lloyd called again and Mr. George the solicitor with him. Mr. George asked me if the house leaked and asked permission to go and see it. I was glad to see him going in—he examined the cracks in the wall which we had stuffed up to prevent cats coming in. I told him we could not keep a lighted candle in the house during a storm of wind. Mr. George suggested repairing the pine end and then put zinc sheets over the roof; the total cost not to exceed 15*l.*, that was agreed upon. Next morning a messenger came to me from Col. Lloyd, saying I was not to have the house repaired, and suggesting I should go to live in a cottage a quarter of a mile away and he (Col. Lloyd) would pay the rent of the cottage.

See 47,471–47,484.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I told the messenger I could not farm and pay the rent in this fashion. I have never heard a word since about it. I have had two children ill here and one of them with rheumatic fever, yet we could not give him a bed for himself, I have for 15 years been obliged to get a bed for two of my children at Forest farm, and they had to walk there night and morning all weathers, and I had to send them every night in winter and very often had to carry the little one. I have two sons in Glamorganshire; they come to see us once a year; we have no bed for them to rest without sending two other children away to sleep. My son, who works with me on the farm, has to walk every night about half a mile to rest. He was ill some time ago and I had to send his sister then to Forest, and I slept with him and the other little girl with her mother. I most respectfully beg of you, gentlemen, to come and see the place which is close by. My landlord refuses to do anything, he tells me to go away, and that after spending the best 20 years of my life here; all my labour is in the land. I have paid the rent regularly and owe none. I beg most respectfully to ask you, gentlemen, where am I to go now at this time of life?

45,561. Where does Colonel Lloyd live?—Llysayron.

45,562. Is that near here?—I cannot say how far. It is between here and Aberayron.

45,563. What is his address?—Colonel Lloyd, Llysayron, Aberayron.

Mr. Grove.

45,564. Referring to that photograph that you produce, if those props shown at the end of the house were taken away would that wall fall down?—Yes, it would have come down some time ago. It would have been down 12 years ago or more. See 44,313.

Mr. Grove.

Our friends smile, but it is no laughing matter.

Lord Kenyon.

Not at all.

Mr. Grove.

45,565–6. He pays 65*l.* for 39½ acres. Is that a higher rate than is paid for land about that part?—Yes.

45,567. Is the land of better quality?—You can see it from here.

45,568. We cannot see the quality of it. Is it of better quality?—No, it is not better land.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,569. Have you insured your life?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

I should be disposed to advise you to do so.

Lord Kenyon.

45,570. This is a question by Mr. Enoch Davies: "Does not the photograph flatter the "building"?—Yes, it does. It is better there than it really is.

45,571. These are questions by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Has Colonel Lloyd had notice that "you were coming here"?—I do not know that Colonel Lloyd knows that I am coming here.

45,572. Has he had notice?—He has not received notice from me.

45,573. Has Colonel Lloyd got a big estate?—I cannot say—yes, he has a good deal a little below the bridge there.

45,574. Perhaps he cannot afford to repair it?—How does he think that I can afford to pay for the farm, when he has got so much land?

Mr. Griffiths.

45,575. How much land has he?—There are several acres; I cannot say how many.

Lord Kenyon.

I will hand you back your photograph. It does not look a suitable building to live in.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,576. Have you an inspector of nuisances in this part of the country?—I do not know about that.

45,577. You had better make inquiry, and ask him to come and see you?—Very well.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

FIFTY-FOURTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Lampeter, Cardiganshire, Wednesday, 25th April, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELLYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. HENRY TOBIT EVANS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,578. You are Mr. Henry Tobit Evans, of Neuadd, Llanarth, Lampeter?—Yes.

45,579. You wish to give evidence on your own behalf, and on behalf of Mr. John Morgan, of Park Powell, Llanfair-Clydogau, near Lampeter?—Yes.

45,580. We will take your own evidence first. I think you have a statement?—Yes.

On Friday, the 8th of December, 1893, I attended a public meeting of farmers at Lampeter, presided over by Mr. Morgan Evans, J.P., Oakford, and convened for the purpose of discussing the land question. I was appointed one of a committee at the said meeting, to collect evidence for this commission. I subsequently attended several meetings of the said committee, under the presidency of Mr. Lewis Davies, J.P., Gelly.

Last week my attention was called to the case of John Morgan, of Park Powell, Llanfair-Clydogau, near Lampeter. I called upon him, and in the presence of his wife and a gentleman who accompanied me, he made the following statement to me":—

45,581. John Morgan is now in court beside you?—Yes, he is now sitting beside me.

I am 78 years of age. I was born in 1816. I lived at Felinfawr, Llanfair-Clydogau. My parents were tenants there before me. When I took the mill for myself it had only one pair of stones for grinding purposes. There was plenty of water power there to drive three pairs of mill stones. As there was a good deal of work for corn mills in the neighbourhood, and many of the country mills were not going in the summer for want of water, I went to the expense of purchasing and fixing two additional pairs of grinding stones, which cost me over 200*l*. I paid that sum to a Mr. David Jacob, See 46,599A; 48,669–48,714; 70,919–70,990; and 73,839–73,897.

New Mill, near Aberystwyth, and whose acknowledgment I now produce. See 45,639, 46,599A.

This is the acknowledgment:

"1865.

"Received of John Morgan the sum 2*l*. 0*s*. 0*d*.
" hundred pounds for make new mill.

"Llanfair Mill,
"DAVID JACOB."

The timber only was supplied by my landlord (Lord Carrington) and is not included in the sum I paid. I invested all my capital in these improvements, and made the mill the best in the whole neighbourhood. This was in the year 1865.

Three years afterwards, Lord Carrington sold the mill and all his other property in this district to Mr. William Jones, Banker, Glandennis; but I did not receive one penny from Lord Carrington by way of compensation for the outlay in the improvements and additions which I made. This preyed very much upon my mind, and in consequence my health was undermined. I had to give up my work and abandon the mill. I also lost my hearing, and for many years had to break stones on the road in order to earn my livelihood. My health got worse, I had to give up stone breaking, and apply for parochial relief. I now receive from the guardians of the Lampeter Union, 3*s*. 6*d* per week towards maintaining myself and my wife, who is also old and infirm and unable to assist me. We brought up nine children, and I paid rates in the parish of Llanfair for many years. When Lord Carrington sold the mill, I asked a clergyman, the Rev. Thomas Morgan of Nantymedd) to go and speak on my behalf to Lord Carrington's agent, with the view of being compensated for my outlay. He went, but was told I could get nothing, as in his opinion I had been too long at the mill after making the improvements. I occupied it for three years only, under Lord Carrington, before it was sold. If Lord Carrington wish other landlords to be just in their dealings, I hope he will set the example by doing me justice.

The said John Morgan is now exceedingly deaf.

45,582. Is this document handed in as a copy, or is it supposed to be the original?—I understand it is the original; it is not a receipt. I have asked him the question, and he tells me it is the one he got from David Jacob.

45,583. Is David Jacob alive?—I believe so. The paper is a mere acknowledgment. It is not supposed to be a receipt.

45,584. Was David Jacob a well educated man?—I could not answer that question.

45,585. I suppose a man who could put in new mill stones would be a man of some education?—I am judging from the receipt, my Lord.

45,586. That is what we are doing. Was the rent increased after the sale?—I believe not. I could not say for certain. I do not think he remained there very long afterwards.

45,587. Is it far from here?—About three miles.

45,588. You say the rent was not raised?—No, it was not raised. I spoke to his wife about that, and as well as I remember now, she said some friends of theirs went to Mr. Jones, the new landlord, and as a special favour he allowed them to remain there at the old rent.

45,589. Was he given notice to quit?—No, he was not given notice to quit. His health was undermined, and he had to give up his work, and the mill. He says that in his statement.

45,590. What is his complaint then?—His complaint is that he could not sell his improvements, and he lost all his capital.

45,591. Did he apply to Lord Carrington himself for compensation?—I believe he applied to the agent.

45,592. Did he send a bill?—He sent no bill. He simply sent the clergyman, as I understood him, to make a request.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,593. Who was the agent of Lord Carrington?—I believe at that time it was a gentleman of the name of Mr. Jones. He lived in the neighbourhood of Llandovery, I believe. I believe so; I am only speaking from hearsay.

45,594. Is he alive?—I could not say.

45,595. Do you think Lord Carrington was personally aware of the circumstances under which the tenant had erected these millstones, and the property was sold?—That I could not answer.

45,596. Lord Carrington personally was not written to on the matter; it was simply an application made to the agent?—Yes, I believe that was so.

45,597. Did the matter create a certain amount of scandal; was there any talk in the neighbourhood?—Oh, I believe there was, and there is to this day.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

45,598. What remedy do you suggest for this sort of thing?—I am simply stating the facts which he has told me. I have no remedy at all to suggest. I leave it entirely in the hands of Lord Carrington.

45,599. Were you deputed by the Committee to appear here to state the case of John Morgan?—I was deputed by the Committee to collect evidence, and Morgan told me that he could not give it himself inasmuch as he was so very deaf, and he and his wife asked me to read it out.

45,600. That is the only case you have to present?—Yes, the only case I have to present.

45,601. Have you made any efforts to collect any other cases?—I have.

45,602. You did not succeed in getting any?—Not a very tangible one. I thought at one time I had another case on the same estate, but the man was unwilling to come forward.

45,603. Have you interested yourself more with respect to that estate than to any other estate?—No, I have not.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,604. It was in 1865 that this alteration to the mill was made, I think?—Yes, it was.

45,605. Was Lord Carrington then the owner of the property?—Yes, I believe so. Whether it was the present Lord Carrington I could not say. I do not know when he succeeded to it.

45,606. Do you know whether any application was made to the Lord Carrington of that day or his agent for leave to put in the additional grindstones?—Yes, I believe there was a perfect understanding between them. Lord Carrington supplied the timber.

45,607. You have that on more than hearsay evidence. Have you it direct from John Morgan?—Yes.

45,608. Can you ask Mr. Morgan the question [the question was written in Welsh for John Morgan]?—I might say this, if you will allow me. I wrote out that statement in Welsh; he read it all, every word, this morning, and he said it was perfectly true. I also gave him a copy in English; he can read English fairly well for an old man, and he said also that was true.

[John Morgan being so very deaf that neither the Interpreter nor Mr. H. T. Evans could make him hear the question it was written down in the Welsh language.]

Witness.

45,609. He says there was a perfect understanding. Lord Carrington supplied the timber, and he was to supply the machinery and the millstones.

45,610. Then, as I understand you, the property was sold three years after this, so that it is about 26 years since this took place. During that 26 years do you know whether he has applied to Lord Carrington or to the agent for justice to be done?—Only what appears on the statement. I do not think he has made any other application.

45,611. This is one of the many cases which we have had before us of difficulties with regard to improvements owing to sales under the present law, and you bring it forward as an instance of that?—Yes, I presume that would be the object of it.

45,612. Now, may I ask you this question, apart from the personal question of Lord Carrington, in your neighbourhood have there been many such instances?—I believe there have been some here and there. I could not give definite instances, only from hearsay. I could not go into the particulars.

45,613. On the whole, is there a pretty good feeling of security in your neighbourhood?—There is a feeling of insecurity undoubtedly.

Mr. Grove.

45,614. You spoke about this, that you thought you would have one or two other cases, but they did not like to come forward. Do you think there is a general disinclination on the part of the tenant farmers to come forward and give evidence?—I believe there is to some extent.

45,615. Then, I presume, you would recommend from your own point of view that compensation should be made for all improvements effected?—Certainly, for unexhausted improvements, most decidedly.

45,616. I do not want you to ask this of John Morgan as he is so very hard of hearing, but we quite understand, I suppose, that he says distinctly that the agent quite understood that Lord Carrington supplied the timber, but he only occupied the mill three years after he spent 200*l.* there?—Yes.

45,617. And he had to leave without compensation?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

45,618. Does that appear to you to be the original document of 26 years ago, or a copy?—He tells me it is the original.

45,619. Again will you kindly look at it. Is it 2*l.*?—200*l.* You see the "hundred pounds" afterwards.

45,620. In your opinion does it mean 200*l.*?—Undoubtedly, in my opinion.

45,621. I could not make it out from my own examination of the paper as to whether it meant 2*l.* or 200*l.*?—I should take it to mean 200*l.*, because I should think it probable such an improvement as that would be worth about 200*l.*

45,622. Would not that possibly be an excessive figure?—No, I do not think it would.

45,623. Do you think that the existing law passed in 1883 adequately meets the difficulty?—I am afraid I am not personally acquainted with the provisions of that Act.

45,624. Do you think the neighbourhood is acquainted with the Act of Parliament?—No.

45,625. We are looking out for remedies. The question is whether that remedy has not been provided already by Act of Parliament?—It may be; but if it is provided they are not aware of it.

45,626. In the first schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, an improvement to which the consent of the landlord is required, is "for the making or improving of watercourses, "pond, wells, or reservoirs, or of works for the "application of water power or for supply of "water for agricultural or domestic purposes." Do you think that would come within the meaning of the Act?—I am not sufficiently versed in the law to offer an opinion.

45,627. Was the mill a corn mill?—A corn grist mill.

45,628. The consent of the landlord is now required?—Yes.

45,629. But this all occurred prior to that Act; so that of course it did not come within the Act. The question is whether, in your opinion, the Act meets the difficulty now?—It may; but I could not offer an opinion as to the construction of the Act at all. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. Grove.

45,630. You think it wants a lawyer to interpret an Act of Parliament?—Yes, I should think so; and a good number of them, sometimes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

45,631. And I suppose the less we have of them between landlord and tenant the better?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,632. You said in reply to one of the Commissioners, that provision should be made for compensating a tenant for unexhausted improvements?—Certainly.

45,633. In every case?—In every case, I think; certainly.

45,634. You know some people have fads. Perhaps one tenant will go in for poultry rearing, and may go to the expense of erecting poultry houses. The succeeding tenant, perhaps would not be so affected, and what would be an improvement in one case might not be an improvement in another case. Would you qualify your answer by saying this, that compensation should be paid for every improvement which is of value to the succeeding tenant?—Certainly, that is what I mean. Of course if it is of value to the succeeding tenant it should be paid for. But a thing of that sort might not be of value. The mill is quite another thing. The machinery which this old man erected is now going, and he is a pauper.

45,635. I suppose country mills are not such things as they used to be?—Well, this mill which Morgan erected is the best in the neighbourhood,—it is an exceptionally good one.

45,636. They do not bring so much grist to the mill now as they used to?—I think they bring a good deal to this mill.

Lord Kenyon.

45,637. Do you know of your own knowledge whether Mr. Morgan suffered in any other way. You say his health broke down; was there any other reason?—He told me so. I am not aware of any other, so far as I know of his character.

45,638. Do you remember the time?—I remember the time; but I was not in the neighbourhood then.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

45,639. Ask John Morgan whether he still asserts this to be the original document? [The question was written in the Welsh language and handed to John Morgan.]—He says "this "is the receipt which he gave me for my "money."

45,640. At the time?—At the time.

Re-examined 45,599A, 48,669, and 73,839.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Elizabeth Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,641. Where do you reside?—Rhydowen Farm, Llandyssul.

45,642. Do you say this is a summary of your evidence, and that it is correct?—Yes, I do.

45,643. You have seen it?—Yes.

The following statement was then read:—

Evidence of Mrs. Jones, of Rhydowen Farm, Llandyssil, concerning Gilfachronw Farm, in the Parish of Bangor, in the County of Cardigan.

See 44,409–44,429 and 47,611–47,664.

Mr. John Jones (late) took and entered on and held the above farm of Gilfachronw the 29th day of September 1871, at the annual rent of 95*l.* The farm contained about 100 acres and was part of the Blaendyffryn Estate, belonging to the late D. J. Lloyd, Esq., of Alltyrodyn. I was married to the late Mr. Jones in 1872 and went to reside at Gilfachronw in May 1872. Mr. Jones died June 8th, 1874, and I was allowed to keep on the farm at a rent of 90*l.* per annum. The tenants of this estate were all served with notices to quit on September 29th, 1876, as the intention was to sell all the farms thereon, and I received notice to quit. The estate was valued by Mr. Howell Thomas, surveyor and auctioneer, Carmarthen. As Gilfachronw was not sold at the sale the tenant was offered the farm at 100*l.* a year (a new house being promised to me, proved by Howell Thomas' letter of January 26th, 1886) either on a 10 years' lease or from year to year. I took the farm of Gilfachronw on lease of 10 years from the 29th of September 1876 from the late D. J. Lloyd, Esq., Alltyrodyn. The farm was put up for sale five years after in 1881. I made the last bid but one myself publicly at the sale, but the farm was bought jointly by Dr. John Davies, Dr. Enoch Davies, and Mr. David Davies, three brothers, for 3,260*l.* David Davies, one of the purchasers, together with another brother, Evan Davies, viewed and examined the buildings, premises, and farm, on the day after the sale. The lease provided that the rent should be paid quarterly. I only paid once every half year to the Alltyrodyn Estate, but paid the Davieses each quarter's rent as it became due. Between one and two years after the farm had been bought, Mr. David Davies and Mr. John Francis, valuer and auctioneer, Carmarthen, came to Gilfachronw and examined the buildings and premises. Mr. John Francis told me that the lease was a very strict one and that the buildings were very bad, and advised me to leave before the term of 10 years was up. Perhaps it would be better for me. On February 20th, 1882, a letter was received from Mr. Walters, solicitor, of Carmarthen, acting for the purchasers of the farm, offering to take up the farm, September 1882, without any regard to any breaches of contract (if any), and saying that if I kept on to end of lease I would be required to conform strictly to lease—a somewhat stringent one. In 1885 my own farm of Rhydowen became vacant. I went up to Bargoed, where Mr. David Davies lived. I told him Rhydowen was free in the following September, and asked him if he would take Gilfachronw one year before the lease expired. Mr. Davies said he would do so, and that 'Ymadel yn deg a diddig oedd i fod' (It was to be a fair and peaceable leaving). I asked him if he wished, according to the terms of the lease, to buy all the crops and manures on valuation from me. He said no, take everything away. In that same summer David Davies came and asked if he might stack his hay there. I gave him leave. I asked him if he thought there was anything out of the way in the state of the buildings. He said no, they were very nice, and that I had kept everything better than he had expected. I said I had kept them all along in as good repair as they were when I had them. David Davies then intended to live at Gilfachronw himself. But Evan Davies married. David Davies went to his own farm at Maengwyn and Evan Davies came from Maengwyn to Gilfachronw. I had carted all my hay and corn up to Rhydowen before 29th September but was unable to go there till October 7th, 1885, as the tenant had not been able to clear out. I was served March 25th, 1885, with notice to quit the farm on September 29th, 1885, by the servant of Mr. David Davies of Bargoed. This after agreeing with Mr. David Davies that I would leave September 29th, 1885. Dr. John Davies, David Davies, Evan Davies, and John Francis, visited Gilfachronw and valued the repairs, which they said were necessary. A few days later I received a letter from Mr. Walters, solicitor, Carmarthen, enclosing bill with particulars of 33*l.* 17*s.*, and making a claim for the same.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

See 44,418.

See 44,427.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

This was received before I left Gilfachronw. 4*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* of this was for the house, which house was pulled down immediately afterwards. I appointed three valuers, Mr. D. J. Lloyd, Gilfachwen, gentleman, Mr. John Jones, Pant-y-defaid, farmer, and Mr. Rees Thomas, valuer and auctioneer, to value the repairs. Their valuation was 12*l.* 14*s.* 10*d.* (copy enclosed). I then offered the Davies 15*l.*, or to do the repairs required myself. This was refused. I got Mr. J. H. Thomas to value the repairs necessary, and his valuation was 2*l.* Mr. Thomas had valued the farm before I took the 10 years' lease, so knew the state of the buildings and farm well. I, seeing no possibility of satisfying the demands of the Davieses (although David Davies had previously told me he was quite satisfied with the state of the farm and buildings), offered to remain at Gilfachronw another year, at the end of which time I would be prepared to pay any reasonable demand that they might make for repairs. This offer they refused. They told me that if I stayed I must cart stones from Cwmbach quarry and build. Cwmbach quarry is about six miles off. There is as good a quarry on Gilfachronw. When they afterwards built ask Davies if they did not get stone from Gilfachronw quarry and not Cwmbach. All my animals were sent off the farm about September 30th. Owing to the Rhydowen tenant not being able to clear out I did not leave till October 7th, giving up the key to Mr. Evan Davies personally. T. Walters, solicitor, sent letter to me, dated 7th December 1885, demanding instant payment of 33*l.* 17*s.* or proceedings would be taken. Copy of Rees Thomas' letter in answer (December 9th, 1885) promising to call on Mr. Walters following Saturday is handed in. I was willing to give 15*l.*, as estimated by my valuers. In 1886 I received a statement of claim, signed by J. Lloyd Morgan, demanding 95*l.* 17*s.* It was dated 30th March 1886. Delivered 10th May 1886. Mr. John Jones and Mr. D. J. Lloyd went and offered 15*l.* again to Mr. John Francis, but it was not accepted. I instructed my solicitor, Mr. Thomas Lloyd, Lampeter, to settle the matter as best he could; I wished to finish it. This was done, I paying 25*l.* to the Davieses, each side paying their own costs.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

45,644. Is Rhydowen your own freehold?—Yes.

45,645. Is the Dr. Enoch Davies mentioned the gentleman who gave evidence before us yesterday at Newcastle Emlyn?—Yes.

45,646. What was the rent of Gilvachronw when you went out of it?—100*l*

45,647. What is the rent now, do you know?—I do not know.

45,648. When the farm was sold were you under notice to quit?—I received a notice after the farm had been sold.

* Most of the documents referring to this case are printed at Questions 44,413–44,427.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

45,649. Was it after the day of the sale?—It was in September.

45,650. What year?—The year the Allt-y-rodyn estate was sold.

45,651. The tenants on the Allt-y-rodyn estate were all served with notices to quit on the 29th of September 1876?—Yes, I received one then, too.

45,652. Because of the intention to sell?—Yes.

45,653. Did Mr. Lloyd act upon that notice to quit?—No.

45,654. Was that notice to quit still in existence at the time of the sale, or had it expired?—I had a lease with five years unexpired when the place was sold.

45,655. Now, can you tell me when the sale took place?—I cannot remember; it is in the agreement.

45,656. Anyhow, you had security of tenure, because you had a lease at that time.

45,657. So you were able to hold the farm on until the expiration of your lease?—Yes.

45,658. Was one of the conditions in that lease that you should keep the buildings in repair?—Yes.

45,659. Then there was litigation between you and the Messrs. Davies as to whether the buildings were in repair or not?—Yes.

45,660. Was their claim for 33*l.* 17*s.*?—Yes.

45,661. Was a writ issued for 95*l.* 17*s.*?—Yes.

45,662. Was it eventually settled by the payment of 25*l.*?—Yes.

45,663. What did that 95*l.* include?—I never heard.

45,664. The writ was served?—Yes.

45,665. What became of that writ?—We settled it afterwards.

45,666. Do you believe it is better for the landlord and tenant to settle without the intervention of lawyers?—I prefer that.

45,667. Did the sum of 95*l.* 17*s.* include the lawyer's costs?—I do not know.

45,668. Is there any other explanation of the claim springing up from 33*l.* to 95*l.*?—I never received any explanation why they asked for that amount.

45,669. Was there a half year's rent included in it?—No. I paid my rent every quarter.

45,670. Was there a quarter's rent included in the increased claim?—No.

45,671. You can give no explanation of why the claim was increased from 33*l.* to 95*l.*?—No. I cannot explain it. I used to pay my rent when it was due.

Mr. Grove.

45,672. What amount for costs did you pay in addition to the 25*l.* when you settled?—10*l.*

45,673. So that you paid more than the original claim of 33*l.* 17*s.*?—Yes, I paid them 25*l.* and 10*l.* to my solicitor.

45,674. You say at one time Mr. J. H. Thomas was asked to value the repairs necessary, and he valued them at 2*l.* Does that mean as against the claim of 33*l.* 17*l.* ?—Mr. John Thomas valued for me when I obtained the lease, and he valued again when I left the place.

45,675. Did he say that there was only 2*l.* of repairs to do ?—Yes, according to his valuation made when I entered the farm, there was only 2*l.* worth of repairs to be done.

45,676. You say that they wanted you to cart stones from Cwmbach quarry, which was six miles off, instead of having the stones out of the Gilvachronw quarry. Do you know why they required it from that particular quarry, six miles off ?—Mr. Evan Davies told me if I kept the holding until the lease expired, that is another year, I should have to cart the stones for the new house for them from Cwmbach quarry.

45,677. Did he say why they wanted stones from that particular quarry, six miles of ?—They had given me some trouble because they were afraid of my leaving. If I had kept the place on till the lease had expired, that is another year, they would put up new buildings, provided I carried all the stones from the Cwmbach quarry, six miles away.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,678. That answer is contrary to the one before, I take it. Was that in order to induce you to stay or go off sooner ?—They wanted me to go away.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,679. Do you think, when Mr. John Francis advised you to leave the place, that he advised you what he considered best in your own interest ?—I had no place to go to; I was not free to go.

45,680. That is no answer to the question ?—I cannot say.

45,681. Do you think he was advising you to go out in order to make room for one of the brothers ?—Yes, that is what they were going to do; they wanted me to go the first year.

45,682. Were you fully aware that you were under a repairing lease ?—Yes, I knew perfectly well.

45,683. When Mr. Walters, the solicitor, wrote, offering to take up the farm in 1882, without regard to any breaches of contract, and saying that if Mrs. Jones kept on to the end of the lease she would be required to farm strictly according to the terms of the lease, which was a somewhat stringent one; did you not think it would have been best, under those circumstances, to have left the place ?—No, I did not.

45,684. Because he is practically giving you warning that, on the expiration of the agreement if you continue in possession, a claim will be put in for repairs ?—Yes, but I kept things up in accordance with the terms of the lease, as I had received the farm.

45,685. You considered that you were doing your duty really in accordance with the lease ?—Yes.

45,686. When David Davies told you that he considered you kept the buildings very well, you knew pretty well that the place was owned by three persons, and that he was only speaking on his own behalf ?—Yes, certainly I knew.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

45,687. Did Mr. Lloyd and Mr. John Jones, and Mr. Rees Thomas, who were practical men, make a valuation ?—They were practical men, and Mr. Rees Thomas was a valuer.

45,688. These three gentlemen put it down at 12*l.* 14*s.* ?—Mr. Francis gave the particulars of what they wished to have repaired.

45,689. Who gave these three gentlemen the particulars ?—I gave them the particulars, everything that they asked for. I gave the valuers the particulars.

45,690. Practically you were admitting that the place was not kept up by giving particulars of repairs before they were required ?—What they wanted to have done I was willing to do, but they would not let me do it. It was better than paying 33*l.*

45,691. Practically you were admitting that repairs were required ?—No, I did not admit that; it was in the same state as I received it, so far as time and wear and tear were concerned of course.

45,692. What were the particulars you supplied to the valuers ?—There were the particulars which John Francis asked you.

45,693. So far as I can make out your statement is this. You admit that repairs were necessary, but there was a difference as to the estimate ?—I preferred repairing it than that they should go to law about it.

45,694. If you had stayed on another year, would you have been willing to pay the full claim which they made, that is the 33*l.* ?—I should pay that which was reasonable, and then I should have time to put up that which they asked for.

45,695. I understood you to say that you did not admit that there were any repairs required, but that you preferred doing some repairs to going to law ?—Yes, I preferred that to going to law. I considered that I was giving the place back 12 months before the time, and that they were willing to take the place from me without any repairs at all, and that they got the place 12 months earlier.

45,696. You were led to believe that ?—That is what they had told me the year before.

45,697. You believed that ?—Yes.

45,698. What would be the value of the repairs that you were prepared to do if they abstained from going to law ?—About 12*l.*

45,699. How much did they actually want from you at the end ?—The bill that I received amounted to 33*l.* 17*s.*

45,700. What was the 95*l.* ?—The 95*l.* was the sum in the writ.

45,701. What was that for ?—I do not know.

45,702. That bill of 95*l.* when it came to be settled between the solicitors was reduced to 25*l.* ?—Yes.

45,703. You took that as a proof that you were in the right ?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,704. Would you have done the repairs yourself if you had not been told by one of the brothers that he was satisfied with the repairs as they stood?—He told me that they were better than he expected them to be.

45,705. Consequently you did not think it was worth your while to repair anything?—No.

45,706. Then there were five valuers called in to value the repairs. Which of those valuers in your opinion was the fittest to judge?—Mr. John Howell Thomas.

45,707. On what ground do you think he was the fittest?—Because he had seen the place when I received the lease; he had valued it at the time I got the lease.

45,708. Then you consider he was the fittest man to judge, when you left, whether there were any repairs necessary or not?—Yes, he was the most competent man.

45,709. Is it not a fact that valuers generally side with those who employ them?—I cannot say as to that. All of them were strangers to me.

45,710. I do not refer to your case specially now. If you consider he was the fittest man why did you not stick to his valuation of 2*l.*?—I did not care to go to law. I was a woman, and the writ summoned me to Cardiff.

45,711. When you were asked to cart towards building did you not think that it was to get you to go away from the farm?—I thought so.

Lord Kenyon.

45,712. I understand that no details were sent in with respect to that claim of 95*l.* 17*s.*?—No.

45,713. Simply a lump sum?—Yes, nothing but that.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,714. Did you not stay on over the 29th of September?—No, I do not think so. I only remained in the house, there were no cattle or anything of that sort on the land.

Lord Kenyon.

45,715. I have some questions to put to you, one by Dr. Enoch Davies, "Do you not think "these leases and agreements containing such "stringent clauses are hard upon tenant "farmers"?—That lease was rather stringent.

45,716. This is a question by Mr. J. E. Vincent, "Is this the valuation by Mr. Francis, the valuer for Messrs. Davies" [handing same]?—Yes, this is the valuation.

45,717. 33*l.* 17*s.*?—Yes.

45,718. Then Mr. Vincent asks, "In any case, "Mr. Davies asked three times as much as "Mr. Francis, his own valuer. Did he not?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. Enoch Davies re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,719. Do you wish to give rebutting evidence with reference to what the last witness has said?—My Lord, I did not know anything of this until I came into the court. I may say that I came here to-day to attend a Finance Committee. My eldest brother, David Davies, who figures in this case very prominently, has been ill for 12 months with heart disease, and he cannot attend. Will you allow me, therefore, to give my rebutting evidence at Aberayron on Friday, after I have seen him. As I said yesterday, I am quite ignorant of the whole business. The whole management was in the hands of my eldest brother; he bought the farm, and I only came into possession of it afterwards at his request, because it was a heavy burden on him. I was in Glamorganshire.

See 47,611–47,644.

45,720. Is this not the very case that was spoken of yesterday?—Yes.

45,721. There were questions put by Mr. Vincent with reference to it at Newcastle Emlyn?—Yes. I was away in Glamorganshire, and he had the management of the whole business. I do not wish to shirk anything I have done, but it is impossible for me to-day to rebut many of these statements which I believe are not quite correct.

45,722. We will take your rebutting evidence at Aberayron?—Thank you, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 47,611.

Mr. Jonah Watkins called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,723. I believe you wish to rebut the evidence of Mr. John Thomas, tenant farmer of Troedrhiw, Llanfynydd?—Yes.

See 45,056–42,191, and also 72,704–72,905. "See also the evidence of Mr. Thomas and Mr. Watkins on 82nd Day."

45,724. You are agent to Mr. F. A. Gerwyn Jones?—Yes. I wish to rebut the evidence of Mr. John Thomas, Troedrhiw. He said that the rents of this estate were too high. It is a notorious fact that they are very moderately rented, several tenants having prospered and done well; for instance, the former tenant, of Maesyrhaidd, Mr David Davies, deceased, who retired and built himself a house to live in in the village; Mrs. Evans, Cwmbanfawr, &c.,

&c. It is not true that Conservatives and Churchmen are placed in farms in preferment to Nonconformists and Liberals. No question is asked of any applicants for a vacant farm as to their religion or politics. The rabbit warren mentioned by the tenant was made from a plantation chiefly, which was not in his occupation, and about three acres of land were taken to it, part of some fields for which he was allowed 14*l.* a year in his rent.

See 42,059, under "Personal."

45,725. What did he say about the rabbit warren?—He does not mention that anything was allowed for the land taken away, according to the account given in the "Western Mail" and the "South Wales Daily News."

45,726. He said he was not allowed anything for it, and you say he was?—Yes. It is not mentioned in the newspaper that he was allowed for it.

45,727. You do not rebut it?—The inference I draw from the evidence as given in the newspapers, which I wish to rebut, is that he was not paid anything at all for it.

45,728. I will go through his statement and then you will be able to see what you wish to rebut. He said: "I made an agreement with "my landlord and his agent to let them have "7 acres for the purpose of the warren, for "which they were to pay 9*l.* They broke this "contract by taking a great deal more land "than had been originally agreed." ?—That is not so.

45,729. What did you do?—There was a certain amount of land taken to make the warren straight. The principal part of the warren was composed of the plantation which was in the occupation of the landlord.

45,730. How much did you take from him? —I do not think we took more than about 3 acres.

45,731. He says, "I at once pointed this out "to the agent and remonstrated with him for "depriving me of the extra land which was "being enclosed for the warren." Did he do that?—I believe he did.

45,732. "He promised to put matters right, "but did not"?—I put matters right in recommending a higher amount of rent compensation to the tenant than I considered its value, namely, 14*l.*

45,733. Did he go to Pantglas to see his landlord?—I am not sure whether he did or no.

45,734. He says: "The work proceeded in "spite of my objection." Then he says he put the matter in the hands of a solicitor?—I do not remember that.

45,735. "After receiving a letter from the "solicitor the landlord and his agent visited "me and now consented to pay me 14*l.* a year "for the land taken, for 9 acres." He says it was for 9 acres?—It was not so much; I think it was about 3 acres.

45,736. You say you did not take 9 acres?— Yes.

45,737. You say you allowed him 14*l.*, and he says the same. Proceed with your evidence? —The rents were increased slightly from September 1876, according to the nature of the farms, but some were not raised; Ynisceniw was in fact lowered from 80*l.* to 70*l.* a year, being 10*l.* less. It is not true that vacant farms are let to the highest bidder. No advance in rent ever occurred because of the tenants improvements. No direct or indirect pressure was used against tenants in election times. Then, as to Penygoitre, the late tenant, Mr. John Lewis, did not pay his predecessor 160*l.* for goodwill.

See 42,062.

45,738. He says: "He had to pay the out-"going tenant the sum of 160*l. as goodwill.*" You say he did not?—Not to my knowledge.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

45,739. Did he pay the predecessor anything? —The letting being in the hands of the landlord, the outgoing tenant had nothing at all to do with the letting.

45,740. Did the outgoing tenant receive anything from the incoming tenant?—He received the amount of the valuation for certain corn and seeds in the land. The agreement between them was not at the usual time of the year, it occurred in March, and the former tenant had tilled the soil and sown wheat, oats, barley, and things, and the farm was in full profit. He, therefore, paid according to the valuation for those things.

45,741. He says: "He had to pay the out-"going tenant the sum of 160*l.* for goodwill, a "half year's rent 60*l.*, together with 60*l.* odd "for crops sown in land on the valuation, "bringing up the total paid for the said farm "for the first year to 300*l.*" That 60*l.* odd does not agree with your statement?—No.

45,742. You say the whole sum paid was for crops in the land, and manure, and so on?— Yes. When Mr. Lewis left Pengoitre he estimated his loss at 20*l.* owing to the drought of last year. The 20*l.* was allowed to him on final settlement, and we parted the best of friends. It is not true that I as agent ever treated him in a revengeful manner because he had become a Nonconformist. That is my rebutting evidence.

45,743. Treated whom in a revengeful spirit, Mr. Lewis or Mr. Thomas?—Mr. Lewis. It is said in one of the dailies that I treated him in the most revengeful manner because he had turned Nonconformist. I say nothing of the sort.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,744. May I ask you if this rabbit warren referred to was ever measured?—I do not think it was. I have taken my estimate from the ordnance maps; I had a look at them yesterday.

45,745. Has it not been divided since the ordnance map was made?—Yes, since the ordnance map has been published, but I knew where it took place; I took a part of the adjoining field of 3 acres or so marked in the ordnance map as being a rushy field. That was the principal part of the land taken. The others were only little corners to straighten the fence.

45,746. You consider the part taken is only 3 acres?—Yes.

45,747. I see other people differ besides valuers in their estimates. Mr. Thomas considers it to be 9 acres?—Eight acres was mentioned yesterday in the papers for the whole of the warren. I think I am near the mark in saying 3 acres, looking at the map.

45,748. Was the valuation spoken of made by competent valuers?—No, it was not. I valued it myself at 7*l.*, but being a kind of compulsory thing, and as the landlord wished to have the warren, I thought it only fair that the tenant should have an increased allowance. He has been allowed 14*l.* for land which is not worth more than 7*l.* or 8*l.* at any rate.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

See 45,872–45,877.

45,749. Do you deny that 160*l.* was paid for the goodwill?—Certainly not to my knowledge.

45,750. Will you deny it?—I do not think I can.

45,751. If you cannot deny it it is not rebutting evidence?—I do not think he can confirm it either. We are in the same box at all events. He asserts what he cannot know.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,752. Is the matter of the goodwill a likely thing to reach the ears of the landlord?—I should think it would, because the incoming tenant would have a great hardship to complain of; he would require all his resources to stock the land in a proper manner, to stock it properly.

45,753. But does such a thing as a payment for goodwill occur frequently on the estates you are acquainted with?—I have not heard it on our estates.

45,754. Is it not more or less in the nature of a silent agreement between the two tenants?—It is when the old tenant brings in a new tenant.

45,755. Which they would try to keep to themselves?—They would in that case. If a new tenant was brought in by the old tenant, that would not be shown to the landlord or the agent.

45,756. In that case the fact of their not knowing of it is not quite complete evidence, is it?—No it is not quite, I admit.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,757. I do not quite understand about this rabbit warren. The statement of Mr. Thomas was: "It occupies about 8 acres of my land, "passing through the middle of four fields and "depriving me of one entire field, the best and "most convenient for my use on the farm." Is that true?—Not quite. It takes about half of a field over 3 acres—one half of that field which is a rushy field. It is marked in the ordnance map as being rushy. Then there are corners taken off two or three other fields, so as to make the fencing straight 45,758. Then he goes on to say: "I had given "to this field five cart loads of lime before I "thus lost it, for which I had never had a "farthing by way of compensation." Is that true?—I cannot say.

45,759. He continues: "I made an agreement "with my landlord and his agent to let them "have 7 acres for the purpose of the warren, for "which they were to pay 9*l.* They broke this "contract by taking a great deal more land than "had been originally agreed." I do not understand, if this was really 7 acres that was agreed to be given up, how it could be suggested to be only 3 acres?—He is wrong. There was no 7 acres agreed to be given up.

45,760. Supposing it was only 3 acres, is not 9*l.* a very large rent for 3 acres?—It is a very large rent. We consider that he ought to be allowed something extra, it being a compulsory taking from him, and that he should be allowed a sum not according to the value of the land only.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

45,761. Was it 14*l.* a year or 14*l.* down which you paid for it?—14*l.* a year.

45,762. He says it was for 9 acres and you say it was for 3?—Yes.

45,763. That would be 14*l.* odd per year for that which you took?—Yes.

45,764. I suggest that there must be some mistake on the map or something or other; I mean it seems to me as if you are not speaking exactly of the same thing?—I think I have examined it pretty carefully, and I am quite within the mark in stating it at 3 acres.

45,765. But according to the reading of this, all he charges you with taking over is what was agreed to be taken over, or rather he says that he has occupied 8 acres and you agreed to take seven, so that there was only 1 acre too much taken?—There was only one taking of land to form the warren, namely, half of this rushy field and little corners of the others to make the fence straight.

45,766. I do not quite understand?—I say it was about three acres, and I think that is within the mark.

45,767. The total amount taken?—Yes, half of this rushy field that we took comprised 3·1 something acres in the Ordnance map, and having taken half of that field, that would be under 2 acres, and then I put on afterwards say an acre for the little corners.

45,768. He says he agreed with you to take seven acres for 9*l.* a year?—There was no acreage mentioned at all; it was only mentioned from point to point to answer the fences; the quantity of land was not mentioned.

45,769. I think there must be some mistake. The two things do not seem at all to agree?—Not as to acreage.

Mr. Grove.

45,770. He says he made an agreement with his landlord and agent. You are the agent referred to, I suppose.

45,771. Were you on the spot, and did you talk the matter over with John Thomas?—I walked every step of it over with him myself, I think.

45,772. And you pointed out certain boundaries where you said you wanted the rabbit warren to come?—Yes.

45,773. And you say that that was only 3 acres?—Yes.

45,774. And you allowed him 14*l.*?—Yes.

45,775. You thought that would be a most liberal allowance?—7*l.* I originally proposed and to make him satisfied, I thought I had better give him something extra, because it was taking it for the landlord.

45,776. You say that when you pointed out the boundaries, no mention of acreage was made?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,777. Do you deny that tenants are asked to stay at home at election times?—Not to my knowledge. I never asked him at all, and I am not aware that Mr. Jones, the landlord, did so either. I am sure that I did not ask him. I never interfered in any election.

45,778. You never asked anyone?—No; and I never canvassed the estate for votes in any shape or form.

45,779. Does anyone else on the estate, do you know?—Not to my knowledge.

45,780. With regard to their attending church, do you deny that they are ever asked to attend church instead of chapel?—Certainly. There is perfect freedom allowed with regard to religion as well as politics. I am sure Mr. Jones would be the last man in the world to compel any of his tenants to attend at any particular form or place of worship.

45,781. Mr. John Thomas, in his evidence, said: "When I took Troedyrhiw, the landlord, the late "Mr. John Jones, Blaenos, ex M.P. for Carmar- "thenshire, made me promise to go to church, as "I was leaving Cwmdu, my old farm, and would "not therefore find it so hard to leave the "Independents." Do you deny that?—I cannot tell you. Mr. John Jones has been dead for some years, and I cannot say that he said that; but I think it is very unlike Mr. John Jones.

45,782. Are you in a position to deny that others besides Mr. Thomas had been asked to stay at home at election times?—I am not in a position to deny it, because I do not know who did it. I did not do so.

45,783. He named several instances, as follows: Lewis, Pengoitre; Stephen Evans, Cwmfelin fach; William Morgan, Nantgwilw; and James Simpson, Cwm?—Who asked them to stay at home? Who did he say did so?

45,784. I am not here to answer questions?—No; but I am asking what am I to rebut in his statement. I did not see it in the papers, so that I do not know the evidence.

45,785. That is what I ask you to rebut now; that these men were not asked to stay at home at election times?—I do rebut it. No one was asked to stay at home according to my instructions, nor according to Mr. Jones' knowledge. I cannot say what Mr. Jones did when he was at home. Mr. Jones is from home now.

Lord Kenyon.

45,786. I have some questions to put to you, handed in by Mr. John Thomas, Troedrhiw. "Is it not the fact that Pengoitre has been "recently let to a Churchman?"—It is.

45,787. "Is it not a fact that Nonconformists, "some of whom were good tenants on the "estate, applied for this farm in vain?"—Several Nonconformists and Churchmen applied for this farm.

45,788. "But is it not a fact that Whitlera "has also been given to a Churchman in "preference to Nonconformist applicants?"—It is given to a Churchman, but not in preference. It is given to a man who is a good practical farmer.

45,789. "Is it not a fact that both Pengoitre "and Whitlera have been let to strangers on "the estate?"—Pengoitre has not. Pengoitre has been let to a former tenant. He removed from one farm to the other. As for Whitlera, it is his father again who occupies that, and I knew of him years before that.

45,790. "Are not these two new tenants father "and son"?—Yes, they are father and son.

45,791. "Is it not a fact that you told "John Lewis, late tenant of Pengoitre, that "your own political party found fault with "you for showing any favours to Noncon- "formists?"—I cannot say whether I did so or not. I might have done so. I will not deny it, or say that I did do so. I do not remember.

45,792. Does that go to prove that you showed favours to Nonconformists?—I believe I did; in fact, some of the tenants complained that to be a Nonconformist on the estate one would have a better advantage a great deal than to be a Churchman.

45,793. Mr. John Thomas' questions continued:—"What made you evict one sister from "Esgairgrynddu and put in another sister in her "place?"—Because I consider that the eldest sister was the more capable of managing the farm; the other one was not of age, and the farm was too much for her to manage according to my opinion, and a smaller farm would have suited her better. See 39,742A.

45,794. "Are you not in the habit of boasting "that you never let a farm to a new tenant "without an advance in rent?"—Certainly not. During the past year I have not recommended Mr. Jones to do so, nor have I advanced one single farm.

45,795. "Is it not a fact that on one occasion "when a tenant was asking for an abatement "you said you did not care what condition a "farm was in provided you got the rent?"—It is not true.

45,796. "Is it not a fact that you paid for a "large quantity of drink to the persons who "attended the packed vestry to decide about "the warren on Troedrhiw farm?"—Not a single penny.

45,797. "Can you or anyone belonging to the "Pantglas estate show what direction the new "road takes over my fields." That is John Thomas' fields?—Yes, I walked over with him myself.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,798. I should like to ask you a question upon a rather difficult subject; would you give us an idea of the ages of those two sisters, or the age of one of them. What would be about the age of the eldest sister that you let the farm to?—It is a very difficult thing to give the age of a lady, but I will simply say about the youngest that she was not of age, and she was unmarried.

45,799. The eldest one was married?—She was married at the time, but the youngest, I consider, was too young to take the management of the farm at the time.

Lord Kenyon.

45,800. Did you let it to the other sister and her husband?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,801. Did you turn one out in order to put the other in?—No, the youngest sister never was tenant. The only thing was her father had made a will willing some of the stock, and so on, to her, in fact, willing the tenancy of the farm to his youngest daughter, and he had no right to do that.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,802. That would seem to indicate that he considered her up to the mark, would it not, so far as his judgment went?—Well, I suppose so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,803. What was the size of the farm?—Indeed, I do not know. I have not been able to refer to the acreage of it now.

45,804. Would it be 50 acres now?—Oh, dear, yes.

45,805. Or 100?—If I had known it was to be gone into I should have referred to the rent and acreage of it.

45,806. Had she any brother?—I think not. It is so customary when a death occurs among the tenants for the eldest son to succeed to the tenancy of the farm, provided he is capable of taking it.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,807. You see, Mr. Watkins, it might prove a greater hardship to turn out an unmarried sister than the sister who was married, and who probably had some place to live in already. It might be so, and are you quite sure it was not so in this case?—It was not a hardship in this case for this reason, that they exchanged places. The younger sister took the farm of the elder sister, which was a smaller one than Esgairgrynddn. She was more able to manage that.

45,808. What was the feeling of the younger sister; did she consider it a hardship. You might not consider it a hardship, but what was her feeling?—I did not ask her.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,809. With regard to the road question, was it a packed vestry?—Not to my knowledge. I was not present.

45,810. Was the question carried forward to the quarter sessions as to the closing or alteration of the road?—I believe it was; I am not quite sure.

45,811. Because a vestry has not power, I think, to change the line of a road without its going to quarter sessions?—I think everything was done in a legal manner about it at the time.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 82nd Day.

Mr. JOHN THOMAS recalled and further examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

Previously examined at Qu. 42,056–42,191. See also 72,704–72,905.

45,812. Have you heard the evidence of Mr. Watkins?—Yes.

45,813. Is there anything you wish to say upon that evidence?—It is, in my opinion, entirely incorrect with regard to the rabbit warren.

45,814. What have you to say about the rabbit warren?—That a good deal more land than he admits has gone.

45,815. How much land do you say it is?—He showed, according to the first agreement in the books, that it was seven acres.

45,816. Have you that document?—Mr. Watkins had the books and the names of the fields.

45,817. But you deny what he says about the acreage. Do you know the place of your own knowledge?—The warren?

45,818. Yes?—Yes, it is in the middle of my farm

45,819. Part was taken before you took the farm?—The plantations were there.

45,820. Have you anything else to say. Do you admit that 14*l.* was given you as allowance for this land?—That was what I stated in my original evidence.

45,821. Have you anything more to say?—I wish some of the Commissioners to come to see it, or to have it measured. It is not three acres, nor six acres, but more.

45,822–4. One says it was three, and the other says it was nine. You agree as to the 14*l.* reduction. Have you anything further to say?—He turned the parish road through my farm without giving me a penny compensation, and without letting me know a word about it. He went to hold a vestry in the village; he did not call at my house, but he called in the house of the vicar, which is on the other side of the road, opposite my house.

45,825. I understood Mr. Watkins to say that he went over the road with you?—He never mentioned a word to me about the road. I wish further to say that Mr. Watkins gave drink to the value of 5*s.* on the afternoon that the vestry was held.

45,826. Do you understand that Mr. Watkins denies that?—There is a man here who drank part of it, and who was there with them.

45,827. Have you anything more to state?—I have receipts here showing that I paid taxes or rates up to this time, as I showed the rate books at Carmarthen. (The witness handed in receipts.)

45,828. I do not think Mr. Watkins said that you did not. We are upon rebutting evidence now, you understand?—He was not asked, otherwise, perhaps, he would deny it.

45,829. We are confining you now to rebutting Mr. Watkins' evidence?—I have nothing further to add so far as I know. Mr. Lewis, of Pengoitre, is here.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,830. Do you still adhere to your statement that tenants are asked to go to church?—I was asked to.

Lord Kenyon.

45,831. By Mr. Watkins?—No, by Mr. John Jones, of Blaenos, when he promised me the holding.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,832. Also with regard to going to the poll at election times, that they are asked to stop at home?—The present landlord. Mr. Gerwyn Jones, asked myself not to go to vote, and I stayed away.

45,833. Can you call this man as a witness as to who paid for this beer that was drunk?—Mr. Lewis is here, and it was rumoured among those who were there.

45,834. Will he come forward and give evidence?—I have heard him say this several times, and this would be the first time for him to deny it.

Mr. Grove.

45,835. When the landlord and the agent walked over the land with you about the warren, did they say anything to you with regard to the acreage?—Mr. Watkins made the first agreement with me. It was then that he showed me the acreage. When they enclosed the land they tried to make as much again as was in the agreement. They had had five posts and wires.

45,836. You say that they showed you the acreage. Do you mean the acreage, or the land without mentioning the acreage?—He had the book, and there was about an acre of it left behind in the first agreement.

45,837. You say that this book shows that this land was 7 acres or more. Where have you seen that book. How do you know that?—Mr. Watkins had a book with the names of the fields, and he himself worked out the sum, and found it to be about 7 acres.

45,838. The 14*l.* a year was allowed after you sent him a lawyer's letter, was it not?—Mr. Jones, and he came to me, and we settled nicely the second time.

45,839. Yes; but did you send a lawyer's letter first?—Yes, Mr. W. M. Griffiths, of Carmarthen, wrote on my behalf.

45,840. You were quite satisfied with an allowance of 14*l.*, were you?—Yes, but I did not intend to pay taxes for them.

Lord Kenyon.

45,841. On that particular piece of land?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,842. But had you to pay taxes on it?—I was unable to receive the assistance of the assistant overseer, who had been an old agent, to get them cleared off.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,843. To get them removed from the witness's account—not cleared off?—Yes, to get them removed from my account.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,844. You had your remedy. Why did you not go to the Assessment Committee?—I considered that I could not go to them without the assistance of the clerk to the parish.

45,845. Eventually you got what you wanted, I understand?—I do not understand the question.

45,846. You have got your rates reduced, as you wish?—Yes, after I paid for over three years for land in the occupation of my landlord.

Lord Kenyon.

45,847–8. I think it would be more satisfactory if we could have this warren measured. I daresay Mr. Watkins will have it measured.

Mr. Watkins. Yes.

Witness.

I should like Lord Kenyon to see the warren himself; that would be more satisfactory.

Lord Kenyon.

45,849–50. I am afraid I have not got the time to go and measure it, but you and Mr. Watkins, I should think, might measure it between you.

Witness.

If Lord Kenyon wishes to have perfect fair play between me and the landlord he should see it himself.

Lord Kenyon.

45,851. I hope they can both be trusted to measure a field?—I should think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,852. Are we to understand that when this ground was actually marked out, they took twice as much land as they had agreed to (that would be 14 acres), or are we to understand that it was that they had taken much more of it?—I do not follow the question.

45,853. I think you said just now that they had taken twice the quantity of land when they went to fence it out. Are we to understand that that would be 14 acres, or are we to understand that they took more land?—What they did was, they went much further up, and filled up the original holes.

45,854. Do you mean to say that they took 14 acres instead of 7 acres—that it was twice as much?—No. What he himself said when we were settling it the second time was that it was between 8 and 9 acres.

Lord Kenyon.

45,855. No doubt that will be measured. Will you ask the gentleman who says he drank the beer whether he will come and tell us what he said?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 82nd Day.

Mr. John Lewis called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

45,856. Did you drink beer at anybody else's expense on a certain occasion?—It is some years since then. I cannot remember. I cannot say.

45,857. Then you do not know who paid for that beer?—I cannot take my oath who paid for it, but Mr. Watkins' people—"Pobl Mr. Watkins"—paid for part of it.

45,858. Perhaps they drank it. Did they drink what they paid for?—You misunderstood me. I did not say Mr. Watkins' people. There were some people drinking beer, and it is just possible that Mr. Watkins gave some to them in his turn when they happened to be at the vestry.

45,859. Did you hear Mr. Watkins deny the question asked by Mr. Thomas, and say that he had never paid for any beer?—I never spoke with Mr. Thomas about the beer before.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,860. Did you tell Thomas that Mr. Watkins had given 5*s.* to buy beer?—No, never.

Mr. Griffiths.

45,861. Did you ever tell anyone else?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

45,862. I have a question to put which is handed in by Mr. Watkins: "Did you see "Watkins pay the 5*s.* for the beer"?—No, I say, as I said before, that I did not see him—that I cannot prove it on oath.

45,863. "Secondly, did the witness see Mr. "Watkins present at any vestry in Llan-"fynydd"?—That is going too remote; I am not quite sure of it. Of course Mr. Watkins has been, and he cannot deny but that he has been there.

Professor Rhŷs.

45,864. About how many people were present at this particular vestry, do you remember?—There were more present at that vestry than was general, inasmuch as the road was going to be turned out of its course.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

45,865. Diverted?—Yes, diverted.

45,866. Is it usual to have beer at vestries? Every vestry that I attended, if the vicar or clergyman of the parish was there, he gave 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* to get beer.

45,867. It is the usual thing in that parish?—Every time I have been there. I have been there for 12 years, but of course I did not attend the vestry every year.

45,868. But it is the usual thing?—Every time that I was there.

45,869. Do they have the beer before the vestry begins, or in the course of it, or at the end?—After the vestry is over.

45,870. Have you any temperance societies in that parish?—Yes.

45,871. What do they do?—Persuade them not to drink. I wish to say something about Pengoitre. I was the tenant of Pengoitre.

Lord Kenyon.

45,872. I do not think we can take any more evidence now from you. We must go on. Do you wish to rebut anything in Mr. Watkins' evidence?—I do not rebut, but Mr. Watkins said that he did not know that I had given 160*l.* See 45,749–45,756.

45,873. Do you say that you had given 160*l.* as goodwill?—Yes.

45,874. Then you agreed with the outgoing tenant without the intervention of the landlord?—No.

45,875. Then why did you pay any goodwill?—Because the agent wished me to do so, because he was willing that Mr. Harries, the former tenant, should make an auction.

45,876. What Mr. Watkins said was that the 160*l.* was paid for the seeds and stuff in the ground, and manures, and so forth at a valuation?—Those were 60*l.*

45,877. Do you say that something over and above that was paid for goodwill?—Only 160*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Watkin Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

45,878. You are Mr. John Watkin Davies, and you live at Llangybi Mill, Derry Ormond, Lampeter?—Yes.

45,879. You have a statement to make, I think. Will you read it?—I should like to say one word before I read my statement. It is not my own statement; it has been prepared by 31 tenants of the Derry Ormond estate, and they have asked me to come here to prove everything that they have to say.

45,880. You come here as the spokesman for 31 tenants?—Yes.

45,881. You are a tenant yourself?—Yes, my lord.

The following statement of the witness was then read:— See 48,849–48,882 and 73,543–73,644.

I live at Llangybi Mill, Derry Ormond, Lampeter, in the county of Cardigan, and am a tenant farmer, and a member of the Cardiganshire County Council. I am a tenant of the Derry Ormond estate, under Wilmot Inglis Jones, Esquire. As a rule, the tenancy in this country is an annual one, and takings upon these conditions are considered very restrictive. There is, therefore, a widespread desire for leases. The tenants in this district do not derive any benefit from the Agricultural

Holdings Act, as the landlords, without exception, introduce contracting out clauses in their agreements. The tenants, I believe, are generally furnished with a copy of the agreement. The custom of tenant right or goodwill over and above the customary valuation does not exist in this district, and the outgoing tenants, therefore, suffer a very material loss. There is a considerable difficulty in getting the landlord to execute permanent improvements, as they only repair or build houses when absolutely compelled to do so, and, owing to their refusal to rebuild or repair many old buildings, a large number of tenants have found themselves obliged to give up their holdings, and thus leave their houses. The tenants often make the drains, raise hedges, plant trees, and repair a great deal of the buildings at their own expense. When improvements are effected by the landlord, interest is charged in respect thereof, often at 4*l.* per cent., but there is no established rate, and after such improvements the rents are raised in almost every case without exception. When buildings or other improvements are effected by the landlord, the tenants have always to do the cartage, and they are never allowed any compensation in respect thereof. To my knowledge there has been a general rise in the rents throughout the district, but there appears to have been no settled scale, for example, Olmarchganol has been raised from 66*l.* to 90*l.*, Tynddreinen from 11*l.* to 15*l.*, Llettycybi from 25*l.* to 32*l.*, Cilgwyn uchaf from 42*l.* to 70*l.*, Glandulas from 50*l.* to 70*l.*, as well as several other farms, and the rent of Cilgwyn uchaf was raised after the tenant had erected a stable, dairy, and a boundary hedge, and the Olmarchganol rent after a dwelling-house had been erected. On the Derry Ormond estate reductions were made in the rents in 1885, to some 5*l.* per cent., to others 10*l.*; however, no reduction whatever was made to a large number. At the two last audits 10*l.* per cent. was returned, but not to all. I am not aware of any landlord requiring their tenants to render them services besides paying the rents. I think that a sliding scale for rent to vary with prices of produce would be greatly appreciated, but I am not aware of any scheme to that effect. There has been a great reduction in the prices of agricultural produce of late years; corn has fallen from 8*s.* to 5*s.* per bushel, cattle from 40*l.* to 50*l.* per cent., horses 10*l.* to 20*l.* per cent., sheep 50*l.* per cent., pigs 20*l.* per cent., wool 70 per cent., and butter between 3*d.* and 4*d.* per lb. As to tithes, our landlords, after the passing of the Act, now pay them, but they have raised the rents proportionately. In my opinion, the tithes should be utilised for elementary education and old-age pensions. The consolidation of the holdings has been very detrimental generally, and there have been cases in the district, for instances, Derry Ormond, Glanbrechan, and Llwynboli. The letting of several holdings to the same tenant is not very common, but there are cases in this district, such as Pantyrhew (90 acres), Hendreplwyf (80 acres), and Pantyrhendy (60 acres), Brynblodau (66 acres), and Penbrin (33 acres), and in such cases tenants cannot produce such large crops as otherwise, owing to their not keeping a sufficient number of labourers on farms. The labourers are, as a rule, very badly housed, but there are some improvements latterly, and gardens are attached to their cottages, but no allotment. There is a plentiful supply of labourers, but the number has now decreased owing to the inability of the farmers to pay them, and they have therefore left for districts where they receive better pay. To my own knowledge many farmhouses and cottages have fallen into ruins, such as Longwood, Tancoedcanol, Penlone, Erw, Cilgwynbach, Penporth, Tanyporth, Tycam, Castell, Tycanol, Llwynboli, Brechan, Penllunan, Penrhiw, Maesfelinfach, and many besides. On large estates to get small plots of land for building farmhouses and labourers' cottages, is almost out of the question. All the farms in this district are let, and there is no land going out of cultivation. Land has also been reclaimed in this district, but by the tenant, and at his own expense. The compulsory enclosure of common is also a great hardship to labourers, especially as many are thereby deprived of the means of keeping a cow. The Bettws Bledrws Common in this district, comprising 52a. 1r. 24p., was enclosed under those circumstances, and no reduction in their rents were allowed to any of the tenants who had had right of pasture. A right of pasturage on any common land increase the annual value of a farm, and when any farms having such rights are usually stated to be worth so and so. As to game, &c., rabbits, in my neighbourhood, are extensively bred in a warren and in the woods, and are also permitted to breed in large numbers on cultivated land. The tenants have a right to kill rabbits, but they retire to the preserves where the tenants are not allowed to follow them, neither are they allowed to use a gun or a net by the hedges surrounding the woods. The rabbits commit most damage during night time, and the landlord does not compensate for damage done, but gives his tenants to understand that they ought to consider themselves lucky that there were rabbits, &c. on their land. The pheasants commit enormous damage, as they often practically consume the whole produce of fields, and, as a rule, no compensation is paid, though occasionally a little is allowed to the tenant, but nothing approaching the loss sustained. The gamekeepers, again, do a great deal of damage, especially by trespassing over the corn, and they are quite heedless of the complaints of the tenants. They also poison dogs and cats at every opportunity; 14 dogs were killed in one year, but the number of cats is innumerable. They often shoot on Sundays as well. By destroying the dogs and the cats the farmers are suffering, owing to the increase in the vermin. Cwm farm lost a sheep dog value 10*l.*, and Cilgwynuchaf also one value 10*l.* There are instances of portions of farms having been converted into game farms, such as Cilgwyn Tancoed and Olmarchisaf. This is an advantage to the surrounding farms, as the rabbits are kept in, and therefore not as much damage is done to the corn. The tenants, as a rule, are afraid to take advantage of the Ground Game Act, and they would wish the right to kill the ground game to be theirs, and not the landlord's. I believe an Act similar to the Irish Land Act, to enable purchasers to borrow money at a less rate of interest, and to include properties already mortgaged, would be very beneficial, as I know of several who have bought their farms and pay more interest on the mortgages than they used to pay for rent, but they were obliged to buy their farms or lose their houses. As a rule, the tenants' children work at home without receiving wages besides their keep and expenses, for the majority of farmers cannot afford to pay the rent and also pay wages to their children, and I know of many instances where children employed from home assist their parents to pay the rent, and they are often also compelled to borrow money to meet the rent. Politics and religion are also brought into account more or less, and being a Nonconformist is rather a disadvantage, but I do not know of any evictions latterly; however, those of 1868 are well remembered. The estate agents, according to the general opinion, too often manage the estates in such a way as to interfere with the harmonius relation between the landlords and their tenants, but of course this is a matter not easy of proof. In my opinion the farmers are greatly handicapped by the excessive railway rates, and which should be very much reduced, and the establishing of a farmers' parcel post would probably be a great boon. I know of instances where estate agents interfere with the votes of tenants at Parliamentary and other elections. I produce a letter sent by an agent to a tenant of the Derry Ormond Estate.

45,882. Have you that letter?—I have a copy of it. It is as follows:—

"Derry Ormond Estate Office,

"Sir, October 2, 1868.

"I am given to understand that you and Mr. Oliver as been about selecting votes for Mr. Richards among the Derry Ormond tenants. What business have you to interfeer with the Tenants on the Derry Estate, and I trust you will not do so again. But mind your own business. If not I will mind you before the 24th of next March. I am now desired to tell you, from Mr. Jones, that he expects you to vote at the coming election for his cousin Mr. E. M. Vaughan, and if you refuses to do so you will have to leave, and all others that refuse to vote according to Mr. Jones's wish.

"Sir, Yours truly,

"To Rees Jones, William Cotterell.

"Voelallt Factory,

"Llanddewi brefi."

I was asked to write to my landlord to put the highway from Bettws Bledrws to several farms and on to Llangeitho in repair. I, as Vestry Clerk, wrote accordingly, and I produce his reply. The road is a public one, and funerals have gone over it for ages.

Sir John Llewelyn.

45,883. The letter you put in is dated 1868, I see?—Yes.

45,884. That is before the passing of the Ballot Act?—I believe so.

45,885. Have you a copy to put in of an agreement which is a contracting-out of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes. (Witness handed in agreement.)

45,886. The last paragraph of this agreement is "The terms and provisions of the Agricultural "Holdings Act (England), 1883, are not to "apply to this tenancy"?—Yes.

45,887. That is the paragraph to which you refer?—Yes.

45,888. That is with regard to the six months' notice only, I think?—I do not know; I am not quite sure.

45,889. Are you aware that the provisions of the Act, with that exception, cannot be contracted-out of. Is that so?—I do not know; we were put under the impression that they could contract out of it altogether.

45,890. Does the landlord on your estate refuse to rebuild or repair the old buildings?—In many instances.

45,891. What repairs does the landlord do?—Repairing old houses.

45,892. When the landlord does do any repairs, if he thinks they are necessary, does that extend to the dwelling-house, taking that first. If he thinks it necessary, does he sometimes do the repairs of the dwelling-house?—I do not know of any instance where he has repaired any house before he has been written to by the sanitary authority.

45,893. Are there instances where the tenant has done this?—The landlord generally does it then.

45,894. Does the tenant ever do those repairs?—Oh, yes, but not to a great extent.

45,895. You have given some instances of rents having been raised in Olmarchganol, Tynddreinen, Llettycybi, and Cilgwyn uchaf?—Yes.

45,896. And also Glandulas and other farms. When was it that those rents were raised?—About 1870, but they were not all raised in the same year.

45,897. About that time?—About that time. I may further state that Glandulas has been raised from 50*l.* to 92*l.*, but it has been reduced afterwards to 70*l.*

45,898. You told us later on that there had been some more recent reductions?—Yes.

45,899. That is to say abatements. Were any increases of rent made in consequence of any buildings that were done?—No.

45,900. But I suppose the houses were in good repair, otherwise the rents could not have been raised?—Some of them were bad, and they have been reported almost as untenantable now.

45,901. Are there any foxhounds in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

45,902. Is it customary for the tenants to walk any puppies?—A few of them.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

45,903. Is that looked upon as being an onerous burden?—No, I do not think so. We have only one tenant doing so in the parish.

45,904. You have given some instances of two farms being held together. Do you hold two farms?—No.

45,904A. You hold one?—Yes.

45,905. You have given instances in which two farms are held by the same tenant?—More than two.

45,906. More than two sometimes. Do you think that is a good thing or a bad thing?—A bad thing.

45,907. I see that the acreage which you quote is rather small?—They were the sizes of the farms.

45,908. In one instance 33 acres is added to 66, but that only brings it to 99 on the whole?—Yes, but there were good buildings on both.

45,909. In such a case where there are good buildings on both, what becomes of the buildings on the second holding?—In some instances farm labourers are put in there.

45,910. So that the agricultural population is not diminished by the consolidation?—Not in all cases, but in some; in the case of the two farms you quoted, for instance, one of the holdings is not occupied. The houses are empty.

45,911. Do you think the object of consolidation is to save expenses in buildings?—No, I do not.

45,912. So as to allow the second of the two lots of buildings to fall down?—It may be in some cases.

45,913. It may be only in some cases, but not in all cases?—There is Derry Ormond, for instance.

Mr. Grove.

45,914. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Very little.

45,915. Do you think if a summary of that were printed in Welsh that it might be very useful for farmers, so that they could understand it better?—No, not very much, if they would have to contract out of it.

45,916. Yes, but without contracting out of it. There are two clauses that are very important, Clause 33 as to the six months' or 12 months' notice, and Clause 55 which does not allow them to contract out of it except on certain specified conditions. It says that any agreement contracting out of it, except for those matters, would be void both at law and in equity?—Yes, but of course the landlord forces the tenant to contract out of it.

45,917. Your impression then, and the impression of your friends, is that those words would enable you to contract out of it altogether?—Yes, or if they would refuse to contract out of it that the tenant and the landlord would not be good terms.

45,918. Have you any farmers' club in your neighbourhood?—No.

45,919. You have no co-operation, then, amongst the farmers, have you?—Not at all.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,920. Would it not be desirable to have something of that sort, so that you could get these Acts of Parliament?—Yes, it would be very.

45,921. And you could put your heads together and try and understand them well. Do you complain of improvements being made and proper compensation not being given for them on certain occasions?—Yes.

45,922. Abatements are made by some of the landlords, are they not?—Yes, in most cases.

45,923. Do they make abatements to all the tenants on the same estate?—No, not to all. They are given more to the large farmers than to the small farmers.

45,924. Who is it that settles the question as to who is to have the abatement?—I cannot say whether it is the agent or the landlord.

45,925. But we have had complaints that in some cases there is a little bit of favouritism about this, and that some tenants get abatements and others do not get abatements. Do you think that exists at all?—Yes, very often.

45,926. When you have abatements is any notice given of it?—It is notified in the notice of the rent.

45,927. How soon do you get that notice before the pay day?—Sometimes about seven days.

45,928. Not more than that?—No.

45,929. Would you like to have notice a month or six weeks before?—It is generally held about the same time of the year, so that we know when it does come.

45,930. Do you think there is enough labour on the land now?—No.

45,931. Is that because the depression in the farming industry prevents the farmers from finding the money to pay the men?—Yes, it is mostly due to that.

45,932. Do you think that there are sufficient cottages to carry more labour on the land?—No, cottages have been allowed to go into ruin to a great extent about this district.

45,933. Yes, but who used to occupy those cottages before they went into ruin, farm labourers?—Yes.

45,934. Then there is no demand for them now. Do you think that arises from the depression of agriculture?—Yes.

45,935. Is there much damage by game?—Yes, the estate is overrun with game—the farms that abound with plantations.

45,936. Have you got fair compensation—compensation that satisfies you for the damage that the game does to you?—No, no compensation at all except in very few instances.

45,937. So you think that is a grievance, do you?—It is a grievance.

45,938. And a loss?—Yes, a great loss.

45,939. You have mentioned another point. You say you think that the parcels post could be made use of for farmers. What do you think a farmer could do through the parcels post? Let us have your ideas on that subject?—I know of some farmers who have been sending their butter away to London during the last winter, but of course they had to buy new boxes each time to send it away every week, and that was a great drawback.

45,940. What are the boxes made of?—I think they are made of cardboard, I am not quite sure.

45,941. Then it would be much cheaper to buy a new box than to try to get the old one back?—Yes.

45,942. It may interest you to know that one of our Commissioners sells a great deal of butter through the post every week, and another of our Commissioners buys it from him, although they live nearly 300 miles apart. Do you think if that was carried out a little more it might be useful to farmers?—Very useful.

45,943. Then we must turn our attention to that. As to railway rates; do you grumble at the railway rates?—Very much.

45,944. Do you mean the low rates for foreign produce, or do you mean the local railway rates?—We complain of both.

45,945. You do not know whether the railway companies charge you more than they are enabled to charge you by the Act of Parliament, do you?—I cannot say that, but I will give you an instance. Derry Ormond Station is two miles and a few yards from Lampeter Station. There is one train run for passengers, for which they charge you 2½*d.*, but all the other trains are charged 4*d.*

45,946-7. But you refer to passengers' fare?—Yes.

45,948. You are not speaking of goods?—I mean passengers and goods as well.

Sir John Llewelyn.

45,949. I suppose you are not a shareholder in the Manchester and Milford Railway Company?—No, or I would be a great loser.

Mr. Grove.

45,950. Can you give me an illustration of the price they charge for conveying goods from one point to the other?—Yes. If you send a truck of cattle from here to Cirencester, in Gloucestershire, the charge is 5*s.* a head. When they are booked from Cork to the same place the charge is 4*s.* a head.

45,951. That is competition with goods that are imported. I am referring to the question of your own local rates. You have not got an instance in your mind at the moment, have you?—I have another instance. A small hamper was sent from Malvern Link on the Great Western, and they could not book it further than Pencader, and the charge was 9*d.* up to there, and from Pencader up to Derry Ormond it was 1*s.* 3*d.*

45,952. So that it was 9*d.* for as much as about 150 miles from Malvern Link, and it was 1*s.* 3*d.* for the short distance from Pencader to Derry Ormond?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

45,953. What do you say the hamper contained?—Various things.

45,954. Dynamite?—No. I can say there were apples.

45,955. It was fruit?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

45,956. I will look that matter up.

Mr. Seebohm.

45,957. You gave other instances of rise in rents?—Yes.

45,958. I want to know how you got the figures—direct from the farmers or from the rate-book?—Direct from the farmers.

Mr. Richard Jones.

45,959. You say, Mr. Davies, that there is a widespread desire for leases?—Yes.

45,960. What are we to understand that to imply; is it simply that the tenants are anxious for security of tenure?—Not so much.

45,961. Are landlords reluctant to grant leases if any application is made to them?—They have refused.

45,962. Have they stated the reason why they have refused?—No, only that they would not grant them.

45,963. Do you approve of the custom of tenant-right or goodwill?—Yes, to a certain extent.

45,964. Do you want anything more than compensation for unexhausted improvements?—Nothing more if we are not entitled to more.

45,965. What more are you entitled to? You have no right to more, have you, if you get full compensation for unexhausted improvements? Do you want to sell the interest in the farm?—No, I am against that.

45,966. Of course that would be in the interests of the tenants themselves, because, practically, it would resolve itself into a question of competition rent if the outgoing tenant is allowed to sell his interest in the holding?—Of course we are against a tenant being allowed to sell his interest.

45,967. What do you mean by saying in your summary that "It is a hardship if the tenant "does not get goodwill"?—We do not know of any instance where a tenant has been paid the full extent for the improvements that he had made on his farm.

45,968. But provided that he got full compensation for any unexhausted improvements, do you think that he would be perfectly satisfied?—Yes, to a certain extent.

45,969. And you think that the Agricultural Holdings Act does not provide for that?—No, it does not.

45,970. What is there faulty about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I am not so well acquainted with it.

45,971. I suppose it is inoperative; it does not work in this district; it is not made use of?—No, it is a dead letter in our district.

45,972. I suppose it has got into bad repute, and it does not satisfy the tenants, and then they do not utilise it?—No, and if they would force it, of course they would be on bad terms with their landlords.

45,973. Do you think that a tenant would not care about asking his landlord's consent to carry out any improvement under the first schedule of the Act?—No.

45,974 He would be afraid that he would be incurring the landlord's displeasure?—Yes.

45,975. What about drainage; where drainage is carried out by the tenant, does he send notice to the landlord?—No.

45,976. Are the tenants aware that it is necessary in order to obtain compensation?—Yes, some of them are aware.

45,977. And still they carry out drainage work; they make drains when they are fully aware that, unless they comply with the provision of the Act, they will not get any compensation; is that so?—Well, they are not aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

45,978. Do you think that if they were aware they would make use of it?—In some instances, I daresay.

45,979. Have you ever seen it yourself?—No.

45,980. Have you had no desire to see it?—I know that it would not operate on our estate, so that I do not care so much about seeing it.

45,981. How are the tenant farmers in your district in regard to matters of that sort; are they alive to their own interests?—No.

45,982. They are very dull?—They are very dull because they have no spirit. They have had to pay such big rents.

45,983. The life is crushed out of them?—It is wholly.

45,984. You said, "To my knowledge there "has been a general rise in the rents throughout "the district, but there appears to have been no "settled scale." When were the rents raised?—They were not raised during the same year. As soon as a farmer would improve his land, very likely he would soon get an increase in rent.

45,985. Have rents been raised since about the year 1877 or 1878?—Well, there may be some instances.

45,986. But not many since then?—No.

45,987. I suppose they were generally raised from the year 1870 up to 1876?—During those bad times they were.

45,988. And your contention is that they should have been reduced?—Yes.

45,989. Owing to the fall in prices of stock and produce?—Yes.

45,990. And the high rate of wages?—Yes.

45,991. Do you know of any cases where rents have been advanced since about the year 1880 or 1881?—No, I do not know of any case except where new buildings had been put up.

45,992. By the landlord?—Yes.

45,993. Why are these distinctions made on some estates where abatements are given to some and not to others. You say that there is a distinction made that some get abatements and some do not?—Yes. The large farmers get an abatement and the small farmers only in some very hard cases.

45,994. Whom do you call the small farmers that do not receive abatements?—Farmers of about 12 acres to 24 acres.

45,995. A farmer of 24 acres would not get an abatement?—No.

45,996. Which is let the highest as a rule—a small farm of 24 acres or a farm of 150 or 200 acres?—A small farm.

45,997. Why?—Because there are so many competing for it.

45,998. So that really he feels the depression quite as much as the farmer of 150 acres?—More, to a certain extent.

45,999. You think that in justice he ought to receive an abatement as well as a large farmer?—Yes.

46,000. That is on the Derry Ormond estate?—Yes.

46,001. When did the owner of the Derry Ormond estate commence to make abatements?—I believe it was about a twelvemonth ago.

46,002. Was it done about 1885?—No. He made some abatements for a year or two during those times, and then we did not get any, and he returned some during 1893.

46,003. How much?—10 per cent. to some.

46,004. Do you think that was adequate?—No. We petitioned him to have more before the last rent and all the tenants signed and asked for it, but he never acknowledged the receipt of the petition.

46,005. All the tenants applied?—Yes, all the tenants applied.

46,006. What did you think you were entitled to?—We asked for 25 per cent. and we stated that even if he was to allow us 50 per cent., he would not be allowing us too much.

46,007. Still you do not feel inclined to throw up your farms?—No.

46,008. Why do you cling to them?—There is nothing but the workhouse door open for us.

46,009. So that really you are entirely dependent on the will of your landlord?—I am.

46,010. And you think that is an unsatisfactory state of things?—Very unsatisfactory.

46,011. What is the remedy that you have to suggest?—Nothing but a Land Court.

46,012. What do you say about the suggestion which was made by Mr. Brigstocke the other day at Cardigan. He suggested that the County Council should appoint one person and the county court judge should appoint another person, that is to say, to settle disputes; that was not exactly to fix rent, he was against a Land Court to fix rents?—Yes.

46,013. But we are assuming now that a Land Court is about to be established according to your recommendation; what would you say about such a suggestion to settle the question of rent; that the County Council should appoint a person and the county court judge appoint another to fix the rent for a certain farm, and in case they failed to agree, that the county court judge himself should settle the question?—It would be better than the present mode.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

46,014. Of course I do not suppose that you swear by a Land Court of the same kind as they have in Ireland, but you simply want some kind of tribunal?—Yes, what we would like, and what I mean by a Land Court, would be a court that would protect a good tenant from a bad landlord, and that would protect a good landlord from a bad tenant as well.

46,015. That is upon questions of rent and also upon general questions of dispute that may arise?—Yes, on every dispute that would arise between a tenant and a landlord.

46,016. You say that there is not much labour employed on farms which have been consolidated?—There is not.

46,017. I suppose when farms are consolidated, there is generally more scope for machinery. Would they use more machinery?—They would employ a little more machinery than a small holding.

46,018. And less labour of course?—Yes.

46,019. Do you think that a large place would be so well cultivated as a small place?—No.

46,020. Do you consider there are sufficient small holdings for a farmer to rise in the scale?—Yes, we are not badly off for small holdings.

46,021. You condemn the custom of having too many large farms?—Yes. I may perhaps be permitted to say that one farmer in our district desired me to tell you that what he wanted was that no farm should be more than 50*l.* a year rent, so that the multiplication of small farms would stop the landgrabber—would stop land hunger—that no farm should be over 50*l.* in rental, and that that would multiply the small holdings, and it would satisfy the land hunger that is in the country.

46,022. Do you think that it would be well to have an artificial interference of that sort?—I daresay many would oppose it.

46,023. You say, "I know of instances "where estate agents interfere with the votes "of tenants at parliamentary and other elec- "tions. I produce a letter sent by an agent to "a tenant of the Derry Ormond Estate"?—Yes.

46,024. Was that letter written to the tenant with the full knowledge of the landlord?—I cannot say.

46,025. Is he still agent on the estate?—Yes.

46,026. Do the landlords in this neighbourhood make any special effort to meet the present depression; that is, do they reduce their establishment?—No, I do not think they do.

46,027. They live as stylishly as ever?—Yes, and multiply gamekeepers.

46,028. And dogs?—That may be so. I do not take so much notice of the dogs.

46,029. And horses?—Yes, I daresay.

46,030. And servants?—Yes, I daresay.

46,031. Have you a copy of that letter that was written by the landlord?—Yes, it has been handed up.

46,032. When the application was made for him to do something to this road from Bettws Bledrws on to Llangeitho?—Yes. That is the original letter. (Witness handed in original letter.)

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

"Derry Ormond, R.S.O.,
"Cardiganshire.
"April 18, 1893.

"In reply to your letter of yesterday's date, you will please tell the Overseers of this parish, with my compliments, that I shall be much obliged if they will for the future mind their own affairs, and not meddle with matters that do not in the least concern them. Perhaps, for the benefit of the Bettws Bledrws Overseers, it will be as well if I remind them that the said road in question is private property, and that I only wonder and marvel at not being requested by them to put my own drive in order!!

"Yours, etc.,
"W. Inglis-Jones."

Mr. Griffiths.

46,033. Is it not a fact that rent is often advanced, although the tenant pays already interest for drainage?—Yes.

46,034. What interest is generally paid on the drainage?—There is not any particular scale to it.

46,035. Is there any period of exhaustion for the money that is laid out in that way, or is the rent continued?—Yes, continued so far as they can get it.

46,036. Is it customary in this part of the country to shoot on Sundays. I thought they strictly kept the Sabbath in this part of the country?—The gamekeepers do not; they are excepted, I suppose.

46,037. Is it not against the law?—I do not know. I tell you the fact. I do not know whether it is against the law or not.

46,038. You say in your evidence that the evictions of 1868 are very well remembered. It is a long time ago. Why should they remember them?—Because they were so severe, and many tenants had to pay so dearly for voting as they desired to vote.

46,039. Had many tenants advances in rent?—I cannot say personally, because it is so long ago.

46,040. I suppose you have heard of many that had to leave their holdings?—Yes, I sent up to you a copy of the letter that the agent wrote to some of the tenants.

46,041. You said you were anxious to get leases. Would not the tenants be less likely to get abatements if they had leases?—Yes, but they would rather have leases at reasonable rents, because they would mean security of tenure.

46,042. Is the rent always raised upon the buildings, or would you expect that when farms are taken there should be buildings upon them?—In many cases when new buildings are put up the rents are raised.

46,043. And do the tenants do the hauling too?—Yes, for nothing.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,044. Why do you recommend that tithes should be utilised towards educational purposes, and for the purpose of old-age pensions?—In one case those that have paid them for many years now would get the advantage of them. They are almost penniless now.

46,045. You mean those who have paid them?—Yes.

46,046. You refer to the poor?—No, I mean the farmers.

46,047. Is there any objection to paying the tithe as it is at present?—No, not so much in this district.

46,048. Do you consider that it would be a means of keeping the labourers more upon the land if they had a little cottage and land enough to keep a cow or two?—Yes.

46,049. Have you enough land on your farm for that purpose?—There are a good many cottages already fallen down, and nobody would object to a cottage being put up in the place of those.

46,050. To keep a labourer?—Yes.

46,051. Do you think a labourer would be more likely to stay on a farm then than if he were a farm servant?—Yes.

46,052. Then, with regard to dairies. What kind of dairies have you on the farms round here. Is there much dairying done in this part of the country?—Yes.

46,053. What kind of dairies have you as a rule; are they large enough and sufficient for modern implements?—No, they are too small, and they are not well ventilated.

46,054. And not in suitable places, perhaps?—In many instances they are not.

46,055. With regard to poultry keeping, are there any poultry houses built?—No. Of course the farmer can put one up if he likes.

46,056. There is no special attention given by the farmers nor by the agents to that, I suppose?—No.

46,057. You spoke with regard to a Land Court just now. Do you think it necessary to have a Land Court for good tenants and good landlords?—It would not be required so much in their cases.

46,058. Laws are not generally made for those that keep the law, are they?—No.

46,059. They are made for those who refuse to keep them?—For those who refuse to keep the law.

46,060. And it would be the case with regard to that you think?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,061. With regard to this agreement, Mr. Davies, this provision is certainly illegal—contracting out of the Act?—I may state, my lord, that the tenants refused, every one of them, to sign it, so that it is not actually in operation.

46,062. But it is clearly illegal to contract out of the bulk of the Act; they can only contract out of certain clauses?—Yes.

46,063. With regard to goodwill, I suppose none of the sitting tenants have paid goodwill?—I do not believe they have, but I cannot say exactly.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,064. It would be hardly fair for them to receive what they have not paid for, would it?—Yes, it would be unfair.

46,065. I do not suppose you have a knowledge of whether the land owners in this neighbourhood have reduced their expenses or not. You could not be very well in a position to know whether that was the case or not?—No, I am not in a position to know; I cannot say exactly.

46,066. You would not like it to go forth that you said that they had not?—No.

46,067. Because there are many ways of reducing establishments that may not be shown to the public at first. You said that you would incur the landlord's displeasure if you asked to make improvements; do you not think that a landlord likes a tenant to make improvements on his farm?—Not on our estate.

Lord Kenyon.

I think it is very singular if that is not so.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,968–9. I have not heard the whole of your evidence, but I have heard that you suggested the multiplication of holdings by a limit of 50*l*. rent. Suppose that was done, would that appreciably affect the congestion of the land hunger?—Yes, to a certain extent.

46,070. For how many years do you think?—I cannot say.

46,071. In any case, it is not a remedy that would tell very long, is it?—No; I simply mentioned it because some of the farmers asked me to do so.

46,072. What do you think the remedy for that must be to a large extent. If a farmer, for instance, has four or five sons, is it wise for him to bring them all up to farming?—No, because they would not get farms.

46,073. They would not get farms without disturbing someone else?—That is so.

46,074. You do not go in for that, do you?—No.

46,075. What ought to be done then. He ought to bring them up to some other professions or some other trades, ought he not?—Yes, I daresay.

46,076. How far is that being done now, do you know?—It is done to a certain extent.

46,077. What do they become?—Everything.

46,078. Some of them go away to the towns?—Yes, mostly.

46,079. They go into trade?—Yes.

46,080. How is the educational machinery in this part of the county?—It is fairly good now to what it has been.

46,081. Is that in such a state as to help men of ability to get into the professions?—It is better than it has been.

46,082. So that some of the farmers' sons may expect to get into the medical profession?—Yes.

46,083. Or the law?—Yes.

46,084. Or the ministry?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,085. You consider that almost always to be the case, do you not?—Yes, I daresay.

46,086. You would not expect that all the farmers' sons should be brought up to farming at any time, would you?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,087. Following up Professor Rhŷs' questions, can you give us any opinion with regard to the population in this part of the country; is it increasing or decreasing?—It is decreasing.

Adjourned for a short time.

Lord Kenyon.

46,088. You wish to say, I think, that you are only giving evidence for the Derry Ormond estate?—Yes, and there are a few parishioners belonging to Mr. Harford, of Falcondale, and Mr. Hughes, of Neuaddfawr, and they asked me to tell the Court that they have been very well treated by the landlord.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,089–90. You are only giving evidence on behalf of the estate of which you are tenant?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

I do not think we have any further questions to ask you. Re-examined 73,543.

The witness withdrew.

The Commissioners think it well to draw attention once again to the Witnesses Protection Act. I will just repeat some words which Lord Carrington used at our first sitting in Glamorganshire. "Experience has shown that unless "witnesses speak out boldly and without fear, "inquiries like the one we are engaged in are "futile. We have no reason to believe that "undue pressure will be brought upon any class "of witness or any individual witness; nor "have we reason to think that the giving of "evidence by any person in this country will "lead to his being in any way injured. But it "is, of course, possible—we cannot shut our "eyes to what has before now taken place in "regard to affairs of this kind—that some men "are less scrupulous than others, and that "it is possible that witnesses who speak what "is in their minds may be subjected to loss and "annoyance. We desire, therefore (and it is "our duty to do so), to point out that the "recent Act, the Witnesses Protection Act, 1892, "affords a remedy adequate to meet any "ordinary case." And the Commissioners, if they find it necessary, will put the Act into force. I have also to say, with regard to the estate which came into question this morning, that Lord Carrington only succeeded to it in 1868, which was after the sale of the property.

Mr. DAVID EVANS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,091. This is your statement which has been translated to you this morning in Welsh by Mr. Griffiths, and it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

I live at Lanlas-ucha, in the parish of Cellan, in the county of Cardigan, and am a tenant farmer. I am a guardian of the parish of Cellan, and a member of the Assessment Committee. I am also a member of the Cellan School Board.

I was brought up by my father as a farmer, he being a tenant of Rhydycais Farm, Ystrad, his landlady being Mrs. Douglas, of Rhydyfran. My late father paid a rent of 23*l.* I remember him draining 11 of the fields, and when filling up one of the drains he met with an accident which rendered him incapable of following his occupation, and one of my brothers, who was then in service, had to return home to carry on farming operations. The farm was ultimately sold; my father was then dead, and my mother and nine children had to leave the farm penniless. My brothers were out in service in their turns, and all their earnings were sunk in the farm. I estimate the value of the improvements effected by us at 150*l.*, for which we received no compensation whatever. I advocate a land court for Wales, and also that there should be a sliding scale to govern the rents, and that tenants should be protected in respect of improvements effected by them, in case of a notice to quit or of the farm being sold. A levy is made upon me annually of 5*s.* 6*d.* for chief rent payable to William Jones, of Glandenys, as lord of the manor, but why the same is payable I am unable to ascertain. The following is a copy of the usual demand note:—

Manor of Cellan.

Old Bank, Lampeter,
25th July 1891.

Mr. David Evans, Lanlas-ucha,
To William Jones, Lord of the Manor of Cellan.

	s.	d.
To custom for the year 1890 -	3	6
To chief rent for the year 1890 -	2	0

N.B.—Unless the above amount is paid within seven days from this date proceedings will be taken against you in the next county court.

I consider it would be better for me at present to sell my stock and crop and invest the proceeds and work at 1*s.* 6*d.* per diem, than to carry on my farm at the present rental. I have seven children. Two assist me to carry on the farm. They get up at 5.30, go to school at 9, and assist me after returning home. We have to live very hard, and seldom see fresh meat. We kill one pig for the use of the house. I sell a calf to the butcher and buy two pounds of it back, which is the only fresh meat we get.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,092. What is the acreage of this farm?—Which farm.

46,093. The farm of Lanlas?—Sixty-three acres.

46,094. For which you pay 23*l.*?—That is not the same one. The farm at that rental was Rhydycais.

46,095. Yes. Did you drain the fields yourselves?—Yes.

46,096. You say your father met with an accident and you were obliged to have your brother home to take the farm in his place?—Yes.

46,097. Do your brothers assist at all to pay the rent of this farm?—They did assist to pay the rent in that place at that time.

46,098. Have you children yourself now?—Yes.

46,099. Are they out in service?—No.

46,100. You say they go to school, do they not?—They all go to school with the exception of one.

46,101. Are they obliged to work at home while they are away from school?—Yes.

46,102. Then, you do not think that the present system of fixing the rent is a proper one?—No.

46,103. Is it the custom to raise the rent before farms are sold?—Such things occur at times, I believe.

46,104. They are generally a month afterwards, are they not?—Yes, most often, most generally.

46,105. Is it copyhold land that you pay 5*s.* 6*d.* for?—I do not know for what I pay the 5*s.* 6*d.*

46,106. You say that your living is not a very high one?—Yes.

46,107. How often do you sell a calf?—About once a year.

46,108. You only get 2 lbs. of fresh meat once a year?—About that, but we are able to have very little fresh meat.

46,109. Then you are of opinion that a labourer is better off than you are?—Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,110. We had a case brought before us, I forget now where it was, where a farmer had given up his farm, and the very first year he saved 20*l.* You say you will be obliged to do the same thing unless you have the rent lowered?—Yes, I say that it would be better for me to sell my stock and crop and to invest the money at so much interest, and to go to work every day.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,111–2. Have you got any money to invest?—No, I say I should be better off if I sold my stock and crop and invested the money.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,113. You paid 23*l.* a year rent, did you?—Not for the present farm.

46,114. What do you pay for your present farm?—30*l.*

46,115. How many acres?—64.

46,116. Are the larger farmers doing better than you?—I think, generally speaking, taking them through and through, they are.

46,117. You consider your own rent too high?—I do not consider that it is hard in other times, but I say that all farms are too high in these days.

46,118. Do I understand that you had paid 150*l.* altogether on this farm?—That was stated when I was brought up, and it refers to that farm.

46,119. Which farm?—Rhydycais.

Lord Kenyon.

46,120. Was this estimated outlay on improvements of 150*l.* for many years ago?—I speak of over 40 years ago to start with.

46,121. Then were not some of these improvements exhausted?—They were drains for the most part.

46,122. How long do you estimate that drains last?—I cannot say. It depends very much how they are kept. We have left the place some years.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Morgans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,123. This is your evidence, and it has been translated to you this morning by Professor Rhŷs, and it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

I live at Olmarchganol, in the parish of Llangybi, in the county of Cardigan, and am a tenant farmer. My farm forms a part of the Olmarch estate. In 1872 I erected a new dwelling-house at Olmarchganol, owing to the old one having become so dilapidated, and it cost me 200*l.*, exclusive of the haulage, which was done entirely by me. Towards this expenditure my landlord allowed me the sum of 35*l.* only, and as soon as the dwelling-house was completed my rent was increased from 80*l.* a year to 90*l.*, although two competent valuers had told the estate agent that 66*l.* a year represented the full value of the farm. I have also, at my own expense, built a barn, slated the stable and cow-house, built up a great part of the walls, and done all the haulage necessary, yet I have never received any allowance in respect of the buildings, with the exception of the said sum of 35*l.* I am now 74 years of age, and have lived all my lifetime on the said farm, and have worked hard upon it, but I am informed that it is to be sold next June, and I have no reason to believe that any further compensation will be allowed to me, and the result, therefore, will be that the farm will pass to other hands, and they will reap the fruits of my labours and improvements.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Five tenants had failed to pay 50*l.* rent for the holding when my father and mother occupied it, and the landlord had distrained on them.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,124. Do you know what sort of buildings there are on the farms about you?—Slate roofs generally now.

46,125. Do you know a place called Tyldre?—Yes.

46,126. What sort of buildings are they there?—Thatched houses—thatched with rushes.

46,127. How many acres of land are there belonging to Tyldre?—I think about 20 acres more or less, I am not quite sure.

46,128. It is a small holding. Does anybody live there now?—No.

46,129. Why is it vacant?—The sanitary inspector came by and said the occupier would have to leave, otherwise the agent would be fined.

46,130. The building is so bad?—Yes.

46,131. What has become of the small farm—the land?—Mr. Thomas Davies, Penbanc, took the land, and bought three cows and the horse.

46,132. Has it been consolidated with another farm. Is that it?—No, it has not. It remains alone.

46,133. Where does the man who farms it live?—He lives with his daughter at Pumpsaint, and his daughter is the wife of the gardener at Dolau Cothi.

46,134. But the building is still bad?—Yes, it is uninhabitable.

46,135. Is it a common thing for the buildings on small holdings to be left to get into that state?—With regard to the estate on which this building is, they were all allowed to go into ruins unless the occupier repaired them.

46,136. Was the occupier allowed the expense?—I did not get anything for the expense which I incurred, excepting 35*l.*, which I received towards the dwelling-house.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,137. To whom does the Olmarch estate belong?—He comes from America. The estate is in Chancery. Mr. Lloyd, solicitor, is the steward.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,138. You do not think that the Court of Chancery deals very liberally in this matter?—I do not know about the Court of Chancery, but some bad men have been stewards, or some of the stewards may have been bad men rather.

46,139. But that land is now in theCourt of Chancery?—Yes, so Mr. Tom Lloyd, the solicitor, told me.

46,140. I should like to know what his idea is?—Edward Arthur, who was the former steward, said that it was out of Chancery.

46,141. It would not be a bad thing if there were some power which would compel even the Court of Chancery to deal properly as landlords, would it?—I will tell you what the Court of Chancery did. Edward Arthur gave us notice to leave, and he came to claim possession at Michaelmas, and two bailiffs came with him from this town demanding the rent and possession. He said to these people "Go in," and the old lady, my mother, was standing by, and her arm was ripped up, so that the blood streamed.

46,142. Was this after a notice to quit?—Yes.

46,143. Had they been unable to pay their rent, do you know?—The rent (40*l.* for the half-year) was demanded by the agent at Michaelmas on the day it became due, and it was paid on the spot, and at that point the bailiff, who was with him, said "Go in." We wrote to the Court of Chancery the next day, and we received a letter in two days afterwards that I could stop on as tenant of the holding, and Edward Arthur came there a day or two afterwards and said, "You shall have the place after all." When the usual rent day arrived, about three months after it became due, I had to pay the 40*l.* again, so that I was actually robbed of 40*l.* by the said agent, Edward Arthur.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,144. I am afraid we scarcely have time to unravel such a complicated story. I confess I do not quite understand it.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,145. What was the date when the 200*l.* was spent on the building?—It is about 21 years ago.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,146. 1872, he says.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,147. Now, you are under notice that the estate is going to be sold?—Yes, they say it is going to be sold in the month of May.

46,148. Why should not you make a claim now to be compensated?—I do not know in what way I could get anything towards the houses and things I have done. The building that is yonder has been erected by me altogether.

46,149. But surely you could make a claim before the sale?—I have sent in a claim, or made a claim.

46,150. Did you erect these buildings with the consent of the landlord?—We had either to make them, or we could not live there.

46,151. But you might make a claim anyhow.

Lord Kenyon.

46,152. You did not get an answer to that question. (To the witness.) Did you get the consent of the landlord?—I had permission from the agent.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,153. In writing?—No, it was not written. Mr. Arthur said, "You can stay there as long as you live. The estate is in Chancery." We built a barn and stable there to start with.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,154. You had better make a claim, whether or not you have a legal right to compensation. The Court of Chancery ought to be able to do justice, whether it is legally due or not?—I hope that the Court will take into consideration my claim, otherwise it will be a great injustice.

46,155. Yes, but you must make it?—Very well.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,156. Was Mr. Lloyd the agent of the estate when the farm was advanced from 80*l.* to 90*l.*?—Mr. Lloyd, the shopkeeper, of Dolgwm House, raised the rent from 80*l.* to 90*l.*

46,157. Was that a different person to Mr. Lloyd, the solicitor?—Yes.

46,158. No connexion?—No, not as far as I know.

46,159. What was the reason of these valuers coming across the place? You say that two valuers came across the place, and valued it at 66*l.* a year?—Mr. William Rees, of Tregaron, valued it at 66*l.*, and then Mr. Davies, Troedybryn, came and said that it was too high; that it was very high for 66*l.*

46,160. Who authorised them to value the place?—Mr. Davies, Troedybryn, came on behalf of the parish, and with regard to Mr. John Edwards, of Dolau, Mr. Lloyd, of Dolau cwm, gave him permission.

46,161. Was that the agent?—Yes, at that time.

46,162. Was the rent raised at the instance of the agent, or at the instance of the Court of Chancery?—When Mr. John Edwards, of Dolau, came, he said it was too high. It was 80*l.* then, and there was a further increase of 10*l.*, making it 90*l.*

46,163. What I want to know is this, whether the agent had advanced the place on his own account?—Mr. Edwards, of Dolau, said it was very high for 66*l.*

46,164. Repeated?—After John Edwards had been there, he raised the rent by 10*l.* the last time.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,165. Why did you build your house upon another man's property?—Build on another man's property?

46,166. Yes? We built in order that we might live there. We made all the buildings.

46,167. Did you ever ask the landlord to build?—The landlord told us to build—that we should have it while we lived.

46,168. What was the rent of the farm before you built at all?—It was 80*l.* before I built the dwelling-house.

46,169. Then the agent took advantage when you put the house there to advance your rent 10*l.*?—Yes.

46,170. Do not you think it would have been fairer for him to have lowered it 10*l.*?—That is what everyone said.

46,171. Is the estate still in Chancery?—Mr. Tom Lloyd told me that it was in Chancery now.

46,172. Do you think there would be any chance for you to have compensation if it was out of Chancery?—I cannot say. I could only rely on good will.

46,173. Would you like the law so altered that every man should be paid for his improvements?—Yes. My neighbour is unjust unless I get some compensation for what I have done yonder.

46,174. But you have found that you cannot have compensation unless you have the law altered?—I do not know. I have to rely on their good will—good graces.

46,175. But would not you like to see the law so altered that you could demand payment?—Yes, I would.

Lord Kenyon.

46,176. Would you like us to send a copy of your evidence to the Court of Chancery?—Yes, I would.

Lord Kenyon.

46,177. We will do that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Charles Harford called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

46,178. You are Mr. John Charles Harford, of Falcondale?—Yes.

46,179. And you are a landowner?—Yes.

46,180. Have you got a statement?—Yes.

46,181. Will you kindly read it. I think that would be the quickest way?—I give evidence as to the Peterwell Estate of 5,000 acres, owned jointly by my mother and myself, of which 500 acres are woods, 180 are accommodation lands, and 4,333 acres let to tenants, at a rental of 2,980*l.* The accommodation land is situated near Lampeter, and is let out in fields at an average of 2*l.* 10*s.* per acre. The rest of the land lets at an average of 14*s.* 5*d.* per acre. There is no manor, the manorial rights having lapsed when the town of Lampeter became a corporate borough. The Crown has some small rights, such as 5*s.* charged on Llwyncnoy, and some small sums charged on the parishes of Llanfair and Pencarreg, for which I cannot say the amount. No land is held by copyhold. Lampeter common was divided under an award dated August 31st 1858, and 31 acres 1 rood 34 poles was alloted to the owners of the Peterwell estate; some of the land was given for gardens, clay pits for the poor, and also for recreation ground, and for holding fairs. There are two squatters' cottages near the common, the tenants of which now pay 6*d.* per annum acknowledgment rent. There is no unenclosed ground, or practically none. Tenants in my opinion are better off on large estates than on small, as where a landowner has only one or two farms he is probably more or less pendedent on the rent, and cannot afford to lay out money in buildings, drainage, or repairs. I do not think difference of language, politics, or religion affects the relationship between landlord and tenant. There are very few agents, and I have heard no complaints of them. Tenancies as a rule commence from September 29th, and are from year to year, leases not being desired as a rule, because tenants know that landlords will make an abatement of their yearly rent in bad seasons, whereas, if on lease, there would be no abatement. There are very few leaseholders. Tenancies change very little, The landlord as a rule agrees with the tenant as to a fair sum to be deducted from the rent when a field is to be taken for planting, building, or any other purpose. Timber is usually hauled in a frost or when the ground is hard. Should damage be done the tenant would be compensated. I have enclosed agreement. The conditions are never insisted on, and I have never heard of a penalising clause being insisted on. A copy of the agreement was given to each tenant, and the conditions were all explained to those who did not understand English. The farms are valued field to field, and a fixed sum is then decided on. As regards rents on other estates, I know nothing. The rent of small holdings is slightly higher than the large ones, because the buildings are more expensive as compared with the rent, and the land as a rule is better. Rent of land varies enormously. The good land by the Teifi will fetch occasionally 4*l.* or more per acre, and within a mile you will find hill land let at 2*s.* 6*d.* to 5*s.* Probably the average price on a fair farm would be 15*s.*, and on a good small farm 1*l.* an acre. There is no common land, or practically none, and there is no service in lieu of rent. Rent was originally fixed by valuation, but, as a rule, the incoming tenant pays the same as the outgoing tenant. Land is not let to the highest bidder, and landlords are now more careful about getting tenants with some capital. Arbitration in settling rent is never needed. Rents have, of course, been raised in the last 50 years, as 50 years ago this part of the world had no railways, very few roads, and the county itself was swampy and undrained. We have made no permament reductions, but in 1885 gave back 10 per cent. on the half year, 1886 10 per cent. on the whole year, 1887 10 per cent. on the year, 1888 10 per cent. on the half year, and 5 per cent. on the other half, 1892, 10 per cent. on half year, and 1893 10 per cent. on the whole year. The total sum given back in remission since 1885, on an income of 2,900*l.*, was 1,187*l.* 12*s.* 4*d.* There has practically been no change of rent in the last 30 years, except where land has been taken away for planting or building. Rent is paid four months after it is due. The landlord pays the tithe and income tax, and the tenant the land tax, chief rent, and local rates. The holdings have not been consolidated, but rather the reverse. On four farms small portions have been sublet by the tenants to other men, Moelfre, Pentreshone, Coed Park, and Castell,

and the plan has answered well, the tenant putting up the buildings, the landlord supplying the timber, stone in most cases being handy. Forty-acre holdings are a good size, and probably suffer less than the big ones. In good times the larger holdings are better able to start their children, as they have more stock, and can easier spare some for the children. In bad times, however, the smaller holdings as a rule weather the storms best. Farming is mixed and labour scarce, but probably sufficient for the farms, though at harvest, sowing, and sheep shearing more labour would prove an advantage. No land is going out of cultivation, but though much has been reclaimed a good deal more could be done in the way of ploughing, fencing, and draining boggy and gorsey hill land. The land is not being laid down to permanent pasture as it is not good enough, but more land is laid down for short periods, two or three years. Root crops have increased largely, as the tenants keep more stores over the winter, and these are fattened in sheds instead of running out all winter as formerly. Landlords do all the building and drainage. Tenants reclaim waste land by ploughing and putting up banks; they are supposed to also put up gates and gateposts, but the gates are bad throughout this part of Wales. They also provide manures and seeds. Tenants do the hauling for buildings. The landlord pays for labour and material. The tenant pays no interest on outlay, and in return for his haulage gets good buildings enabling him to farm more profitably. The landlord gets a more contented tenant and is surer of his rent. If improvements are made by the tenant with the landlord's consent the landlord is liable, and if without the landlord's consent the tenant has no claim whatever. The Agricultural Holdings Act is contracted out of in all my agreements. The farming has improved of late years. In September takings there is no growing crop. The incoming tenant, however, pays for seeds sown with the corn. No allowance is made for tillage and cultivation, but this is considered part of the goodwill, and is usually arranged for between incoming and outgoing tenant. Manure in the yard is taken at a valuation by the incoming tenant, and everything else in the way of stock or crop is sold for the benefit of the outgoing tenant, or else taken at a valuation by the incoming tenant. Permanent improvements made by the outgoing tenant would come under goodwill. The incoming and outgoing tenants settle between themselves, and if they cannot agree call a third party to arbitrate. There are no liabilities as regards cultivation or dilapidation except as regards thatched buildings or thatched cottages, which the tenant is supposed to keep in repair. Tenants do dispose of their goodwill, and there seems to be no hardship in cases of change of tenancy. There are no sheep farms, and the Agricultural Holdings Act is a dead letter. Tenants kill the rabbits, and some, no doubt, make a good deal out of them. Where fields adjoin on coverts where rabbits are numerous wire netting is given to the tenant. Hares barely exist, and pheasants are scarce except on my own home farm I doubt if much damage is done by game. Tenants are not forced to beat, and if they come, they come for the fun of the thing, and are paid for it and fed, and in no way forced to come. Game does not affect us on this estate, and there is not much poaching except in a very small way. There are many nurseries for forest trees, but fruit culture would not pay here. All farmers go in for poultry in a small way, and no doubt it pays them. Men travel round from farm to farm collecting the eggs. Instruction in dairying and agricultural chemistry is provided by Aberystwith College, and is taken advantage of, and field experiments are also carried out by the college on different farms throughout the country; some of which are carried out experimentally on my own farm. Railway rates are high, and severely affect the price of stock, as dealers, in buying, have to calculate what the animal will cost them when they have got it home, and consequently high rates mean low prices for the farmer. There is no co-operation or combination between or among landlords or tenants, except that at busy times, such as harvest and sheep shearing, every one helps his neighbour if he can. Very few insure their stock, and I should imagine none insure their own lives. The landlord insures the farm buildings. Labourers belong generally to some benefit society, such as the "Foresters," but not farmers. The Post Office saving banks and private banks are taken advantage of, but building societies are not used. There are a great many freeholders, many of whom were tenants and have bought their holding, probably because they considered land a good investment. Land is constantly in the market. As to price, of course the buyer thinks the price excessive, and the seller thinks he ought to have got more. How each man gets the money to buy I do not know. I should say that the freeholder is worse off than the tenant farmer, because he has to put up and keep in repair his own buildings, and very often has to pay 4 per cent. interest on money borrowed when the land does not return him 2½ per cent. Should the value of land be reduced by land courts or other legislation, the position of the freeholder would be a very serious one, as the mortgagor would probably foreclose, and the freeholder could not pay. Tenant farmers, as a rule, work themselves, and when they have children old enough to work, the children work on the farms too, and receive board, clothes, and pocket money, and when they marry, the father, as a rule, provides them with stock or capital, or a little of both, to help them to start on a farm. Where there are no children the farmer still manages to pay his rent. Labourers are lodged in the farmhouse as a rule. They are hired in November for the year at about 1*s.* 3*d.* per day, and their board and lodging, with a present for harvest. On estates, as a rule, the labourer has a cottage, and many of them have about 3 acres to 5 acres of land, and their wages are 12*s.* to

14*s.*, or if without a cottage, 15*s.* to 18*s.* The accommodation for labourers is poor as a rule, and the general diet at farmhouses is not very substantial. The farmers themselves live frugally and work hard. Cottage accommodation is not very abundant, but, as a rule, where there are cottages, each cottage has a garden. Potatoes are grown for the labourers by the farmer in lieu of allotments. Where the cottages belong to the farmer and are sub-let to the labourer, the labourer and his wife have to work for the farmer in hay and corn harvest. Diaries and farm accounts are not kept by farmers. Bad times started in 1885, I believe, and have continued ever since. Bad prices and bad seasons have produced the depression which has affected all classes. Light railways would no doubt do a great deal for a county like this, where the railways run along the borders, and there is no means of communication except by road. Reduced rates and reduced taxation of land, which seems to bear an undue amount of taxation, would undoubtedly help all classes. The relations between landlord and tenant are and always have been most friendly, in spite of the determined efforts which have been made to break up the present kindly feeling. From the year 1872 to September 29th, 1893, 17,152*l.* 7*s.* 10½*d.* has been spent in building and repairs, and 2,699*l.* 17*s.* 3½*d.* in drainage, or roughly, 20,000*l.* has been spent in the last 22 years, exclusive of home-grown timber which is not counted, and for this amount no interest has been charged. There are 28 farms on this estate which have either descended from father to son, for as long as any records have been kept, or have been given to the son or daughter of an old tenant. This estate was valued by Messrs. Goode and Owen, of Haverfordwest, in 1864, and the rent has not been altered since, except where land has been taken for building or planting. New agreements were made with all the tenants in September 1891, under the Tithe Act, and also because many of the tenants had no agreements whatever. The agreements were fully discussed by the tenants, and I myself spoke personally to those who objected to any of the clauses, and one of them as regards lime for the land was altered at their request. I have a list of the sizes and rents of typical holdings. There are only eight farmers not born on this estate who have taken farms, and one of them has held his farm for 30 years. If Government would lend money at a low interest to tenants who are anxious to buy their farms, it would greatly assist farmers, and also if those who have borrowed money at too high a rate of interest could borrow money to pay off their mortgages, especially if it was in the shape of a terminable rent charge, as men would then be able to hand over their farms to their children free of incumbrances. There are practically no arrears on this estate, and I believe there is not a single farm which has not got thoroughly good and convenient buildings, and tenants have always been asked to come to us direct to state any grievances they may have, and we have always done our best to remedy such grievances.

46,182. Your statement seems very complete, and there are only one or two questions I need ask you. First of all, as to the clause contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act in your agreements. Surely that would be better omitted?—I will hand in the agreement.

46,183. I have a copy of it?—Under our agreement, instead of the Agricultural Holdings Act, there is a stipulation that in valuation or arbitration two umpires shall be chosen by each party, and in case of any disagreement a third party shall be called in.

46,184. Would it not be better to refer to the clauses of the Act out of which you wish to contract. You cannot contract out of the whole Act?—That, I believe, is so, but, as a matter of fact, in changing of tenancies the incoming and outgoing tenant here, according to the custom of the country, always arrange between themselves.

46,185. I quite understand that they prefer to abide by your agreement, but still it is an illegal clause that you have put in?—I believe it is.

46,186. It would be better, I think, if you amended it?—Yes.

46,187. There is one more item in your agreement. You say "the tenant shall not hunt, shoot, or destroy hares." That he is allowed to do by law too?—Well, that is not insisted on, and I do not think there are more than 20 or 30 hares on the estate, and it is to be hoped that they will not kill those 30.

46,188. I understood you to say that you thought a land court, or some such legislation, would lower the value of land. Do you think it would increase sales of land?—No, I should not think so.

46,189. I mean, do you think the landlords would be more inclined to part with their property?—I do not understand the Land Court, but I should imagine that a bad tenant who had run out his farm would then go to the Land Court and state that he was paying too high a rent, and he would then get his rent reduced, and you would be saddled with a bad tenant at a low rate of interest, whereas your good tenant would never go to the Land Court because he would have improved his farm, and probably it would appear then that his farm was rented too low, and the Land Court would, I presume, then raise his rent. Therefore the bad tenant would benefit and the good tenant would have to pay a higher rent for his own improvements.

46,190. That is always presuming that the Land Court would protect the bad tenants?—Always presuming that, yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,191. I think you said that a good deal of land has been in the market in the neighbourhood at times?—Yes.

46,192. Have any large properties been broken up?—Yes, the Alltyrodyn estate, which was a large property; then Colonel Powell, of Nanteos; then there has been a very large amount of land sold by Sir Pryse Pryse, of Gogerddan, quite lately, and also a large amount sold by Lord Lisburne.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

46,193. Has that been followed by any material alteration in the amount of rent of each farm?—That I could not say.

46,194. Were there many tenant farmers who purchased their freeholds?—I can only answer for my own estate. I have sold a certain number of farms and in each case the tenant has bought his holding.

46,195. I think you said there have been no changes in the nature of increase of rent on your property?—There have been none.

46,196. But you spoke of some alterations in the land having been taken away, would that have been followed by a reduction or modification of rent?—Yes, in a few instances land has been taken for planting, in fact some was taken only a few months ago. Then a slightly higher amount was deducted from the rent of the tenant than the land was actually worth.

46,197. So in every case there was a reduction of rent?—In every case a reduction of rent.

46,198. Fairly commensurate with the amount of the land taken away?—Yes, and that was always settled between the landlord or the agent and the tenant.

46,199. Arising out of that, have you ever employed an agent, or do you always work yourself?—I employ an agent, but I do practically most of the work myself. I see to the rents myself.

46,200. I had meant to call attention to that agreement to which Lord Kenyon has referred. I would suggest to you that it would be worth inquiring whether the existence of such a clause as his lordship has pointed out does not vitiate the whole?—The truth is no one understands the Agricultural Holdings Act here. I confess I do not understand it myself, and there is not a man in this room, I believe, except the Commission, with all due deference to them, who understands what it is.

46,200A. I would commend it to your notice to examine that 35th section very closely, and, further, I would very much commend the attention of everyone in this room to the Act, because the object of the Act was for the protection of the tenant farmers, and I believe that to a certain extent it has operated very well indeed, and done a great deal of good, but throughout Wales we have found ignorance of the Act, and I would strongly recommend that it be the subject of examination—mutual examination between landlord and tenant—by every farmer's club and every agricultural association in Wales. I think it may be amended, but distinctly it is a very good Act as far it goes.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,201. Did I understand you to say you encouraged sub-letting. You said something about sub-letting on the estate?—I said we had done that in four farms. It has been in cases where there has been an extra cottage on the farm in which a labourer lived, and the tenant has asked to sublet, and has then put up buildings at his own expense, we finding the timber, and it has been formed into a fresh farm.

46,202. Then who lives there, a labourer?—A labourer, who then becomes the tenant of it.

46,203. You mean with a small extent of land?—A small extent of land, yes.

46,204. How about labourers' cottages. Have you enough on the estate, or do you find a scarcity?—In one or two farms there is a slight scarcity, but, as a rule, the labourers are lodged in the farmhouses.

46,205. What proportion would they ordinarily have of labourers and servant men, as they are called?—That depends mostly on the farmer's family. If he has sons he probably employs no labour.

46,206. Where they have labourers they lodge them on the premises?—On the premises, because they pay them less wages, and are able to board them cheaper than they could hire them out.

46,207. That comes to nearly the same thing as having servant men?—Yes.

46,208. When they are on the premises, are they lodged in the out-houses?—In some cases in the out-houses, and in other cases, where the houses are of fair size, they lodge in the farm itself.

46,209. Is that general, do you know. In some cases we have had complaints that the kitchen is too small, and the house of the farmer altogether too small for him to welcome the servant men in the long winter evenings to sit at the kitchen fire?—I do not think that is the case on my own estate. I know of no house that is too small.

46,210. What about the language. Most of your farmers, I suppose, speak Welsh?—Yes.

46,211. Can they all speak English?—No.

46,212. Can you speak Welsh?—No.

46,213. How do you get on with them?—Well, I get someone to interpret, but there are very few who cannot at any rate speak sufficient English for us to understand each other.

46,214. That is your side of it. I understand you to make the general statement that language, among other things, makes no difficulty?—Well, I do not think it does.

46,215. Still, I have some hesitation in considering your evidence quite convincing on that point. From your own side, you think there is no difficulty?—For my side, I think there is no difficulty.

46,216. You have not heard of any complaints?—No.

46,217. Or misunderstandings?—No.

46,218. Your agent can speak Welsh?—Yes, and there are very few of the tenants who cannot speak sufficient English for me to understand them.

46,219. That means, I think, that it would be very easy for you to learn enough Welsh. Did I understand that a payment for goodwill is a well-recognised thing on the estate?—No, it is not, but in the last two instances of farms changing hands I know that goodwill has been paid.

46,220. What do you exactly mean by that? We have sometimes heard it called goodwill when a man was really supposed to be paying for some material advantages—something for stock or for unexhausted improvements; you do not mean that?—It is difficult to decide. I am told by both the outgoing and incoming tenant—by the one that he has received, and by the other that he has paid, a certain sum which represents goodwill and stock. I know what the sum is, but, of course, neither party would be inclined to tell me how much was represented by either item.

46,221. But you have an idea whether it was not rather more than the amount of stock concerned was worth—something more than the amount of the stock?—Yes, certainly, there was something more.

46,222. He might be paying so much a head more than the market value, or something of that kind?—I should imagine that he paid a certain sum extra or what is termed goodwill.

46,223. To grease the wheels?—Yes.

46,224. With regard to the freeholders, the farmers who have bought their freeholds lately, did you say that they regarded it as a good investment. Is that your view?—Well, I presume they would not have bought otherwise.

46,225. We have heard in this Inquiry of a great many influences in that direction; that they thought so much of security of tenure, of being their own landlords, and so on; do not you think other considerations might enter into it?—I do not think so.

46,226. You do not?—No.

46,227. How do your tenants succeed; do they succeed in the same family?—They succeed from father to son. There are only a few that have not done it in that way.

46,228. What becomes of the farmers' sons in this neighbourhood, supposing there are rather more than can be employed on the land. What do they take to generally?—A good many of them go into the Church, but as regards the depopulation of the neighbourhood—of the county altogether—the reason that the population decreases is that the men can get better wages at the works in Glamorganshire than they can here. That is the reason of the depopulation of the agricultural districts.

46,229. You do not think that some of them are driven away by the nature of the accommodation for the labouring classes?—No, they follow the wages.

46,230. We have sometimes heard that suggested, and that the lack of a reading room or any kind of place of entertainment or amusement in the evening in the neighbouring village tends to make them go elsewhere?—I do not think so, because I was asking a farmer as regards labour the other day, and the farmer told me that the labour had been more abundant last winter because the wages at the works were lower, and not so many men were required.

46,231. Where would you suggest light railways in this county. You touched on the question of light railways?—Well, I would suggest Aberayron and New Quay, and some of the coast places.

46,232. From where?—From here.

46,233. From Lampeter to Aberayron?—Yes, from here to Aberayron for one thing, because we would then touch the seaboard, and be able to get lime and coal much cheaper, and it would, of course, reduce the rates in our railways. The reason of our high rates is the fact that from Carmarthen here two railways are run. The Great Western bought up a small railway from Carmarthen to Llandyssul. They work that as a separate undertaking, and from Pencader (which has been referred to already) to this place is a separate railway again. Therefore almost any goods that come into Lampeter run over three railways, each of which has to get its profit, and a small parcel coming from London here costs as much to come from Carmarthen to Lampeter as it does from London to Carmarthen.

46,234. I leave that to my fellow Commissioners, that is a question that ought to be considered I think. You suggest that one light railway from here to Aberayron, and then from Aberayron where?—Well, all down that coast there is no communication. It might go to New Quay. Then there are other places further down the coast, such as Penbryn. In fact there is no communication right through this county. Our railway runs exactly on the borders.

46,235. It runs through that dreary upper part of the valley of the Teify, does it not?—It does. It runs on the borders of the two counties.

46,236. You said you spent 20,000*l.* odd in repairs and drainage. I did not quite catch in how many years?—In 22 years. I have the accounts only from 1872. I was unable to obtain earlier accounts.

46,237. I do not recollect whether you put in the rental, or whether you wish to?—I put in the rental. The rental was just under 3,000*l.*

46,238. What does it come to then annually—what percentage of the outlay on repairs and drainage?—The average is, on the repairs only, without the drainage, 779*l.* a year.

46,239. And on the repairs and drainage, or on the drainage itself, what is it?—You can work it out from this. It is nearly a third—nearly 1,000*l.* a year.

46,240. Is that at all in consequence of the buildings having been neglected in some period previous to that?—That I could not say.

46,241. Were the buildings in a very bad state at the beginning of the period that you have taken?—I could not say.

46,242. You see that it seems a large expenditure, but it makes a difference whether the buildings were found in a very bad state. We have heard of an estate where every penny has been spent in repairs for the last year or two, but it is acknowledged there that the buildings were in a very bad state before. You do not know about that?—I could not tell.

46,243. You seemed to assume just now, as the Chairman noticed, I think, that the land court would protect the bad tenant?—Yes.

46,244. But I should imagine that it could not protect the bad tenant any more than it could protect the bad landlord?—I do not see in valuing, how a valuer could go back and say what condition the farm was in when the man took it over, and if the valuer went when the farm was in a thoroughly bad condition, and the land run out, he could only say it was worth a very low rent.

46,245. Well, how could it be valued any better now by private people. You have occasion to value such things now?—Either the owner or a land agent would probably have a very good idea of what that farm was when the tenant took it, but an outside man would not.

46,246. But surely the outside valuer would have to take all the means that he could get at his disposal of finding out the true value; do not you think so. No Land Court constituted in this country could shut its eyes to that. It is scarcely conceivable that a State official would ever shut his eyes to that?—You see in the case of a very run-out field, it is very hard to imagine that that was ever in a thoroughly good condition. It is much easier to imagine that it has always been bad, and has perhaps got a little worse.

46,247. That is the difficulty altogether of valuing, but I mean that if a court were constituted, or if the county court had the power, or any other body had the power of appointing men to value, there are plenty of excellent valuers in this county—we have met, I should say, half-a-dozen since we began sitting on this Commission—I think I see one or two in this room now who could be entrusted to do justice in that. Do you not think so?—I think it more likely that a fair rental would be arrived at between landlord and tenant than with any outside influence myself.

46,248. But that would surely be done still in a large proportion of cases; this would only be in cases where they failed to agree?—In that case I think that the bad tenant would get more advantage, and the good tenant would lose. That is a matter of opinion, of course.

46,249. I confess I do not quite see that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

Before you go any further, may I make a suggestion which may help you and also Mr. Harford. I would suggest that it might be provided that a report upon every farm should be made when the tenant went into it, and every field scheduled.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,250. Exactly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,251. That would, perhaps, meet the difficulty that has been suggested by Mr. Harford.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,252. I think even now that if there is to be any valuation at any time between landlord and tenant, there ought to be a record of the state of the land when the tenant comes on it, and that it should be taken into account when the valuation is made, whether there is a court or not.

Witness.

46,253. I may state that we have in the office here the valuation made in 1864, and it was a field to field one.

Mr. Grove.

46,254. I suppose you consider there is very general agricultural depression at the present time in nearly everything ?—Generally speaking, yes.

46,255. Would you confirm what we have heard in numerous cases, that there is a great deal of agricultural depression ?—I think that here farmers suffer rather less than in England, because they go in for so many things. It is not one style of farming only—and one thing that has helped farmers here has been pigs, which have been very high. Then as to horses, though a gentleman here to-day stated that they have been 10*l.* lower, still, I think, as I know he got a very good price for his horses about a month ago, I daresay others have too, and horses are fairly high. They may be a few pounds lower this year, but the general impression is that they are going to be high this year, at any rate the dealers are bidding high for them now.

46,256. You make abatements, I think, on your rents, you stated ?—Yes.

46,257. There is no permanent reduction ?—No.

46,258. Do you give notice when you make abatements ?—Yes.

46,259. What length of notice—a month or so ?—Yes, over a month it was last time.

46,260. Then you sold some farms on your estate some time ago ?—Yes.

46,261. And we were very glad to find that they were sold to the sitting tenants. How was the sale effected, by auction, or by private agreement ?—By private agreement. The present sale I am referring to was by private agreement, but I sold some land near Cardigan by auction, and I think, excepting in one instance, it was all bought by the tenants; in that case it was by auction.

46,262. I think you said that if there were leases there would be no abatements ?—Yes.

46,263. That abatements would be on the yearly rentals, and not on the leases. Now we have had several cases where abatements have been given by the landlord, where the land has been held on lease, just the same as when it was held on yearly tenancies. We have had several cases of that kind ?—I refer to that because I have some property in Gloucestershire, and I was asked for short leases, because it was a fairer way of settling the rent, and because it would imply no abatement; therefore I gave six years' leases there.

Mr. Grove—continued.

46,264. In answer to Professor Rhŷs I think you said that a great many sons of farmers went into the Church ?—Yes.

46,265. Do you think that the expenses of going into the Church and of their education at college, and so on, are paid by their own brain power principally, or by money that the parents have saved from agriculture ?—It is a very hard question to answer.

46,266. I suppose it may be a bit of each ?—Yes, very probably.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,267. I do not wish the question about the Land Court to be misunderstood. As I understand you, what you mean is that if a farm had to be valued by a Land Court they would be obliged to value it at the time at which it came before them ?—Yes.

46,268. And for this reason, that the letting value of that farm is its future, not its past ?—Yes.

46,270. My point was this. Suppose two farms came before the Land Court, what a Land Court has to do is to fix the rent for the next seven years for whoever is the tenant. It may be a new tenant coming in; let us take the case of a new tenant coming in, that new tenant must have a rent fixed according to the actual value of the farm, and not according to what it ought to have been if his predecessor had done what was right ?—On the other hand, a tenant with capital would pay the original rent on the understanding that he would not be disturbed, and he would be able to bring back the farm to what it was before being run out by the present tenant, whereas if there was a Land Court he would get it at a reduced rent, and only for seven years, and if he in that seven years improved, I presume the landlord then would have the same opportunity of bringing the farm before the Land Court, and the Land Court would then raise the rent on the tenant's improvements.

46,271. There is one other question I wanted to ask you. You said that when the buildings were erected without consent there was no right to compensation ?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,272. Strictly, according to the Agricultural Holdings Act, it may be so, but the Agricultural Holdings Act reserves all previous rights. That means that it leaves the tenant exactly where he was before, without such an Act. Now, the question I want to ask is this. In case a person had erected a building on your land with your verbal consent, do you not think that if he died the next year it would be a very hard case, simply because there was nothing in writing, that he should be debarred from having equitable compensation for improvements?—When I said no right, I meant no legal right. As a matter of fact, in a case of that sort, we should, I presume, pay ourselves, but in regard to change of tenancy, a case occurred the other day of that kind, and on that occasion the tenant had without leave put up a back kitchen; that was paid for by the incoming tenant in that way.

46,273. In the case of haulage, if a man died just after executing a large amount of haulage, you would probably think that it would be equitable that he should be in some way compensated for it?—That would be a different question altogether.

46,274. There are many cases in which landlords have said that they have thought it was equitable to make some arrangement?—It has never occurred, so I cannot say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,275. To pursue this matter of a Land Court: say a tenant enters into a farm that is worked out, and he improves it during the seven years that he is in it; you say that the Land Court would really raise the rent on improvements made by himself?—I presume so. At any rate I suppose that if the tenant has the right to bring his farm before the Land Court, the landlord has an equal right to bring the farm before the Land Court.

46,276. Yes; but I am assuming, and I suppose it is right to assume, that there will be certain statutory conditions attached to the establishment of a Land Court; that is that the tenant should fulfil his conditions, and the landlord should fulfil his. If the tenant failed to fulfil his conditions, if he allowed the farm to become dilapidated or deteriorated, then the landlord would obtain compensation. On the other hand, if the tenant had improved the farm, and if he had terminated his tenancy, he should be paid compensation for the improvements which he had made on the farm?—That in theory would be correct, but I have never yet heard of any compensation being paid to a landlord.

46,277. You know that landlords put in a claim for dilapidations?—I have never heard of their getting it.

46,278. Not under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

46,279. We generally find that when a tenant puts in a claim he generally gets a counterclaim. We know that?—I have never heard of it.

46,280. You have not?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

46,281. You said the Act was not operative in this district?—It is not operative, it is true.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,282. I will say the same as Sir John Llewelyn with respect to that clause of yours, contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. The Act provides that where a scale of compensation is inserted in an agreement, it may be taken in substitution for compensation under the Act, but you are not allowed to contract yourself out of the Act, only out of the 33rd section?—That I was not aware of till, in fact, about a week ago.

46,283. If you are in any way anxious for the good traditions of your estate, I would advise you to have that expunged from the agreement, most certainly. Now, you say that penalising clauses are never enforced; is that so?—They never have been enforced.

46,284. Is it because the restrictive clauses are always observed?—No, they are not observed.

46,285. What are the restrictive clauses that would be inserted in agreements?—Restrictive clauses regarding the sale of corn, straw ——

46,286. Straw?—Yes. Straw and hay, and as regards the ploughing up of grass land, I do not think there are any others—yes, there is this: "Ploughing up of grass land; a further "rent of 5*l.* for every ton of hay, straw, stub-"ble, turnips, green crop, fodder, or manure." All those are sold by tenants, and no penalising clause is enforced.

46,287. They could sell without making any application for permission?—Yes.

46,288. I suppose you would say that these restrictive clauses are inserted as a protection against a bad tenant?—Yes.

46,289. You would have no objection to the establishment of a Land Court as a protection against a bad landlord?—No, I should not, but I think that the landlords would do far less for their tenants if they were in any way tied down by any Land Court.

46,290. But you will admit that there are bad landlords, I suppose?—Yes, I will admit that there are bad people of all sorts.

46,291. You say that small farmers do better in depressed times than large farmers?—Yes.

46,292. That is because they eke out a living by working as labourers?—Yes, in many instances, or in some cases also by hiring out a horse and cart, for instance, hauling too.

46,293. Do any of them go on the roads to labour as casual labourers—those on small holdings?—I have never heard of any.

46,294. Do you think there is a reluctance among farmers to go out to labour, simply because of the status of a labourer?—I really do not know.

46,295. Is it possible? Many farmers probably might think that labouring might be more remunerative, but would object to the status of a labourer, and consequently cling to their farms?—It depends so much on what you define as a small farmer. I know many labourers on my own estate, who have, perhaps, five or six acres. Those are regular labourers, and go out. There are others with rather a larger amount of land who do occasionally go out as labourers.

46,296. We will say a place about 40 or 50 acres?—I should say that that man would not care to go out as a labourer.

46,297. You say that no interest is ever charged on repairs which have been effected by you on your estate?—Yes.

46,298. You are not prepared to speak with respect to other estates?—No, not at all. I only speak for my own.

46,299. We have heard here to-day that interest has been charged on repairs?—I speak solely for my own estate.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,300. Do you only speak for your own estate?—Only for my own estate.

46,301. Do you always make an allowance when land is taken away for either building or planting?—Yes, building or planting.

46,302. Do you also make an allowance for the rates on that land?—Yes.

46,303. I shall not go into this Land Court question much, but would it not be the basis of the Land Court, in the first instance, to see what the position of the farm is. Once before the Land Court, every single item, I should say, on the farm would have to be put on record, and from that you could always see what the farmer has been doing, whether he has been improving his land or disimproving it?—My impression is, that it is the bad tenant who would go before the Land Court, and that the good tenants would gain an advantage, and would, if they went, lose.

46,304. I think you said just now that tenants would put up the buildings, and the landlord find the timber?—That was in these four instances where the holdings have been cut up.

46,305. Not on the whole estate?—Not on the whole estate, no. All the buildings are done by us, except in these four instances, which are instances of sub-letting.

46,306. Then you are in favour of labourers having a plot of ground to keep a cow?—Yes, where it is possible to give it them.

46,307. Have you any on your estate?—Yes a great many.

46,308. How do they do; do you consider that they do better than those who live in cottages without any land?—Yes, much better.

46,309. Do you think it would be an inducement to keep agricultural labourers in the district if they all had these plots of ground?—Yes, I think it would be a very great inducement.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,310. With regard to abatements, is a farmer in this district able to get his rates reduced when you give abatements of rent, and not permanent reductions?—That I do not know. My agent says no.

46,311. We have found in the majority of places that we have been in, that they do not. How long have you given abatements?—Since 1885.

46,312. That is a good while, too; a farmer would have saved a good bit of money in his rates if he had had that as a permanent reduction?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,313. I think you gave it every year since 1885?—There was one year, I think, we did not, and then in one it was only half a year.

46,314. It would not be quite continuous?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,315. Then with regard to agricultural experiments, I think you said that some had been tried on your farm?—Yes.

46,316. Can you give me the results—has it been a success?—Well, it was last year. It was on grass land, and it was not a very good year for trying it, so that I do not know that the result is of much use. The same experiment is being carried on this year, and I hope will be of more use.

46,317. You think it is a good thing to try these experiments?—Oh, yes.

46,318. In order to enable farmers to see——?—To see what manure pays best.

46,319. You say that farmers do not insure their lives. Why do they not?—That I cannot say. I asked the question to try and find out, but I have not heard that they do. The labourers are insured very often in the Foresters; they belong to the Foresters.

46,320. I recommended a farmer yesterday to insure his life, because he lived in a very bad farmhouse. I suppose the houses here are pretty good on the whole?—Well, I consider them so.

46,321. Then, with regard to farmers' sons who go into the Church and into other professions. Do you know whether they at any time pay back the money expended for their education?—That I could not say. I do not know. Of course, if I did say anything it would be mere hearsay. I know nothing.

Lord Kenyon.

46,322. I think we may take it that your idea of a land court is that it would be a place to which a bad tenant would go to get himself fixed on his holding?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Hughes called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,323. You have a statement which I believe has been read through to you by Professor Rhŷs, and which you say is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

See 48,509 and 48,542.

I live at Pendre, Ysbytty Ystwyth, in the county of Cardigan, and am a farmer. In the year 1852 I rented the farm of Erwtomau (166 acres in extent) of Mr. James Rowlands, at the annual rent of 30*l.*, together with a sufficient quantity of straw to thatch the corn for the winter, the erection of pigstyes, and payment for cartage towards the buildings. I found the dwelling-houses, one propped up with timber, the barn also practically in ruins, and the rest in a very bad state of repair. The place appeared an extremely poor one to think of making a living upon it. There was not even a yard of any kind of hedge. A large portion was very wet, and gorse covered the greater part of the land. For several years I sowed corn without even getting as much as the seed returned, but after I had commenced improving the farm, and using lime, manure, and guano, it returned the seed. The farm for the first two years maintained two small horses and six horned cattle. The place was gradually improving, and I was beginning to make a living and getting some of the expense refunded, when I received a notice from my landlady (Mr. Rowlands being then dead) that I must pay an increase of 10*l.* in the rent. I was foolish enough to take it at 40*l.*, and without any straw to thatch the corn being allowed. Four tenants had tried to carry on the farm before me, but they only remained 10 years between them, and each one of them had taken all he could out of it before leaving. I improved the dwelling-house by rebuilding the pine end with stone and mortar, flagging the floor and boarding the loft. The whole cost me 72*l.* The barn I rebuilt entirely, with a wall. I laid a thrashing-floor of boards, with both ends flagged, with stone bought at Aberystwyth. This cost me 52*l.* I made a stable sufficient to keep five horses, including proper stalls, a loft, and stone paving; the whole cost me 31*l.* I erected a shed (14 yards long, 8 yards wide, and 5 yards high) of stone and mortar, carting the stones from the quarry myself, and roofed with zinc. It had a loft above to keep hay, and divisions in the floor to put calves and colts. This cost me 62*l.* I also built two other sheds for young calves. Those were boarded on the sides and covered with zinc, and cost me 10*l.* I also erected a boiler-house, with an oven in it. This was built of stone and mortar, and the timber of oak, and cost me 20*l.* I also expended 12*l.* in building pigstyes. I also erected two cart-houses, and a place to keep a trap, at the cost of 20*l.* I planted half an acre of land near the house with larch for shelter, and they are growing splendidly. I carted annually from Aberystwyth, some nine miles away, between 15 and 20 tons of lime, for which I paid 15*s.* per ton, also about 5 tons of guano. The aggregate value of these I estimate as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
Lime - - -	150	8	0
Cartage - -	110	4	0
Guano at 4*l.* per ton - -	560	0	0

I also drained the wet land and paid for cutting 765 perches of drains 4 feet deep at 1*s.* 6*d.* per perch, also for stones for filling up the same, and for pipes. The stones for filling up and the pipes cost 2*s.* per perch, the whole expenditure, at 3*s.* 6*d.* per perch, amounting to 134*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* I expended 35*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* to set up a pool for threshing, chaff-cutting, churning, &c. I left on the farm 22 swing gates and substantial oak posts whole worth about 16*l.* When I left I had fields well laid down with clover seeds. I had to leave the farm because we were told it was too cheap, and it was refused both to myself and to my children. I offered 50*l.* for it, but I was told that I should not have it. I offered also to pay one year's rent in advance so that I might try to get some of the expenditure refunded but without success. I occupied the farm for 30 years and paid the rent every time. The landlady did not incur any expense on the buildings, nor on improving the land, and yet I was turned out unmercifully by her. My son went twice to Birkenhead to see her on the matter, but in vain. During my occupation of Erwtomau I spared no effort whatever to improve the farm, and when I left I had six horses, plenty of corn and hay, and a good number of cattle, and the farm I thought was worth seeing, for, having been drained and well tilled in every respect, it yielded a satisfactory return. I afterwards got a farm under Lord Lisburne, doubtless, because I and my family had succeeded in improving Erwtomau in such a manner.

James Rowlands of Troedrhiwlwba, Penllwyn, Aberystwyth, was my landlord, and the present owner is one of his daughters, namely, Mrs. Kate Jones, the wife of the Rev. W. R. Jones (Goleufryn) Holyhead. The present tenant has been there for 13 years, and he is now reaping the result of my labours and expenditure. I was a large timber merchant at the time, doing extensive business in this and other counties. I used to buy 1,500*l.* very often, annually, of timber, and all my profit as timber merchant for 30 years I sunk in the farm. In addition to starting there with 500*l.* all went into the farm. I had to leave penniless. I had several prizes for farming.

In addition I put up 835 perches of hedges at 3*s.* per perch, and 835 perches of wiring at 6*s.* per perch, which are to be seen there now. (Receipted bills produced.) I also erected another shed 6 yards in length by 6 yards in width and 5 yards high.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,324. Is Mrs. Jones a large landowner?—She had only one place when I was there.

46,325. Why did you spend so much money on the place?—I went there when I was 25 years of age.

46,326. You spent a large sum of money without any substantial agreement. Had you no promise at all with your landlady?—The landlord under whom I took the holding was a very good one. He was a good practical farmer himself, and would do me no wrong.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,327. Are we to understand that the dwelling-house was in a very bad state of repair when you took the farm?—Yes.

46,328. You were then under a good landlord?—Yes, but the house was in a bad condition when I took it.

46,329. So that you had no chance of getting it renewed?—My landlord died within the first half year that I took the farm.

46,330. Was your landlord ill when you took the farm?—Yes.

46,331. I understand that you had been a timber merchant. Were you in the habit of buying goods?—Yes.

46,332. Did you not have agreements with those you purchased timber from?—Yes.

46,333. Why did you not have an agreement with this landlord when you took the farm in the same way?—If he had been alive I should have had it.

46,334. But he is dead now?—Yes, he died during the first six months I was there.

46,335. Why did you go and spend so much money without an agreement?—I did not receive one.

46,336. But did you apply for one?—Yes, I asked after his death several times for an agreement.

46,337. What induced you to go and build without an agreement?—When the house was falling down I had either to build or to leave.

46,338. Then after you had made all these improvements you had to leave the farm?—Yes.

46,339. Why?—There was too much profit in it; it was too cheap.

46,340. Did the landlady make any improvements and lay out any money herself?—No, not at all. She was only between six and seven years of age when I took the place.

46,341. Do you consider that this advance of rent was made entirely on your own improvements?—Yes, certainly.

46,342. You say you were turned out unmercifully, how do you explain that?—Because I was obliged to leave, and failed to get the place either for myself or my children.

46,343. Did you beg to remain in the old place?—Yes, and I also offered a higher rent.

46,344. But she would not hear of it?—No.

46,345. At what rent did she rent the place after?—I do not know.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,346. But you do know that you left the place penniless?—I had no money when I left the farm.

46,347. Then if you had no money how could you remain there?—The place had been put into such good condition.

46,348. But you could not carry on the farm if you had not any money?—One field would pay the rent if I was allowed to remain there 46,349. I suppose you meant you had not a penny over the value of the stock?—Yes.

46,350. Would it not have been a good thing if you could have purchased the holding?—Yes.

46,351. And if the Government were to advance the money at a low percentage during the time you had been there you would have bought the farm and paid for it, I suppose?—Yes, I would do so if I had the chance. They would not get me to leave in that way again.

46,352. What do you consider was the value of all your improvements, putting the whole together?—I do not know, indeed. All my hairs became grey there, and I sweated hard there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,353. Who is the present tenant of Erwtomau?—His name is John Evans.

46,354. What rent does he pay now?—I do not know.

46,355. What year did he enter the farm?—1882.

46,356. Was it in 1882 that he offered 50*l.* for it?—Yes.

46,357. Did the state of the market justify such an advance in the rents?—The ground is as green as this table; it is all gorse; more than half of it was gorse.

46,358. Which do you find the most profitable, timber merchant or farmer?—Timber merchant.

46,359. Why did you not stick to it and leave farming alone?—I was fond of land.

46,360. Do you find the people generally have a liking for land?—Yes, I think everybody is fond of land; I can speak for myself at any rate.

46,361. And owing to your bitter experience you think it is necessary to have some law, if it is possible to devise one, to protect people from outbidding each other?—Yes, we want one to-day, and I hope the Commissioners will see that there is fair play for the tenants, and draw up the law.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,362. When you went you said you had nothing left?—I had very little.

46,363. You said the rent was too high?—No, not at that time.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,364. For how many years did you have the farm at 30*l.* a year?—I think it was after four years that I had an increase.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,365. How many years did you hold at 40*l.*?—I was there 30 years, and I was there 26 years after the four years.

46,366. That is altogether 30 years?—Yes.

46,367. You said you sunk about 890*l.* in that land?—Yes.

46,368. Suppose you take an average of that for the 30 years you will find it to be under 30*l.* a year?—Yes.

46,369. Supposing we add that 30*l.* to the 40*l.* you were paying in rent, that makes about 70*l.*?—Yes.

46,370. That would be somewhat the same as if you were paying 70*l.* rent and the landlord doing all things for you?—Yes.

46,371. How many acres had you?—I think it was 166.

46,372. What sort of land was that?—There was very little land without gorse over it.

46,373. Was it good land?—No, it was not. It was about nine miles from Aberystwyth.

46,374. I know some good land more than nine miles from Aberystwyth?—You do not know anything about it beyond the nine miles from Aberystwyth, Aberystwyth and Pontarfynach.

46,375. Indeed I do. Do you consider it is the worst kind of land that produces gorse?—There are two kinds of gorse, very small gorse growing close to the ground, and the other tall gorse.

46,376. You were paying according to that rough calculation about 70*l.* a year on an average during your tenancy for 166 acres?—Yes.

46,377. You do not consider that usually a very high rent, do you?—Yes, a very high rent about there.

46,378. What are the rents of the farms about there?—Pretty well the same.

46,379. About how much an acre do they pay?—Something like from 10*s.* to 15*s.*; some 5*s.*, and some 10*s.*, and some 15*s.*

46,380. I thought you said just now there was some good land on that farm. One field would pay the whole rent you said?—Yes, after I had improved it.

46,381. You were there 30 years?—Yes.

46,382. You had some of the profit from the land, surely?—Very little; as I received a little money I went to the gorse and cleared it, and farmed the land.

46,383. Was that gorse that was useful as food for the horses?—No, only for burning.

46,384. Does your landlady know that you are giving this evidence here to-day?—I do not know.

46,385. You have not given her notice?—No.

46,386. You know that she belongs to a highly respectable family of Nonconformists in this county?—Yes.

46,387. Would it not have been fair to give her notice of this evidence?—I told her several times that I should be sure to say it when I had an opportunity, and I should say it at the Day of Judgment against her, and I am not afraid of saying that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,388. Is the Reverend Mr. Jones a Nonconformist minister?—I do not know.

46,389. Do you know whether Mr. James Rowlands was a Nonconformist?—He was a Methodist.

46,390. Do you suggest that religion had anything to do with his eviction, and being turned out of his first farm?—No, nothing.

46,391. Who is the present tenant of Pendre?—I am.

46,392. Is that Lord Lisburne's property?—Yes.

46,393. You have been there 13 years?—Yes.

46,394. Ever since you left Erwtomau?—Yes.

46,395. Who is the present tenant of Erwtomau?—John Evans.

46,396. What rent is he paying?—I do not know.

46,397. When he was prevented from carrying on the farm in spite of offering 50*l.* was it let at an increased rent or not?—I do not know.

46,398. Do you think that 560*l.* worth of guano in 30 years was suitable for the land?—I know it was.

46,399. How much would be the unexhausted improvements of the 560*l.*?—In 30 years.

46,400. Yes, at the end of the 30 years?—There would be nothing.

46,401. Then you claim nothing for the unexhausted improvements in respect of guano?—What you ask is this, is it not? Would there not be some of the manure in the land at the end of the 30 years?

46,402. Yes?—Not of the first manure applied to the land.

46,403. How much was the unexhausted value when you went out?—As much as I put in the land during the last seven years was good.

46,404. How much?—I put from four to five tons every year.

46,405. It is 4*l.* a ton. Did you make any application for that money when you lost the farm?—Yes, I asked her several times.

46,406. In writing?—No, only in her uncle's house—her mother's brother.

46,407. Where was that?—Abercwmdolau.

46,408. Did you get any compensation?—Not a brass penny, only he told me to go away, it was too cheap.

46,409. Have you any security of tenure where you are now?—Yes, I have an agreement.

46,410. Is that a lease or a tenancy from year to year?—I wired five miles of land there again.

46,411. Have you any security for your outlay, I ask?—No, I have not, only I came down here to-day faithfully in the hope that I should have, when I go away from there, if they send me away.

46,412. I understand you have not got a lease, but a year to year tenancy. Which have you?—A yearly tenancy.

Lord Kenyon.

46,413. There is a question by Mr. Vincent. "You seem to have liked getting a farm under "Lord Lisburne. Are you satisfied with him "as a landlord"?—I have only one fault to find with the landlord.

46,414. What is that?—He lets the land at too high a rent per acre.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,415. What is the rent per acre you pay now?—10*s.* 6*d.*

Lord Kenyon.

46,416. Thank you for your evidence?—And I thank you very much. Let us have a law so that we can live, and that pretty soon.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Daniel Jenkins called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 48,715–48,849 and 73,330–73,542.

46,417. Are you residing in the Vale of Aeron, and a schoolmaster under the Llanfairclydogau School Board?—Yes.

46,418. Will you kindly give your evidence?—My Lord and Gentlemen, I am a tenant farmer occupying 80 acres in the vale of Aeron. at an annual rental of 75*l.*, and also a schoolmaster under the Llanfairclydogau School Board for the last 15 years. I have been desired by the central committee at Lampeter to give evidence respecting the Llanfair estate, comprising about 2,200 acres of arable, pasture, and mountain land, owned by William Jones, Esq., of Glandenys, since the year 1868, and formerly by the Right Honourable Lord Carrington, who was extremely popular and never interfered directly or indirectly in any way with his tenants.

46,419. That was the father of the Chairman of this Commission?—I think so. The farms are held under a yearly tenancy, subject to what I consider restrictive agreements, and a copy of which is produced with a letter accompanying the same for your inspection. I am sorry I could not get a printed copy for the Commission. It waives the advantages offered by the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 (England). The agreement, in duplicate, is sent to the tenants, and desired to be returned, signed and enclosing remittance for stamps upon agreements. The rent varies from 2*s.* 6*d.* (mountain land) to about 27*s.* an acre. No doubt the rents are too high during these hard times. I do not know whether representations have been made to the landlord to that effect, but it is often said by the tenants that they could not meet present demands if they had not lived and prospered under a less exacting "Mistir," and better times. One of the tenants, who served under both, and who felt the change acutely, used to say,—to put it in his own words, "Dian i! own i wedi meddwl mai fi piai "fe—dim ond mynd a 'chardod' fach i Lambed "bob hanerblwyddyn." In 1869 (or thereabouts) the rents were raised. (a.) By amount of one moiety of tithe rent-charge. Formerly this was included in the rents as apportioned, and amounted to 50*l.*, more or less. (b.) Subsequently, I find rents were re-arranged under a valuation, and in some cases an advance was made of from 20, 25, and 30 per cent. I am sorry I cannot compare the rents, as the Collector of Income Tax refused a list of rents when asked by myself, and I did not care to trouble the tenants with reference to it. In some cases occasional abatements have been made of from 5 per cent. to 10 per cent., but as it is not made to all the tenants there was seeming preference shown, thereby exciting jealousy among the tenants. Land has been taken away from farms for landlord's use, but no corresponding reduction was made in the rents. In one instance I have heard a tenant say (not now on the estate) that it would have been preferred to make a 10*l.* increase and the farm kept intact. Another instance of a piece ($\frac{1}{2}$ acre) of land being sold for a school site for the exorbitant price of 140*l.* an acre. The estate on the average cost about 16*l.* an acre. When the school was built the landlord refused stones for the building. The school is in the middle of his estate. No reduction whatever was made to the tenant, but says if it had been presented to the parishioners he would have had no ground for complaint. Where farms have been vacant instances could be given of Churchmen and Conservatives being preferred for the tenancy, when some of the best old tenants were desirous to secure the same. But in one instance a vacant farm was let to a Nonconformist, who is the Sanitary Inspector for the district, and in my opinion the inference is obvious.

46,420. It may be obvious to you; what is the inference?—He is the sanitary inspector for the district, and there may be bad buildings on the estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,421. Bad houses would it not be?—Yes buildings, but I take your correction. There is no security of tenure. When the 29th of September is approaching the chief topic of conversation is: "Well, who will get a blue paper "this year"? Every year it is looked forward to with dread. One tenant, who has been on the estate for about 26 years, has had no less than eight notices to quit. Other have had many. This, with the lordly manner of the one who serves the notices, keeps the tenants in a state of uncertainty and terror every year. The buildings, especially the out-buildings, on some of the homesteads are very poor, and give no encouragement for improvement in the breeding of stock. Cottages are scarce, and what there are are only poor. Where new buildings are erected no allowance is made for haulage, and in some cases great inconvenience is experienced by the tenants while the work is carried on. There is one instance of one of the best tenants and his family having had to live for months in the stable and other places during the building a very large dwelling house, but as a recompence he was served the following September with a notice to quit without assigning any reasons for such awkward proceedings. When asked for an interview re farms, &c., the landlord is "unapproachable." There is one or two who are they say the only persons favoured with an audience, and that everything must be carried out according to their instructions. These persons never allow an opportunity to pass but that they make these declarations, whether fancied or real I cannot say. These employés, who assume such authority, I venture to say, do a lot of mischief with regard to the relations of landlord and tenant. Tenants as a rule never attend a political meeting except in the Conservative (Unionist, beg pardon) interest. When in the Liberal interest the meeting is graced by the presence of one or two special reporters, who serve as a scare to those who would like to hear both sides. There is also a questionable mode of canvassing in vogue at election times, and after the election the names of those supposed to have voted contrary to their wishes are circulated. There is a splendid set of tenants on the estate and they are very industrious. The children in most cases work hard without pay, but they (the tenants) are in a state of servility; they do not feel sufficiently free to act independently in any public capacity—school boards, for instance. They are under the impression that it is to their advantage: (a) to put up at a particular hotel; (b) to buy their coal, lime, &c., with a particular merchant; (c) to grind their corn in a particular mill; (d) to attend a particular place of worship (if any); (e) to vote for a particular candidate in the different elections; (f) to deposit (if any) at a particular bank. Game and rabbits are preserved on the estate. Not much damage is done by game, but rabbits do great damage to the crops and entail extra labour in keeping the hedges in repair. The gamekeeper refuses to kill them when asked by the tenants, and by agreement the Ground Game Act is a dead letter. Anyone carrying a gun is marked, &c. About three miles of fishing is guarded by the following notice boards:—"Any "person found trespassing on my lands will be "prosecuted"; note the possessive pronoun. When improvements have been made at the chapel (Independent), by erecting a wall and railing, the deacons incurred the displeasure of the adjoining landlord, and are called names. The chapels were not sold with the estate in 1868. Sanitary accommodation for the chapel has been made two years ago, and has been at the carpenter's place waiting removal ever since, but the chapel officials are actually too much afraid to have it put up.

Lord Kenyon.

46,422. You speak for this one particular estate?—Yes.

46,423. The estate of Mr. William Jones, of Glandenys?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,424. You say there is a notice board "on "my lands." You do not dispute his possession of them; they are his lands?—Quite so.

46,425. You say a list is circulated. Have you seen such a list?—No.

46,426. How do you know of its existence?—Well, we hear the names given.

46,427. It is hearsay?—Yes.

46,428. Who are the special reporters, newspaper reporters?—No, I do not suppose they would be.

46,429. Who?—Employés of the landlord, people in his employ.

46,430. What is the questionable mode of canvassing?—Well, going about with books and taking the names down.

46,431. I suppose both parties canvass, do they not?—Not in that place.

46,432. Is there no canvassing done in the Liberal interest?—Not to my knowledge.

46,433. And yet the Liberal candidate is returned at the general election?—Yes.

46,434. I see in this agreement, "the tenant "shall grind all the corn raised on his farm at "Llanfair." That seems rather a peculiar agreement?—I think so too.

46,435. Is that acted upon, do you know?—I believe they are under the impression that it is to their advantage, as I put it.

46,436. As a matter of fact they do take their corn there?—Yes, mostly.

46,437. Is the mill in the occupation of the landowner?—No, it is occupied by another tenant. You will notice all the corn grown on the farm must be ground; they cannot give it to the cattle whole, or in the straw.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,438. Are they allowed to sell it?—You will please note that clause.

Lord Kenyon.

46,439. It says, "all the corn raised"?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,440. Who is the Nonconformist sanitary inspector?—Mr. Thomas, Tafarndy, Cellan.

46,441. Is he a friend of yours?—Yes; not a particular friend of mine.

46,442. Is it not a little unkind to suggest what you have of him, that he was actuated by the motives you impute?—I do not mean it as an unkindness at all. I hope we shall be as good friends as ever.

46,443. You say the inference is evident. It appears to me also to impute to him unworthy motives?—Not on his side at all.

46,444. That he might be actuated by improper motives. It seems to me as broad as it is long?—No, I do not mean to suggest that at all.

46,445. What amount of land was sold in the parish for which you speak?—About 2,200 acres.

46,446. Was it all bought by the same Mr. William Jones?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

46,447. Do you know whether the rents were raised after the sale?—They were.

46,448. One tenant has had several notices to quit?—Yes.

46,449. You mentioned one case?—Yes.

46,450. Was there any reason given for the notice?—There may have been; not for all of them.

46,451. Well, what was the reason?—I cannot say.

46,452. There must have been some ground why one should have notice to quit and not the other?—There may be.

46,453. Who is that tenant?—You will pardon me, I must not give names.

46,454. I do not wish to press you unduly?—I can give it to the Commission privately.

46,455. This is the point I want to arrive at; whether there was any special reason in this case why he should have had successive notices to quit?—Very likely there were reasons, but whether they were sufficient is another question.

46,456. You think there may have been reasons?—Most likely.

46,457. Are any of the farms held on lease, or are they all annual tenancies?—Not to my knowledge.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,458. Do you know, in reference to the instance where you say the land was taken away from the farmer, whether he would have preferred the 10*l*. increase in his rent?—Yes.

46,459. That comes within your own knowledge?—Yes.

46,460. Do you mind mentioning the name?—I would rather not. I will give you his name in writing.

46,461. About how much was the land in extent that was taken away?—From 15 to 18 acres.

46,462. What was the rent of the farm per acre? Do you know that?—Not exactly.

46,463. What about?—From about 18*s*. to 20*s*.

46,464. How many tenant farmers are there on the estate?—I cannot answer you exactly.

46,465. Have you any idea. Are there 30 to 40?—Yes, I should say so.

46,466. Which is the chapel you were alluding to where the deacons were too much afraid to get their sanitary arrangements put right?—The Independent Chapel at Capel Mair, Llanfairclydogau.

46,467. You mentioned the canvassing. Why should there be little or no canvassing done in that district?—They are afraid to do it.

46,468. Afraid of the landlord?—No, afraid of hurting the feelings of the tenant, perhaps.

46,469. By asking him for his vote. That would be rather flattering to him, would it not?—I do not quite understand how you look at it. I think the tenants would prefer them to keep away.

46,470. Why?—You will pardon me for not answering you.

Mr. Grove.

46,471. Do you farm any land yourself?—Yes.

46,472. What quantity?—About 80 acres

46,473. Are you well known to, and are you intimate with, the farmers of the district?—I have lived amongst them for 15 years.

46,474. Do you think there is any disinclination amongst the farmers to come to this Commission and give evidence?—Yes, I think there is.

46,475. It has been often said that difference of politics and religion does not cause any unpleasantness at all between the tenant and the agent of the landlord. Do you agree with that?—I do not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,476. So far as I can understand the agreement it is this, the tenant is not forbidden to sell the corn after it has been ground, but it has to be ground first?—That may be.

46,477. Do you think that is an unjust interference with the rights and liberties of the tenant?—Yes, just so.

46,478. Are there many thatched buildings now on the Glandenys estate?—Yes.

46,479. Do the tenant farmers on that estate find this clause rather irksome, that they have to thatch those buildings?—I think they do.

46,480. I suppose they have to grow more wheat to thatch with, and wheat being so unprofitable, they find it a great burden?—Yes.

46,481. And you think it is high time the landlords should slate their buildings, or cover them in some other way?—Yes.

46,482. Has Mr. Jones, the landlord at Glandenys, fairly met the requirements of the tenants in offering them increased accommodation for their stock?—Fairly so, I believe.

46,483. There is not much complaint on that score?—Not much. In some cases there is.

46,484. Of course there is great complaint that some get abatements, and some do not?—That is a very sore point.

46,485. And no reason assigned for making the distinction?—Not to my knowledge.

46,486. But you think some are in greater favour with the landlords than others?—I cannot say. I cannot give any reason.

46,487. Is that the impression abroad?—I should say so; that would be the result of the act.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,488. Do you happen to know what the amount of the purchase money of this estate was?—I think it was 35,000*l*.

46,489. I do not quite understand what you said about the tithe. The rent was raised; explain that?—Under the previous landlord the tithes were included in the rent, and then the tithes were charged extra, after.

46,490. Afterwards?—The tithes were added.

46,491. The amount?—The amount of tithes were collected separately, as a further sum to the rent.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,492. There was a rise of rent to the amount of the tithe?—Yes, I should say so.

46,493. Then you say that the rate of 140*l.* per acre was asked for the ground required for a school board?—Yes.

46,494. At what rate do you consider this was bought?—At about 16*l.*, I think.

46,495. The difference is between 16*l.* and 140*l.*?—Yes.

46,496. Do you mean 16*l.* an acre and 140*l.* an acre?—Yes.

46,497. Are there many bad houses on the estate?—In the way of out-buildings, especially.

46,498. With regard to the inference you mentioned just now as to the appointment of the sanitary inspector, was it a case of giving cheese to a biting dog?—I could not say.

46,499. You speak of numerous notices to quit. What effect has that had on the farming in the district?—Well, it tended to deteriorate the farming.

46,500. The people had no confidence?—No confidence whatever, uncertainty of tenure.

46,501. The land does not produce what it should?—No.

46,502. Then you mentioned that the landlords were not approachable, except to a select few. Are those generally termed "tell tales"?—I should think so. I thank you for the term.

46,503. Do the game and rabbits do much harm?—The rabbits do.

46,504. Have you the right to kill the rabbits?—By the Act, but they do not take advantage of the Act.

46,505. Why do they not?—I cannot say. I should say they would be afraid.

46,506. The law is in their favour?—But they do not put the law in force.

46,507. Why do they not?—It is their weakness, I suppose.

46,508. It is the unwritten law, I suppose, that we have heard of before, of which they are afraid, more than the written law. Is that a fact?—It may be.

46,509. Do you consider that the keepers often cause unpleasantness between landlord and tenant?—I should not like to say so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

46,510. Do you say that the relations between landlord and tenant are strained?—Yes.

46,511. That is owing to their shooting the dogs and cats, I suppose?—Yes.

46,512. Are the millers in this part of the country considered pretty honest. In our part of the country they have a name rather different to that?—Perfectly honest, I should say.

46,513. I am glad to hear it. You mentioned just now that they are afraid of having something put up. What was it?—A privy.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,514. Was there any reason assigned for giving eight notices to quit to the same person in 26 years?—Not to my knowledge.

46,515. Had the tenant incurred the displeasure of his landlord in any way?—I could not say.

46,516. Was he a bad farmer?—No.

Lord Kenyon.

46,517. I have a question by Mr. Vincent. He asks, "Have you any idea why the audience "in court laughed when you said there was no "canvassing on the Liberal side at elections"?—No, I have no idea.

46,518. "Do you mean to say that, living in "this country, you do not know that both sides "use every effort the law permits, and perhaps "some which the law does not permit"?—Certainly, they use every effort at their disposal.

46,519. "How many farmers do you say you represent"?—I do not represent any farmers at all; not on that estate.

46,520. You are speaking for yourself?—Yes, at the request of the central committee for the county.

46,521. Where?—At Lampeter. I am a member of the committee.

46,522. What committee was that?—Formed to prepare evidence for this Commission.

46,523. Then there is a question by Mr. W. Jones. "Do you know, as a matter of fact, that "all tenancies on the Llanfair estate are held "under an agreement"?—I do not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Jones called and examined.

Re-examined 48,848.

Lord Kenyon.

46,524. You are a farmer and auctioneer. Where do you live?—I live at Teifyside Hall.

46,525. You have a statement to give us I understand. Will you kindly read it?—Yes, I am a tenant farmer and I live at Teify Side, in the parish of Llanllwni, in the county of Carmarthen. My farm is a portion of Maes y Crugiau Manor Farm. A new building was made in the year 1882 by Mrs. Jones, the landlady, now deceased. I took the farm for 2*l.* an acre, free of rates and tithe rentcharge, but on finding out in the ordinary survey maps that my farm was a few acres less I had a reduction of 10*l.*, and I have about 20 acres in addition to my farm for 29*s.* an acre, free of rates and rentcharge. In 1892, when the depression of trade came hard upon us, we the tenants put our heads together and they fixed upon me to put the case before the trustees, who were Messrs. A. Young, Kidwelly, and Thomas Walters, solicitor, Carmarthen. They agreed with us to do what they could and we all had a fair reduction, and they spent a lot of money on buildings and other improvements every year. I may state that I am acquainted with other estates, for instance, Waunifor, where I was brought up since my childhood. I left the place to give room to my sisters. The owner of that estate was always ready to meet the tenants on fair terms. The owner of the Bwlchbychan estate is one of the best landlords in Wales. He is doing everything for the comfort of his tenants in buildings and improvements of every kind. Mrs. Seymour Davies, the owner of part of the Highmead estate, through her worthy agent, Mr. Harries, deserves the highest respect from her tenants; and it is well known how deep Colonel Davies-Evans is in the hearts of his tenants. The owners of the Beilybedw and Talardd estates are on the best of terms with their tenants. The farmers in this district are dependent upon horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and butter and cheese. Butter and cheese produce about one-third, cattle one-third, and horses, pigs and sheep the remaining third. On account of this varied mode of farming occupiers of land in the locality have not suffered to the extent of farmers dependent almost entirely on dairy produce. The farmers have great confidence in their landlords, and they feel that they are safer in their hands as at present than they would be in case of the formation of a land court. I hear it said that a land court would mean the reduction of 25 per cent of rent. A considerable number of occupiers have within the last 20 years purchased freehold property, and in case of this reduction taking place in the value of land most of these numerous freeholders would be utterly ruined, as many are fully mortgaged, paying interest at 4 per cent. The only thing that would save them from total destruction would be a Government advance at a low rate of interest. I believe in a local agent between landlord and tenant where an agent is wanted, and I also think there should be light railways.

46,526. Fair rents and light railways?—Yes, and a local agent. I suggest that there should be a farmer's son from the neighbourhood as an agent instead of a stranger that does not understand the custom of the country. That is what I mean.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,527. You are in favour of local agents?—Yes, I am in favour of local agents—men who have been brought up to understand it thoroughly.

46,528. You live on the estate of the late Mrs. Jones?—Yes.

46,529. You also speak with respect to other estates?—Yes, in the neighbourhood.

46,530. Have you been deputed by the tenants of the other estates to appear here on their behalf?—No.

46,531. So that you are not speaking with the same authority as if you came from the tenants of those estates?—I am only speaking for myself of my own farm and of what I know as an auctioneer travelling about.

46,532. The other is hearsay evidence with respect to the other estates?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

46,533. Do you think it is possible that there are bad landlords?—Yes, there are; there is no mistake of that.

46,534. You know some?—There are none in our neighbourhood; they are all good ones.

46,535. But you believe there are some bad landlords?—Yes, there are some bad ones; there is no mistake about that; but that is only what I heard. It is exactly the same as I heard when a boy, that there was a man in the chimney. I have not seen him yet and I do not know for certain that such a man exists.

46,536. Do you think there are some tenants paying higher rents for their farms than they are worth?—I think the rents have been very high during the depression of the last two or three years.

46,537. Take an average, say for the last 15 years, do you think they have been paying too much, and more than the farms are really worth for the last 15 years on some estates. Do you know of some?—Those would be rented at the time of the high pitch of rents, and those are too high.

46,538. And they have never come down?—Our farms on this estate have come down.

46,539. On some other estate I mean?—Yes.

46,540. Would you have any objection to a Land Court to settle the rent in cases of that kind, where a farmer was rented too high?—Every place that I have been trying and have brought the tenant to the landlord, I succeeded in getting a reduction.

46,541. But supposing a farmer failed to succeed?—But I never failed, and therefore I do not know.

46,542. Supposing there was a farmer who failed to succeed; would you then have any objection in a case of that sort?—No, not in a case of that sort.

46,543. Who told you that a Land Court would only reduce the rent 5 per cent.?—I have stated 25 per cent.

46,544. Will you kindly read that statement again?—The latter part of it do you mean?

46,545. Yes, that paragraph?—"I hear it said "that a Land Court would mean the reduction "of 25 per cent. of rent." That is what I said.

46,546. On the present basis of prices, have the farmers generally in your neighbourhood had a reduction of 25 per cent.?—Yes.

46,547. Generally?—No, not generally. Some have had more.

46,548. According to that statement, they have not been treated equitably; some have received more than they ought to have, and others have received less?—It was like this, some have been rented say 30 or 40 years ago, and the reduction has been made lately; well, of course, those ought to have more reduction than those who have been through the old good time; those have saved some money you see.

46,549. It is not equitable afterwards that some should pay too much and some too little?—They are different landlords and different places you see. I believe that on Bwlchbychan estate every one is getting the same and on the Waunifor estate they have got 15 per cent.

46,550. You admit it is not equitable?—What is that word? I do not know it.

46,551. You say it would be fairer if rents were fixed evenly on different farms?—Every man ought to do his best with his property.

46,552. I am asking the question; do you not think it would be more equitable; why did these people buy their holdings who have purchased their farms?—Because they have been sold.

46,553. Because the farms were sold?—Yes.

46,554. Why did the farmers buy them? Because they got some money made out of them before, and they wanted to be safe and to be in the neighbourhood and everything.

46,555. Had they sufficient money to pay for them?—Yes, some of them, a part.

46,556. Do you know of cases where they had to borrow a big amount?—Yes.

46,557. Would those people be better off or worse off buying their holdings?—I believe if they get the money from the Government they will be better off.

46,558. Yes, but they do not have money from Government. Supposing that they borrowed money at 4 per cent. and borrowed a large amount which would they be, better off or worse off after purchasing their own holdings?—I would rather be a tenant farmer than that.

46,559. If they were better off by being tenants, what prompted them to buy their holdings, knowing that they would be better off as tenants?—How was the trade to keep on, say when the Alltyrodyn estate was sold, some 20 or 25 years ago? The people would like to be in the same neighbourhood and the farms paid them well at the time and they would do their best rather than turn away and have no place to go to, and they bought them.

46,560. Do you find that farmers are very reluctant to leave their own neighbourhood?—Some are.

46,561. Generally speaking, are they?—Yes. Of course if a man has been born there he likes to remain in the neighbourhood.

46,562. Was it really because they did not feel safe in their holdings that these people were purchasing?—They were not safe because they were selling at the time; you see the whole estate has been sold and several estates in the same neighbourhood; nearly half of Cardiganshire in that neighbourhood has been sold within the last 20 years.

46,563. I suppose they were afraid that the estate might be purchased by somebody who would not be as conscientious as the old landlord and perhaps would advance their rents. Is that so?—Not afraid of any one man buying the whole estate, but afraid that a man should buy their farm and take it up himself, or else offer it at an advancement There was a reduction of rent by 20 per cent., and then it was risen.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

46,564. I do not quite follow you?—The farms were at the time of selling them about 100*l.* rent, and some at 120*l.*, say they raised them up about 40*l.*

46,565. Those that purchased them?—Yes, they raised the rent afterwards—the new landlords—one here and there.

46,566. So that really the tenant farmers purchased them for fear of higher rent?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

46,567. Do you mention, amongst the landlords that you refer to, Colonel Evans of High Mead; do you mention his name in your statement?—I did.

46,568. How are the rents of his lands, are they supposed to be pretty low, or fair, or rather high?—I believe that they have been the same the last 30 or 35 years. I was a boy when his estate was valued.

46,569. Does he give any abatements or reductions of his rents, do you know?—I believe that he gave reductions to every farm that he raised. There was a change in the farms. I believe he gave the reductions; I do not know some do.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,570. What experience have you had in this country?—I have been an auctioneer.

46,571. For how long?—Twenty-five years.

46,572. Have you been connected with the farming interest for any longer period than that?—Yes.

46,573. I think you have had experience of being a tenant under trustees?—Yes.

46,574. Do you think they are as good landlords as anybody else?—I find them so far very good.

46,575. Have you been consulted as arbitrator in matters of dispute?—Yes, several times.

46,576. Which side has selected you, landlords or tenants?—Both sides. It depends.

46,577. Your opinion is that land agents ought to have local knowledge and be local men?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,578. As an auctioneer, would you say that there is an inclination to a rise in prices now?—I believe if they have a good season it will be so.

46,579. How do the last markets and the last fairs compare with the ones before?—I cannot say, because there are no fairs near here of late except at Carmarthen. Some dairy cattle were selling very well there. I have not seen them much higher than they are now. Horses sell well, stock very well indeed, and sheep.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Charles Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

46,580. Are you a landowner?—I am a landowner.

46,581. What is your estate?—The Waunifor estate, situate in this county.

46,582. Will you please tell us what you wish to say?—I came into my estate when I was 17 years of age, and my mother managed it for a short time until I came of age, and left college, in 1873. Since 1873 I have lived at Waunifor, which is in this county, and have devoted the whole of my time to farming and the management of my estate, and local and county affairs. I am a magistrate for the two counties of Cardigan and Carmarthen. I farmed my own home farm from 1873 till 1891, when I gave it up owing to having many other engagements. I thus have great sympathy with farmers, and would hail with delight any action that would benefit the farmer and farming interests. At present in my part of Cardiganshire there are very few absentee landlords, except one or two here and there where a man may hold a scattered estate. I believe, with regard to the land that is sold, owners of land are selling certain outlying portions of their estates in order to buy farms closer to the main portions of their estates.

46,583. Concentrating?—Yes, concentrating. During the last 20 years that I have lived here there have been a great many property sales, and land has been very free; anyone, in fact, could have bought land if they wished to do so. I will simply mention the Alltyrodyn estate, which I believe was worth 150,000*l.*, the Llaethliw estate, worth 55,000*l.*, and the Pantefaid estate, which I think was worth somewhere over 20,000*l.* Those are amongst the estates which I know have been sold in the last 20 years. This has, of course, created a great many freeholders in the county of Cardigan, which I hope will be of great strength to the country in time to come, but I am afraid that some of them must have borrowed money, from what I hear, and I believe they could be very greatly helped now were the Government to advance money upon their farms at a low rate of interest. I believe that they are all honest men, and that the Government would be paid back fairly and quickly. I think really that the tenants on large estates are better off than freeholders, and also in a better position than tenants upon estates where one man has only one or two farms. The farms then are worked upon a certain system, and I think that they would be more likely to get fair play. During the 26 years that I have had my estate, which is a very small one (only somewhere about 1,000 acres, or a little over 1,000 acres), I have spent 3,600*l.* in buildings. I have farms of all sizes which are held by 18 tenants. I have four farms from 100 to 150 acres, four from 50 to 100 acres, three from 25 to 50 acres, and seven under 25 acres. I thoroughly believe in having every kind of farm, and also where it is possible, and where you have a good tenant on a small farm, I believe in raising him up to a larger farm. I have done so in more than one case. The land runs from about 12*s.* 6*d.* to 30*s.* an acre. The smaller farms are a little higher as a general rule, owing to their having in most cases rather better land, and also to the houses being more expensive for small farms of three and four and five acres.

46,584. Would you mind telling us your rental?—No, I do not mind; it is about 800*l.* from land.

46,585. We can take a comparison of your building upon that?—Yes, there are some special fields on my property which of course are worth 3*l.* and 4*l.* an acre. The rents during the whole of that time have only in one or two cases been raised, and that was when the tenants were changed and the farms were in good order, or else where a very old tenant under a very old rent wanted a considerable outlay, and then I have been offered a certain rise in the rent if I would only build a certain barn or something of that kind. The whole rise that there has been on my estate is under 2 per cent. of the amount of money that I have laid out; and the buildings, whenever I have had them made on my estate, have always been planned jointly with the tenant. I have always gone to him and we have both gone over the matter together, and seen where the most convenient buildings for the use of the tenant and of the farm could be put up, and those buildings I have put up.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,586. Jointly in expense?—No, not jointly in expense; I paid all. I have always wished to work amicably with my tenants, and I believe they have always wished to work amicably with me. When I left Oxford I am afraid my knowledge of Welsh was very small, and I set to work and taught myself from them, and in other ways, and I have learned it very well now, and have no fear in the case of anybody coming and talking colloquially to me that I should not understand him and he understand me. The tenants have all come to me direct for everything. I believe this is of great importance, and that it creates good feeling between landlord and tenant. I have always lived amongst them, and they consult me about a great many things besides land. Politics and religion make no difference on my estate. What landlords I believe do want is a good tenant with a sufficient amount of capital to work the farm that is rented to him. A wise landlord I think always makes a point of trying to get that, whatever a man may be. One estate (which I inherited at the same time as the Waunifor estate on which I live) I sold in 1890 in order to buy a farm contiguous to my own estate. Another one which was left in 1888 I also sold last year, but before I sold those farms, I sent to all the tenants and asked them if they wished to buy the farms, and if they wished to make me a bid. They none of them wished to make me a bid, but they all of them asked me to try and sell the farms to some large landowner, in order that they might keep on in those farms. I tried to do so, and in one case I succeeded and in the other case I did not succeed; but it did turn out that the tenants on all the farms continued on in their farms at I believe the same rents. With regard to agreements for tenancies, for the last 15 years I have had no agreements with my tenants—simply a bit of paper signed which was to name the rent, and specify that they were to pay the rent half yearly, and that they held the farm upon the usual custom of the estate, which means simply the custom of the country, the Agricultural Holdings Act, a certain amount of common sense; and, if that fails, arbitration, one on either side. This has acted very well with regard to all the tenants that I have ever had to do with, and I suppose would act very well where both landlord and tenant were honest men. Sometimes, however, we have to meet the contingency of a bad tenant as well as of a bad landlord, and I do not know that this free agreement would quite do for every one, but I simply give it for what it is worth, and say that it has acted so far well with me. The tenants had the rabbits for years before the Ground Game Act came in, and they had no fear of catching them or of anything like what we have heard of to-day; they are rather good at it. When tenants leave a farm I always invite them to send in any claim that they may have against me in writing. I have found very often that claims which are made airily, are very different to ones which appear in writing, and after I have had those claims made to me I go and examine the place over by myself or by some other farmer whom I appoint, and it is very seldom that we do not agree. But supposing we do not agree, each one names some farmer of the district who knows the district well, and who knows the customs well, and they invariably agree. I have gone a little farther than that that too. With regard to the seeds, manure and wiring and so on, for which tenants who leave must be paid, I have asked them what their claims are for those things, and then I have sent a man to examine them and agree with them, and before I let the farm to any one else, I tell them that they must take that manure or that wiring, and pay for those seeds the amount that I agree on to the tenant farmer. I think that this action has insured fair play between the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant in more cases than one. I do not believe that there would be any difficulty if landlords and tenants would only confer together with regard to any agreement that they might wish to make. I believe that they could make an agreement which would please both parties. As for a Land Court, I am not in favour of it, and rather believe that it would spoil the friendly relations which do exist between landlord and tenant in this country. I can vouch for it personally, and I know of other cases in which it is the same; that the relations between landlord and tenant are very friendly, and I am afraid that some landlords at any rate might lose some of the interest in their land if they became simply shareholders, receiving any interest which the Land Court chooses to give them. The date of entry, as I suppose you know, in this part of the country is the 29th of September. Farms are mostly let from year to year, and I have never yet been asked for a lease. I suppose that means that tenants do not wish to bind themselves for a certain number of years, and that they have some faith in their landlords. The changes that I have had have not been very many; I have only had two changes during the 26 years that I have been in possession of the estate. Either a son or a daughter or a widow or near relation of an old tenant has succeeded. With regard to the question of the times in which depression in farming has set in, my own opinion is that it set in somewhere about 1879–1880, and that it went on then for a couple of years; that things improved then from about 1883 up to about 1886, and that things were not quite so bad for the next two following years, but that this last year was the very worst year that I believe tenants have ever had. Butter of course makes a good deal of difference with regard to the rents in this part of the country. The price of butter in 1872 and 1873 I notice was from 1*s.* 1¾*d.* to 1*s.* 4*d.*; in 1876 from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 1*d.*; in 1877 to 1878, 10¾*d.* to 11*d.*; 1878 to 1879 from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 2*d.*; then during 1879, 1880, and so on, it came down to 8¼*d.* to 10½*d*; then it rose again in 1883, 1884, and 1885 to 1*s.* 1*d.*; in 1889 it came down to 8¾*d.* to 1*s.* again, and in 1890–91 from 10*d.* to 1*s.* 2*d.*

Lord Kenyon.

46,587. Can you tell us the price of butter for last year?—I have not got it for last year, because I gave up farming in 1891, so that I did not consider that I should be right in dealing with that here, but I should think it was about 1*s.* Cheese ranges in this part of the country from 1¾*d.* to 2¾*d.* and sometimes 3*d.* per pound. These are only skim milk cheeses. The Glamorganshire works have a great effect upon the price of cheeses in this part, and when the works are very good they prefer something better than skim milk cheese, but if the works are very bad I do not know that they eat any cheese; if the works are middling they take to our skim milk cheese, and that is how I think the price of skim milk cheese is to a certain extent governed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,588. That would be a sort of sliding scale?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,589. That creates a kind of barometer for the cheese market?—With regard to cattle I am unable to say whether the yearlings that I had in certain years past were very good or very bad, but I did look into my book, and I saw that yearlings in 1875 were sold at 6*l.* 10*s* in 1877 at 7*l.* 10*s.*, in 1880 8*l.*, in 1881 7*l.* 5*s.*, in 1883 11*l.*, in 1886 7*l.* 12*s.*, and in 1890 8*l.* 10*s.* Whether that information is of any help to anybody I do not know. I believe that the price of horses as a rule goes up and down, and that a good horse if sound fetches a good price.

46,591. In a lump sum?—Yes. I generally have asked some other farmer to make the valuation as well, so as to compare the two and get to it as nearly as possible. The reductions that I have made have been since the year 1880 from 5 to 15 per cent.; I mean to say that it has been 5 per cent. in some cases and 10 per cent. in others for the first few years. During the last years I have given 10 per cent.; and I have given 15 per cent. for the year 1893, which I consider to have been the worst year we have had. As to the size of farms, I thoroughly believe that it is of great advantage that there should be three sizes, namely, small, medium and large farms. I do not believe in having a cut-and-dried 50*l.* farm all over the country. Farmers, like landlords and like other people, have different capabilities of managing farms, and they have different capital as well. I have known men who have started from being small farmers and have got large farms of mine within these last 20 years. With regard to one farm that I have, the farmer is a man who has been a servant with me; he made a certain amount of money, but not a very large amount, and he married a farmer's daughter, and was given a farm of about 50*l.* a year. When I gave up my own farm which I used to undertake myself, I let him take it, finding he was a good farmer and did his work well outside, and that his wife did her work well inside, which is a great point for farmers, because a man may farm as well as he likes and if his wife does not farm well inside he is sure to go to the dogs—you want both of them to do it well. The two of them have done well, and I offered my own home farm to him when I left it, and I offered the other farm which he left to another tenant. I believe that labour being so very dear as it is at present does make farmers curtail the labour that they used to expend on their farms; there is no doubt of that; they take smaller boys than they used to have in the old days to do the work on the farm, and of course I do not think that is a good thing for the farm. The course of husbandry here is cutting up the grass land and then perhaps having one corn crop again, then a green crop, then barley laid down with seed and rye grass, and grazing afterwards for four or five years. Root crops have certainly increased in this part of the country. Fallow land has decreased, people thinking that roots pay something at any rate, and they clean the land as well as the fallow. There have been improvements made on my estate. In the way of drainage I have always cut the drains and the tenant has carted the stones to them. I have mostly made the drains, and have never charged them anything for doing so. I have always built the whole of the buildings, the tenant simply carting the wood and stone. Of course, when I had a farm myself I used to cart with them. As to fences, gates and posts, the tenants put them up and keep them in repair, and sell them at the end of the term of their tenancy to the new tenant. Manures: the tenant puts them in and receives compensation for them; he is paid by the new tenant, or if there are any old bits of manure they are paid for by me. As to seeds, the new tenant pays for the seeds that were put in last spring. The custom in our country is for outgoing tenants to sell or carry away all their crop of hay or green crop. The manure in the yard is paid for after being assessed by arbitration, and an allowance is made on my estate for manure that has been put in in the spring previous. The landlord in this part of the country makes every permanent improvement. The tenants who have gone away and who have put up sheds without having given any notice under the Agricultural Holdings Act have also been paid what two arbitrators say should be paid. We have no rights recognised of tenants naming the following tenants in this part of the country, at least I do not think so. The tenants have had the rabbits for many years before the Ground Game Act, and the farmers certainly avail themselves of the Ground Game Act. There is no damage really done by ground game at the present moment, so far as I know. I believe one of the points upon which evidence is desired by the Commission is with regard to whether farmers come out to beat with landlords—I suppose it means for no payment. I think that we could show that the Cardiganshire farmer is inherently a sportsman, and that if any pack of hounds, or any shooting be going on, he is sure to find his way to it, whether you want him to come or not.

46,591. I do not want to hurry you, but as our time is rather limited, will you please be as short as you can?—Yes. With regard to agricultural education, it is not good at present, but it is improving. I see that the question has been asked whether poultry shows are increasing. They are increasing, and houses are now built for keeping poultry in. The breeds are certainly improving, and I have seen a very great improvement in the last few years. Instruction has also been given by the staff at Aberystwyth College in Agriculture, and I hope for great results from that. I have also carried out some instructions on behalf of the college with regard to manuring, but last year being such a bad year we could make no return for it. The classes which are held are well attended. I think that one of the causes of the depression is bad seasons, and that bad seasons have really been mostly the cause of the bad times for the farmers about here. I believe that if the Government could lend money at a low rate of interest, so as to improve the condition of those gentlemen who bought their farms between 1870 and 1880 it would be a great godsend to the whole country, and do a great deal of good to agriculture. I think that if railway rates were equalised and adjusted in this part of the country it would be of benefit to the agricultural interest. I will give an instance of a railway rate from Bridgend as far as Maesycrugiau, which is my station; they charge 7*s.* 6*d.* a ton for coal between those two places, and that appears to me to be rather a large sum out of the amount that we pay for the full price of the coal. I cannot tell you how many miles it is. Light railways across the county would be a benefit. I believe if we had two light railways across the county it would be a good thing, and I should suggest, as one of the Commissioners has referred to the matter, one across from Lampeter to Aberayron, and the other one across from Llandyssul to New Quay. It would be a good way of opening up the country. The east of the country at the present time is the only part that has access to the railway at all, and the rest of the country is very much out of railway communication.

46,592. Do you think that those railways would be practicable?—Yes, I think they would.

46,593. I mean with regard to the gradients. You have to go up a steepish hill between Llandyssul and New Quay?—I do not know. There has been one marked out there, and I suppose what engineers attempt they will do. The increase of lectures is certainly a very excellent thing for the country, and I do hope that they will go on, and that many will take advantage of them, and that soon we shall have a great many farmers' sons who will be able to take the position that the last gentleman mentioned, of agents to the landlords, because I thoroughly believe myself that a local agent has a great deal more power amongst tenants, and understands and knows the wants and needs of the tenants in the district a great deal better than any agent could who comes from a distance. With regard to compensation to tenants, I thoroughly believe that if it was made compulsory that arbitration should be resorted to by a landlord and tenant upon any question of compensation, and that each one was to choose a man who should arbitrate upon the matter, and that they should abide by that arbitration, I believe that the tenants and the landlord would be pleased, and would allow of it.

46,594. You mean in case of disagreement?—Of course if they disagreed, but I think in any case there should be such a procedure. I perfectly agree with what has fallen before from one of the witnesses that when a tenant goes into a farm, a schedule ought to be kept of the worth of each field at the time of letting.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Jenkin Jones called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,595. Does this statement represent the evidence which you wish to give?—I am here as representing my father, that is the statement I wish to tender on his behalf.

46,596. Then you are Mr. Jenkin Jones, of Pantmoch?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness's father was then read:—

Evidence of Mr. Evan Jones, of Pantmoch Llandyssul.

Bargoed Farm, parish of Llandyssul.

Bargoed y brain was a hill farm, with hardly any fences, up till 1860, not farmed properly. The farm belonged to the last Captain Gwynne, of Monachty, Cardiganshire. The acreage was 157, rent 50*l.*, paid half-yearly. On July 8th,

Lord Kenyon—continued.

1865, Captain Gwynne died, and Bargoed was put up for sale. Reserve 2,000*l.* The highest bid was 1,800*l.*, and it was not sold. Trustees then administered the estate; a stable and cow-house were built, Evan Jones doing the hauling. Evan Jones signed a new lease for 52*l.* about 1867. On February 4th, 1873, the present Mr. Gwynne came of age; no change was made, but the farm was again put up for sale. The reserve was again 2,000*l.*, Evan Jones himself making the last bid but one, over 3,000*l.*, at public auction, and it was eventually sold to Mr. Howell Davies, of Cwmbangor, Conwil, in the county of Carmarthen, for the sum of 3,035*l.*, or 3,055*l.*, and 100*l.* for wood. The sale took place some time before Christmas, 1873. Evan Jones had had notice to quit

Michaelmas, 1873, for September, 1874 (one year's notice), from Mr. D. S. Jones, Mr. Gwynne's agent Mr. Howell Davies, per Mr. David Davies' tenant, also six months' notice in March to Mr. Evan Jones to leave September, 1874. This notice came to Mr. Evan Jones' hands near midnight on the 25th of March, 1874. The agreement of 1867 between Mr. Gwynne and Evan Jones had never been brought into force. Mr. D. Jones gave him leave to sell the straw. With the exception of allowing Mr. Evan Jones to do the same, Mr. Howell Davies acted strictly on the letter of agreement. The trustees gave all the wood to tenant for wiring the boundary fences, the tenant finding the wire and putting the whole up in place. The farm was thoroughly out of repair when Evan Jones' went to it in 1860. The first night he had to put his cattle into the garden, as the only place on the farm safely fenced. There were no fences and no gates. The estate gave him the first year some wood for repairs. The landlord put up at first the boundary fence jointly with the owner of the next farm, Goitre. The landlord allowed half the cost of any new fences made on the farm. The landlord allowed the tenant 6*d.* per perch (of 8 yards) for cutting the drains the tenant fitting the same. The seeds sown in the spring of 1874 would naturally be paid for in full by the incoming tenant of following September. Mr. Edward Jones of Geginan, Llandyssul, on behalf of Mr. David Davies (now of Maengwyn) asked Mr. Evan Jones not to plough up the seed field, and he would pay him for the seeds sown there. No special price was named. Mr. Evan Jones agreed to do as requested. The field was about 6 or 7 acres in which the seeds had been sown. About Michaelmas, 1874, David Davies refused to pay Evan Jones anything for seeds, as promised, because Evan Jones, he said, had cut hedge timber without earthing up the said hedge afterwards, and because one small piece of 2 or 3 acres had been left in stubble. Evan Jones' answer is that the hedges were in good repair and very much better than when he took the farm. There were very few hedges then, and that his not ploughing up the 2 or 3 acres of stubble was a great loss to himself, as they were in good heart. Evan Jones left Bargoed one or two days before September 29th, 1874, and David Davies came in as tenant there September 29th, 1874. Mr. Jones asked Mr. Davies to let him remain on at Bargoed till the Alltyrodyn sale came off, when he might purchase a farm to which he might go. The sale was to take place one week after Michaelmas. This Mr. Davies refused to agree to do. Mr. Jones had to sell all his stock and crop, and went to live in a cottage for one year (Pantybwts). Though Mr. Davies had promised to pay for seeds, Mr. Jones left the farm without getting this amount paid him by Mr. Davies, and though the gates and wires were nearly all his own, he was obliged to stand strictly to the lease, and leave all his gates and wires to Mr. Davies without receiving anything from him for them. Mr. Howell Davies said if he did not leave them as they were, there were plenty of lawyers in Carmarthen waiting for work.

46,597. Is David Davies, the tenant of Bargoed, who came in after your father, a brother of Dr. Davies?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Tregaron.

FIFTY-FIFTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Tregaron, Cardiganshire, Thursday, 26th April 1894.

PRESENT :

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. HENRY TOBIT EVANS recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 45,578–45,640 ; 48,669–48,714 ; 70,919–70,990 ; and 73,839–73,897.

46,598–9. I believe you wish to make a statement ?—Yes. My Lord and gentlemen, the document put in yesterday at Lampeter by John Morgan of Park Powell, purporting to be the original acknowledgment is, I find upon further inquiry, a copy only of the receipt which he received from Jacob written out from memory by the old man John Morgan himself. Owing to his extreme deafness and old age I failed to elicit this fact from him at my first interview, and I think it right to correct the statement in this respect at once, and I take this the first opportunity of doing so. Evidence, however, can be produced to confirm his previous statement as regards the improvements and additions executed by him and the value thereof.

46,600. You remember, sir, in answer to a question from me put by you to that witness, he said it was the original document ?—So I understood him to say, but he came down to me this morning to correct that.

46,601. What explanation have you of that ?—Only that I misunderstood him.

46,602. You misunderstood him ?—At the first interview.

46,603. In answer to that question put in court yesterday ?—We failed to make him understand very positively anything in court.

46,604. I thought he clearly understood you, and replied that it was the original document ?—No, not very definitely. We could not make him understand anything really.

See 45,639.

46,605. I confess that was not the idea in my mind at all. He seemed to answer your question ?—He came down this morning to my office, and I put the question to him in writing, and shouted in his ear, and he said at once, " No, I wrote that. It was something like that I got from him."

46,606. I do not know what took place at your office, and we have nothing to do with that, but what took place in court yesterday was that you put a question to him from me, and he answered that it was the original document. Can you tell us who took the copy ?—He took it himself.

(The shorthand writer read the evidence given at Lampeter.)

46,607. You see, he said, it was the original ?—He said so, but he misunderstood unquestionably, because when I asked him this morning he said that at once.

Mr. Griffiths.

46,608. Was not that question put to him in writing ?—Yes, it was.

46,609. Then he could not have very well misunderstood it ?—Well, it was so. The interpreter was there by my side, and we did all we could, but I question very much whether we made him understand anything in court.

Lord Kenyon.

46,610. Is the old man failing in his senses ?—Yes, a little.

Mr. Grove.

46,611. When did you first hear of this case in respect to this man, and the claim he had in respect of these improvements ?—I heard it first of all about a month ago.

46,612. Up to that time you had heard nothing about it ?—Previous to that I had heard nothing.

46,613. Was it in consequence of inquiries you instituted that you brought out this case ?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,614. You say you only heard of it about a month ago ?—Yes.

46,615. But you said in answer to a question of mine yesterday that it created great scandal in the neighbourhood ?—So I understood.

46,616. How is that, if you only heard of it a month ago ?—I do not understand your question. I do not live in the locality. I reside 12 miles away from here.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

46,617. You are not acquainted with the neighbourhood?—No I am not, not very well.

46,618. But it could not have created a great scandal, or else you would have heard it?—In that locality it might have; news does not travel very fast in this neighbourhood. I lived in Shropshire at that time.

Lord Kenyon.

46,619. Is this man Jacob alive?—I believe not; I think he is dead.

46,620. Could you get anyone to show that that was the actual sum disbursed by the old man but Mr. Jacob?—I believe that can be proved. I believe so from what the old man told me.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,621. Lord Carrington has sent a letter to the papers, and I think it is due to him to find that out?—Yes, certainly. There is another witness here from Lord Carrington's estate.

Lord Kenyon.

He is to be called at Aberystwyth.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 48,669 and 73,839.

Lord Kenyon.

As there are so many witnesses down for hearing to-day, the Commissioners will now sit in two courts.

Mr. John Emlyn Jones called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

46,622. You are Mr. John Emlyn Jones, of Penlan Uchaf?—Yes.

46,623. Have you got a statement?—Yes.

46,624. Are you a tenant farmer now?—No.

46,625. What is your profession?—I am honorary secretary to the Tregaron Farmers' Club, and a teacher of agriculture. I am at present owner of two or three small farms. I have been a farmer on the Jesus College estate.

46,626. Will you proceed with your statement?—My statement first refers to the Jesus College estate. In the year 1880, when I went there, it consisted of Penlan Uchaf, Tir College, Berthneuadd, and Llwynbrain, in the parish of Nantcwnlle, and also Lower Penlan, in the parish of Garthely adjoining. Berthneuadd and Llwynbrain have been sold since to Colonel Lewis, Llanlear. That was about eight or nine years ago. I think the tenants did not get a very fair chance of buying the holdings. They were very dissatisfied at the time. There are good buildings on all these farms, with the exception of Llwynbrain, which is not now, of course, belonging to the estate, but the tenants have had to pay dearly for these buildings. On Upper Penlan, where I was, the rent was advanced after building from 27*l.* to 52*l.* 10*s.* That took place in the year 1861. In Lower Penlan, another farm on the same estate, the rent was advanced from 27*l.* to 50*l.*

46,627. Is that on the estate still?—The same estate.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,628. And after building?—After building. Tir College, after building was advanced from 40*l.* to 72*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

46,629. At what date?—About 1868 the building took place there. Berthneuadd was advanced from 94*l.* to 110*l.*, and Llwynbrain from 14*l.* to 15*l.* On most of these farms—well, all of them—the rent is too high for successful farming. Two of the tenants have failed since these last advances were made, namely, Upper Penlan and Lower Penlan. One other of them, Tir College, has been saved from failure by a reduction made in the rent some few years ago of 12*l.*, and by the fact that the children have grown up, and they now pay no labour. Berthneuadd the same; there are grown up children always working on that farm, and that is why they have been able to pay, but this farm, since Colonel Lewis bought it, has been advanced 20*l.* in rent, the rent is now 130*l.* Leaving out those two farms which have been sold, I find the advances on the other three farms have been—Upper Penlan, 95 per cent.; Lower Penlan, 85 per cent.; Tir College, 80 per cent., making an advance of about 86 per cent. on the estate. Abatements of 15 per cent. were made in the rents of this estate some 10 years ago, as the result of a petition signed by the five tenants, but the abatements were gradually reduced, and at last disappeared. At the last rent audit the abatement was again granted.

See 46,835.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,630. How much abatement?—15 per cent., I understand. Most of these tenants got their buildings put up without doing any haulage or extra labour which they were not paid for, but Upper Penlan quarried the stones, hauled them, and hauled all the lime, slates, timber, &c. without charging to the landlord, their object being to keep the rent down, as they were given to understand that the rent would be advanced, but their rent was advanced 95 per cent., while the advances on the others were much less, though the tenants in the other farms were nothing out of pocket. I have it on the authority of my predecessor there, who was trustee of my wife when I went there, that they were actually 150*l.* out of pocket in putting up the buildings.

46,631. That is the first of these farms, is it?—The first; the one I was connected with.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,632. That is in haulage and quarrying alone?—Yes. This man I referred to was a mason, and he did a lot of extra work, so that the buildings are better than they would have been according to the contract. He told me that he had put the buildings some 2 or 3 feet higher than the contract demanded, as well. I have a copy of the agreements in force on the estate, one referring to the place I was in, Upper Penlan, and the other referring to one of the other places, which I prefer not to name. —(The documents were handed in.)

46,633. Are those the agreements of Jesus College or Colonel Lewis?—Jesus College—copies. From these it will be seen that the tenants are very carefully looked after. There are penalising clauses, and the farmer's hands are tied as to the way in which he is to work on the farm. All the tenants had to contract themselves out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Lord Kenyon.

46,634. Particular clauses, or what?—I do not know any particular clause.

46,635. How does the contracting-out clause run?—The agreements were made before the Act was passed. They had to sign afterwards to contract themselves out. We had to leave Penlan under six months' notice, very much to our loss, to my loss at least. All the tenants on this estate in our district are now Churchmen. They were not always so. I have now finished with that estate.

There are other estates I can speak to in Nantcwnlle parish. The chief owners there are Mr. Rogers, of Abermeurig; Mrs. Griffiths, of Gelly Talsarn, and the estate of Pengelley, an estate owned by several parties. The other gentlemen who own more than one holding there are Mr. Davies, of Llanfeilog; Mr. Bonsall, of Fronfraith; and Mr. David Jones, of Frongoch. The rest of the parish is held by freehold occupiers. There are 46 freehold occupiers of over 4 acres in the parish. As to Mr. Rogers' estate, he is generally considered a very kind landlord, but there are a few points in his dealings with his tenants that are not so agreeable.

46,636. What Mr. Rogers is that?—Mr. Rogers of Abermeurig. I lodged for three years in one of Mr. Rogers' farms, and that is how I found out particulars of the estates. There are three farms adjoining: Pantcyfyng, a farm of 65 acres in extent, rent 30*l.*, the rateable value assessed for the poor rate at 22*l.* 10*s.* Then Bryngalem adjoining is 66 acres, the rent is 25*l.*, and the rateable value is 25*l.* Then Tyn'rhos 121 acres, 25*l.* rent, and 25*l.* 15*s.* rateable value. We think that Pantcyfyng is very dear compared with the farms adjoining. I get it from old people that this Pantcyfyng 60 years ago paid 15*l.* rent. It advanced to 19*l.*, which was the rent until the year 1854, when it was advanced to 25*l.* The tenants then there, saw that the place was too dear, and left two years after. Then it was rented in 1856 at 30*l.* a year, which makes in 60 years an advance of 100 per cent. Mr. Rogers' tenants are also expected to provide him with several things besides their rent. Tyn'rhos, Pantcyfyng, Bryngalem, and Corngam Mawr, and other farms at the top of the parish have to take down to Abermeurig yearly six loads of turf each on their own finding. See 46,866–46,880.

46,637. That is peat?—Peat,—fuel for fires.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,638. Is that done?—Yes, it is done now by these tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

46,639. It is an old custom, I suppose?—I suppose it is an old custom, but it is always carried on. They are also expected to send a man and a woman one day each to assist in cutting this turf. This is on their own finding as well. They also send something that is called ynyd, that is the Welsh word.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,640. A gift at Shrovetide, I suppose, you mean?—The custom is one hen and 20 eggs yearly.

Lord Kenyon.

46,641. Is that custom still carried out?—Yes, it is still carried on. It is dropping out. Some of the farmers are refusing it, I think, but it is the rule that it is carried on.

46,642. It is being allowed gradually to lapse?—Yes, with some. The tenants are also expected to send a man to cut the landlord's hay, as a rule. On the Gelly estate Mrs. Griffiths is the landlord; she is generally considered to be a bad landlord. The out-buildings on this estate are not good, as the tenants are obliged to put up out-buildings at their own expense. It is in some of the agreements that they are to do that—that the buildings are to be kept up. The tenants of two, at least, of the farms, Brynele and Tyncwm, I know have done so, they put them up at their own expense. The out-buildings now in many of these holdings are in a deplorable state, namely, Rhydygroes, Dole aeron, Blaenpant, Brynele, and Pencwm. The sanitary authority at Tregaron had to proceed against this landlord last autumn to compel them to put a house called Ty rebecca in proper repair. It had been for years a disgrace to the neighbourhood. I enter a draft copy of agreement which some of these tenants have signed (handing in agreement). In this agreement there are penalising clauses, and the buildings are to be kept up, and there is also this: "That the tenant is to carry 10 loads of "turf, and to bring two fat geese and 40 eggs "yearly to the said Margaret Griffiths," and so on. Most of the tenants on this estate send those Shrovetide presents, the ynyd dues.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,643. In addition to these?—Not in addition to what is put in there; that is the gift; it is put in the agreement there. A tenant two or three years ago left two loads of this turf without taking it down. When he went down to pay the next rent, he was told that he had not finished paying the other rent, that there was a balance against him of two loads of turf. The tenants on this estate are also expected to send a man each to cut hay, one day each. These landlords are strict game preservers.

Lord Kenyon.

46,644. That is Mrs. Griffiths?—Her son or nephew, some relation of hers living with her. The tenants dare not touch the ground game, but illegal poaching is carried on to a very great extent. There are so many freeholders about, and they get a chance. This landlord made no abatements of rent, except once, to meet the bad times.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,645. When was that?—Some three or four years ago; I am not certain of the date. They got an abatement of 25 per cent. in one of the rent audits. That was the only abatement made.

There are other farms in the neighbourhood which I have some facts about. Pantybeudy where the noted Daniel Rowlands, the founder of Welsh methodism, spent most of his life; it was owned by the late Mr. T. Lloyd Edwards of Lampeter (a solicitor) and his friends and some relations until the year 1883, when it was sold. It was rented in 1846 to Mr. Richard Jones at the rent of 40*l.*; in 1872 it was advanced to 45*l.*, and in 1881 it was advanced to 60*l.*, but 5*l.* of this advance was afterwards allowed.

46,646. What is the size of that farm?—59 acres. That is an advance of 50 per cent. in 35 years. The tenant of this farm spent much money and labour in improving the farm, he had two or three grown up sons working on the farm with him, improving the farm, he did all the haulage and labour towards building a dwelling-house, but received no compensation whatever when he left in 1883, and the farm was sold for 1,700*l.*

46,647. What was the rent when it was sold in 1883?—60*l.*; only 5*l.* was allowed. Then another farm where that tenant Richard Jones went after his place was sold was Tylau. The farm belonged at the time to a Miss Thomas, Abermarlais, Carmarthenshire. This man is ill in bed, so he could not have come here to-day. He would have been giving evidence to-day here, only he is not fit to come. The rent of that farm in the year 1834 was 30*l.*, but in the year 1880 it was bought by a Mr. Davies of Llanfeilog for 1,900*l.* and the rent was advanced to 60*l.* in a lease. That is the only example of a lease which we have in the upper part of the parish. This lease allows 10*l.*

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

abatement for the first 10 years; but this landlord has helped the tenants in improving the farms, and he gives each tenant yearly some eight or nine tons of lime and keeps the buildings in good repair. On all these estates in our district the tenants are afraid of the landlords and of their agents. In 1884 or 1885 the tenants of Jesus College met at Berthneuadd to write out and sign a petition to the landlords asking for a reduction of rent. I wrote out the petition, and when it was ready for signature we spent about two hours inviting each other to sign first. Everyone was afraid to be considered a leader. We held two or three meetings last year at Bwlchyllan with the purpose of getting evidence ready, but not one of Mr. Rogers' tenants or of the Gelly estate tenants dared to come near the meetings, though outside privately they sympathised with the objects of the meetings, and wished us God speed. Another proof of this fear is, that here to-day there are scarcely any tenant farmers, pure and simple, coming forward to give evidence; there is only one I think in the lot. They are all something else as well. About 10 months ago, there were 10 or 12 tenant farmers who had promised to give evidence. I received a letter about three or four weeks ago from one of the tenant farmers who had promised to give evidence in which he gives his reasons for not coming,—one of the best witnesses that we had, a very intelligent man and a man of long experience in farming, his letter proves that he is afraid to come. (The letter was handed in.) I think there are two reasons for this fear. The landlord's actions in the past, account for it. There are two or three cases to prove that. First of all, David Davies of Pencwm on the Gelly estate. There were two brothers farming there. The actual tenant was David Davies, but after the election of 1868 David Davies lost the place and it was rented to his brother at an advance of 5*l.* Another case on that estate was a man we call Jenkin Penlan Las, which is in Trefilan parish, that is adjoining our parish. He had to suffer for similar reasons, to go away from his farm, and broke his heart and died very soon after. John Davies of Penrhiw, one of the witnesses to-day, was a tenant of Llanfeilog on the Monachty estate, at the time, he had his rent advanced 2*l.* as a penalty for voting; he was told that it was so before the advance was made. Another instance is a witness that will appear at Aberayron, the Reverend David Davies of Hafodhir, a tenant on the Crosswood estate at that time. He had notice to quit for voting wrong in 1868. Another reason for the fear is the difficulty which Nonconformists feel in getting holdings from landlords who are Churchmen. The last farm rented to a Nonconformist in Nantcwnlle parish by Mr. Rogers was in the year 1856. There are 11 or 12 farms in Nantcwnlle where Nonconformists lived 40 years ago and Churchmen live now (for List, see Appendix), but I cannot find a single instance where Churchmen lived then and Nonconformists live now, except in those instances where they have bought the holdings.

See 47,438–47,470.

See 47,719–47,735.

Sir John Llewelyn.

46,648. Are you speaking of one estate only?—I am speaking of the parish.

46,649. The whole of this parish?—No, Nantcwnlle parish in this union. In Nantcwnlle parish there are 84 tenant farmers holding over 4 acres. I do not take account of those under 4 acres. There are 84 tenant farmers in the parish, and of those 84, 24 are Churchmen, making 29 per cent, but out of 46 freehold occupiers of over 4 acres in the parish there is not one Churchman except the vicar. There is one man doubtful, and I count him a Churchman. That gives them 2 per cent. of the freehold occupiers. (Lists of 84 tenant farmers and of 46 freeholders were produced, specifying whether Nonconformist or Church in each case. See Appendix.)

Lord Kenyon.

46,650. How many occupiers?—46.

46,651. Then it is 2 in 46, not 2 per cent.?—One doubtful out of 46; I do not count the vicar.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,652. Do you count him among the 46 freeholders?—I do not count him anywhere.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,654. That is in Nantcwnlle parish?—Yes. There are other effects too. The present conditions affect the character of the farmers as well as their circumstances. There is a tendency in them to be hypocrites at the present time. They are afraid, and so they pretend to be what they are not. There is a tendency that way, and they betray each other by bidding against each other for farms, and so on. With regard to the state of agricultural education in the district I have taught large classes of farmers and others in Nantcwnlle, Blaenpenal, and Garthely parishes, and I have found that the teaching, to be effective and of any use, must be entirely in Welsh in these districts, and must be very very simple and elementary. I find from my experience that the lectures given by the University College lecturers are, as a rule, too advanced for the class of people they are intended for. Demonstrations in butter-making have done much good, but this and the lectures affect only a small circle round the chief towns and the larger villages. There are parts of Cardiganshire, for instance, where these lectures are not known even by rumour, and even now most of the butter is put in wooden tubs, and made much too salt, and was sold last year in the district at prices ranging from 6*d.* to 1*s.* a lb., and there are instances below that. I think that the college agricultural grants ought to be increased, the grants from the Government ought to be increased so as to make the work more thorough. The district is so rural and so scattered that they want more money to work it up more thoroughly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,655. What is the county council grant—250*l.*?—I think it is.

Lord Kenyon.

46,656. What is the grant from the Government to Aberystwith College—500*l.*?—I do not know the figure. I think it is 700*l.* now; it has been advanced lately. There have been many private teachers teaching like myself round the district and I think that better work could be done by using those teachers. We have been holding classes in this neighbourhood in this union before the Aberystwith College started the work, and so prepared the way. It is only those students who have been in our classes that can do anything with the lectures that they give.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,657. Are you speaking of Board School teachers?—The majority of them, but there are some teachers who are practical farmers. Mr. Jenkin Lloyd, for instance, is a practical farmer, who is teaching agriculture and there are two or three others in the district. It would be well if those teachers were helped in the rural parts and their work supplemented by the college lectures, and a small grant made to help them because all their salary for teaching must depend on what they get for grants, and their chance of getting grants is very small indeed, because the students are monoglot Welshmen and the examination is in English, so that it is almost hopeless to go in for an examination and to get any grant. It would be a great help to these classes too if the examinations in agriculture were held in Welsh as well as in English, so that the farmers' sons would be able to pass. I find that the chance of passing an examination is a great help to get up a class.

There are some instances of encroaching on enclosures in the Nantcwnlle parish that I would like to refer to. The upper part of the parish was enclosed by Act of Parliament about 30 years ago and in the award then made by the Commissioners, four lots were left as turbary grounds for the poor people to get peat. They were left to the churchwardens and overseers as trustees, but a great part of this turbary ground has been encroached upon by the adjoining landlords. The tenant of the vicar of Blaenpenal has taken a good deal of it, and Davies of Bryngwyn on the other side, a tenant and freehold occupier has taken a good slice on the other side: so that poor people now have to go elsewhere to look for their turf. I find too on the award that No. 295, a field of about 3 acres in extent, was given in trust to the vicar and churchwardens for a school and playground for the parish. The vicar gets the rent and keeps it, as far as we know. It does not come in any way into the parish. There is a common at Bwlchyllan—Bwlchyllan bog we call it. There is a piece of some 9 or 12 acres in extent of common there where people were supposed to get their turf. It has been divided now by the adjoining landlord or by the tenants representing the landlords, at least, Mr. Rogers, Mrs. Griffiths, and Mr. Davies of Llanfeilog. One man named John Jones, of Tynewydd, has held his ground there and kept possession of his piece in the midst of it: he is the only one. All the other poor people in the parish have now to pay for being allowed to cut turf on the common left to them if they are not tenants to these landlords. In the face of these difficulties I think it would be an advantage to the farmers if a Land Act were passed that would secure fair rents and security of tenure in some way or other. Further assistance should be given to these farmers who buy their holdings, by lending them money at a low rate of interest, as well as to help those who are already heavily mortgaged. That, my Lord, is the end of my statement.

Lord Kenyon.

46,658. With regard to this Gelly estate; are the rents low on that estate?—The rents are high.

46,659. Were these stipulations as to the fat geese and the carrying of turf enforced in fresh agreements upon the tenants or were they part of the old agreements under which they took the farms?—As far as I have been able to find out the Gelly tenants did not receive a copy of their agreements, so I have been given to understand, and this copy I have got is a draft copy. It was drawn out by the man who acted as agent at the time and somehow it got into another man's hands.

46,660. But do I understand from you that these were old customs that have been on the estate for some time?—Yes, I suppose they are customs in the central parts of the parish.

46,661. But they are well-known customs?—No, they are not very much known.

46,662. I am speaking of the Gelly estate; they would be well known to the tenants of that estate?—Yes.

46,663. Therefore they were taken as part and parcel of the rent?—Yes.

46,664. You say that very few tenants are coming forward, and you attribute that to the fear of their landlord, but perhaps they have not so much to complain of as you think. Would that be the reason?—If they are in good circumstances they might come forward to say so.

46,665. Perhaps they think that is too much trouble. We have heard that given as a reason before now?—Oh, no; my ground for making the statement is their private conversation to me—tenants of Mr. Rogers and of Gelly.

46,666. If Nonconformists find it hard to get a farm, how do you account for there being a majority of Nonconformist farmers?—It has been the old tenants who have not moved.

46,667. There is no attempt to displace a man then because he is a Nonconformist?—No, that cannot be brought against Mr. Rogers, at least, and the Jesus College estate; they do not turn them off.

46,668. You say that language is a drawback to emigration?—Yes.

46,669. This is essentially a Welsh-speaking district, I understand, all round here?—Yes, all round.

46,670. Is the English language progressing, or not?—Yes, but the farmers' sons, as a rule, are the most backward, because they are tied to this district during their lives. Other children go away to work, and so on.

46,671. I suppose you hold, as a practical man, that it is well for them to understand both languages?—Yes, certainly, to know both 46,672. With regard to these freeholds, of which there seem a great number, I suppose a good many of them are bought on mortgage?—Yes, a good many of them.

46,673. Is their not a danger of their being called in owing to the depreciation of land?—It is very seldom the case.

46,674. But if land falls much more in value there is that danger?—Of course if there is a fall in capital value, but there are very few cases in which mortgages have been foreclosed.

46,675. Is there any fear of that now, do you think?—Some are afraid, I know.

46,676. That is rather a serious thing for the freeholders, I mean?—Yes.

46,677. You, I understand, think it would be a good thing if Government advanced money to save these people?—Yes, these freehold occupiers suffer more now than the tenant farmers actually, but they gain in independence and something of that sort; they feel more comfortable.

46,678. They gain in sentiment, but lose in practice?—Yes, they lose in pocket.

46,679. As to these encroachments. The enclosure you refer to was an enclosure under the Act?—Yes.

46,680. Do you think the poor people have any rights?—As I say, according to the award of the Commissioners, certainly they have rights.

46,681. And there have been encroachments since?—There have been encroachments there.

46,682. Cannot these encroachments be resisted?—That ought to be done by the churchwardens, but they have neglected their duty. The churchwardens, as a rule, are appointed by the vicar.

46,683. One by the vicar and the other by the parish, I suppose?—The rule has been there for many years, that the vicar really appointed the two. It has been changed some time ago; I think it has gone back again this year. Mr. Rogers and one of his tenants were the churchwardens for years.

46,684. Of course the vestry elects one. I do not know what the vicar would have to say to it?—Well, they were very friendly with the vicar, and I suppose that had something to do with it.

46,685. Then, with regard to agricultural education, are you a teacher by some appointment?—I am qualified under the Science and Art Department. I hold an honours certificate.

46,686. But by any appointment from the county council, or anything like that?—No.

46,687. You simply do it on your own account?—On my own hook.

46,688. I am very much interested in these classes, more especially in the Bangor College, and I am very glad to hear what you say about them. I fully agree with you that they should be conducted in Welsh as well as in English; it is hopeless to try to teach them in one language only?—Yes, and the examinations ought to be also.

46,689. Then you think the classes are too advanced for the farmers?—As a rule they are.

46,690. You do not speak very highly of the intelligence of the farmers?—Well, you must remember that one of our lecturers at Aberystwith is an Englishman, Mr. Alan Murray. He held a meeting down here in Tregaron——

46,691. What he said was given through an interpreter, I suppose?—No, there is very little of that carried on; but even if they were interpreted—what I mean is that these lectures are suited to advanced students, and not to elementary students.

46,692. What do they want, teaching in the elements of dairying, or what?—The simplest elements of the subject is what is mostly wanted and practical experiments, something that they can understand.

46,693. Then you do not think the intelligence of the farmers is very high in the district if they want teaching in the most elementary branches?—I mean the elements of the science, not the elements of the practical part; they know that by experience; but they go on farming as their fathers did and as their grandfathers did.

46,694. And you think the farming might be more profitable if they farmed on a more scientific method?—Yes.

46,695. Have the landowners in this district done anything to promote the breeds of cattle or of horses? Do they get sires or stallions?—Nothing whatever in the part I refer to, in the lower part of the union.

46,696. I saw a couple of stallions in the street in Lampeter yesterday. I do not know whose they were?—Stallions in this part of the country are private property. In the district I come from, the upper part of Nantcwnlle and Penuwch, there are many small farms from 10 to 15 acres, and two or three of those farmers have stallions.

46,697. I understand there is a good deal of breeding of cobs and ponies in this district, is there not?—Yes.

46,698. How does the price of them compare with former years?—They are not equal to what they were, but good horses sell well. The breed is deteriorating. You cannot find so many good cobs now as you could a few years ago.

46,699. What would you suggest; should there be a veterinary examination of the stallions?—I think a good deal might be done.

46,700. There is more harm done by a bad stallion than people imagine?—Yes.

46,701. Have you any other practical suggestion that you can make?—I think the breed might be much improved in the district if the landlords helped the tenants.

46,702. Are there any prizes in the local shows or anything of that sort?—No, not nearer than Lampeter. There was an attempt made to get the Lampeter show held alternately in Tregaron and Lampeter. There was an attempt that way, and we hope it will be successful by-and-by. Of course that would be beneficial.

46,703. I expect you suffer a good deal from want of railway communication?—Very much. In the districts where I am now I have to pay 4*d.* a cwt. for carriage from the railway station

46,704. You cannot be in touch with the outer world very much?—No; we have to do without many things that we would like to get, simply because of the carriage, and the difficulty of getting it is too much.

46,705. Do you think light railways would be of any advantage to this district?—I think they would, for the middle part of the county.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,706. Having been amongst farmers a good deal, do you find that these duties are irksome to the tenants?—Very.

46,707. They feel that there is too much of a touch of feudalism about them?—Yes; one of those tenants told me that he had to supply them with fowls, ceiliogod (cocks) was his word, and when they had not got them they had to buy them or to get them somewhere. Another one never rears geese, but at the same time they must find two for the landlord.

46,708. Are these customs observed in every case?—Some have broken away from them. But these exceptions are very few.

46,709. In those cases where the tenants have not observed the practice have they in any way incurred the displeasure of the agent or the landlord?—I cannot say that they have suffered. I cannot say; but they have been told about it.

46,710. Reminded of it?—Yes, on the Gelly estate I am sure. I cannot be certain that they have been reminded on Mr. Rogers' estate, but on Mrs. Griffiths' estate they have been reminded.

46,711. But there is a feeling that these things should be expunged from the agreement?—Yes.

46,712. If I recollect rightly it was two or three years ago a very wet summer. In what condition was the turf when they brought it down to the landlord that year. I know it was a very bad year for turf?—Well, I cannot recollect the condition the turf was in.

46,713. I suppose that is taken into consideration by the landlord when he receives the turf?—The quality of the turf would depend on the landlord himself, not on the tenant, because the tenant only carries it. It is the carriage down,—they have to send a man with a horse and cart to carry the turf down.

46,714. And he sends his man to cut the turf for one day?—Yes, for one day, and a woman to assist in spreading the turf out to dry.

46,715. You say that one landlord, I think you said it was the Gelly Estate, made an abatement once of 25 per cent.?—Yes, that is about three years ago. I think.

46,716. Three or four years ago?—Yes.

46,717. Were abatements general at that time?—No, they were not general.

46,718. Was that made to cover past sins?—Yes; they were piled up in one instalment.

46,719. Do you know if any of the landlords in this neighbourhood have publicly announced there was perfect liberty for tenants to appear before the Commission to give evidence?—No, they have not.

46,720. Have they in any way discountenanced their tenants coming forward?—I have not heard of anything definite.

46,721. You say there is a complaint amongst farmers that the grant is not large enough towards agricultural education?—Those who take an interest in it.

46,722. You have your remedy. I suppose the majority of your county council are rural representatives. Is not that so?—Yes, the majority, I suppose, will be; they are to a certain extent governed by the sharper ones from the towns.

46,723. I suppose you have a cabinet or something like that of the council?—Well, I suppose the strong will govern always; they have been used to Local Government already, and the rural councillors have not.

46,724. What becomes of the rest of the money, this drink money, as it is called; is it accumulating for the benefit of the intermediate schools?—I understand it is.

46,725. So that it is well applied in that way?—Yes, it will pay in a long time to come. Twenty years hence we shall reap the fruit of it

46,726. But you want a quicker return?—Yes, rather to meet present circumstances.

Lord Kenyon.

46,727. Have you made any representation to the Aberystwith College about what you say here?—No, I have not.

46,728. I mean to say that their lectures are too exalted?—I think they are going as far as their funds will allow them.

46,729. But I mean have you told them that you thought their lectures were of too high a class?—No, I have not.

46,730. Of course the less high class would be cheaper; I suppose from their point of view the less high class lectures would be less expensive?—Well, it requires quite as able a man to give a simple lecture as an advanced one and to make it interesting to the country people.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,731. I suppose these people who bought their holdings did it for the purpose of acquiring a position of independence chiefly?—Yes, and through the difficulty of getting places. They made great efforts to secure a holding, a home. Some of them even doubled their rents in doing it.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,732. You said in 1861 and 1868 certain buildings were put up upon these farms belonging to Jesus College, and the rents were raised?—Yes.

46,733. You did not give us the acreage of those farms?—It is in my statement, I think.

46,734. You gave us five farms; can you give us the acreage of the farms in the same order?—Yes, I can give the acreage of them all. Leaving out the wood on the estate, Upper Penlan is about 99 acres; the rent is 52*l.* 10*s* Tir College is about 96 acres without the wood.

46,735. That is the 50*l.* rent?—No, Tir College was 72*l.*; but a return of 12*l.* was made, so that they actually pay 60*l.* now. Then Lower Penlan is about 100 acres; that is the one that was advanced to 50*l.* Berthneuadd is about 121 acres.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,736. That is the 110 acres?—That is the 110 when it was sold. Llwynbrain, which was really part of Berthneuadd at the time was 15*l.*

46,737. Do you consider that these advanced rents are high?—Yes.

46,738. Are they higher than others in the neighbourhood?—Higher than the majority of farms. I cannot say that they are higher than farms that have been let since the times were good, in the seventies.

46,739. Was the expenditure in buildings large at that time?—I cannot say exactly the sums that were expended by the college.

46,740. It is very difficult to judge then whether really injustice was done in putting up those rents at that date. Then with regard to the agreements. I do not suppose you would think that the agreements were any more than what was usual in 1862. I see both these are 1862 agreements?—No, one is 1867 or 1868.

46,741. One is 1862 and the other is 186—, it does not say what?—I did not like to put in the date, because it might be inferred then which place it was.

46,742. However, they are both before 1870. That was before the Acts?—Yes, before the Acts. The last one was made about 1868, I think. The two of them are on the same principle; they are too stringent. They tie the farmer up very much.

46,743. One would generally expect that there would be a modification since the Agricultural Holdings Act, and of course the Agricultural Holdings Act itself would give a protection which is not given in these documents?—Yes, but the tenant farmers think otherwise. They think they are tied up by these agreements.

46,744. Are these same agreements used now? No other agreements have been given, except the contracting out that took place.

46,745. You do not mean the contracting out since 1883?—No, after 1875.

46,746. Since 1883 it would have been illegal to contract out?—Yes. It is the first Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875 that I refer to.

46,747. That has been remedied by the next Act, the Act of 1883. Then with regard to this case of interference with the land set aside for turbary which was taken after the enclosure. You will have your own remedy now in the parish council, will you not?—Yes, unless the encroachment will be too old; I do not know if there is a certain time limit.

46,748. That seems to be a grievance which the State, at any rate, has tried to remedy in this Parish Councils Act?—Yes.

46,749. Then you say you want further legislation in order to protect the tenants against exorbitant rents. You say you want fair rents and security of tenure?—Yes.

46,750. What sort of protection were you looking for?—Well, I am afraid we cannot get it without some independent valuation, independent of the landlord and the tenant.

46,751. It seems to me that there are two points that want consideration. One is this question of religion. You say that the Nonconformists have not been fairly dealt with as regards the farms?—I suggest it from those facts.

46,752. There is fear lest, being Nonconformists, they should be turned from their farms?—Yes, there is a fear.

46,753. Now, what proportion do you think are Nonconformists?—In that parish certainly seven out of every 10 are Nonconformists.

46,754. Seven out of every 10?—Yes, in our parish.

46,755. Would you say generally that two-thirds or three-fourths was an over estimate?—Three-fourths is under the estimate for our parish.

46,756. But taking all the country round?—Well, taking the country round I should say three-fourths would be about the best I could give; but in our parish it is different.

46,757. Has it ever struck you what a substantial proof that is that after all the landlords, taking them as a class have been tolerant. If the landlords as a class during the last 10 or 15 years had been intolerant men and had done what you say the tenant farmers fear they may do, there would not have been two-thirds or four-fifths or seven-tenths Nonconformist tenants on their properties?—I misunderstood you. I took the population altogether when I said three-fourths, not tenant farmers.

46,758. What proportion of the tenant farmers are Nonconformists?—I should say they would be about 60 per cent.

46,759. Not more than that?—60 to 70 per cent.

Lord Kenyon.

46,760. It is a pure guess on your part I suppose?—Of course it is. I am guessing from my own immediate neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,761. Still you would feel, would you not, that at any rate in the last few years since 1868, leaving politics out of the question, there has not been any intolerance, any substantial intolerance, on the part of the landlords so as to affect the number of Nonconformist tenants on the farms?—There has not been substantial intolerance apart from the time of that election or something like it. We have had the ballot since then.

46,762. Do you consider that apart from any vague fear there may be there is real ground for that fear now?—But they use the ballot to deceive the landlord and to deceive other people as well.

46,763. Who use the ballot to deceive?—These farmers and so on.

46,764. I do not understand you?

Lord Kenyon.

46,764A. You mean it makes them hypocritical?—When the candidates come round, the tenants do not say what they will do; they will say, "Oh, we will not go against you," or something like that.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,765. Is there much shifting from one Nonconformist body to another in this part of the world?—No, not much.

46,766. Then the real difficulty seems to be this. One reason why they are afraid on these religious grounds is the land hunger?—One reason, yes.

46,767. The number of applicants for a farm and the tendency to outbid one another?—Yes.

46,768. And that raises a fear that they may be displaced on rather a small excuse?—They fear that their chances as Nonconformists will be very small to get a holding under those conditions. If a Churchman and a Nonconformist are bidding for the same farm the Churchman will get the farm as a rule.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,769. That is, other things being equal of course?—Well, I would scarcely like to go so far as to say that in every case.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,770. But the real thing we have got to try to shield the tenant farmer from is the competition rent produced by the land hunger?—That is the worst feature.

46,771. The landlords if they choose could get higher rents by going to the competition rent in the case of farms?—Yes.

46,772. Now I will just ask you one question because I think it is an important one. Supposing that you ask for a land court, that land court would be to shield the tenant farmer partly from the landlord and partly from his fellow tenants, from competition?—Yes, and to shield the landlord as well from bad farmers.

46,773. So that the shield is not entirely wanted as against the landlord?—No, it is wanted by three parties at least.

46,774. Would you say that it is more wanted as against the competition, the land hunger, than it is as against the chance of there being a bad landlord?—Well, I cannot say that it is more wanted.

46,775. But at any rate there are those two sides to it?—The two facts work together to a certain extent, the scarcity of holdings and the feeling that the Nonconformists, though they are, say, 70 per cent. of the whole body will stand a very poor chance of getting holdings.

46,776. But if the landlords hitherto have not taken competition rent, they to a certain extent have been a shield against the land hunger; the fact that they have not taken competition rents shows that?—I find that the rents in our district which are fair are the rents of places which have not been let in the last 20 years.

46,777. Which have not been altered?—Not been altered or let; those are pretty fair. The others, where new tenancies have been taken, are not so fair.

46,778. But, I suppose, in this part of the country, as in others, the landlords have allowed the families to remain on the land, to a very large extent, from father to son, have they not?—In many cases they have; not always.

46,779. So that they have been a shield and protection to the sitting tenant, but you think not a sufficient protection?—Not sufficient.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,780. Just one other question. I suppose there are in this neighbourhood, as there are in other neighbourhoods, unscrupulous landlords who would take really the highest bid for a farm?—Oh, yes, there are examples of that, I think.

46,781. Without taking the trouble to inquire whether the applicants are desirable tenants or not, they simply take the highest bid?—I cannot say, without making inquiries, at all.

46,782. You suggest a land court as a protection against bad landlords?—Yes, as well as from this unhealthy competition, and to get rid of the fear, so that the people will be free, and will feel sure that they will be dealt fairly with. I think it will make them better farmers.

46,783. Do you think that any landlord now would let a farm to a Churchman when there was a Nonconformist applying, who was perhaps a more desirable tenant?—Well, as far as my personal knowledge goes, I think that in our parish not one Nonconformist succeeded in getting a holding since the year 1856 under these Church landlords.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,784. I have not been bursar of the Jesus College estates for very many years, and I am very glad to learn a little as to the history of the previous management of the estates. You mentioned a rise in the rents on the college estate in Nantcwnlle. About what year was that did I understand you to say. Was it 1868?—It took place about the time the buildings were on, after the buildings were put up, or most of them.

46,785. Since my time I have heard more about abatements and reductions than about advancing rents?—Yes, I know.

46,786. I was rather surprised to hear that you had drawn up a petition, and that the tenants were afraid to sign it. When I come among them they tell me every kind of thing that comes to their mind with the greatest freedom I should say; my difficulty is to get an end to the string of conversation?—They are surprised, I suppose, to find that the authorities of Jesus College are so homely as they are when you come among them; they think much more of them, that is, they are more afraid of them in the distance.

46,787. Have you ever known any of the Jesus College tenants to be canvassed by anyone connected with the college for their votes?—No.

46,788. With regard to the religious question, what you tell me now is that all our tenants are Churchmen?—Yes, in that parish.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,789. And you have known some to have been Nonconformist?—Yes, at our place—Upper Penlan.

46,790. Just tell me where have the Churchmen come in?—At the farm where I have been.

46,791. At Penlan, Nantcwnlle?—Yes, the present owner is a Churchman.

46,792. You married our tenant's daughter, I think?—Yes.

46,793. Our tenant was a Nonconformist. Is that so?—Yes.

46,794. I do not know, I confess, as I have absolutely no information. I am asking you?—My father-in-law was a deacon at the Methodist chapel at Penlan.

46,795. I never heard that before. If they had been Mormons I suppose I should never have heard of it, unless they had done something queer?—I believe there is an agent in Carmarthen who is a Churchman, and, of course, he may interfere, or something like that. I do not say that he does.

See 46,861.

46,796. Well, I am sure he has never had such instructions, and I should doubt whether he would undertake so much on his own responsibility; but you know how a Churchman came in at Penlan. I went down there, and let the farm myself for your mother-in-law. She called in whom she liked to be tenant, and she pointed out to me a trusted old servant of hers, and said that was the man she would like to let the farm to. Of course, I did not let it entirely upon that ground, as I heard also that he was a good farmer; he seemed to be satisfactory to her also. I never inquired whether he was a Churchman or a Nonconformist. That is how he came, is it not?—Well, I cannot deny it, of course, but I was not present at the time. I had left and gone up to Penuwch, so I did not know how you had arranged with her. I have married since then, and the connexions between us have not been so close as they were 46,797. I arranged with the widow and to her satisfaction, so far as I could find out, without making any inquiries into the religious convictions of the man?—She was very much put out by having to go away without getting any money, because she had been compelled to sell every right that she had there to me, the family had got into trouble, into straits. When my father-in-law died, he left about 1,100*l.* dry money to be divided, but it had been all spent, and they were in debt when I went there. Of course there were some two or three farms which they could not touch, and stock and crop.

46,798. They went in for something besides farming I think you said?—Yes.

46,799. He was a builder?—No, this one was not. It was a trustee, the grandfather, who was the builder. He was taken in as tenant with my mother-in-law because he was trustee under the will of the late tenant, Evan Jones.

46,800. But you do not mean to suggest that she lost the 1,100*l.* in a few years on the farm?—She did. I do not mean to say that the farm took all that money, but her mother took to buying farms and mortgaging them, and she used the name as a security, or something of that sort. That is how they got out of the money; but when I went there I tried to become tenant on the farm.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,801. Did you succeed in becoming tenant?—I failed.

46,802. You were not accepted as tenant?—No, I was refused.

46,803. Were you able to show that you were a practical farmer?—Yes; I proved that on the farm, I think. I improved it at least.

46,804. Had you no school at that time?—No, not at the time.

46,805. Where is your school now?—At Penuwch.

46,806. It is the public elementary school?—The board school.

46,807. Under the school board?—Under the Nantcwnlle School Board.

46,808. Of course an agent has some discretion. We cannot always be coming down to let this farm and the other, and if we cannot trust the agent to select a man whom he thinks a practical farmer, we might as well do the whole thing ourselves. You can see that yourself, I suppose?—It is understood in the neighbourhood that the agent and yourself were not of the same opinion as to who should be the tenant at the time, as you rented it to a man whom he did not want; it is supposed that he had another man in view.

46,809. You touched on the religious question. You said there were Churchmen now where there were Nonconformists before. Is there a second instance?—In Berthneuadd years ago, the father of the present tenant was a Methodist.

46,810. But we did not disturb him?—No, I am only taking it as illustrating the influence that is going on, the indirect influence, of course.

46,811. Of course I cannot answer for that; but we did not disturb him, and with regard to that farm the tenant is still there, is he not?—Berthneuadd?

46,812. Yes?—Yes.

46,813. When the rise in the rents in 1868 was made was it understood to be the result of a valuation?—I think it was.

46,814. I do not know; I have no papers to refer to at present?—I think it was. It was Mr. Blathwaite, I think, who valued it. Of course I was not in the neighbourhood at that time.

46,815. When the farmers had a timidity in signing the petition, is it possible that you stated the case somewhat too eloquently, and that they felt that it was a little too strong, or something of that sort?—Well, they do not generally tell me that I am eloquent.

46,816. They would not tell you that to your face; but do not you think there might be something in it, that they felt that you were going perhaps a little too far?—I wrote it out according to their directions; I was simply acting as clerk; I was not a tenant so that I could not sign it. I had simply to write out what they agreed upon, and it was a fight between three old tenants who should go first.

46,817. Who should go first?—Who should be the first to sign, that was the quarrel. They all said, "nag a i wir ddim yn gyntaf" (No, indeed, I shall not go first). Everyone said, "You go first."

46,818. You said that two of the tenants failed?—Yes.

46,819. Who was the other that failed?—John Griffiths, Penlan, Abermeurig.

46,820. Is it not the fact that he also bought land; was it owing to our farm that he failed?—I have never been given to understand anything else. I do not know that he did buy land anywhere.

46,821. You never heard that he bought land?—No.

46,822. And bought land too dear as many people are apt to do?—No, I did not hear that, but it might be the fact.

46,823. And that he went away to America?—No, John Griffiths did not. He is dead.

46,824. Yes, the man who is dead, went away to America I think, for a time?—Oh yes, he ran away, and then came back again.

46,825. And then our agent allowed him to come back, to be our tenant again, and he died on the farm?—He was allowed to be tenant again with certain trustees I think.

46,826. But you would not be surprised that the agent required some amount of security?—I am not surprised at anything; only there is the fact that he failed in the holding.

46,827. With regard to that, he died the other day, and I was asked to consider the question of re-letting; the widow had the offer of two relatives of hers who wished to take the farm. I think one was a nephew and the other a granddaughter?—Yes.

46,828. I was consulted as to which was to have the preference. I said, "by all means the "one she prefers, who will take care of her," and it was the granddaughter who was selected, but I have never inquired whether she was a Churchwoman or a Nonconformist. At any rate, you see in this case that our farm was not to blame for the failure there, for he was able to go on there a good many years afterwards; we allowed him to come back, and he went on till a few months ago; he died only lately?—He had been going on by the help of other people, to a certain extent.

46,829. Well, there was a certain amount of security, no doubt, and his widow had her choice as to the tenant to succeed, and to take care of her?—Yes, I heard that last Saturday when I was down in the neighbourhood.

46,830. Then with regard to Penlan Nantcwnlle, the other failure, you admit that that was not entirely due to the farm?—No, not entirely. The whole money was not spent, but I know that they had to put money to make up the rent every year when I was there.

46,831. Are you aware that some people think that our tenant got considerably poorer when you came there?—Of course she did, because when my wife came of age she lost the management of property which she had no right to; she had only a life interest in all the property, and when I married and my wife came of age, naturally I took possession of it; I did not let her squander any more of it.

46,832. There was one other thing you mentioned just now, that a tenant was obliged to make a gift of fowls on a certain estate; but you said they were cocks?—Yes.

46,833. Why should they have been cocks. Is that a custom that has come down from the cock-fighting times, do you know?—No, I think the reason is that hen chickens are kept, as a rule, for getting eggs from them. It is the cock chicken that is generally fattened and made fit for the table when young and tender.

46,834. If I were a landlord, and had that sort of thing to arrange, I should object to the old rooster, I must say; I think it would be safer to say hens?—It is the young cocks that they want.

Lord Kenyon.

46,835. I have some questions to ask you, by Mr. Vincent:—"Is this Colonel Lewes you "refer to Colonel John Lewes, of Llanlear"?—Yes. See 46,629.

46,836. "Did Colonel Lewes give the following abatements, 1885–87, 10 per cent.; 1888, "7½ per cent.; Michaelmas, 1891, 10 per cent.; "Michaelmas, 1892, 10 per cent."?—Colonel Lewes' estate, except this Llanlear, is out of my district altogether. It is in another parish.

46,837. You do not know whether he gave those abatements or not?—No, I do not; I simply know what the actual rent is there; that is all.

46,838. "Was your notice to quit given on "behalf of Colonel Lewes or of Jesus College"?—My notice to quit?

46,839. Yes?—The farm I was on was never sold to Colonel Lewes. It was Berthneuadd.

46,840. It has nothing to do with Colonel Lewes?—No.

46,841. "Do you say that in Colonel Lewes' "time there have been any failures on the "estate besides that of one publican"?—It is news to me that there was one there who failed on Colonel Lewes' estate. I do not know anything about him. The failures I refer to were the failures of the two tenants of Penlan on Jesus College estate.

46,842. Not Colonel Lewes' estate?—No.

46,843. "To whom did the Monachty estate belong in 1868–69?"—Gwynne, Monachty—by Aberayron.

46,844. "As a matter of fact is there not the "kindest feeling between Nonconformists and "Churchmen in Nantcwnlle parish? Did not "the Nonconformist farmers themselves sub-"scribe to the new church which was erected "there recently"?—I sent my horse and cart myself two or three days to carry stones there; that did not prevent me from helping. Of course it was done from a friendly feeling.

46,845. That is the question: "Is there not as "a matter of fact the kindest feeling between

"Nonconformists and Churchmen"?—I may mention another thing to show that there are good feelings. When I was in Penlan when we began to get into trouble I took a school at Garthely; Mr. Rogers was the head manager. There was a little place under 3 acres where some of my wife's family had been living and we kept it on as tenants with Penlan; it was in the midst of the farm. It was 3*l.* a year rent. I got into great trouble one year; I lost a lot, and very soon after I buried my wife, and Mr. Rogers very kindly accepted one rent instead of two from me without my asking it. So that there are kind feelings between us in many things; but I am only referring to other customs connected with the estate.

46,846. "Do you mean to say seriously that "any man on the estate of Abermeurig need be "afraid of Mr. Rogers of Abermeurig. It is a "very large estate, is it not"?—I should say it is the largest estate in our parish.

46,847. Do you think that any man need be afraid of him?—Well, in some ways, no, but in other ways they are. They are afraid in this way, that when they lose a farm or something of that sort they cannot get a holding; it is difficult for them to get a holding under Mr. Rogers unless they are Churchmen. There is no doubt about that since the year 1856.

46,848. "Did you, although you were not "bound to do so, give notice to either Mr. "Rogers or to Mr. Williams, the vicar, that you "were going to give this evidence"?—No.

46,849. "You say that there have been many "secessions from Nonconformity or conversions "to Churchmanship in Nantcwnlle parish, you "may take the phrase you prefer; do you not "admit that a convert may be honest"?—I never said anything about converts.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,849A. I think his statement referred to the actual numbers of farmers, and so on. I do not think he spoke about converts.

(Mr. Vincent.) I thought there was a suggestion of that kind.

Lord Kenyon.

46,850. You do not admit that there was any suggestion of that kind?—Well, as a matter of fact there are converts there, and, of course, they may be honest, but I did not refer to that in my evidence.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,851. Are there any converts on the other side, do you know?—No.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,852. Are there any converts from one sect to the other?—There is only one convert—well, there are only two sects in our parish, except a few at the bottom—at the lower end, near Talsarn; we are Methodists or Churchmen in the greater part of the parish. I know one Churchman who has become a Methodist, and that is the only one.

Lord Kenyon.

46,853. "Did you ever know a Nonconformist "landowner who had a Churchman for a "tenant"?—Yes, of course.

46,854. "You say you cannot deny what Pro-"fessor Rhŷs says about Penlan, is that so"?—I must know first what particular remark it was about Penlan. I cannot make a general statement.

Professor Rhŷs.

Is it as to the succession of tenants?

(Mr. Vincent.) I refer to the answer the witness gave to a question of yours; he said, "I cannot deny that."

Professor Rhŷs to Witness.

46,855. That was that the successor to your mother-in-law was selected by herself. I think that is what it refers to?—Of course I have no positive knowledge of it. I have heard some rumours that you and she met with Mr. Rogers at Abermeurig, and that somehow or other you came to an agreement with her that she was to receive certain money from the incoming tenant.

46,856. And that the man that I appointed then is a Churchman?—Yes, he is a Churchman.

46,857. What I said was that he was selected by your mother-in-law, the sitting tenant, and that no inquiries were made into his religion, which accounts for the succession there?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,858. Mr. Vincent also asks, "Your story "led to a very different inference from that "which Professor Rhŷs has stated, did it not"?—The only inference I wished to draw was, that in a parish where the Nonconformists very greatly outnumbered the Churchmen, on an estate with five farms, everyone was a Churchman. The only inference I meant to draw, was that that it did not answer to the proportion throughout the parish.

46,859. "May your accuracy in this case be "taken as the measure of your accuracy in the "other cases you mention"?—I cannot answer a question of that sort.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 47,485.

Mr. John Hoyes Barker called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

46,860. You are Mr. John Hoyes Barker, of Carmarthen, solicitor?—Yes.

46,861. And you are agent to Jesus College?—I have been agent for the Jesus College property in this neighbourhood for the last 30 years and upwards. I would ask permission to make some remarks in rebutting some of the evidence that has been recently given. If you would allow me at the very outset I would in the most emphatic manner, disclaim the slightest, the most remote, idea of there having been any influence brought to bear either in politics or in religion in this case. The last witness did drop a hint of something of that kind and I most emphatically protest that there was never anything of the kind. I really could not tell you in nine cases out of 10 what religion or politics the particular individual held. Mr. Emlyn Jones in his further evidence, has cleared up that which was ambiguous in the first part. He never was, in form or substance, a tenant of the Jesus College estate in Upper Penlan or any other farm. He lived there with his mother-in-law when he married her daughter. I believe, as far as the short time has enabled me to ascertain the exact figures, he is correct as to the rise in rent about the year 1860.

See 46,795.

See 46,626–46,633.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,862. 1868, I think he said?—That was a subsequent one. I think it was Tir College he said was raised in 1868 because the buildings were not completed, but it was about 1860 or 1862 that the rise took place on this particular farm of Upper Penlan. There was a re-valuation by Mr. Blathwaite, a surveyor called in on behalf of the landlords. That re-valuation I have been unable to put my hand on, but it was something to this effect. The land was valued and more especially the condition of the buildings, which was not very seriously bad at that time; they were totally inadequate to the modern requirements and an essential part of the re-valuation was the rebuilding of the dwelling-house and outhouses on the different farms. I am able to ascertain the figures of the outlay on this particular farm of Upper Penlan. It amounted to 325*l.* The acreage I am unable at this moment to put my hand on.

46,863. It might be 99 acres, that is what he suggested?—It might be; I am unable to say.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,865. Which is legal?—Which is legal Now, with regard to the allowances, if you will allow me, my Lord, I would just mention briefly the allowances that have been made on this estate to the tenants. On the whole year ending Michaelmas 1885, there was an allowance of 15 per cent., and that was continued at Lady Day 1886, Michaelmas 1886, Lady Day 1887, Michaelmas 1887, and Lady Day 1888. At Michaelmas 1888, 10 per cent. allowance; Lady Day 1889, 7½ per cent.; Michaelmas 1889, 5 per cent.; Lady Day 1890, Michaelmas 1890, and Lady Day 1891 no allowance was made; Michaelmas 1891, 5 per cent. allowance; Lady Day 1892, no allowance; Michaelmas 1892, 5 per cent.; Lady Day 1893, 10 per cent.; Michaelmas 1893, 15 per cent. Those are the actual figures of the allowances made to the tenants. I think those are the only remarks that have occurred to me in the very short opportunity I have had of considering the evidence that has been given by Mr. Emlyn Jones.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Edwardes Rogers called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 46,635, 46,642.

46,866. What have you to say?—I only wish to remark in respect to the old custom of carrying peat, that it is part of the rent, and has always been considered as such. I am sorry to say I seldom get it. With regard to the fowl duty that is part of the old custom too, and is hardly ever put in force.

46,867. Do the tenants on your estate have agreements?—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,868. It is an understood thing, that is all?—An understood thing.

46,869. Is it difficult for Nonconformists to obtain farms?—Certainly not.

46,870. Do you consider the religion or politics of tenants when you engage them?—Hitherto I have not; how it may be in the future I do not know, but hitherto I have not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,871. Is it true that you have not let a farm of yours to a Nonconformist since the year 1856?—I really do not think I have had any vacant; my farms never become vacant as long as any of the old family remain on. I never let to new tenants. If they are Nonconformists, they remain so; I never inquire. I never used to inquire.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,872. Are you not aware that these food rents, as we may call them, are very ancient, and belong to the time before the conquest?—I am, and some old documents in my possession have some curious facts about them.

46,873. It is simply a survival of the old tribal rents before the conquest of Wales by England?—Yes. I have only a very small property comparatively, in the parish of Nantewnlle.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,874. Are you aware that public sentiment is against these sort of duties?—I really do not know; it is so very small, and we very seldom put them in force. I never heard anything against them. Sometimes the tenants bring down some of these ynyd, gieir ynyd, and they are frequently returned.

46,875. You say they are seldom put in force. Do you make any distinction?—No; they do not come, as a rule, and we never inquire for them. Sometimes they do come and then they are frequently returned, or paid for.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,876. They are not accepted, do you mean?—Not accepted.

46,877. Would they still send them after they have been returned?—Yes; some do and some do not. Some have entirely forgotten them; others hold on.

Lord Kenyon.

46,878. A question is sent up by Mr. Emlyn Jones: "Have there been changes of tenants "at Gaer, Pengaer, Corngambach, &c. since "1856"?—Yes, I believe so. See 47,4

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,879. Who were appointed, were they Churchmen or Nonconformists?—Corngambach was a Churchman, he was the only applicant. I think he had some connexion with the place.

Lord Kenyon.

46,880. And the other two places?—The other two places for the same reason; there was some family connexion; I do not know what it was.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Jenkin Lloyd called and examined.

46,881. You are Mr. Jenkin Lloyd, I think; will you kindly give us your evidence?—Yes, I am a tenant farmer, living at Pant Farm, Llanddewi Brefi, and I am entirely dependent on farming. I have been brought up on one out of half a dozen of the largest farms in the Tregaron Union. When between five and 10 years of age there was no school accommodation, but during the winter months, between 10 and 13, my attendance at school was very irregular. I was kept home to do the work of the farm. I had to leave school altogether at the age of 14. Being the youngest of five children, the others had to leave school earlier. All the labour staff employed were provided for and lodged on the premises. I slept in the same bed, partook of the same food on the same table, and had to do the same work, and kept the same hours, and in every other respect had similar treatment. My sisters in turn had to do the work of a cowman, to feed from 50 to 60 head of cattle in the winter, take charge of the dairy and housekeeping, feed pigs, fowls, &c., and had to do general outdoor work, especially during the harvest. From the age of 15 to 23, I had the charge of a team of horses, and had to learn every other work of the farm, such as there is in mixed farming, and from 23 to the present (I am now 37) I have had to do what may be called a working bailiff's work. I hold the following qualifications relating to land. I obtained in 1884 second-class honours, also first-class elementary in geology in 1885, and second class in physiography in 1885. I was placed in the first division in the first class, in the teachers' course at South Kensington in 1887. I have at different times held the following positions:—A guardian of the poor for years. A member of the assessment committee, and the chairman of the same for one year. I have been for six years a member of the Llanddewi Brefi U. D. School Board. I was also elected a representative of the Cardiganshire County Council on the agricultural committee in connexion with the Aberystwith College, and was elected to the same this year. I have also been elected by the same body to represent the Tregaron and Lampeter School district on the county governing body. I have taught agriculture under the Science and Art Department. I have had the farm under my own management for the last 12 years. I have nothing to complain of in the way of game, nor have I been interfered with or suffered owing to my political views. At the end of 12 years, financially, I am nothing better. During this time I have endeavoured to adapt my mode of farming to meet the demand of the market, to produce the best article and sell in the best market by sending fat stock and other produce to salesmen and co-operative stores. My family is small. I get no interest on capital nor any salary for my own labour or that of my wife, and yet I do not doubt, should I give the farm up so as to get a reduction, others would be ready to take it, for land is limited and overcrowded, and the competition is keen. Most of the vacant farms of late have been taken by persons that had made their money at the coal works and in the milk trade. On the whole, land in Wales is poor, and the greater part of it requires a large amount of labour so as to keep it under proper cultivation. High rents on this class of land in years gone by depended to a great extent on the cheapness of labour, and which could be obtained very cheaply some 40 years ago. On this class of land the mode of farming cannot be altered to meet the demand of the market. In this part of the country modern agricultural implements cannot be applied but to a very limited extent, owing to the holdings being small and the rough character of the land. Agricultural education has been neglected in Wales, but at present there is great sympathy with agricultural education. Wales has taken fair advantage of the aid given by the Science and Art Department, and would compare favourably with any part of England. In 1888 there were no less than 33 classes in agriculture in different parts of the principality, and attended by no less than 182 scholars in Cardiganshire alone. A farm labourer that I employed for years held second-class honours as well as other certificates. I had myself the charge of two classes for years. Ministers and clergymen were very willing to work, but large landowners took no interest whatever in it. Improved methods of farming are hindered more by want of confidence in the safety of the investment than from the want of knowledge, and a good many things taught in the science cannot be applied for want of buildings, especially in the dairy department.

Mr. Scebohm.

46,881A. You say, "I get no interest on capital "nor any salary for my labour or that of my "wife." Of course you get your living?—Yes.

46,882. So that what you mean is that you are engaged in a business which simply provides for your living without making any profit over and above that?—Yes.

46,883. So that you get no addition to capital. Then with regard to the dairy department you say you have been on the board of guardians? Yes.

46,884. Has the question been brought before your board of guardians to adopt the Act for inspecting dairies?—No.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,885. Do you think it would be a good thing?—I think it would be, especially in this district.

46,886. Milk is a thing which requires such great cleanliness that it is requisite that a dairy should be of the right character and kept very clean?—Yes, very little of that has been kept in view in the dairies that have been built already.

46,887. Do you think that the lessons that have been given in connexion with the dairy school that the county council are providing will assist in opening people's eyes to the necessity of more cleanliness and better dairying?—Yes, I think it will.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,888. Your contention is this, that under no circumstances can farming be made profitable under present rents and also at present prices of labour?—No, that is my experience.

46,889. We are sometimes told that farmers do not adopt new methods, that they adhere to old ways of farming and really do not come up to the requirements of the market. But you say that you have adopted new methods and adapted your modes of farming to meet the demands of the times?—Yes, I think my experience has given me every help to do that.

46,890. But a year like last year, did you make any profit on the farm?—No, the last two years I lost money, taking the last two years alone.

Lord Kenyon.

46,891. Are you anything besides a tenant farmer. Have you any other occupation?—No.

46,892. Mr. Emlyn Jones said that only one tenant farmer was coming forward and I wanted to find out how many there were. Do you know of any others who are coming forward today?—No, I do not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,893. You do not suggest any remedies?—No, I have not.

46,894. Have you any to suggest?—Well, I suggest a land court to settle the question of rent.

46,895. What about disputes?—All kinds of disputes ought to be referred to some independent person in my opinion.

Lord Kenyon.

46,896. This is a question by Mr. Vincent, "Have you lost money on an average of seven "years"?—The last seven years.

46,897. "Have you lost money on an average "of seven years"?—I suppose it is the last seven years?—Yes.

46,898. You have actually lost money?—Yes, especially the last two.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,899. Do you mean that you have less in your farm now than you had seven years ago?—The actual value of capital invested in stock and crops are greatly reduced in value.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,900. Have you a large family ?—No, only two children; that is all.

46,901. So that the capital has not been consumed by living too high ?—No.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,902. Or by too great family expenses ?—Oh, no, they are young.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Humphreys Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

46,903. You are Mr. John Humphreys Davies, of Cwrtmawr ?—Yes.

46,904. You are a landlord, I think, in the parish of Llangeitho ?—Yes.

46,905. Have you got a statement ?—I have a statement here. Shall I read it ?

46,906. Yes, if you will ?—I am part owner of a small estate situate in the counties of Pembroke and Cardigan. The annual rental is just 1,100*l.* The rents have been nearly nominal for the last 30 years, except in cases where long leases have expired.

All the necessary buildings have been erected wherever the tenant desired, and no extra rent has been charged for their erection within the last 30 years. Abatements and permanent reductions have been made according to the special circumstances of the tenant and his farm, e.g., after a dry season land on the seashore has suffered much more than inland, and larger reductions have been made accordingly.

No account has ever been taken of differences in politics or religion, though every class is represented.

No game has ever been preserved, and the tenants have the right to all game.

Each landlord has been able to converse with the tenants in their own tongue, and has visited the farms at least once a year.

The chief difficulty in dealing with tenants is the question of good and poor farming. Many tenants suffer from want of capital, but as far as my experience goes they are often the best farmers, for they attend very closely to their duties, and usually work shoulder to shoulder with their labourers and farm servants. The tenants with capital, on the other hand, will not risk their money which they have in possession on improving the land, because of the insecurity of tenure and the lack of provision for compensation. They are often able to lend out money at high interest, which is a safer and more profitable arrangement.

It would be well in considering the attitudes of different landlords towards their tenants to divide landlowners into two classes :—

1. Those who receive moneys from other sources than real property.

2. Those solely dependent on their rentals from land.

See 18,531–4. I notice that at Llangefni, in Anglesey, a person came forward and divided landowners into two classes, Class A. and Class B. I do not wish to draw the distinction between Churchmen and Tories on the one hand, and Liberals and Nonconformists on the other, but in other respects the two divisions run on much the same lines.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The first class are very frequently excellent landlords. They spend large sums of money on their property, make large abatements and permanent reductions in their rents, and often get for themselves but a comparatively small per-centage of their annual rents. Several gentlemen of this kind, e.g., Colonel Lynes, Bala (Q. 6666), and Major Sandbach, Llanrwst (Q. 14,809) seem to have given evidence before the Commission, but I submit that their cases are exceptional, just as the case of a wealthy tenant farmer would be who paid an exorbitant rent out of income derived from other sources than his farm, while his farm did not pay its way.

As to the second class, those landlords whose income is wholly derived from landed property, a distinction ought also to be made :—

1. Those who receive the whole of their rental themselves.

2. Those who have encumbrances on their estates in the forms of mortgage and annuities, &c.

The former class can afford to make the necessary improvements, repair and put up the necessary buildings. They can easily expend about 10 per cent. of their rental on their estates annually.

The latter class, people whose estates are encumbered, is the greatest curse of the present land system.

I may say that a case of this kind occurs in Tregaron here. The very room in which you are now sitting belongs to the Powell estate of Nanteos which is one of the worst cases of this kind.

They are often perfectly helpless themselves, because of the difficulties in the way of selling real property, especially where it is entailed. They cannot afford to put any money out on their land, for they have to pay a much heavier rate of interest on the borrowed money than they can get as rent from the land. They can afford to make no abatements. This class is mainly found among small landlords, though there are instances of great landowners being in much the same predicament. Of course, it is impossible to form an estimate of the number of such, but it is certain that they are very numerous. It is perfectly certain that the farms owned by this class of landlords are much the most highly rented of all.

46,907. By which class is that ?—The class who have encumbered their estates.

It is time that some drastic legislation was brought to bear on this question. A Land

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Purchase Act might greatly relieve matters, but a sweeping measure assimilating all tenures to the fee simple would be more satisfactory.

I wish to say what I consider the chief objects of reform in the land laws ought to be.

1. To keep the ordinary agricultural class in the country, and to regulate emigration to the large towns and populous districts, by making the agricultural life as profitable and pleasurable as possible.

2. To ensure the very best farming, and the production of good crops, and the breeding of good cattle.

3. To provide means for remedying any injustice between man and man as landlord and tenant.

When we consider the difficulty of any proposal to make a just and even law between landlord and tenant, the only final solution seems to be the creation of a landowning peasantry, e.g., freeholders.

I should like to make a few remarks as to the position of the freeholders in this part of Cardiganshire. By freeholders I refer only to people in the position of the ordinary tenant farmer, who have either inherited land or bought it themselves. Some of the former class, especially those whose farms were bought 50 or 60 or more years ago, are in a very good position financially, because they were able to clear a good surplus of profit during the years 1872 to 1880. Others of the same class, who have had to pay large sums of money by arrangement or under wills to their brothers or sisters, and have been forced to mortgage their farms, are in a very critical condition.

But it is the latter class, those who bought farms not more than 30 years ago, when land sold for very high figures, who are in the worst condition. I have an instance in mind where a poor farmer, after half a century of hard toil, had saved over 1,000*l.* He bought a farm in his neighbourhood for 2,500*l.*, quite 500*l.* more than it was worth, and the highest rent he could get for it was 60*l.*, which only just paid the interest for the mortgage on the money borrowed. It is easy enough for anyone accustomed to business transactions to jeer at such short-sightedness, but one should bear in mind the causes which bring it about. It is not too much to say that nearly every tenant farmer feels the insecurity of his position. Perhaps he is paying a just or low rent for his farm. Should he in any way offend his landlord, and it is a very difficult matter for him to avoid offending a person different in language, different in religion, different in politics, different in race, he may be turned out of his farm at short notice. He knows that there is a large number of farmers, tenants who pay high rents, and others, who are on the look out for a farm, who would willingly jump at his farm should it be vacated. He also knows that he himself would find the greatest difficulty in getting a farm at all, and if he did get one would be forced to pay a high rent, or be forced to leave his neighbourhood. What then is more natural for a man in his position than to take the opportunity when it offers itself and buy his own or a neighbouring farm. He need then have no fear of landlord or clergyman. He will be perfectly independent, and can give full vent to his wishes, and not be afraid of avowing his principles. Every improvement he makes will add to the value of his farm, the harder he works the better it will be for himself. He also has an ambition before his eyes to clear the mortgage on his farm, and to leave it to his wife and children.

As to the position of the tenant farmer mentioned in the first instance I can give the following example. A tenant farmer near here gave notice that he would give the farm up at such a date. His idea was that the landlord would probably ask him to stay on at a lower rent, for he was an excellent farmer and a man in every way most desirable as a tenant. Immediately it was known that the farm would be vacant a neighbouring farmer asked for the farm, and offered to pay a higher rent than the former. The farm was let to the latter at the increased rent. This is a common practice, and arises, perhaps, from the servility of farmers. Generations of landlords have quashed all the sense of independence out of the tenant. Now the position of the former farmer was very hard. He had no intention of leaving, and would rather remain on at the same rent. The affair was settled in the end, I believe, but the mere fact that a farmer could be found to offer a higher rent for the farm which was highly rented before proves the extreme land hunger there is in the country. Scores of young farmers from this neighbourhood are leaving the country and settling in London every year, mostly in the milk trade. They leave because they cannot get farms at all or not at payable rents. It is the ambition of most of these young men to make money in London or elsewhere and purchase a farm in Wales and come back there to live. In this neighbourhood the London milkmen are buying land continually, and some have already settled down here and built nice houses. This proves how strong is the love of country in them.

There is no doubt whatsoever that the numerous evictions which followed the 1868 election greatly influenced this mania for buying farms on trust. In all the recent sales of land in this part of the country the farms have either been bought by the tenants, their relations, or neighbouring farmers, or by people from the country who have made money in London or other large towns. It is safe to say that one of the greatest causes of this mania, i.e., buying farms without having enough money to pay for them, is insecurity of tenure.

I believe the common estimate is that there are 2,000 freeholders in Cardiganshire. They are much more numerous in some neighbourhoods than others. In the parishes west of Tregaron the freeholders are approximately as follows:—

Lord Kenyon—continued.

	Holdings.	Freeholders.	Per Cent. (nearly).
Gartheli	42	7	17
Nantcwnlle	77	30	39
Trefilan	40	—	—
Blaenpenal	83	40	48
Lledrod Isaf	92	24	26
„ Uchaf	52	1	2
Bettws Leiky	39	3	8
Gwynfil	52	8	16
Llanbadarn	51	14	27
Llangeitho	108	24	22
Cilcenin	69	6	9
Llanbadarn Trefeglwys	129	17	7
Llansantffraed	299	26	8

I arrive at these figures by means of this year's register of parliamentary voters. Of course all women are excluded, so that the returns are not exactly correct, and it may also happen that a farmer may own a freehold farm but have another qualification as a voter. But for all purposes of comparison they are near enough. Cottagers, shopkeepers, &c. are included in the list of farmers. Of course the per-centage of freeholders would be higher if farmers alone were counted.

The point to be noticed is that the per-centage of freeholders is very much higher in the upland and poorer parishes than in the lowland and fertile ones. It would be a fairer comparison to take the extent of land in each parish which is divided between freeholders and tenant farmers, but it is difficult to procure this. All the cottagers and labourers are counted as farmers.

The parishes which stand highest in the above table are—

Blaenpenal	48 per cent.
Nantcwnlle	39 „
Llanbadarn	27 „
Lledrod Isaf	26 „
Llangeitho	22 „

The parishes standing lowest are Trefilan with no freeholder, and Lledrod Uchaf with only one. The former (i.e., Blaenpenal, &c.) consist wholly or in part of high mountainous, barren land. The latter are low lying.

It will be seen that the freeholders are mainly squeezed into the least profitable land for farming purposes, where there is little naturally good soil, where the earth requires continuous artificial strengthening, and necessarily more money must be laid out. The main class of freeholders in this portion of Cardiganshire are labouring under very great difficulties. Yet, notwithstanding this, I make bold to say that there is not a more deserving class of farmers within the United Kingdom. The pauperism is lower in these parishes, crime is less frequent, education is more eagerly sought after. From the parish of Llangeitho alone in the last 10 years four sons of farmers have been to Cambridge (without a scholarship or anything) and a dozen or more to Lampeter and Aberystwyth. The same may be said of most of the parishes about here.

46,908. What is the proportion of freeholders to tenants in that parish?—22 per cent.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,909. Could you give us the population of that parish?—I think it is about 600; I am not quite sure. The number of holdings is 108.

46,910. And how many freeholders?—24 freeholders.

46,911. Four have gone up to Oxford or Cambridge?—Four to Cambridge; there is not one to Oxford.

46,912. Within how many years?—Within 10 years, and a large number to Lampeter (of course Lampeter is mostly supplied from these neighbourhoods) and to Aberystwyth College.

It is probably not too high a figure to say that 80 per cent. of freeholders have mortgaged their farms, some it is true not very heavily, but others to the utmost extent. In the cases where mortgages are not heavy they are frequently being wiped off altogether, but it is impossible for those who are heavily mortgaged to do other than pay the interest and earn a bare living. It is a proverb in the country that freeholders, even though they pay higher interest on their mortgages than the rent of tenants, are far the best farmers, and the reason is not hard to seek. The land is their own, there is no landlord to molest them or turn them out. If ever there was a deserving class of men these are they. Is it not possible for some help to be given them? Relief has been given in Ireland to tenant farmers, though not in exactly a parallel case. Would it not be possible for the Government to advance money to farmers in cases where the mortgages do not exceed three-quarters of the value of the farm. In Ireland advances have been made up to two-thirds and three-fourths of the purchase money (44 & 45 Vict. c. 49.). Could not advances be made to Welsh freeholders up to three-fourths of the value of the farm?

The great reform needed is no doubt security of tenure. In one aspect it is broad enough to take in compensation for improvements and the question of rent, since the permanent settlement of a tenant precludes the necessity for compensation and the possibility of raising the rent, (1) because he will not desire to leave; (2) you cannot compel him to pay more than a fair rent; you have no remedy. As to its effect on the tenant farmer enough has been said, but as regards the freeholder it will probably have a very different, though quite as desirable, a result. There is no doubt but that the majority of freeholders who are heavily mortgaged will sell out their lands and become tenant farmers once more. They will have the preference as tenants, for many will have capital in hand, and the majority will have had the best of training as practical farmers beforehand. It is generally admitted that the standard of farming among tenant farmers in the last 10 years has fallen very low. The land itself has suffered from the depression in prices This is not so to the same extent with the freeholder. He has put more in the land in order to get more from it. He will have these two advantages over the ordinary tenant farmer, possession of capital and a better knowledge of farming.

Security of tenure may then bring about the remedy for the great distress among the freeholders, and it will be the greatest boon to tenant farmers. The danger of security of tenure is, of course, in the case of bad farmers, and precaution ought to be taken so as to put a stop to neglect of efficient husbandry.

I desire to emphasise these two points:—

I. The assimilation of all estates to the fee simple with the consequent sweeping away of primogeniture and entail.

II. The importance of security of tenure in any scheme of land reform.

Lord Kenyon.

46,913. What led you to say that Colonel Lynes and Mr. Sandbach were put into that Class 1?—Because I believe, in the first place, Colonel Lynes had spent about 6,000*l.* on his estates and has only received 900*l.* in rent. It would be impossible for an ordinary landowner who had no other income to do that, I should think.

46,914. Unless he did it with borrowed money. Then what do you say about Mr. Sandbach?—I think he spent about 60 or 70 per cent. of his income.

46,915. With regard to the farmer who gave notice that he wished to leave his farm, why did he not ask for a lower rent from his landlord?—Well, they are afraid to do so.

46,916. He was not afraid to give notice?—No, but that is the general course of things; it is quite the custom here to give notice in that way, thinking they will get a lower rent. I cannot give you the reason of it.

46,917. Was not he surprised to find that his farm was worth more than he thought?—I do not know; I was simply giving it as an instance.

46,918. You say another man immediately offered a higher rent, so I presume the farm was worth more than the first man gave for it?—Oh, I do not think so at all. The land hunger is so keen that these men will give any rent for farms.

46,919. Who are "these men" that you speak of. Do they come from the neighbourhood?—If a man is out of a farm he has nothing to do but to go to the workhouse or get a farm as best he can.

46,920. You say that landlords do not think of inquiring whether the applicants are desirable tenants. Do you really mean to say that landlords are so blind to their own interests as that?—I do not say that they are.

46,921. You say you are a landowner or a part owner, have you offered any portion of your estates to be sold?—No, but I should like to explain that they are settled in such a way that I have only a life interest.

46,922. Are you a Churchman or a Nonconformist?—I am a Nonconformist.

46,923. Have you any Churchmen tenants?—I have several.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

91,924. Then religion makes no difference between you and your tenants?—No difference at all.

46,925. Do you think it makes a difference on other estates of Churchmen?—I should not like to say that. I should not like to say that religion made any difference.

46,926. It would probably be the same on other estates as in your case?—I do not know. Of course the Nonconformists are a majority in Wales, Churchmen are in a minority; and if things were the other way I daresay the Nonconformists would feel differently towards Church tenants.

46,927. I did not quite catch that part of your evidence in which you spoke of freeholders being squeezed out into the worst portions?—Yes; of course I advocate the sale of mortgaged estates in order to let them in small holdings as freeholds. The answer to that here would be, that if you look at the freeholders in this neighbourhood, they are people who are very heavily mortgaged, and that they are worse off than the tenants. In order to answer that, I say that they were put in the most unprofitable parts, and that it would be impossible for anyone to make those farms pay; the land is very poor.

46,928. I do not think that is quite borne out. As far as I know where there are fewer freeholds it is in the mountain lands or in the very low districts?—I think that is so; the highest number of freeholders is in Blaenpenal.

46,929. Which is a mountainous district?—That is a mountainous district, yes.

46,930. But I thought you said the smallest number of freeholders was in the mountainous districts, unless I misunderstood you. I only want that put right?—No; I said the smallest number of freeholders is in Trefilan, which is right in the Vale of Aeron, and Lledrod Uchaf, which is in the neighbourhood of Swydd Ffynon, and so on.

46,931. That is some of the best part of the district?—Yes, I should think so.

46,932. Probably it would be the most profitable?—Yes.

46,933. And therefore rents have kept up there?—Yes.

46,934. When you speak of advances from Government, you mean at a low rate of interest, I suppose, or as a gift?—Well, I do not know; 3 per cent., for instance.

46,935. Then you say freeholders will sell out and become tenants again?—Yes, if they could get security of tenure I think the freeholders would sell out.

46,936. You think they would be happier as tenant farmers?—Yes, those who were previously heavily mortgaged; the reason for their existence as freeholders would have gone.

Mr. Seebohm.

46,937. You say that you estimate that there are 2,000 of these little freeholders in Cardiganshire?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,938. Could you give me an estimate of any in the adjoining counties?—I have no knowledge at all. I cannot be certain about the 2,000; I have heard it roundly estimated at 2,000. I think there is a parliamentary paper published, which I have not seen unfortunately.

46,939. Do you think it would be practicable for Government to lend to these small freeholders without lending to a further class. Could it restrict its loans to these freeholders?—What further class have you in mind?

46,940. Well, the tenant farmers?—I do not know.

46,941. Most of the hardships we have seen are in cases of estates being sold, and then owing to want of security of tenure, or rather of want of compensation for improvements, the farmers, as you say, are forced almost to buy?—Yes.

46,942. They would have to come in, would they not; they would have a very strong claim to come in?—Oh, yes, I understand you. I thought you meant for the Government to lend them money as capital on their farms.

46,943. No, I am speaking entirely of purchasing?—Oh, yes, I quite agree.

46,944. Then we have had this question over and over again before us; what do you say to it. Would not the mere fact that you could borrow money at 3 per cent., say, from Government, rather tend to raise prices?—Yes, you would have to have some restraint. You would have to have a fair valuation, and allow the tenants to buy at that fair valuation beforehand, give them the first chance.

46,945. Now as to that valuation. Could you make a valuation for sale which did not go up to the actual valuation of the land in the market. Would it be just to take away from the landowner property at a figure lower than the market price?—It seems to me then in any case the landlord will have to suffer. The landlord has had the best time of it all along and he must suffer. The rents have been raised from very low figures on every estate right through the country.

46,946. But there is the other side to the question; those rents are not up to the competition price; we have got that in evidence over and over again; that there are such a large number of competitors that the landowner could get higher rents than he is actually doing. Do you think that he actually gets too high a rent, I mean barring these bad times?—Of course it is a very difficult question because a good tenant can pay a very much larger rent if he puts out capital. Land returns very quick; a little capital will pay back very soon. The special circumstances of each farm would have to be taken into consideration.

46,947. If the fact be that the Government ending money under any circumstances will increase the price and increase competition, should we be really doing anything to lessen the land hunger?—What is wanted is to get the very best farmers on to the land so as to get the very best cultivation, and if you lend money in that way you would probably get the best class of farmers.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

46,948. I do not see why?—Experience shows that these freeholders are the best farmers in this neighbourhood. There is no doubt about it at all.

46,949. That is to say because they have security of tenure?—Yes, and because they are forced, of course, to do their best in their own interests.

46,950. Let us go one step further and come to the point of their having to sell the land. Would you again let the State step in and fix a lower value than the competition value?—No, I do not think I should fix a lower value, except in cases where the tenant farmer himself buys, where the sitting tenant buys the farm. If he is not willing to buy, let the land go as high as it will. In such a case I suppose some outsider would buy naturally.

46,951. Then the outsider who buys having bought it at a very high figure would naturally let it at a high rent?—Yes.

46,952. You made reference to the evidence that was given in Anglesey. From the evidence that was given would you not say that the more sales there were, and the more land came freely into the market the higher ultimately would be the value and the higher the rent?—Well, I should not like to express an opinion. It seems to me a very difficult question.

46,953. What we seem to be trying to do is to fight against the land hunger, and the problem which has to be solved is the very difficult one of how to do justice and at the same time to meet this question of land hunger?—Yes.

46,954. Then I think you said something about security of tenure. Do you think if the Agricultural Holdings Act was made as just as possible, as full as possible, that that would give practically security of tenure with the exception of the question of rent. It would be a great step gained, would it not?—Oh, yes, I think that the Agricultural Holdings Act ought to be extended, for instance, as to the list of improvements. The tenant ought to have a freer hand I should say.

46,955. Then supposing there were security of tenure given on that side, how do you suggest that we should secure that the rents should not be too high?—Oh, by a land court. I do not see that you can get security of tenure without some system of a land court; or perhaps a better system still would be a sliding scale. That seems to me very difficult to work out, although I believe it is worked in America or somewhere.

46,956. Do you think that the substitution of a land court for the discretion of the landlords as a class would better the large mass of tenants?—Yes.

46,957. I can quite understand that it would better the condition of those who are under bad landlords, but still there are a large number, probably the very large majority, who are now getting on very fairly well under good landlords. Do you hold, as some do, that a land court would disturb their condition; do you think it would better their condition?—No, I do not think it would disturb their condition at all. I think neither a good landlord nor a good tenant would have to go to the land court at all. Of course, if the rent was too high the tenant would go there, and if the landlord made large improvements and thought he ought to have something extra he could go to the land court and get some further interest on his money.

Mr. Seebohm.

These are all very difficult questions, and I am glad to have got your answers.

Lord Kenyon.

46,958. There are some questions by Mr. Vincent: "May I take it that your position is "that landlords of Class B. cannot justly be "expected to reach the same standard of "generosity as landlords of Class A."?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

46,959. "Supposing you sold land to tenants "at a limited price would it not be possible for "them to sell again at once at market price"?—Well, I think very few tenants would do that.

46,960. Would they not if they saw at once the possibility of making a little money?—Well, it would be a risk, first of all, and, secondly, the man wants a farm, his chief object is to live and to keep his wife and family, and he would not throw away the chance of doing that.

46,961. "Do you not think that the Settled "Land Act has gone some way to remove some "of the difficulties of tenants for life"?—Yes, I think it has.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,962. You are Mr. Thomas Jones, of Morfa Uchaf?—Yes.

46,963. This is the statement that has been examined in the other room by Professor Rhŷs, and it is the evidence that you wish to lay before the Commission?—Yes; this is the one that was read in the vestry room.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

I live at Morfa Uchaf, Llanddewi Brefi, in the county of Cardigan.

I hold a quantity of land in the parish of Llanddewi Brefi, and when I took it from my landlord it was understood that he was to pay all the rates and taxes, but that meant a proportionate increase in the rent.

In my opinion the tithe should be applied towards old-age pensions, the various schools and colleges, and to provide libraries in connexion with board schools.

There is a great demand for small plots of land upon which to build farmhouses and labourers' cottages, but they cannot be got at all in the district. I believe it would be very advantageous to labourers in the country villages to get allotments of land at reasonable rentals, but they are at present most difficult to get. I have myself been paying as much as from 4*l.* to 4*l.* 10*s.* per acre, and that for land not of the best quality too. I have now about 10 acres, and some five acres of woodland for grazing, but the nature of this land is inferior to that which I previously held. There is no building whatever on it, and I pay a rent of 15*l.* 10*s.* I do not pay any tithes or rates.

By labourers, I do not confine myself to agricultural labourers, but I include artisans as well, and I think some land would be of great assistance to them to bring up their children. I also believe that the owners would reap an advantage as well.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I understand that in the village of Llanddewi Brefi alone there are between 25 and 30 persons desirous for allotments of land at what would be considered reasonable rentals; many now pay what is really considerably above the real value, and others cannot get any allotments at any price.

46,964. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Williams, Pencefn.

46,965. What is the size of your holding?—10 acres, and five acres of wood-land for grazing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

46,966. What do you do besides farming these 15 acres?—I am a mason.

46,967. Are you constantly employed as a mason all round the year?—I generally lose about three months a year owing to severe weather.

46,968. What part of these 10 acres do you cultivate; how much of your holding do you cultivate? Do you plough?—Yes, I cultivate the whole 10 acres.

46,969. But how much do you plough of it?—About an acre every year.

46,970. How do you get that done; by neighbouring farmers, I suppose?—Yes, by a neighbouring farmer.

46,971. What amount of stock does your place carry?—Two cows. When I keep more I have to pay more for the keep. I had a pony last year, and I had to pay 25*s.* for grass alone.

46,972. Does your wife look after the cows?—Yes.

46,973. Do you find that the place pays you?—No, I do not think it pays me; but I have a lot of children.

46,974. And the milk comes useful for the family?—Yes, that is quite right.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

46,975. Do you find a very keen desire amongst tradesmen or labourers to have plots of land?—They do everything in their power to try and get a piece of land.

46,976. Have there been any applications made to the county council, do you know?—No, I do not know of any. They think it is impossible to get it through the county council.

46,977. What do you mean by saying that it is very difficult to get land to build farmhouses upon? Does not the landlord erect the houses?—Only in connexion with large farms.

46,978. But does not the landlord erect the farmhouses on small farms as well?—Not when they are situated near villages. If the farmer gave up a large farm and took a small plot of land, it would be impossible for him to get land to build upon in that case at a reasonable price.

46,979. Is there such a thing as a retired farmer?—Well, a man sometimes gives up his farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

46,980. You are a mason?—Yes.

46,981. A stonemason?—Yes.

46,982. Do you go about working on the estates or not?—Yes.

46,983. What sort of buildings do you consider the farmers have on their farms generally?—A great many of them very poor, not fit for human habitation.

46,984. For man or beast?—For man or beast.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

46,985. How about the dairy accommodation?—Those that have been built lately are built very well, but old buildings have not been anything fit.

46,986. Not fit for the keeping of milk, and what else?—Not fit to keep milk or butter.

46,987. The new buildings are better?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

46,988. As a mason have you had as much employment this last year or two as previously?—Yes, quite as much.

46,989. Then in spite of the depressed times there is as much building going on as there has been?—Yes.

46,990. This is a question by Mr. D. J. Williams, your landlord: "Have you not received a permanent reduction"?—Not from the 15*l.* 10*s.* He returned 5 per cent. the last year, and I consider him the best of landlords.

46,991. What was the original rent you were at when you first took this holding?—I think it was 16*l.* 10*s.*

46,992. And it is now 15*l.* 10*s.*?—It was 17*l.*, and it is now 15*l.* 10*s.* In justice to Mr. Williams I should say that he promised to sell the land to me, or to lease it, or to compare it with other land in the district and reduce it if I could prove that it was higher. I saw that the land was too high, and I could not do any better.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

46,993. Has your statement been read over to you in the presence of Professor Rhŷs, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

See 49,188.

John Williams, of Cwmelin, in the parish of Llangeitho, Cardiganshire. The moiety in a farm called Tygwyn, in the parish of Gwnnws and Caron uwch clawdd, Cardiganshire, came to me by will of my great uncle, J. Griffiths. The other moiety was vested in Lord Lisburne. Two fields, not part of this farm, though adjoining it, were also left wholly to me by the same will. Lord Lisburne has taken possession of the moiety of these two fields to which he had no right. Lord Lisburne also rose 6*l.* in the rent of his moiety of the farm, though my father refused to raise it on his portion, saying the rent was too high. In 1888 my brother and I went to Tygwyn to shoot; as soon as Lord Lisburne heard of this he sent for the tenant and made him sign away his right in the ground game to him. Then he sent to us, warning us not to come and shoot there again. I have offered to sell my portion to him for 1,100*l.*, or to buy his portion for the same amount, but he has refused to meet me.

46,994. You became part owner by the will of your uncle?—Yes.

46,995. How did Lord Lisburne become part owner?—I cannot say.

46,996. Have you brought any action against Lord Lisburne for taking possession of fields?—No, I have taken no action.

46,997. How long has Lord Lisburne taken possession of those fields to which you say he had no right?—About 47 years.

46,998. Did you tell Lord Lisburne that you were coming here to-day?—No.

46,999. Mr. Vincent asks: "May I look at "the legal document you have in your pocket, "it might help us a little." Do not show it unless you like?—Anyone may see it.

(The document was handed to Mr. Vincent.)

Lord Kenyon.

Thank you, sir, for your evidence. I am afraid it is not in our power to help you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Lloyd called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,000. Has this statement been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement was then read:—

William Lloyd, of Penforial, in the parish of Llangeitho, Cardiganshire. I live at Penforial. There was I born and bred. My father died when I was but three years old. The farm belonged to him, but there was a mortgage of 1,000*l.* on it. My mother, my brother a year my senior, and my sister two years younger than I, farmed the place together till we children came of age. On that occasion I had to pay according to my father's will, 400*l.* to my mother, 300*l.* to my brother, and 200*l.* to my sister. Thus there was an encumbrance of 1,900*l.* on the place. I did not sell the place for the following reasons:—(1.) I had been born and bred on the farm, and my family had lived there at least 200 years. My brother had decided to become a shopkeeper, and to emigrate to America, and my only sister had married a shopkeeper, so that I was obliged to farm the place. (2.) I was also very much attached to the place, and were I to leave, would break my connexion with the neighbourhood and all my friends. The sale and consequent removal would also cost me a good sum of money, and my cattle and crops might not realise their full value. A few years before I began farming on my own account, numerous evictions had taken place on neighbouring estates, and there was an intense feeling of insecurity among all the tenant farmers in the neighbourhood. This was about the years 1868–74. I did not like to give up my independence, and place myself as the servant of a landlord. (3.) If I had gone to England I would be under the disadvantage of not knowing the language and customs of the people. I had not sufficient capital, for much more is required in England than in Wales. I would not be able to go to my chapel on Sundays and week days, and hear the Gospel in my own tongue. More than all I should be leaving all my relations and friends, and breaking all the connexions of my neighbourhood. (4.) I always looked forward to a better time when I might be able to clear part or the whole of the mortgage, and leave the old farm to my children as it had been left to me. But the times got worse and worse. The prices of cattle, and the price of corn, and all the prices of the market gradually came down, and in spite of my labour and hard work for over 20 years I am not at present in a better condition financially, but rather worse than I was at first. During the last 20 years I have expended at least 500*l.* on my farm. My wife, my children, and myself have worked very hard, as all our neighbours can testify, throughout this time, to make both ends meet, but in spite of all our endeavours we are worse off than at first. Besides though I have put out so much money and worked so hard, the place is to-day of less value than it was 20 years ago. The value of land has decreased considerably in the last years, and my farm which is on the high lands, requires more cultivation and dressing than I can afford to give it. It is 80 acres in extent, 13 of meadow land, 14 of arable land, and the rest is grazing land. I pay 4 per cent. as interest on my mortgage, and I am forced to pay on the day it is due. I never get a reduction in my payment, as tenants often get, and I am obliged to erect all the buildings, to drain, to buy wood, and other requirements myself. There are a large number of farmers in this neighbourhood who are in a similar position to myself. What we require is the loan of money at moderate rates of interest, say, 2½ or 3 per cent. from the Government. At present the mortgagee may require us to pay the principal on receiving a short notice, and this tends to make things very insecure, as it is so difficult to procure money at low rates of interest. If some help does not come in a short time, and if the depression continues as at present, we shall all in a few years have to sell out and try our luck elsewhere.

Lord Kenyon.

47,001. The farm had been in possession of the family for 200 years?—Yes, 200 years.

47,002. Your evidence goes to show how much worse off the freeholders are than the tenant farmers?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,003. You spoke of the shortness of time at which the mortgagee might make you pay up the money. How long is the notice from the mortgagee usually?—Six months.

47,004. That is the usual time, is it?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,005. The total amount of your debt upon your farm is 1,900*l.*, I think?—Yes, 1,900*l.*

47,006. Have you had to borrow the whole on mortgage, or are the portions given to your brothers and sisters merely a charge on the land?—I have had to borrow it all.

47,007. And pay them in cash?—Yes, and pay them in cash.

47,008. Looking at the instances of these 2,000 freeholders in Cardiganshire, do you know what custom they have when they make their wills? Do they generally charge them in that way for their younger children?—A great many do that.

47,009. Does not that ultimately make it necessary to sell?—Yes, in many instances.

47,010. You would advocate that the Government should lend money in order to pay those charges, as well as the original purchase money?—Only the value of the land.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS JAMES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,011. Has this statement been read over to you by Professor Rhŷs, and do you say it is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of Mr. Thomas James, of 11, Umberston Street, Commercial Road, London.

I was born at Dolclettwr, in the neighbourhood of Taliesin, Cardiganshire. My parents removed from there to Penycwm, Llangwyryfon. My wife and I were bred on, and worked with our parents on farms, which were well cultivated. Our parents could afford to give us a good start in a farm of our own. It was almost impossible to get a farm in Cardiganshire in those days, for the reason that there was excellent good feeling between landlord and tenant. But there was a farm to be let in Merionethshire, Gwydd gwyon, on the Ynys Maengwyn estate. It was vacant because a very high rent was demanded; it had been completely worked out, and the fences were in a wretched condition. Nevertheless, I decided to take it, thinking that by laying out my capital and labour it would pay in time. The rent was 100*l.* After I had cultivated, limed, and fenced it for three years, a notice was given to the tenants of the estate of an increase in the rent. But I thought that as I had taken it so recently that they would make no rise. But when I went to the agent my rent was increased by 10*l.* I tried my best to remonstrate, but in vain, for he said a man there was willing to take it should I leave, and it could be certainly let that night. He advised me to take it at an increase of 6*l.*, since it was possible I might be let alone for 20 years. I felt that I had fallen among thieves, one man willing to take advantage of my improvements, and the other saying he could immediately let it. I was without a place to turn for justice. I was obliged to retake the farm under these circumstances. In the course of three years the old agent died, and a new agent, a total stranger, was appointed. He came round the estate, made a kind of valuation, and then left. In a few days he forwarded the agreements and the amount of rents through the post, and ordered everybody to sign them and forward them back to him. Of course, no one sent them back. He had made a rise of 24*l.* on my rent, i.e., of 30*l.* on the original rent, within eight years of my taking the farm. He came to Towyn late in the year, and sent for the tenants, telling them to take up the farms, but they refused. On the next day strangers came round to visit all the farms, and all the tenants were obliged to take them or run the risk of being without a farm. But I was so much annoyed that I turned my back on him. He let it to another person. I was obliged to sell, and leave all my labour and money in the farm without compensation. The new tenant stayed there for a few years, until he had driven it out and then died. This agent raised the rent for good tenants on their own improvements, and allowed the worse class of farmers to hold their farms at the same rent. Of this I can give instances. This is the reason that so many of our young people go to the towns, because our farmers do not have fair play to cultivate their lands. The people of the neighbourhood acted very generously towards me. They came to the sale and bought extensively, so that I had money to go and stock a new farm, but there was no thanks to the landlord for that. I have no complaint to make of the game, or of pressure on religious questions, but there was political pressure put on us. I went back to Cardiganshire in the year 1862 to look out for a vacant farm. I was for a year and a half without getting one, but the farm of Llwynbeudy, on the estate of Lord Lisburne, became vacant through the tenant leaving for a cheaper and better farm on the Mabws estate. The old agent, Mr. Miller, on the Trawscoed estate, had retired to the great grief of the tenants, and a new agent took his place, his name was Burman. The old agent had raised the rents previously, but according to his great knowledge and extensive experience over a long period, his increase was moderate. But the new agent, a stranger to the country, made a valuation before he had time to understand the country or the land and he raised the rents out of reason. From this man I took the farm under the general agreement of the estate and verbal promises from him to build fences, to open drains on the marshy ground, and put up buildings, the present ones being mere rush-thatched cottages. They consisted of a dwelling-house with a cow house attached to it, which made it exceedingly unhealthy, a barn and stable. I thought they would build me a new house immediately, but they did not touch it for 15 years. Mr. Miller's word was always taken, and he never broke it. That was the reason I believed the new agent. A few improvements were made, a fence was put up on one side of the farm, and above 2 acres of land were drained. But he did not touch the dwelling-house. Finally the barn fell in while we were threshing, and it was only a chance which saved us from being killed. I went to the landlord himself; he told me he was without an agent, but that the new agent should inspect the buildings as soon as he came. He did come, saw an old house at a field's length from the other, and told me to thresh in that. The labourer who lived there was obliged to leave, thus depriving me of his services. Promises were again made. Next the dairy fell in, and a new one was erected some distance from the house, and thus we were left for years. Finally, 15 years after I went there, a new dwelling-house was built, and there I remained for two years further. My health improved, and I became cheerful and hearty. Previously to building the new house the rent was raised 12*l.*, and I had to pay the insurance on it. Tired of this state of affairs, the barn being still unbuilt, and I losing money, I decided to leave and try my luck in the milk trade in

See 47,031.

London. I was 52, and I had spent all the best years of my life for nothing. I had bought all the crop, hay and straw, and also swedes, when I took the farm, and they refused to pay for anything but the hay when I left. They rented the farm to a new tenant for a less sum; they erected new buildings, and opened up the river. I was never paid a half-penny for haulage."

47,012. What date did you enter the farm on the Ynys Maen-gwyn estate? What year?—About 40 to 41 years ago.

47,013. That was in the lifetime of the late Mr. Corbet. What time did you leave it?—In eight years.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,014. The same landlord was in possession then, I think?—Yes, but not the same agent.

47,015. Why did you not give that evidence at Towyn, we sat in Towyn?—I live in London, and it is enough for me to come down once.

47,016. That was your opportunity, was it not?—I lived here last.

47,017. Would it not have been fairer to the landlord or agent at Towyn to have given the evidence there?—I had no time to come twice about the same thing.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,018. Do you live at Ty'nclawdd, Swyddffynon, Ystradmeurig, Cardiganshire?—Yes.

47,019. What is the parish you live in?—Lledrod Upper.

47,020. You wish to give evidence relating to the Earl of Lisburne's estate, which is in that parish?—Yes, more especially.

47,021. What complaint have you against the agent, the steward?—He is a stranger in nationality and language.

47,022. Does he understand his business?—I cannot say for that.

47,023. Does he live in the neighbourhood?—He lives near Cross Wood, about seven miles away.

47,024. Why do you complain about his nationality? Is it because you cannot speak to him?—He has no sympathy with the tenants; he does not understand them, their feelings, or wants.

47,025. How long has the agent lived in the neighbourhood?—I do not remember from what year.

47,026. About how long?—About the year 1868.

47,027. You have been there about 20 years and you say he knows nothing about the wants of the people?—Yes, or not so well as if he had been a Welshman.

47,028. What have you to say about the agreement between landlord and tenant?—There are a good many clauses in it.

47,029. What are the clauses you object to?—The tenants have to carry materials towards the new buildings altogether at their own expense, and if a person leaves soon after or is sent away, he does not get any compensation.

47,030. Do you know any instances of that?—Yes.

47,031. Can you give any?—The last witness hauled towards the buildings at Llwynbeudy, and had no compensation for doing so. William Hopkins, of Tymawr, in the same neighbourhood, hauled towards erecting a farmhouse and barn, a very large house at Crugglas, and at that time there was no railway accommodation, and they had to haul from Aberystwith lime, timber, and slates about 12 miles.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,032. Is there anything else you dislike in the agreement?—If a tenant ploughs permanent grazing land without the permission of the landlord, he has to pay a fine of 20*l.* an acre.

47,033. What they call a penalising clause?—Yes.

47,034. That is only in case he does it without consent?—Yes. If he sells straw, turnips, or hay he has to pay 5*l.* for every cart load, or 10*l.* for every waggon load.

47,035. Have you ever known any of those clauses enforced?—No.

47,036. Is there any other clause you object to?—Draining. If a farmer drains his land himself, he gets no compensation after seven years.

47,037. Anything else?—If he builds new hedges he gets no compensation for those after six years. Considerable displeasure is shown if the rent is not paid very near to the day it is due. People have had short notices from the agent in a fortnight after the audit day if they have not paid the rent and letters from the landlord's solicitors in about a month.

47,038. Has your rent been raised?—I do not give evidence for myself, but for others. The rents have been generally advanced.

47,039. Your rent has not been raised?—No, I am a freeholder.

47,040. What have you to say about the game?—Much game is preserved upon those lands.

47,041. What objection have you to that?—It injures the farmers.

47,042. Does not the farmer obtain compensation for the damage?—They get timber for the use of the farms.

47,043. Have you anything to say about the high railway rates?—It would be a very great benefit to have the rates lowered. I ordered a truck of coal and I paid 9*s.* for it, and I had to pay 9*s.* a ton for the carriage on the railway.

47,044. Do you wish to have light railways?—Yes.

47,045. Do you think the roads might be improved?—Yes, the roads might be greatly improved.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,046. According to the agreement, you say that compensation cannot be claimed for draining after seven years?—Yes.

47,047. To what period would you extend it?—The tenant, when he leaves, ought to be compensated according to the value of the land at the time. It should not be a question of time; if he has improved the land he ought to be compensated for doing so.

47,048. But it is possible to drain and really to do damage to land. Of course, in a case of that kind you assume the tenant should not receive compensation?—I have never seen such a case.

47,049. It is possible that really you may do damage to it by draining?—He ought to have nothing if he injures the land.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

47,050. I should think, according to your statement, you are arguing in favour of compensation for general improvement of a farm?—Yes, if the tenant be compelled to quit the farm.

47,051. Which is not provided for in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Quite so.

47,052. You really are in favour of extending the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

47,053. Is there any other suggestion you could make to improve the Agricultural Holdings Act?—The only suggestion I could give would be to have a Land Court.

47,054. To fix rents and to settle disputes?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,055. Are you a solicitor practising here?—Yes.

47,056. You wish to make a statement?—Yes. I am a solicitor, and have been asked to give evidence on behalf of four or five of the farmers in this union. It is a question affecting the payment of chief rent. I do not know whether you are prepared to hear us upon it. The facts are very brief indeed, and I have the persons all here in court. Mr. Thomas Arch is the chief one.

47,057. I should think from one case we could learn all?—On behalf of Mr. Arch, I have to say that he has been at the Great Abbey for upwards of 27 years, and he had not paid any chief rent up to about two months ago, when the bailiff levied upon him for the sum of 16*l.* 5*s.*

47,058. Is that in Strata Florida?—Yes, about six miles from here. He was told by the bailiff it was five years chief rent at the rate of 3*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* per annum. I was consulted upon the matter, and I advised him to pay the money under protest, which he did. The moment the bailiff got the rent he came again, and made another levy for another 12 months upon the same tenant.

47,059. What bailiff?—Lord Lisburne's. The warrant is at the instance of the Right Hon. George Arthur, Earl of Lisburne. That is only one instance. There are four other similar instances; we do not know in respect of what we paid, and how they claimed five years, or whether it ought to be 25 years.

47,060. I suppose the Statute of Limitations would bar more than a certain time?—Yes, the names of the people I appear for are Thomas Arch Great Abbey, Pontrhydfendigaid; Richard Evans, Cilfachydwn; John Jones, Cilfachydwnfach; Moses Thomas, Llwynmwyn.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,061. Has the question ever been tested in the courts?—No, my Lord.

47,062. Have you ever heard of any chief rent being levied before?—Yes.

47,063. Do you complain of Lord Lisburne not having levied for so long, or for his having levied it now?—For levying it now, and the question whether he is entitled to it. It is a question of title, more or less.

47,064. I do not think we can go into that?—I so advised them myself, but being a question affecting land they thought it proper to bring it forward before the Commissioners.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,065. Do you know whether the Earl of Lisburne claims under a grant from the Crown?—I cannot say.

Lord Kenyon.

47,066. We had a similar case in which the Crown claimed and the landlord resisted, and the Crown won the day?—Yes, I know.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,067. I believe the idea of the thing is this: The old chief rents on the conquest of Wales represented the value of the services rendered to the old Princes of Wales, and those chief rents have been reserved to the present time, and in many instances are at present levied. Owing to the very small amount of these things, which are often shillings and pence, they have been allowed to fall into arrear for many years, and then by a spasmodic movement they have come to claim them again. I do not think that these are exactly the same case, but they look much as if they were the same thing as we had in the case of Sir Watkin Wynn?—I simply place the fact before you.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. M. L. VAUGHAN-DAVIES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,068. Where do you live?—Tanybwlch. My reason for coming before this Commission is that a very large committee was formed at Lampeter to go into this question some months ago, and they requested me to come forward to record their views; and also I have been requested by the farmers of the county, who have held some 25 to 30 meetings in these parts. I shall not detain you very long. I know perfectly well I am dealing with gentlemen who have gone minutely into the question of land in Wales, and it is not necessary to go into minute details of it, but I will go straight to what I consider is the kernel of the great question touching the farming interest in this county, and, I take it, in Wales, and that is the requirement of the tenant farmers to have protected the money that they have spent in their land and the improvements they create—and protected in such a manner that it cannot possibly be got at; because at the present time the argument in this county by the tenant farmers, and, indeed, most of us, is that the Acts of Parliament which are already in existence do not protect them. If they farm, and by any chance a farmer makes any money and places that again in his land, the outcome of it is that his rents are raised upon that. If they do not raise his rent, then such things have happened, and have happened to a very considerable extent in this county, that a very large number of farms have been sold, and the improvements of the tenants have been sold with them without the farmers being recompensed in any shape or form. That is really what I call the real foundation of the public feeling in Wales that has brought about the Commission which has come into this country. That is really the secret of the great trouble of the farmers, as well as I can gather by being in constant and close communication with them in this country; they wish to have their labour and their capital protected in such a way that a landlord cannot take possession of it. That is really what it comes to. That, as I have said before, is the foundation of their grievance. They look to this Commission to see that condition of things removed, otherwise any other effect of this Commission would be to them simply waste of time. I know myself several instances in this county where farmers have money, but they will not place it in the land. When I have questioned them closely upon it they say: "Can "you expect us to put it in the land when in "six or 12 months' time we may be turned out "of it, and not a shilling recouped to us." In my own neighbourhood I have a neighbour who has been a farmer for many years, and every penny he could make out of his farm he put, to use the phraseology of our district, "on the sea," and that means that he invested it in ships, or in vessels of some kind. As soon as ever he could make sufficient he bought himself a freehold, and the difference in the way in which he farmed that freehold to the way in which he farmed as a tenant farmer was something very astonishing, and opened one's eyes to the difference between a tenant farmer and a freeholder. He has done well on this freehold, and, as I say, any money he can make out of it up to a short time ago he is still placing out at interest, and he actually the other day bought a very good farm indeed for his second son, and I believe he is perfectly able at this moment to buy any of the ordinary farms in this county. As he said, it was by putting it, not on the land, but to other kinds of interest. I go so far as to think this, that it is not only a great loss to the tenant farmer, but a great loss to the landlord as well. Indeed I go further, it is a loss to the whole country that the farmers should be so placed that they cannot put their money into the land. It is their interest, the landlord's interest, and the whole of the community. I am sure of this, that a farm well farmed must produce a great deal more stuff than a farm badly farmed Therefore, as I have said, it is good to us all round if you could only get the farmers, by giving them security, to place more capital into the land than they do now. Indeed we cannot blame them for not doing it. That is the bone of contention, so far as I gather it, of the tenant farmers of this county. There has been a great deal said with reference to the freeholders in the county. I do not quite follow some of the gentlemen who have given evidence before me as to the number of freeholders in this county. I think one gentleman said there were 2,000 small freeholders in the county. I have gone rather carefully into it, and I make it that there is only 2,100 freeholders of all kinds, that is owners of land, taking the largest as well as the smallest; taking those who only hold a moiety in some of the land. When I come to look at the population I find there are 63,467 people in the county, with an acreage of 443,000 acres. Therefore, if you will think for an instant how that works out, you will find that there are a very small number really of freeholders in such a large area and among such a population. Knowing, as I do know, the great anxiety of these farmers in Cardiganshire to possess land, I believe that a great deal of land that is now held in the hands of landlords would be parted with if it were not for two reasons. The first and foremost of them is the enormous expense in trying to get a farm in the shape of legal expenses; that is, inquiring into the title of these different farms. There are legal expenses connected with it that are bound to be gone through under the present system. That is a great obstacle. The second is that of procuring the money to pay for these farms. I have known instances, and there are many instances of it in Cardiganshire, where actually a whole family have clubbed together to put down a large amount of money towards helping to pay for the farm, and then they have gone to the moneylender for the rest, which hampers them considerably, because they are paying a large amount of interest, and more in some cases than the rent they paid before. So there is a great burden on a tenant farmer buying his farm, and retaining it afterwards, and making a living upon it. I have no hesitation in saying, having read the Irish Land Act, as well as an ordinary individual can read an Act of Parliament, I feel very keenly that such an Act would be an enormous advantage to Wales. The powers given under that Act, whenever I have spoken of them, make all the Welsh tenant farmers' mouths water —considering the way in which the Irishman is treated and the way in which the Welshman is treated up to the present time. We hope after your visit there will be a brighter and happier future for the tenant farmer of Wales. In Ireland they have a land court. You know they have the power of lending money, from the smallest sum of 50*l.* up to the larger sum of 5,000*l.* Therefore, under these land courts in Ireland, even the smallest cottager is able to buy his cottage and his garden. That, I consider, would be an enormous advantage to this country. One of the chief failings in agriculture here is the loss of the agricultural labourers. They have gone out of this country to a degree, and that is a serious source of trouble to the tenant farmer. For this reason. First of all, the cottages, I admit, are scarce, and they get larger wages in the South Wales works, and the consequence is that the farm labourers at the present time are only boys just out of school at the tail of their ploughs, which means, of course, that the agriculture of the farm is not carried out in a proper manner. But in Ireland they have great powers, and in about three years no less than about 2,000 labourers borrowed money up to the sum of 50*l.* to buy their cottages. They have lent in Ireland towards the purchase of farms no less than 8,800,000*l.* Some of you gentlemen mentioned compulsory sales. I never hear that mentioned amongst the tenant farmers of this country. All that they wish for is, that if they can agree with the owner of the farm as to the price that they should pay, that they should then be able to go to some superior power and borrow the money at a reasonable interest, and for a stated time. Under the Irish Act they are able to borrow, as I have said, from 50*l.* up to 5,000*l.* at 4 per cent., including capital and interest, for 49 years, and then they have paid off their capital and their interest, and that farm becomes their own freehold. These Acts for Irishmen have inspired the same wish amongst the Welsh people that we should be able to have equal rights. I know for a fact that there are a large number of landlords in this country at the present time who would be only too glad to sell outlying farms to the tenants of them if they could only be provided with the money in some reasonable and proper manner. I go even further than that. I think it would be a great advantage to the small landlords in Wales if they could go also to Government and borrow money for buildings, and repairs, planting, and draining their land. Some of you may think that there are companies now in London to do it, but as I have borrowed from one of these companies, I can say I know it is an enormous expense, and a high rate of interest, and you cannot expect tenant farmers to go to those companies, and pay as they make one pay. In Ireland, in 1893, they lent under this land court for field works, 8,114*l.*; for farm buildings, 29,550*l.*; for labourers' cottages, 3,060*l.*; for buildings simply for shelter, 794*l.* That was all in the year 1893. I think, as I have said before, it would be a great advantage to us in Wales if we had the same chance, particularly to small landlords, because the small landlord has very often not only his way to pay but in bad times, has to give reductions, and if he has buildings to do also, it leaves him very little for himself to live upon, so that we cannot expect small landlords to do for their tenants as much as the larger landlords and the richer men. Another point is that the inquiry into title is a relic of ancient days, and I am one of those who think it might be easily altered. They have altered it in Ireland by making everyone who buys land now register it under the compulsion of the Act of 1891, so that if the farms are registered they have no necessity in the future to go into all the trouble and expense of title. The other point which I think would be an immense advantage to this country would be light railways. I have been laughed at by bringing this matter before the public as to lines with a 2 feet gauge being the least use for the agricultural community. I thought I could not do better in trying to prove my idea than to work out the power and capabilities of some small lines that we have in Wales already. I do not bring the figures as to the expenses for this reason, that they were made with one object, to go direct to the quarries in North Wales, and naturally they cost a very large amount to cut through the mountains to get to the quarries, but I can give a few figures to prove what I state. There is the Corris line. Its length is 11 miles, its gauge is 2 ft. 3 in., and it carried in the year 1893 no less than 70,000 people and 20,000 tons of goods.

47,069. Other than slates?—Yes, other than slates. On the North Wales narrow gauge railway, the length is 10¼ miles, and the gauge is 1 ft. 11½ in.. In 1893 it carried 54,000 passengers as well as 45,000 quarrymen, making very nearly 100,000 people, and it carried 4,700 tons of goods, and in slates 12,961 tons. That was carried on a gauge of 1 ft. 11½ in.

47,070. Do you make out from that that the Corris Railway carried much more than the Festiniog Railway?—The Festiniog Railway carried much more, I think.

47,071. I should think the figures you have given must be inclusive of slates?—It was a return made to me by the manager.

47,072. I think there is much more traffic over the Festiniog line than over the Corris line?—Yes, I should think so from what I know of them. Now, I want to bring before you the way in which they make those lines also in India. They are made for hundreds and hundreds of miles by the Indian princes, and they cost from 1,000*l.* to 1,500*l.* per mile. They can go round their mountains, even the Himalayas, and actually the people in the first carriage of the train can see the tail light of the train, so that there is no difficulty in going round the Welsh mountains. Their power of carriage is proved sufficiently by the little railways we have in North Wales.

47,073. What gauge do they have in India?—Two feet six inches. There is one in the North-west Provinces 31 miles long, and it cost 1,000*l.* per mile. To-morrow, when you go to Aberaeron, you will pass through an excellently cultivated district that is comparatively shut out from the markets by having no communication whatever. You will find there a very nice little town that is hampered to a great extent by having no outlet for its goods or inlet for the people who might go there, except by carts or cars or posting. You will find also in South Cardiganshire a place called New Quay, entirely isolated from being made what it could be made by being, as I have said before, such a distance from railway communication, 17 or 18 miles over those mountains. In bringing this question before you I want to make it clear to you that the farmers of this district are placed at a very great disadvantage, because they have such a long way to go with their goods to get to their markets. They really are at the tender mercies of travelling dealers. Whether it be a pound of butter or any other commodity, these dealers go round and give whatever price they think best, and choose the things. These men are really shut out from the advantages of a market, and not being able to get to it in an easy and commodious manner. If we could only get these small railways through the centres of Cardiganshire, I believe it would raise the value of land to an enormous extent. If the farmers could only see their way to having their outlays secured to them, that their rents should not be raised on their own outlays, and that they should not be turned out without compensation, or that the farms should not be sold over their heads, they would be happy. One of the best landlords, one who was trusted as much as any man living, and under whom all the people placed their money on the farms, all of a sudden, like a bombshell, gave notice that he was going to sell his property. He had a right to do that, but away went all the money that these tenants had spent for years. That is really the secret of the wishes of the tenant farmers, so far as I can gauge it in this county.

47,074. Are you acquainted with the action of the Agricultural Holdings Act at all?—I have tried to fathom it. I do not know a greater proof of the fallacy of that Act than the case you had yesterday.

See 46,182-6, 46,282.

47,075. Which case was that?—A gentleman told you he had contracted himself clean out of the Act. That is the universal opinion in this country, so far as I can gather. They do not believe in the Act; they have no faith in it. An Act of Parliament here really I do not think would benefit us, because the tenant farmers never read it. They sign any mortal thing that is laid before them, with the object of getting their farms. There is this land hunger in the country that it is impossible to understand but still there it is.

47,076. If no Agricultural Holdings Act is of any use to them, I do not see the object of amending it?—No, we should prefer a court they could go to.

47,077. In the country itself?—Connected with the country in Wales. They have lost faith in Acts of Parliaments.

47,078. Have you thought of such a court from a landlord's point of view at all?—Yes, I have, and I believe it would be just oft as much advantage to the landlord as to the tenant, because he would get his land farmed.

47,079. Do you think it would destroy the friendly relations?—No, I do not.

47,080. Every landlord we have had before us has said that it would?—Yes, I know they do, because a great many landowners are prejudiced.

47,081. The prejudice is not confined to the landlords?—No, it may not be.

47,082. Many of the landowners are excellent men, they tell us, or they would not spend so much money upon their estates?—If the tenant farmers were secure in their land, they would not require so much money spent.

47,083. Would they have capital enough?—Whatever capital they had they would spend on the land. If they thought the money was secure, farming in this country would go up a great deal. There is a fear of even its being known that they have money; they do not even like the landlord to think they have money in this country. That is what I gather.

47,084. I should have thought a desirable tenant was one who had money?—Exactly so. The desirable man who has money in this country will not let it be known, if he can possibly help it.

47,085. You have drawn rather a different picture of the freeholder from that which we had before this afternoon. You do not think they are so badly off?—I do not say they are not badly off, but some of the freeholders have recently purchased their land. One freeholder near here gave 70 years' purchase for his farm not many years ago. Naturally that man cannot be very well off now.

47,086. Certainly not; that would be rather a foolish bargain at the time?—We all thought so.

47,087. There are several Acts for advancing money to landowners, and they have been largely made use of in this country?—Those are the companies in London.

47,088. Public Money Drainage Act?—Yes.

47,089. The county of Cardigan has made large use of that?—They had to pay very dearly for it.

47,090. Perhaps the scheme of the drainage was not going very well?—Yes, they are going well now.

47,091. In some cases it was necessary to cut through the solid rock?—No, I have drained under the Act, and the only objection is the great expense and the heavy interest you have to pay, therefore I say you cannot expect the tenant farmer to go in for it.

47,092. The interest represents about 3½ per cent., and the remainder is principal?—Yes, the remainder is principal.

47,093. You are an advocate for a cheaper transfer of land?—Yes, a great deal cheaper undoubtedly.

47,094. Do you think there would be much opposition from the lawyers?—I should think very likely; they are the only people that gain by it, that I can see.

47,095. I suppose you consider that these light railways should be made by the Government?—Yes, exactly in the same way as on the coast of Ireland.

47,096. The landlords in this country would welcome such a railway?—I should say so.

47,097. And would sell their land at a cheap rate?—If they looked to their own advantage they would, but we have had instances in this county where they have blocked the railways.

47,098. In the early days of railways, no doubt?—But I think they are more enlightened now, therefore, I do not think they would even block a small railway.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,099. Do you give leases on your own property?—No.

47,100. Have they been asked for at all?—No, never.

47,101. You gave a very interesting account of a farmer who had made money out of his own farm, and then invested it on the sea, and with the proceeds of his investment bought a freehold?—Yes, he did.

47,102. Was that in your own neighbourhood?—Yes.

47,103. Was it an isolated case, or have there been many such?—I cannot say I know of many such.

47,104. Do you think that most of the freeholds bought in this country were bought with borrowed money or saved money?—I think a great deal of the money has been saved, and a great deal borrowed. They have not paid for the whole of the farm with their own money.

47,105. Would you say that a large part of the land in the hands of small freeholders is paid for with their own money, and not borrowed money?—When a man comes and tries to buy his freehold, if he is going to give 3,000*l.*, perhaps he will have 1,000*l.* and borrow the other 2,000*l.*

47,106. Can you suggest there would be any objection to Government advancing at once money to the existing freeholders who have already bought their holdings?—There is no objection to it, but of course, having paid the price that they have done for those farms, and taking the value of the land now, it would be rather awkward to know how much to lend them.

47,107. And in the other case, that is the case of land being put up to auction, and there being an opportunity to borrow from the Government, would that not drive the price up?—I do not see myself why it should drive up the price of land.

47,108. Would there not be greater competition for it?—Naturally if men thought they could borrow money at a cheap rate, they would be more anxious to try to buy.

47,109. There is great competition now, I believe?—Not now. As I have tried to explain the expenses are so great. There are scores of farms in Cardiganshire at this moment that would be sold by the owner to a tenant, and the farmers in the country cannot buy them owing to the expense attached to them, and having to pay such heavy interest for the money borrowed as people look upon land now as not being such good security.

47,110. You think the Agricultural Holdings Act is not well known?—I do not think it is known in this county. I am not going to answer for Wales, I only answer for this county In this county it is certainly not known.

47,111. It was an attempt, at all events, by Government to benefit agriculture?—We acknowledge the attempt, and hope they will make another one, and a better one.

47,112. But what is the use if people do not take advantage of it. I strongly urge the farmers of your club, and the agricultural associations in the county, to discuss it as between landlord and tenant?—Those two clauses in it are rather hard nuts to crack.

47,113. Which?—They contract themselves out of the Act.

47,114. Clause 33, and the substituted scale of compensation?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

47,115. That is only a fair one?—They do not look upon it as any security to them in their holding, that is how they understand it, I can assure you.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,116. I understand you are very much in favour of the increase of these freeholders?—Yes, I am.

47,117. Now, going back to 1878. Supposing there had been in this county a large number of freeholders in that year, so that the full force of the depression would have come upon them, would it not have been very detrimental?—It would depend entirely upon what price they bought their lands at. If they bought at a time when the land was worth 15 or 16 years' purchase more than it is now they would feel it.

47,118. You think they should buy when the land is at the bottom?—Yes, and then they do not feel the depression when things get better. When a man is a freeholder he can farm his land and make it pay better than a tenant who is simply there at the will of another man. The farm will produce more, and he would be comparatively a richer man.

47,119. Then with regard to the other difficulty that we met with this afternoon from another witness, when a man dies if he is a peasant proprietor he charges his property for his other children. That again is a little difficulty?—But I think the farmer who gave evidence this afternoon made out a case that is not often heard of in this county, such a heavy charge on such a small farm. I never heard such a charge on such a small farm as he made out; that is my experience. Of course, they do not come and consult me about their wills, but I have been talking to them here. When I heard that evidence I thought he had been rather hardly dealt with by his father, or whoever left it to him, because it is a very heavy mortgage upon such a small property.

47,120. With regard to the facts you mention in respect to Ireland there is this difference, is there not, between the Irish tenant and the Welsh tenant, that the Irish tenant starts with being the owner, that is to say, of one-fifth or one-third, and sometimes half of his holding through his having the tenant rights?—Yes, I admit there is that difference between a Welsh tenant and an Irish tenant.

47,121. That is a very important difference in the security?—Yes, that is so, undoubtedly, because in Ireland the tenant right is sometimes more than that of the fee simple.

47,122. And that very much facilitates the question in Ireland?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

47,123. If the Government were to advance money, what proportion do you think they ought to advance on the land?—In Ireland I think they retain one-fifth.

47,124. Can you tell us the cost of the Irish railways. You gave us certain figures. How much per mile does it work out?—24 miles cost 116,000*l.* For 18 miles there is a grant of 115,000*l.*, altogether they have the Government grant of 1,145,000*l.* to make 223 miles of railway.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,126. As a matter of justice?—As a matter of justice, undoubtedly. You are bound to take into account buildings.

47,127. Under those circumstances, if the rent is substracted to that amount, it would enable the farmer under those circumstances to build the buildings himself, and of course his borrowing powers would be improved when he would be secure in his holding, and any money that he laid out protected from confiscation?—Yes.

47,128. So that that difficulty could be removed in that way?—Yes, because the more money the tenant gets in the farm naturally the greater hold he gets over it, and therefore in appealing to any court afterwards he would have to prove that.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Aberayron.

Talbot Hotel, Tregaron, Thursday, 26th April 1894.

Second Court.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

MR. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS. | MR. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,129. Is this your evidence and is it correct? —Yes, it is correct.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of John Davies, Brynllin, Nantcwnlle, Talsarn, freehold farmer. (Heavily mortgaged.)

1. I bought this farm of Brynllin (which measures 25 acres) 20 years ago (Christmas time 1873) from Mr. John Jones, of Bwlch, being a part of the farm which Mr. Jones had a very short time before bought of Mr. Gwynne, Monachty.

2. The price paid was 650*l.*, which was much higher than it ought to be, when we consider that there was no building of any kind on it, and not a single hedge or fence.

3. It was mortgaged to the full value of 650*l.* at the rate of 3*l.* 16*s.* per cent., making a yearly rental of 24*l.* 14*s.*, which is excessive rent.

4. I spent at least 300*l.* in buildings and fences. Adding this to the purchase money and paying same rate of interest would make the rent about 36*l.* on 25 acres of land on the top of a hill. It would be dear enough at 20*l.* per annum.

5. Though I have worked hard I have not been able to reduce the mortgage by a single penny.

6. I was forced to buy the farm at such a high price because I could not get a farm, though I waited nine years after I was married. I could not well turn my hand to anything except farming, as I had worked on the farm since I was a mere child. I and my wife lived those nine years as one of two families in a house called Tynewydd, Nantcwnlle.

7. I am one of many who have been driven to buy land at an excessive price, and then to mortgage it heavily; and these mortgaged freeholders are, on the whole, suffering more from hard times than ordinary tenant farmers; but they are more independent politically and otherwise.

8. The Government ought to advance money at a low rate of interest to assist farmers to buy their holdings.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,130. Did the sale take place by auction? —Not to me.

47,131. Was it by private contract?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,132. What you bought was part of another farm, if I rightly understand it?—Yes.

47,133. Why was this farm sold; why did he sell this part of the farm after he had purchased it?—Because it would be easier for me to pay for the rest.

47,134. You had not sufficient money to pay for the one you purchased of him yourself then? —No.

47,135. Then he sold this part to you so that he might be enabled to pay off some mortgage moneys on the farm?—Yes.

47,136. Did you come to a private settlement as to the price?—Yes.

47,137. Have you any family? — Only my wife and myself.

47,138. Is it so difficult to get a farm in this neighbourhood that you had to wait nine years before you could get one?—It was, at that time.

47,139. Did you go to live then with your father-in-law?—Yes.

47,140. Are there many such cases in this neighbourhood where young people are married and still living in farms waiting for a chance? —Yes, there have been a good many.

47,141. Because they cannot get farms?—Yes, because they have failed to get them.

47,142. It is not very pleasant to bring up two families in the same house, is it?—No.

47,143. Because you could not get a farm to rent you purchased this bit, so that you might have some place to live in?—Yes.

47,144. Why do you consider that the one that has bought his farm has suffered more than others that rent farms?—He is obliged to pay all his liabilities, but he gets something back from his landlord at times.

47,145. Sometimes he gets abatements, you mean?—Yes, tenants receive abatements sometimes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

47,146. And the mortgagee will not give you anything back?—No.

47,147. Then you say there is also a political reason why you should have bought the farm. Is that the case?—Yes, that was so, and so it is still, so far as I know.

47,148. What you wanted was security to go on peaceably on your land. Is that so?—Yes.

47,149. Is there any reason why farmers do not come forward and give evidence. Are they afraid, do you think?—They are afraid of their landlords.

47,150. Have you anything to suggest in order to remedy these matters?—I have not thought much about it, but I would like to have some money in order to be able to pay for the place and to pay less interest than I do.

47,151. That is for your own case. Would you recommend anything for others that do not feel very secure on their own farms?—That would be a good thing for them. Many farmers suffer greatly.

47,152. What would you recommend for them?—That they should have the land for what it is worth, instead of increasing their rent on their own improvements constantly.

47,153. Then do you consider that a tenant ought to be paid for all the improvements he makes?—Yes.

47,154. How are we to bring that about?—They will not get anything unless they get a law behind them to compel the landlords.

Mr. Grove.

47,155. Did you make any improvements on this farm before you bought it?—No, I made no improvements before buying it. It was wild land.

47,156. You suggest that the Government should lend money?—Yes.

47,157. The Government would not lend the full money to buy the land, probably. What portion do you think they ought to lend?—As much as there would be the mortgage on it. I have given 300*l.* myself in mortgage.

47,158. I should like to understand what you mean by giving 300*l.*?—I have spent 300*l.* on the farm.

Mr. Grove—continued.

47,159. What do you consider the value of the place now?—I cannot quite say. The land is reduced in price, but it is worth about 1,000*l.* to me I should say.

47,160. With what proportion would you be satisfied? Would you be satisfied if the Government would lend four-fifths of that money?—That would be of great assistance to us.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,161. In answer to Mr. Griffiths, you said that you thought there ought to be a law to compel the landlords. What do you think the landlords ought to be compelled to do?—I think that farmers ought to have fair play to live on their farms. After they have worked hard on their farms the rent is raised 20*l.*

47,162. Do you mean full compensation for improvements?—Yes.

47,163. Anything more than that?—No. I have not thought of anything in addition to that.

47,164. There is a question handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Had Mr. Jones, from whom "you bought, any land except the farm of "which he sold you a part"?—Yes, he sold Llettyrpool which adjoined that farm.

47,165. Had he more than those two farms?—He had also a part of Erw.

47,166. Would you have taken a farm instead of buying one if you had been able to?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,167. You say that Mr. Jones sold another part of the farm?—Yes.

47,168. Can you tell us what he had for that part?—I am not sure.

47,169. How much has he kept himself?—About 120 acres.

47,170–1. How much did this other man purchase?—About 100, but I cannot be quite sure.

47,172. Do you know what rent he pays?—No, I do not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Evans, of Cae'rochr, Blaenpennal, called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,173. Have you a statement of the evidence you wish to give?—This is my own evidence which I have myself written:—

The witness's Welsh statement was then read out in English by the interpreter, as follows:—

The parish of Blaenpenal: During the last 15 years a large part of this parish has been sold, and the inhabitants have been obliged to buy or be without a home, because it was almost impossible to get a place to let, and they were obliged to raise a mortgage in order to pay for what they bought, and to pay a high rate of interest for it and a high price for making deeds on it (gwneyd llyfrau arno)."

By this time trade has changed and gone very low, and through this many are under very heavy burdens. The parish consists of 3,993 acres and 37 poles of land, and of this 2,333 acres and 4 poles are under mortgage, whilst the land which is free represents 1,660 acres and 37 poles. That is 672 acres 3 roods and 3 poles more under mortgage than is free. Its gross estimated rental, after taking the tithe out, is 1,656*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*, (or including tithe, 1,635*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*) The gross rateable value of the mortgaged places is 899*l.* 11*s.*, of the places which are free only 656*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* That is 242*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* more under mortgage than unmortgaged. The rateable value of the parish after deducting the tithe is 1,224*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; including the tithe, 1,287*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.*; of the rateable value which has been mortgaged, 741*l.* 17*s.*; without being mortgaged, 482*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*; more under mortgage of 259*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* than is free. The total of the mortgage on the sums mentioned which are in their possession is 25,630*l.* This sum at the rate of 3¾ per cent., (only a few of them being under 4 per cent.) amounts to 960*l.* 19*s.*, whilst the gross rental of the places which are held is only 899*l.* 11*s.*, and their rateable value only 741*l.* 17*s.* So that their interest amounts to 61*l.* 8*s.* more than the gross rental, 219*l.* 2*s.* more than the rateable value. It is fair to state that many of the above places are mortgaged only to a quarter of their value, whilst in other places the interest is much higher than the gross rental.

In the face of the facts which have been mentioned it is clear that it is fair and reasonable for the Government to provide for lightening the burden of the many throughout Wales who are in the same position as those in this parish, either by advancing money at a reasonable rate of interest or passing an Act of Parliament to the effect that people should not be allowed to charge a higher rate of interest than is reasonable for the money they advance.

Why is it not as reasonable to cause money to be let on fair terms, as it is to cause people to let land so, and why do we in Wales not have the same fair play as the Irishmen in Ireland. Also the Government gives land free to its subjects in some places. Why will it not do something to reduce the burdens of the Welsh nation which has been so faithful to it.

Mr. Grove.

47,174. A large portion of this parish was sold. Was it sold by auction or by private treaty; that is to say, these various farms?—A good many have been sold by auction, and many privately.

47,175. Did most of the tenants buy their own holdings?—Yes, most of them did.

47,176. And did they pay very high prices?—Yes, very high.

47,177. How did they pay for them, did they have to borrow all the money?—Most of them.

47,178. Then the mortgages even to-day are very heavy, are they?—Yes, higher than the rent was before they were sold.

Mr. Grove—continued.

47,179. Have most of the tenants improved the property so as to make it of higher value to-day than it was when they bought it?—Yes, they have made improvements, but it is very probable that they will not get so much for them in spite of this.

47,180. Who lent them the money, private individuals, or in what way did they get it?—From different persons.

47,181. What rate of interest did they have to pay?—Most of them have to pay 4*l.* per cent., and a few of them pay 3*l.* 15*s.*

47,182. If the Government lent money, you would not expect the Government to lend as much as the place was worth, would you?—No.

47,183. What proportion would you think fair?—To keep so much of it back, so that a tenant should have something to pay the interest supposing he were to fail at the end of the year.

47,184. Do you know the value of your own place?—About 800*l.*

47,185. What would you want to borrow; supposing the Government lent money, would you be satisfied if they lent you 600*l.*?—That would be better than as it is now.

47,186. If they did that at 4 per cent. to include redemption of capital—let that point be clear—would you be satisfied?—I think it would be better for the country generally to have money advanced at a low rate of interest without paying off the capital, without redeeming the capital.

47,187. But if they did that a man would never be the full possessor of his own property?—No, and many of them would never become possessors of their land in the other way either. It would be possible for the children; the children might become possessors.

47,188. But surely every man wishes to have the full possession of his own property as soon as he can?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,189. Has the rateable value of your farm been increased since it was sold?—No.

47,190. Neither has the rateable value been increased in any other instances in the parish of farms which were sold?—No.

47,191. Why do they not do that?—I cannot say. They see that they are quite high enough. A valuer has been round the parish since then.

47,192. For rateable purposes, do you mean?—Yes.

47,193. Did they increase the valuation?—Yes, they increased the valuation in some places, and reduced it in others.

47,194. But the valuation did not follow the increased rent you were to pay for your farm?—No.

47,195. What per-centage do you pay for the money you borrow?—4 per cent.

47,196. When you purchased your farm, did it cost you more money when you had it transferred to you than you expected?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

47,197. Would you like to have land transferred cheaper in some other way?—That is what I thought when I made the suggestion in my evidence.

47,198. Can you tell me at what rate of interest the Government lends money to the Irish people?—3*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. I think.

47,199. Can you tell me at how many years' purchase?—I am not sure; 25 I think, but I cannot recollect.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,200. Do you think it is cheapest and best to be a freeholder or a tenant farmer?—It is cheaper to be a tenant now.

47,201. Do you think that the tenants are afraid of their landlords?—They know that they are.

47,202. They know that they are afraid, do you mean?—Yes.

47,203. What are they afraid of?—They are afraid of claiming their rights in many things.

47,204. What are the rights to which you refer?—To kill game; with regard to politics; and things of that kind.

47,205. With regard to politics, is the Ballot Act a complete security?—Yes, but the country are not very strong on that point.

47,206. They do not understand it, perhaps?—No.

47,207. With regard to the game. Is there any trouble about game in your district?—No, there is no trouble in our district now. They are not preserved.

47,208. So that that is not a cause of difference between landlord and tenant in your neighbourhood?—No, not in our parish.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,209. Have there been any evictions?—I cannot remember now.

47,210. I do not quite follow where the grievance is against the landlord?—There is another burthen that presses upon us as a parish, namely, that there are few landlords in our place.

47,211. Perhaps you wish there were more? There is better fair play to the tenant now than there is to the freeholder.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,212. Do the landlords and their agents go round to the tenants now to obtain promises for political purposes?—There are very few landlords in our parish.

47,213. Supposing you go further back before these farms were sold; did they not then?—They used to go before these farms were sold.

47,214. The Ballot Act did not prevent their canvassing, did it?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,215. The following question is handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Was most of the "property in the parish sold at one time"?—Yes, the most part.

47,216. "When was it sold"?—About 10 or 12 years ago.

47,217. "By whom was it sold"?—Part was sold by Hughes, the squire of Neuadd fawr, and Pugh, of Greenhill, and Lord Vaughan, of Trawscoed.

47,218. By different people?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jenkins called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

send their cows to graze on it, but under the cover of an unjust Act of Parliament it was handed over for nothing to landed proprietors and the Bishop of St. David's, depriving the poor labourer of his right to send his cow to graze thereon. There are in these three parishes about 250 farmers from great to small. About half of these are small freeholders. The greatest number of them bought their holdings about 20 years ago when land was at its highest. Upon inquiry, I find that not less than 50,000*l.* or 55,000*l.* have been invested as mortgages upon these farms by different capitalists at a proportionate interest of 4 per cent. Many of these small freeholders have already paid more than the value on the purchase money of their holdings in interest on mortgages. Since these freehold farms were bought the value of land in this district has been reduced to about one-third, occasioning the position of the small freeholder to become serious in the extreme. Some of these small freeholders by their industry and thriftiness through their lifetime had succeeded in putting aside a few hundred pounds for a rainy day or old age, but before they could get a mortgage on their properties they were obliged to sink their whole labour for life in their holdings. At present, they would be too glad to sell their farms at a sufficient amount to clear off the mortgage, leaving their whole labour and toil for life to be void. Well, it may be said that all this is a bad speculation. These people should not have given so much for their holdings. Quite so, it is a bad speculation just the same as taking a farm at too high a rent is a bad speculation. In this respect the tenant farmer and the small freeholder are exactly on the same footing. It is true that the small freeholder should not have given so much for his holding, and it is equally true that the tenant farmer should not have given so much rent for his farm. But it should not be forgotten that they are both Welshmen, and that what is characteristic of the one is characteristic of the other. The price the small freeholder gives for his holding, and the rent the tenant farmer gives for his farm are not at all a reasonable price or rent, but what may be called a feeling or sentimental price or rent. His country, his language, his religion, and his institutions are so dear to a Welshman that he fears to think of going to any other country. He would prefer starving in Wales to crossing the sea to America or some other country for a living. But it may be argued again that there is a great difference between a tenant farmer and a small freeholder because the tenant farmer may have six or 12 months' notice to quit, while the small freeholder can never be ejected from his holding so long as he is able to pay the interest on mortgage. Quite so. Again, there is a great difference between a tenant farmer and small freeholder, but it should be observed that the difference is in favour of the tenant farmer and not the small freeholder. If at any time the tenant farmer shall come to the conclusion that farming does not pay, he may himself give notice to quit, and sell his stock and crop and try some other occupation. But as regards the small freeholder he cannot move. He is bound hand and foot to his holding. It may be that he cannot sell his property at a sufficient amount to clear up the mortgage, nor let it at a sufficient rent to pay the interest on the mortgage. Several meetings were held in this district for the purpose of collecting evidence and ascertaining the views of small freeholders on this question, and all who attended these meetings were unanimously of the opinion that if the result of this inquiry should be to pass a Welsh Land Bill, that that Bill should contain a provision for enabling the Government to advance money not only to those farmers who will buy their holdings after the passing of such Bill, but also to those who shall have bought their holdings for some certain number of years before the passing of such Bill. To meet the expected or probable reduction in rents these advances should be made of something like seven-eighth parts of the value of the purchase money of the holding, to be repaid in a certain number of years by equal annual instalments of 3½ per cent., including principal and interest. It may be that a precedent for this cannot be found even among the numerous Land Acts passed for Ireland during the last 24 years, but that should not be a reason for not making special provision for Wales, as the case of Wales is quite different to the case of Ireland in this respect. When legislation was first introduced for land in Ireland there were not many small freeholders in the country, but in Wales, especially in Cardiganshire, there are so many small freeholders in the country that if a provision were not made for them their position would be much worse than at present, especially so if land courts were established and rents reduced. For instance, a small freeholder, who now pays 80*l.* as interest on a mortgage, could not compete in the market with a tenant farmer who paid the same amount as rent for a farm of the same value if the rent of such tenant farmer should be reduced to 60*l.* or 70*l.*

47,220. Your opinion is that if any Act be passed by which Government would advance money at a low rate of interest, existing freeholders ought to have the first chance before those who buy in future?—Yes, that is my opinion.

47,221. I quite agree with you, and I am much obliged to you for bringing that to the front. So that supposing there were economical difficulties in the way of future arrangements, those difficulties would not apply to the past?—No.

47,222. It has been suggested that if Government should advance money at a low rate of interest it might operate to the advantage of the landlord, he would get a higher price for his land?—With advantage to the landlord?

47,223. He might ask a higher price for his land?—How can that be?

47,224. It has been so suggested?—It might be an advantage to small freeholders of course, but not to large freeholders.

47,225. To landowners I am speaking of. However, that is an argument. I think you hold that any such economic difficulties would not apply to the existing freeholders. I quite agree with you?—I think that is so.

47,226. May I ask you another question: do many of these freeholders who bought their farms a few years ago let their farms now?—Yes, some of them.

47,227. Do you think that many of them do?—That they let farms?

47,228. That many of those who have bought and become freeholders a few years ago now let their farms?—Yes, there are some.

47,229. Do you think many of them do?—Not many.

47,230. The desire was to possess and farm the land themselves?—Yes, generally.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,231. It seems a very sad state of things. What do you consider will really be the state of these freeholders if the present disastrous times continue?—Well, as I said, they are in a serious condition, much worse than the tenant farmers no doubt.

47,232. What will be the consequence? How long can they hold on at this rate?—They cannot very long.

47,233. Then the consequence will be that they will have to sell this land for whatever it will fetch?—Yes, the mortgagee will close them.

47,234. And these poor farmers will lose all they have?—Yes, they will have nothing.

47,235. That is very serious. As to the question Sir John Llewelyn was asking you, do you not think that if there were farms to be sold now in this neighbourhood, if people knew that they could borrow the money from the Government at 3 per cent., that the present owners would be calculating the purchase money according to the 3 per cent.?—During the last 24 years about six or seven Acts of Parliament have been passed for Ireland, and as they came on they gave better terms, and I do not doubt that when they come to deal with Wales they will give better terms still. I should think that they could give the money at 3½ per cent., including the principal and interest.

47,236. Then the landlords certainly would have to sink some of their money if they have it at that rate; or do you consider that the landlord should give the top price to the Government for that money?—If any estate is heavily mortgaged they should get money cheap of course.

47,237. I quite understand what you mean. It is a very serious state of things. I think you or the other witness gave us the proportion of other land?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

47,238. You speak about 3½ per cent. to include principal and interest?—Yes.

47,239. That, of course, depends upon the number of years that you borrow the money for?—Yes, it depends.

47,240. If it is a short number of years——? No, it cannot be short.

47,241. No, it cannot, of course. I was going to ask you that?—Yes.

47,242. Do you not think it is better for the Government to lend the money at 4 per cent. rather than 3½ per cent., so that the farmers may possess their own lands much sooner; or do you think it is better that they should lend it at 3½ per cent., and extend the time of repayment?—Yes, because the small freeholder cannot pay. He would prefer extending the time to 50 years.

Mr. Grove—continued.

47,243. So as to make the present burden as light as possible?—Yes.

47,244. Then you think that the Government ought to lend money at 3½ per cent., do you?—Yes, that is my opinion, and the opinion of those in my district.

47,245. You also say that if the Government lent money, that you think a good many more who are tenants at present would buy their own holdings?—Yes, no doubt.

47,246. But it would seem that those who have bought their own holdings rather repent of it, and would be glad now to get rid of them?—Yes, now, because they are obliged to pay such heavy interest.

47,247. Because things are so bad?—Yes.

47,248. They pay 4 per cent.?—Yes, that is the proportion.

47,249. If they were to pay 3½ per cent. interest and borrow 1,000*l.*, the difference would only be 5*l.* a year between 3½ and 4 per cent. Am I not right?—Yes, but they could get their holdings free in a certain number of years.

47,250. I can quite understand that. One wants to understand what is in your mind. Have these men who have bought their own small holdings improved them?—Yes, to a great extent.

47,251. I suppose they feel more manly and more independent altogether when possessing their own property?—Yes, that is the general feeling.

47,252. Do you not think that the possession of a man's farm makes him more of a man and more enabled to look the world in the face?—Yes, no doubt.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,253. Have the farmers of this neighbourhood who have purchased their farms ever held meetings to petition the Government to grant them money at a low per-centage?—No, not yet.

47,254. I find that in the north of Pembroke shire they have held meetings there for the very purpose—We waited for the Land Commission first.

47,255. Do you not think that would help the Land Commissioners?—Yes, no doubt.

47,256. It would be like supporting what we would recommend?—Yes, of course.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,257. There is a question put in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "If the small freeholders were to sell "their farms now, would they not get enough to "pay off the mortgages"?—No, not some of them; a great many of them could not get enough.

Mr. Grove.

47,258. I understood you to say that you considered that land was reduced to one-third of its value?—Yes.

47,259. That is very serious?—Yes

Mr. Griffiths.

47,260. That is by reason of the depression. You consider that things are not looking now as they did when you purchased, owing to the depression that there is?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. SAMUEL EVANS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,261. Is this your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of Samuel Evans, Cefncoed, Gwynfil, Llanio Road, tenant farmer and freehold farmer. I am a yearly tenant, and the date of entry on my farm is the 29th September. My evidence will more particularly refer to Cefncoed, in the parish of Gwynfil, near Llangeitho, acreage 50 acres. My father first became tenant of Cefncoed 29th September 1831, at a yearly rental of 22*l.*, but 1*l.* was returned yearly by the landlord to my father until the year 1845, when it was withheld owing to buildings having been put upon the farm. The 22*l.* was then demanded in full, though my father was quite unable at the time to pay his way. But when one or two of the children became old enough to work on the farm at home, my father took to business as a cattle dealer on a small scale, and thus made money with which to help to pay his way. In the year 1862 my father took another piece of land, 22 acres in extent, named Waun Jones, at a yearly rental of 7*l.* 10*s.* He continued to pay this rent until 1869, when a change took place in the rent, owing to my father having refused to vote with his landlord in the 1868 election. In March 1869 (i.e., the March following the election), my father received notice to quit both Cefncoed and Waun Jones, and the last-named place was taken by a neighbour on the 10th July 1869, at a rental of 8*l.* 10*s.*; but when the time for leaving the place came round my father refused to leave, owing to some previous conversation which had occurred between him and the landlord when he took Waun Jones. After a short time, the landlord relet the place to my father at a rent of 8*l.* 10*s.*, an increase of 1*l.* yearly, and my father had also to pay 7*l.* to his neighbour as compensation for giving up his supposed rights. My father also retook Cefncoed at an advance of 9*l.* annually in the rent. Thus he had to pay 10*l.* yearly as a punishment for voting according to conscience and not according to orders. We were not the only family who had to undergo the same unjust consequences. Many scores of families were similarly dealt with in Wales. This unfair treatment has taken the heart out of the Welsh farmers, because they see that they can be turned out at six months'notice from their holdings, without any compensation whatever for the capital and labour expended by them to improve their holdings, or their rents may be advanced on their own improvements. These possibilities have caused scores of Welsh farmers to buy land even when they had no money to pay for it. Consequently they had to borrow all the purchase money, and pay in interest, as a rule, higher rents than were paid before buying. This class of Welsh farmers are at present in very straitened circumstances, and the Government ought to help them by advancing money at a cheap rate of interest, as is done in Ireland. From the above facts it is clear that the farmers are in great need of a Land Act that will secure for them fair rents, security of tenure, and compensation for improvements.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,262. Who was your landlord?—I had three landlords at Cefncoed.

47,263. At Cefncoed who was your landlord at the time of the election in 1868?—Mr. Williams was one, Mr. Jones was the other, and Mr. Edwards was the third.

47,264. Did they jointly own the farm?—Yes.

47,265. They were joint owners?—Yes.

47,266. Which of them was it that wanted you to vote according to his way?—Each one of them.

47,267. Were they all of the same way of thinking?—Yes, but Mr. Williams and Mr. Jones were the most anxious.

47,268. Was the notice to quit acted upon; I understand you are still at Cefncoed?—Yes; I rent it,but I have removed from there because the buildings are in too bad a condition for me to be there.

47,269. You are still the tenant of Cefncoed?—Yes.

47,270. But at an increased rental?—Yes, I pay 31*l.* rent now and I have paid that since the time of the election.

47,271. Have you ever asked for a lease of the place?—No, not for Cefncoed.

Mr. Grove.

47,272. How do you know that this notice to quit was given for political reasons?—Because they said that my father would repent if he did not vote as they wished him to.

47,273. Do you yourself remember the time of that election?—Yes.

47,274. Did the landlords or their agents speak to you about it in any way?—With regard to the voting?

47,275. Yes?—Yes, they sent several times to my father asking me to vote as they were going to, or else——

Mr. Griffiths.

47,276. (To the Interpreter.) He did not say "asking me"; he said that they sent to his father, and they were commanding him to vote, telling him to?—(Witness) They asked him if he would vote in the same way and then they sent to him several times saying that he would be sure to repent unless he voted as they did.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,277. They were the days of open voting?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

47,278. Do you complain of anything now that you have got the ballot?—No, no one tried after that, because they saw it was no good their trying.

47,279. If Government advanced money at a cheap rate would you try to buy Cefncoed?—No, I would not, because I have bought another bit of land.

47,280. Have you got a mortgage on it or have you paid for it?—No, I have a mortgage on it.

47,281. Then you would be glad to get money at a cheap rate to pay off that?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,282. Were these places all under the same landlord?—What places?

47,283. Cefncoed and Waun Jones?—No. Mr. Evans was the landlord at Waun Jones. He was a Clergyman.

47,284. Did he feel in the same manner with regard to the election; was he of the same way of thinking?—Yes, Mr. Evans agreed with the others.

47,285. You say there are scores in Wales who have suffered in the same way. Were there many of them in this neighbourhood?—There were several who have suffered to this extent, but they were obliged to go with their landlords at the time.

47,286. And they did go with their landlords?—Yes.

47,287. And that is the reason that you say they have been induced to buy their farms at such a high price?—Yes, because they have offended their landlords they received notice to quit, or if they improved their lands they received notice to leave in order that their rents might be raised.

47,288. What was the nature of the improvements that the tenants had made before the election, which improvements they lost?—They had put up hedges, made drains, and had built a good deal on the farms.

47,289. The landlords did not do all the permanent buildings on the farms then, did they?—No. I myself had put up several buildings on that farm at Cefncoed.

47,290. Do you not think they were very foolish to go and build upon the landlord's property?—We had to live without them or else to build them. Large landowners built, but small landowners, such as those, refused to do so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,291. When the land was sold, if the tenant had not bought, someone else would, I suppose?—Yes, at once.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,292. It is the same with regard to the letting of land. This Waun Jones was taken by another, was it not?—Yes. Waun Jones was taken by a neighbour, and that on the 10th of July.

47,293. Do you think it would be a good thing to have a law to prevent the tenants raising the price of farms against one another?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

47,294. Can you suggest any practical way in which competition can be avoided?—To form a land court in this country.

47,295. Will that prevent competition?—It would prevent the landlords giving notice when the tenants had offended them, or made some improvements.

47,296. Yes, but the point was, will a land court stop competition?—That ought to be a clause in the law.

47,297. Supposing there were before a land court three men, and one offered 1*l.*, the other 2*l.*, and the third 3*l.*, what is to stop the court accepting the one who offers 3*l.*?—The place ought to be fairly valued to see how much it is worth.

47,298. Who ought to value that, in your opinion?—Somebody whom the land court appointed.

47,299. You think that competition can be done away with?—Yes, when a farm became vacant it should be valued so that the tenant should be prevented from promising that for a farm which he cannot pay.

47,300. Do you think that that is the state of things now, that a tenant promises more than he can pay?—When a farm becomes vacant there are many trying for a farm, and it is given to the highest bidder.

47,301. Then the tenant farmers want protection against themselves?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,302. Do you know of instances in which tenant farmers have been obliged to give a higher rent for a farm because others have offered more money?—When Cefncoed became vacant there were some who offered.

47,303. They offered more than you were paying?—Yes.

47,304. Did the landlord tell you that they had made those offers?—Yes, they offered 15*l.* more.

47,305. Were you obliged to give the 15*l.* in consequence?—No.

47,306. Then he was a merciful landlord?—My landlord acknowledged that my father had made it worth what it was.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. DANIEL DAVIES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,307. Is that your evidence, and is it correct ?—This evidence is true, every word of it.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows :—

Evidence of Mr. Daniel Davies, Pencastell, Nantcwnlle, Talsarn, freehold farmer, auctioneer's clerk and collector. I wish to submit evidence relating to the condition of agriculture in the district, more especially in the Nantcwnlle parish.

A history of the connexion of my father with Penherber, Nantcwnlle, as tenant farmer. Penherber when my father rented it over 60 years ago was an enclosed sheep walk. The houses were unfit, but before a dwelling-house was given us we had to haul all the stones and materials. The outbuildings were very poor while we remained there. The lowest rent that I remember Penherber was 24*l.* I remember that my father had often to pay 5*l.* at a time, and even to borrow some of this. When my father became able to pay the rent, and things were a little easier it was advanced to 26*l.* Some of the oldest of us children were now out in service, bringing every penny that could be spared out of our salary to help my father and mother to pay the rent, and other charges. By this time we had put up many fences, and planted trees in the hedges, and carried much lime from the county of Carmarthen, and the land as it improved, paid better. But we had not one penny to spare. We had notice to quit, and the rent was advanced from 26*l.* to 30*l.* yearly rental. The landlord thinking that he had marked it high enough offered now to give us a lease. But we were afraid that we would be unable to pay the increased rent. We went on working, and no further changes occurred for several years. But after a time we had to give up three acres of the farm. In a few years we received notice to quit again as the place was to be sold. It was sold for 1,750*l.*, though it was not worth more than 500*l.* when we went there. We, as a family, were turned out without receiving a penny of compensation for drains, fences, and lime, and other improvements. Many have received the same treatment.

I can mention some facts relating to Bwlchgraig, a holding on the same estate as Penherber, and I have general statements as to the condition of farmers to make.

47,308. Who was the landlord ? — Captain Richards. He was a sailor.

47,309. When was the sale ?—About 15 years ago.

47,310. Was it sold by auction ?—No.

47,311. By private contract ?—Yes, by private contract.

47,312. How do you mean that it was sold for 200*l.* more than it was worth. Who bought it ?—Three persons bought it.

47,313. Who were the three ?—John Morgan, Penherber ; Thomas Jones, Pantybeudy ; and another.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,314. In your opinion it was 200*l.* too dear ? —It was much more than 200*l.* too dear.

47,315. They did not think so ? — We, as tenants, tried to bid for it, but it went far too high for us to buy it. David Jones, of Frongoch, was the third.

47,316. Your complaint is that when it was sold your improvements were sold to them without any compensation being paid you for them ?—Yes, that is how it was. I received nothing for my labour.

47,317. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 ?—No, I do not know it properly.

47,318. Do you not know that Parliament has made an effort to remedy the evil you complain of ?—I heard it was so, but we received nothing.

47,319. No, because this happened before the Act was passed ?—Yes, many years before that.

47,320. Therefore it was a great grievance ?—Yes.

47,321. Government has done something since those days to prevent injustice ?—Yes, but I was unable to do anything then.

47,322. Yes, it was a great pity, too ?—I have something further to say.

47,323. I should like to hear anything further you have to say ?—On general things ?

47,324. I will ask you a question upon the evidence you have already given ; do you think you are better off as a freeholder, or a tenant farmer under a good landlord ?—That is how I find about the county ; tenants improve their land until it is double the value, and then the landlord gives them a notice.

47,325. Following that up, do you know of any capricious evictions ?—Yes, I know of some.

47,326. Could you name them ?—Thomas Williams, Velindre, on Colonel Lewis's estate ; but Thomas Williams has been dead some years.

47,327. How long ago was this case you are naming ?—About 20 years ago.

47,328. Is Colonel Lewes near here, or where ? —Colonel Lewes, who lives near Talsarn.

47,329. Do you know it of your own knowledge ?—I have been in his service for four years.

47,330. In whose service ?—In the service of Thomas Williams.

47,331. Do you know the facts of which you are proposing to speak ?—As much as I know is that he was turned out when he was an old man.

47,332. Was that for nonpayment of rent ?—No.

47,333. What for, then ?—Colonel Lewes was going to take part of his land away, to start with, and having taken part of the land he took the whole of it 18 months a terwards.

47,334. What for, was that for himself ?—Yes, he took a good deal for himself, and then he let the remaining part. I have nothing further to say about Thomas Williams.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,335. What else was it you were going to say. You said that you wished to say something further about general matters?—I will state the things as I have seen them about the country. I have a statement here in Welsh. I, as a collector, collect a little money about the country.

47,336. You are a collector of rates, I suppose?—I attend auction sales.

47,337. You are assistant to an auctioneer, I think?—Yes.

47,338. I thought when you said collector you meant collecting rates. It is not that; it is only collecting the sales moneys at the auctions that you mean?—Yes. I have a further statement here.

[The interpreter translated the further statement of the witness as follows:—]

The country has gone very low in its circumstances. Commerce is very low; trade is in a low state, and the land is being rented far too high to the tenant for him to be able to pay his way readily. Young men who are starting in life are under considerable disadvantage; wages have gone up so high that if a farm is from 80*l.* to 100*l.* a year rental it would be necessary for two young men here to pay from 60*l.* to 80*l.* a year in wages. As I observe things now going about the country the tenant has a short life. The landlord now demands the rent, even if half the rent is missing, even if the tenant has not half the rent to pay. The rents, the wages, and the rates are so high that the farmer is unable to pay his way.

47,339. I suppose the auctioneer's business suffers, too. Is that so?—Yes; we, as Welsh people, have worked very hard on the land as farmers, draining, and making the hedges, and carting a great deal of lime. We, as Welsh people, have been oppressed by the landlords, and we have been slaves on the land. I will give examples of two tenants on the land of Mr. Rogers, of Abermeurig.

47,340. Do you know them of your own knowledge?—Yes, I know of everything that I have down here. Children live in these two places now.

47,341. You have not given the name of the two places yet?—No; Coedmawr isaf was one of them.

47,342. Whom did Coedmawr isaf belong to?—Mr. Rogers, of Abermeurig.

47,343. How large was Coedmawr isaf?—I cannot quite say.

47,344. Youdo not know its acreage. What was the rent?—I do not know.

47,345. What was the tenant's name?—John was one of them; but he is dead.

47,346. Is John the first name or the second name?—I do not know. The father is dead. In both places the father is dead.

47,347. I thought you said you knew these places of your own knowledge?—All I have in this evidence is that they have been left alone by Mr. Rogers; that he has not increased the rents. That is the evidence which I have to give.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,348. You know of two places, then, in which the rent was not increased?—Yes, that is what I have to say about them. The children live in these two places now; but their parents had been in very straitened circumstances, and as the children were able to work, the land began to pay for itself. According to everything that is said these two places are double——

47,349. That is hearsay. Do you know it of your own knowledge?—Yes, but it is too far back for me to remember about the parents.

47,350. We had better have things that come within your knowledge?—The places have got on. They have improved now that they have been left alone there without the rent being increased.

47,351. Yes, that is very often the case. Please proceed?—I am going on with this statement.

47,352. Go on in your own way?—They and their children had improved that place to double its value, and these two places have been left alone without any change at all by Mr. Rogers. As a rule the landlord takes everything, everything that he can. Everything that we can do by way of improving our holdings, immediately they raise the rents upon. I have nothing further to say.

47,353. Are there any leases taken in the neighbourhood?—They have been taking leases, but very few take them now because when leases are granted the holdings are too highly rented.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,354. What distance was this lime carted from?—About 60 miles when I was living at Penherber, but now we have not to go so far. It is nearer now.

47,355. I am talking of the past. How many days did it take you to bring home your lime?—Two days and two nights.

47,356. Forty-eight hours?—Yes.

47,357. Was the rent advanced before the farm was sold or not?—Penherber?

47,358. Yes?—Before it was sold. The rent was raised three times.

47,359. Do you think the rent was raised on purpose to sell at a higher price?—I cannot say about that.

47,360. 1,750*l.* you say it was sold for?—Yes.

47,361. What was the rent at the time?—30*l.*

47,362. Then you consider that those who bought that farm did not know the value of it?—I cannot say about that.

47,363. Did one of them go to live on it afterwards?—Some of them live there now.

47,364. They do not pay rent, then, I suppose?—Oh, it is mortgaged for the most part.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

47,365. What do they pay for the mortgage; at what per cent. is it?—They say that the interest is a little under 4*l.* That some of the money is lent at less than 4 per cent. interest.

47,366. Then the farm must have been cheap at 30*l.*?—No, it was quite dear for 30*l.* The rent was very high.

47,367. Why was Thomas Williams evicted?—I cannot say really beyond that he was turned out.

47,368. Was he able to pay his rent?—Yes, he was able to pay his rent well.

47,369. Do you often have cash sales?—Yes.

47,370. Do you find the money coming in very easily?—No, we do not.

47,371. There is a great difficulty in getting the money in?—Yes, it is very difficult.

47,372. I suppose the auctioneer that employs you is waiting for the money too, is he?—I am obliged to pay to them according to time.

47,373. Then it does not pay you very well at present, does it?—No, it does not. There is no money to be had in the country.

47,374. Just now when you mentioned those two farms where those young people were left undisturbed, did you want to prove that if farmers are left alone they improve their farms to double the value?—Yes, that was my object in mentioning those places.

47,375. Do you think that farmers, if they had security of tenure, would do the same?—They do generally. Those who take these new places are not as good farmers generally as the old ones.

47,376. How does the landlord select them as tenants then. Do they promise more rent?—That is generally the rule. They do not understand what farming is, and they give to those from whom they can get the highest rent.

47,377. Have you anything to suggest as to how to better the poor farmers in this neighbourhood?—I can only say this, with regard to those who have been turned out of their farms that they were able to pay the rent, but others have been taken in who are unable to pay the rent, and if the original ones had been left alone they would have paid well for their holdings.

47,378. Why do the landlords take on tenants that have no capital?—That is how they do it; they do not quite understand.

47,379. Have not the landlords in this neighbourhood some agents?—Yes.

47,380. Do they understand their work?—No, they do not understand their work; they are worse than their landlords.

47,381. Do you think that landlords are inclined to take on tenants without capital because of the preferential claim they have for the rent?—A new tenant comes to a farm, and the landlord does not know how much money he has, because many of our landlords have no knowledge of their tenants at all.

47,382. Do you mean that the landlord does not care so long as he finds that there is plenty of stock, and so on, on the farm for him to have his rent?—Yes, if there is anything on the land he takes it. He has the first claim and he takes it.

47,383. Have you any landlords of that sort in this part of the country?—Yes, we have a few of them; some are better than others.

Mr. Grove.

47,384. There is very great depression with the farmers now, is there not?—Yes.

47,385. Have you talked to many of the farmers about the Land Commission coming here?—Yes, with some of them.

47,386. Do you think they are afraid to come to give evidence?—Yes, they have a good deal of fear.

47,387. What fear do they have; what about?—They are afraid first of all that their landlords will know what they have stated here before you, and that that evidence is put back to the landlord again.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,388. Reported, you mean, probably?—Yes, reported; that that evidence will again be reported to the landlord.

Mr. Grove.

47,389. Of course, you know that anyone can buy copies of the evidence, either the landlord or the tenant, at 2*d.* a copy per day?—I daresay.

47,390. So that the tenant can get to know what his landlord says as easily as the landlord can get to know what the tenant says?—Yes.

47,391. Before this place was sold for 1,750*l.* what amount did they spend in improving it?—The improvements would come to about 110*l.*

47,392. And what were they for?—Draining and hedges. It was just like a common; like an open mountain top when we first went there.

47,393. You said that about 60 years ago there was a good deal of enclosure of commons? Yes.

47,394. Do you know of any being enclosed lately,—in the last few years?—No, I do not know of any particularly now.

47,395. Are there any large commons near here. Do you know of any unenclosed lands?—No, they have all been enclosed by this time.

47,396. The following questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "When was Penherber sold"?—About 15 years ago.

47,397. "Was it sold after 1875"?—Yes.

47,398. "Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1875"?—No, I do not know it.

47,399. "Can you say that Colonel Lewes "did not offer to let Thos. Williams stop on the "part of the farm which Colonel Lewes did not "take, at a reduced rent"?—I cannot say.

47,400. "Do you know any details of what "passed between them on Thos. Williams "leaving the farm"?—To tell the truth, I cannot say anything beyond this, that he had to leave, and that he was an old man.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,401. Is it not a fact that the landlord laid out some money in building on your own place, Penherber?—No, he did not. It is to be seen just as it was when we had it.

47,402. You state in your evidence that you did all the hauling of the stones and materials?—Yes, towards the dwelling-house.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

47,403. How much money did the landlord lay out in building the dwelling-house?—About 80*l.* per house.

47,404. Did he build no houses besides?—No, not for us.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Morgan called and examined through an Interpreter.

47,405. The interpreter translated into Welsh the statement of the witness, and afterwards read it in English, as follows:—

Evidence of David Morgan, Fron, Penuwch, Llangeitho, Llanio Road, tenant farmer. My evidence refers to my tenancy of Gaerlwyd, in the parish of Llanbadarn-odwyn, from September 1884 to September 1888.

1. In September 1884 I took the farm at a yearly rental of 50*l.* from the landlord, the late Dr. Richards, of Pantybeudy Hall, Llangeitho.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,405A. What is the acreage?—From 60 to 80 acres.

I paid one half-year's rent, viz., 25*l.*, but then I found that owing to bad times it was much too dear, so I went to the landlord to ask for a reduction, and eventually we agreed at 40*l.* a year, only a verbal agreement. Soon after the landlord sent for me to sign an agreement, and in my ignorance I signed it. When I took a copy home my wife and children saw the rent in the agreement was again 50*l.* My wife went down to the landlord to speak, but his servant persuaded her that his master had no intention of asking for 50*l.* rent, it had simply been put in the agreement so that it might help to sell the place well, if ever such a thing should happen. I paid one half-yearly instalment of rent, viz., 20*l.*, and got a receipt for half a year's rent in full. After that Dr. Richards appointed Mr. Daniel Davies, of Pencastell, Nantcwnlle, as agent to collect his rents, to whom we paid two half-yearly instalments of 20*l.*, and got receipts in full from him again. Bad times prevented the tenants paying the rents at once when asked for, so Dr. Richards appointed the late Mr. T. Lloyd Edwardes, a solicitor, to get the rents in for him instead of Daniel Davies. The first word we had from the new agent was a demand for the rent in full, viz., 25*l.*, at the next payment; and also he demanded payment of the old arrears of 5*l.* difference half-yearly, though we had received receipts which showed no balance whatever. We refused this, but paid him 20*l.*, half-year's rent as before, but he gave us receipts showing 5*l.* balance. After some wrangling Mr. Edwardes set the law in motion, in order to get the arrears from the beginning. We hired Mr. Davies (Smith, Owen, and Davies), solicitor, to appear for us. By this time the landlord had sold all the farms, and we were under notice to quit. On the day of our sale, in October 1888, a messenger came from Lloyd Edwardes asking me to sign some document making me his debtor to the sum of 25*l.*, the half-year's rent due at the time. This was tried because the agreement had been so worded that the rent could not be secured before 25th December. Of course I refused to sign it. Then the messenger tried to persuade the auctioneer to leave goods to the value of 25*l.* unsold. This disturbance at the sale caused me a deal of loss in money. We had left Gaerlwyd and were living at Fron when the 25th December came round. From there I went to Lloyd Edwardes with 20*l.* in payment of the last half year. He would not receive them without getting 25*l.*, or else putting the 5*l.* down as balance. This I refused on the advice of my solicitor. But the 20*l.* was paid into court. I claimed from the landlord a certain sum of money in compensation for manure, lime, artificial manure, gates, &c. left on the place. The case was somehow settled by the solicitors, and all that I received in compensation was 5*l.*, and what was necessary for the solicitor as costs. How much he received I do not remember.

Mr. Grove.

47,406. You received 5*l.* How much did you ask for?—I asked, I think, for 31*l.*

47,407. You stated that by this time the place was for sale and all had notice to leave. Did you have notice at that time the same as the rest?—Yes.

47,408 When you found that you had signed the agreement for 50*l.* instead of 40*l.* did you see the landlord about it?—No; my wife went down, and the servant told her that the landlord did not intend to raise the rent to 50*l.*, but that he wished that the rent should be shown as 50*l.* for fear he might want to sell the place.

47,409. But why did you not go the next day and see the landlord yourself?—Well, my wife had gone down, and things were left as they were. Mr. and Mrs. Richards had been speaking with this servant the night before, and had told him that they had no intention of charging the full rent.

47,410. Then you were satisfied to let it rest upon that statement of the servant, were you?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

47,411. Do you consider there is very great depression now amongst the farmers?—Yes.

47,412. Do you know many who have bought their own holdings?—Yes.

47,413. They find it very hard to pay the interest?—Yes. I have a proof of that myself. I have bought a farm myself.

47,414. Would they like the Government to lend money at a cheap rate?—Yes.

47,415. Your wife and children saw that 50*l.* was stated in the agreement. Why did you not see 50*l.* in it when you signed it?—I was unable to understand the writing.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,416. Have you any of those receipts with you?—Mr. Davies, the solicitor, has three of them.

47,417. You had paid Mr. Davies, the first agent, two half years, retaining the extra 5*l.* each half year. Did the solicitor claim that as well?—I paid all the rents at the rate of 40*l.*, from the time I first received the receipts.

47,418. You say that you only paid Mr. Davies, the first agent, at the rate of 40*l.* for two half years. I ask, then, did the next agent claim the 5*l.* which was due for those two half years?—I do not quite follow the question.

47,419. He claimed for the two half years which were due to him, but there were two half years in the past?—Mr. Lloyd Edwardes went behind the receipts and asked for what I had paid.

47,420. Then he asked for 15*l.* besides the 25*l.* for the half year?—Yes, he asked for 20*l.*

47,421. Then you have not either of the agreements or the receipts?—No, Mr. Davies, my solicitor, has them. There is one thing I have not mentioned in my evidence. They issued a writ against me.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,422. Who is the tenant of Gaerlwyd now?—He is called Thomas Jones.

47,423. What rent does he pay?—He bought the place.

47,424. He is a freeholder?—Yes.

47,425. Did you buy Fron?—No.

47,426. Whose tenant are you at Fron?—Mr. Evans, of Brynhir.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,427. Do you think you are better off as a tenant farmer, or that you would be better off if you had bought it?—I do not know, I am sure, about that. I said just now that I had bought a farm, and I came to Gaerlwyd because I thought that I came to a better place.

47,428. Do you not think so now?—I have a good landlord.

47,429. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I do not.

Mr. Grove.

47,430. I have one question to ask: the two receipts that you had for 20*l.* each, said that they were in full for the half-year's rent?—I received one from Mr. Richards himself the first year, and he told me that I would have the place for 40*l.*

Mr. Griffiths.

47,431. When you had the receipt can you tell us whether the receipt was for 50*l.* or 40*l.*? You paid 40*l.* I know, but was the receipt for 25*l.* or 20*l.*?—The receipts showed according to 40*l.* after I had it for 40*l.*

47,432. Then he had abandoned the 50*l.*?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,433. You are a tenant farmer yourself now?—Yes, I am tenant to Mr. Evans, Brynhir.

47,434. Are the tenant farmers afraid of coming forward to give evidence generally?—Yes, many of them are.

47,435. But you are not afraid yourself?—No, I have no fear. I am not afraid even if I was turned away from the place to-morrow.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,436. Your farm is not very cheap, is it?—Even if it was cheap I care less for such a thing now.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,437. I suppose some landlords and some tenants are afraid of one another, and others are not?—I rent a farm myself, and I should like you to see it, and I rent it so that the tenant is able to pay me.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined through an Interpreter.

47,438. The interpreter translated the statement of the witness into Welsh, and it was afterwards read in English, as follows:—

Evidence of John Davies, Penrhiw, Penuwch, Llanio Road, farmer. I wish to speak as to my tenancy of Llanfeilog Farm, on the Monachty estate, in the parish of Nantcwnlle. Great pressure was put on me to vote against my convictions at the election of 1868, and I had to suffer because I voted according to principle. I received notice to quit, and the farm was sold. I bought it, but the purchase money was excessive.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,438A. Does that statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—It is correct; but I am anxious to add something further.

47,439. When was the farm sold?—Twenty years ago.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,440. Was it sold because you voted contrary to the wishes of your landlord?—No. I am not sure of that, but so many others came forward and offered so much for it, until eventually the rent became doubled.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,441. What was the rent?—It was 20*l.* I had cultivated it as well as I could. I may say that another tenant came down with me to Cross Inn to meet them, and this tenant told me as we were going down that I must stand my ground, for Mr. Evan Matthew Richards, of Swansea, the Liberal candidate, and the agent told me at once that I must vote with them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,442. What I do not understand is this: why you say that you were turned out of your farm for your political convictions when you at the same time say that the farm was sold?—I failed to keep on the place, and a shopkeeper from London came and bought it; he had made a lot of money.

47,443. Did you fail to keep on the place because you were turned out of it?—No, I could never pay for it, after I had bought it.

47,444. Then you were not turned out until the place was sold?—I sold the farm afterwards, because I had bought it too high.

47,445. Did you buy the farm when it was sold?—Yes, I had bought the farm.

47,446. Did you buy the farm when it was sold?—Yes, I had bought it then, but then it was too dear by far for me.

47,447. I do not understand what you mean by saying, "I can show what pressure was put "on me to vote against my convictions at the "election of 1868. I will also show what I had "to suffer because I voted according to principle. "That I received notice to quit, and that the farm "was sold." You yourself bought it, then?—Yes.

47,448. Then you were not turned out of the farm?—No; I was not turned out, because I bought it. I could not possibly pay for it, because it was too much rent for me after I had bought it.

Mr. Grove.

They gave him notice to quit, and then they put it up for sale, and he had to go to the sale. He bought it too dear, and had to sell it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Where is the political eviction which he speaks of?

Mr. Grove.

I suppose the political eviction was giving him notice to quit.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,449. That is what I do not follow. Why is it that you say you had to suffer because of your political convictions?—My rent was raised 2*l.* because of that.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,450. And then the farm was put up for sale?—Yes.

47,451. And you yourself were the purchaser?—Yes.

47,452. Have you anything to add? You can say what you like?—It did not profit me at all to sell the farm, although I have no complaint against the place, only that the rent was double what it ought to be.

47,453. You did not think so when you paid the purchase money for it?—No, because I was able to get the money from others at that time, and then I went to the wall because I saw that I could not keep up, and I am in a small place now, only keeping one horse and a cow.

Mr. Grove.

47,454. What makes you think that your rent was raised 2*l.* because of the vote that you gave?—Yes, it was so. They had told me that I would repent of it unless I voted with them, and I said I have been a Liberal always. They said that I would repent of it and I said: "If "you see that there is anything wrong with "the farm, I am willing to come with you and "to do everything I can to it." And I saw that everything was at an end and that it was no good my trying to do anything and I said to them, "Some door will open itself to me in spite "of this."

47,455. What do you mean by saying then that some pressure was put upon you?—I was a long time before I could find out whether I would have the holding or not. It was because of that alone. The agent told me I must vote with them, or suffer.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,456. Do you think the Ballot Act is now any protection?—Yes, I think so.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,457. Was the farm sold by auction?—Yes, at Tregaron here, and several other places were sold as well as my holding.

47,458. What was the price you gave for it?—I think it was twenty hundred.

47,459. How many hundred pounds did you give for the farm?—2,000*l.*

47,460. And you were only paying 20*l.* rent?—Oh, no, I was obliged to pay a good deal more, 42*l.*

47,461. What did you pay for it when you bought it?—I was obliged to pay twenty hundred.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,462. It was 30*l.* rent I am told, and he paid 200*l.* for it at the sale. Is that so?—No.

47,463. No?—I paid 40*l.* and a 2*l.* rise.

Mr. Griffiths.

47,464. When you gave it up was the farm sold again?—I sold it, and the shopkeeper from London bought it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

47,465. What did he give for it?—I wonder how much he did give, I cannot remember; 1,300*l.* for part of it.

47,466. Was the 1,300*l.* paid for part of it?—Yes.

47,467. What is the value of what remains? What would you be willing to rent it for?—I got 500*l.* for one part, and I got 100*l.* for another part.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,468. It is not at all clear. Mr. H. L. Stephen asks the following questions: "When "was your rent raised 2*l.*"?—The time they came down to see me and what I heard afterwards was that my rent was going to be increased by 2*l.* because I had gone with the Liberals.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

47,469. "Who was it that said you would repent of your vote"?—The agent.

Mr. Grove.

47,470. As a matter of interest I will ask you this: When you bought the farm for 2,000*l.* how much of that money had you ready to pay out of your own pocket?—I had scarcely anything. I went quite to the wall and I bought the small place afterwards.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned

FIFTY-SIXTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Aberayron, Cardiganshire, Friday, 27th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (CHAIRMAN).

Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.
Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Col. THOMAS LLOYD called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,471. Do you live at Llysaeron?—Yes.

47,472. You wish to rebut some statements?—The statement made at Newcastle Emlyn last Tuesday.

47,473. By whom?—James Thomas, Park-y-trap.

47,474. Is James Thomas here?—No.

See 45,559–45,577.

47,475. We have a great mass of evidence, if you will kindly confine yourself strictly to rebutting any statements you wish to rebut?—I only wish to refer to this, that he says I promised to build for him, and I say I never did.

47,476. You never did promise to build for him?—No.

47,477. I think he said the house fell into disrepair?—Yes, and in the letter I have written to you, I explain all about it. I rented Park-y-trap near Newcastle Emlyn to James Thomas on the 29th September 1874, with the understanding that he could remain there as long as the buildings lasted; when the buildings became uninhabitable, it was not my intention to rebuild, but to let the land out in fields, as it is situated near the town. At that time it was considered the buildings would last 10 or 12 years. James Thomas states that 12 years ago I promised to build a dwelling-house. This is untrue, I never promised to build a dwelling-house or out-buildings during the 20 years of his tenancy. I told him last September that the buildings were too old to repair, but that I would pay rent for a cottage for him to live in until September 1894; this offer he refused. On two occasions he gave me notice to quit, but afterwards begged to be allowed to stay on. When he took the land in 1874 it was in excellent condition; it is now completely run out, and he has not attempted to repair a hedge since he has been there. I have allowed him the tithes since April 1st, 1891, and 10 per cent. remission in his rent since March 1893.

47,478. He stated in his evidence before us: "I spoke to my landlord first of all about a new "house 12 years ago." Did he do so?—He spoke to me continually.

47,479. Your reply, according to him, was that you were putting some pipes down in a meadow for Elias Thomas, another tenant of yours, and that you had no money to do both in the same year?—That is not a fact.

47,480. "In about a year afterwards my "landlord called and was convinced that my "house was rather out of repair, and said that "he would build me a dwelling-house"?—That is untrue.

47,481. "He promised to call next day to "settle all the arrangements for starting the "building." Did you promise to call?—No, I did not, it is untrue.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,482. You admit that the house was out of repair?—Yes, I never expected it to last more than 10 years when he took it.

Lord Kenyon.

47,483. You did not intend to repair?—No, the land is near the town; I let it out as accommodation land, and he understood that perfectly well when he took the holding.

47,484. Is there any other statement you wish to rebut?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EMLYN JONES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 46,878–46,880.

47,485. I believe you wish to rebut a statement?—Yes, the statement that Mr. Rogers made yesterday at Tregaron, as to the tenants I referred to yesterday in the question I handed in to your Lordship being connexions or relations of the previous tenants. I have made inquiries; there was no connexion whatever. I beg to repeat the statement, and say that they were strangers to the other people.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN HOWELL called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,486. Where do you reside?—Portland House, Aberayron.

47,487. What are you?—I am an ironmonger and general merchant.

47,488. You have a statement that you wish to make to us?—Yes.

47,489. Will you kindly proceed with it?—I am a county councillor for the Aberayron polling district, Chairman of the Aberayron Union Highway Board, and Vice-Chairman of the Aberayron Union Assessment Committee, &c. I beg to tender evidence on behalf of the tenant farmers of the Aberayron district, comprising the parishes of Henfynyw, Llanerchaeron, and Ciliau Aeron. I do so at their request as expressed by resolutions passed at two duly convened public meetings, and held at convenient centres. It should be mentioned that the County Council of Cardiganshire, at their quarterly meeting held on the 14th March 1893, unanimously passed a resolutions of which the following is a copy: "That committees formed "by the members of this council resident "within each union be constituted to obtain "information and evidence to be laid before "the Royal Commission on Land, and that "John M. Howell, Aberayron, be convener for "the Aberayron Union." That committee met several times, and eventually entrusted each councillor and alderman in his respective district to obtain information and evidence. I called and attended six meetings in which the importance of the inquiry was emphasised, the subjects explained, and the farmers were urged to tell their own tale. I made a point of conferring with farmers on every available occasion, with the purpose of ascertaining their views and of finding out where, if at all, the shoe pinched, with the result that everyone I spoke to complained of his lot, and talked of possible remedies, but out of the 73 occupiers of holdings of 15 acres to 179 acres, only one signified an intention to give evidence. It is a fact of considerable significance that among the many witnesses who appear before the Commission at Aberayron, most, if not all, speak of circumstances which occurred under previous landlords. There is a spirit of vassalage among the tillers of the soil begotten by the tyranny of the past. The shadows of the oppression and evictions of 1868 have not lifted from over the people. I remember that period well. The people rose to the level of citizens, and once in a way they exercised their privilege of voting according to their own judgment. Retribution quickly followed. As an instance of the shamelessness with which the policy of revenge was carried out, I may be permitted to mention circumstances that came under my own personal observation. My grandfather, Benjamin Evans, of Aberayron, who was an ardent and outspoken Liberal, held some accommodation land and some gardens on the Monachdy estate. For the part he took in the election of 1868 he was avowedly served with notice to give up those holdings, which he had to do, and he was also boycotted in his trading interests, as my ledgers will show. Not only were individuals punished but communities were brought under the lash. In 1869 the Calvanistic Methodist Church in Aberayron were rebuilding their place of worship. Several of its leading members were prominent and leading politicians. For no other possible reason they were refused permission, for love or money, to get gravel for building purposes on the Monachdy estate, and it must be remembered that the Monachdy estate covered the whole immediate district at that period. The Squire of Monachdy was also lord of the manor, and as such exercised an absolute authority over the seashore for miles on each side of the harbour, besides being the owner of the entire town, except the "Feathers hotel."

47,490. What is his name?—Well, he is now known as Captain Gwynne, of Monachdy.

47,491. He is now?—He is now. He was then a minor.

47,492. In the hands of trustees?—In the hands of trustees. The congregation aforesaid were also refused permission to hold services temporarily in the Town Hall when their chapel was being rebuilt. They afterwards, luckily, got over the local authority by appealing to Colonel Pryse, of Peithill, the then Lord Lieutenant of the county, who was a Liberal. The man mainly responsible for the persecution of that fearful time was the agent of the Monachdy estate, since deceased, named Daniel Jones. From the time of the death of Captain Gwynne, of Monachdy, in 1865, a gentleman mourned for till this day, to the succession of his son in 1873, also an admirable gentleman, the entire control of the estate seemed to be entrusted to the said Daniel Jones. In addition to the vast powers put in his hands as agent of the Monachdy estate, he was also clerk of the justices, superintendent registrar, and vice-chairman of the Board of guardians. There was no access to quarry or river, sea or land, but by his permission, and the local administration of the law was practically in his hands. All this authority and influence he used to worry and humiliate Liberals and Nonconformists, and he used it with a wantonness and unscrupulousness which I cannot think of, even now, except with a shudder of contempt.

47,493. Is Daniel Jones alive?—No, he is not, I am sorry to say, I should have said much more if he was alive. I have thought it necessary to emphasize this, because the tyranny of past days is the only solution of the question why farmers are timid, and will not appear before this Commission. The idea of landlordism as conceived in the minds of the tenantry by the mal-practices of such men as the late Daniel Jones, especially agents' landlordism, is always connected with a possible outbreak at any moment of arbitrary power and punishment. Hence it is that although tenants are loud in their complaints that they experience the utmost difficulty in making both ends meet, yet they will not utter their own complaints here. I must admit that I feel a sense of inability to cope with the questions about which information is sought, not being a farmer, but being deputed to do so, I must attempt the task as best I can. In doing so I shall deal with the matters which principally affect this district, and about which I have been able to glean most information. The usual date of entry is September. There are few, if any, leases in vogue. Farms are let from year to year. There is no cry for leases, although people cry for security of tenure. The reason for this is that rents are now considered to be too high. I believe that the landowners would grant them in all cases where they are able to do so. Changes in tenancy have become more frequent in late years. This is due to lands being largely put up for sale in that period. During the last 20 years or so 1,253 acres, or nearly two-thirds of the parish of Henfynyw, comprising 21 tenancies, have been put up for sale, 15 holdings comprising a total of 604 acres were actually sold, whilst in every one of the 21 holdings aforesaid there has been a change of occupier.

On the Llanaeron estate, which is by far the largest in the district I speak for, there has been no disturbance or change to draw attention to for many years, son succeeding father, and kinsman succeeding kinsman as a general rule from generation to generation. A Land Act embodying this principle in some form or other would not, I fancy, be a bad thing, judging from the quietude prevailing on this estate. There is a cordial relationship between landlady and tenant. Mrs. Lewis is a lady of broad-minded and liberal views. This leads one to fancy that if all owners of land were like her, this inquiry would not have been held. There are not many landowners in Cardiganshire who give all their workmen a half day holiday to go to vote on election days, which she does. If the tenants could extend her life another 80 years they would do so, for it would mean fixity of tenure, and that would bring content, except for the general complaint that rents are too high to afford reasonable remuneration for investment of capital and labour. A re-valuation of the property took place about 31 years ago. There are old agreements. Holdings latterly have been let without any agreements.

On the Monachdy estate the tenants had to sign fresh agreements in the year 1891. I am informed that they consider some of the clauses unduly strict. They do not apprehend any enforcement of those clauses under the present solicitors for the trustees, but they are afraid if a change of management occurred they might be enforced. As to the remainder of the district, the owners are as numerous, pretty nearly, as the tenants. I have been unable to obtain accurate and detailed information as to the course of rents during the last 50 years, beyond the fact that there has been a considerable increase on the whole. I have since writing this ascertained the following facts, which, if an index of the general rise, may be of some importance: an occupier of a farm called Cilfforch, of 169 acres on this Monachdy estate, had a lease of lives which expired in 1875——

47,494. Three lives?—I only remember one life, there was only one of the people alive in 1875.

47,495. Was it a lease for three lives?—I am not sure, but the rent under that lease was 30*l.* After the lease expired the rent was put at 140*l.* and afterwards reduced, I believe, to about 90*l.*, at the present time. That is the only tangible information I have been able to get in figures.

As to other charges on land, the local rates are paid by the tenant. Comparing local taxation now with what it was 25 years ago, it shows as follows:

Actual expenditure for the year ending September 30th, 1869, for the common fund of the union	4,235
Police and county rate	1,200
	£5,435

Actual expenditure for the year ending September 30th, 1893, for the common fund of the union	2,815
For police and county rate	960
	£3,775

This would mean about 1*s.* 4*d.* in the £ per annum on the old rateable value of the union, viz., 25,331*l.*, and about 11*d.* in the £ on the new valuation, viz., 34,454*l.* The union was re-valued in the year 1886. The highway rate (not included in the above) has gone up by leaps and bounds during the last 25 years. It was 8½*d.* in the £ for the year ending September 30th, 1893. The school board rate of about 4*d.* in the £ must be added. This will make a total of about 1,800*l.*, making an increase of 200*l.* in the year 1893 over 1869. There are in the district 38 holdings of 15 to 49 acres; 19 farms of 50 to 100 acres, and 16 of 100 acres and upwards. In the Aberayron Union, comprising 14 parishes, there are 333 holdings of 15 to 49 acres, 224 farms of 50 to 100 acres, and 199 of 100 acres and upwards. The gross estimated rental of the district for the purposes of assessment for local rates, excluding the part of the town of Aberayron situate therein, is 4,045*l.*, which, according to 5,262 acres, is equal to an average rental of 15*s.* 4*d.* per acre. Taking the county assessment value of 4,346*l.*, which is based on the Income Tax returns, the average rental per acre is 16*s.* 6*d.* Holdings have been consolidated. This process corresponded with the increase in the working man's wages, and the consequent migration of working men to Glamorganshire. Cottages have fallen to ruins, and the few acres attached to them have been merged into the main holding. The labour of those men has been lost to the land, and, although machinery can do a great deal, it cannot thatch roofs, build fences, and construct drains. The loss of labour may be appreciated by noticing the decrease of population.

Population of the Aberayron Union in—

1871.	1881.	1891.
13,541.	12,534.	11,593.

Population of the Aberayron District in—

1871.	1881.	1891.
1,590.	1,566.	1,414.

The decrease in population of 1,948 in 20 years in the Aberayron Union, and of 176 in the Aberayron District is due to the migration of agricultural labourers chiefly, and of artisans to Glamorganshire and other places. As to cultivation, the district consists of 5,262 acres of arable and grass lands in the proportion of about two-thirds of the latter to one-third of the former. I am told that the proportion was in an inverse ratio 50 years ago, and that the advance in the price of labour and the reduction in the price of wheat accounts for the change. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, is a dead letter in the district. I have failed to discover a single case where a farmer has availed himself of the provisions of the Act for draining, fencing, building, &c., &c. He could not, e.g., give his landlord notice that he was going to drain, for he feels that this would be looked upon by the landlord as an impertinence. It is quite possible that the landlord would not think so, but the tenant believes he would, and there is an end of it. There are plenty of complaints of outgoing tenants failing to obtain what they consider to be adequate compensation for their improvements, as will be found from evidence tendered to-day. There has been no instance, to my knowledge, of compensation being made for the general improved condition of a holding, and not simply for specific improvements. This touches a point specially emphasized in one of the meetings held by one of the largest and most efficient farmers in the district. He farms 168 acres in the Aberayron district, and 171 acres in another district. He spoke strongly in favour of devising some means, by legislation or otherwise, of awarding compensation for the general improved condition of a holding, and vice versâ in cases where a tenant exhausted and neglected a holding. He called it "gwobrwyo diwydrwydd" (rewarding industry). This he believed to be the great necessity of the situation. He illustrated his meaning by referring to the custom of inspecting elementary schools. Some such system, said he, should be applied to farmers, and payments by results introduced. Many tenants have bought their own farms when they had the money to do so. There are numerous instances of new buildings having been erected, and a higher standard of comfort established. On these holdings one soon sees efforts to utilise waste spots, and to make the holding generally trim and taut. In short there is energy and labour expended to endeavour to bring the land into its best producing condition. I asked an old farmer of more than ordinary intelligence the following question, "You say you want "security of tenure with the view of investing "more capital and labour in the land, and "consequently to get all that can be got out of "it, but do those who have bought land and "are cultivating it themselves, and who have, "therefore, absolute authority; do they farm "better than tenants at will?" He answered, "Yes, they do. I will name you three free-"holders" (naming them) "whose holdings I "can see from my front door, they are liming "and draining just now. I do not know of "any tenant farmer who does so." The only farm in this district of which it is commonly said that it has been brought to the highest state of cultivation was farmed by its owner. On the other hand, I know of cases, especially in the neighbouring parishes of Llanddewi Aberarth, of tenants who bought their own farms at high prices, in which they sank whatever capital they possessed, and are now paying more interest than they paid rent. In these instances the farmers themselves have lost heart, their buildings are going to rack and ruin, and the work of cultivation is only carried on in a hand-to-mouth fashion. This class envy the tenant farmer his lot. In the great majority of cases tenant farmers work much harder than the agricultural labourer, and the wives, if possible, work harder still. They are very frugal. I wish to direct special attention to the next query: "Do children work at home?" Yes, both male and female, without wages. Children at the ages when they are usually sent to learn a trade like the idea of remaining at home. Their parents require their assistance, and so the decision to stay at home goes by default. When those children attain to maturer age they find out how helpless and hopeless their position is. They are too old to learn a trade; they cannot ask their parents "for a portion of the "goods that falleth to them." That would spoil their parents' circumstances. They have three alternatives. They must go to service, or to the "works," or look out for a small holding for themselves. They prefer the latter course, and if the young man has "eyed a wife," it precipitates matters. If there is a small holding to let anywhere within a radius of 12 miles he applies for it, and 20 more similarly circumstanced apply also. The parents are unable to make any provision except of the most inadequate kind, and quite disproportionate to the value of the service rendered. The assistance very often takes the form of going bail for money borrowed, and thus the young couple start in life with the odds all against them. Landlords use the fact of the number of applicants applying for a vacant holding being numerous, as an argument that agricultural industry is not so bad after all, whereas it is only an index of the extremity to which the farming industry has been reduced. The laws of primogeniture and entail should be abolished. The law should prevent estates being mortgaged above a certain point. Many pressing evils would thus be removed. The farmers are one and all in favour of some efficacious plan of establishing security of tenure, which is of no good without fair rents. Fair rents are impossible without periodical revision on re-valuation, both in the interest of the tenant and landlord, whilst full compensation for all specific and general improvements would give new life to the whole farming community. To be able to get the land to yield all it is capable of yielding is an absolute necessity of the times, and this cannot be effected under present conditions. It is useless talking of freedom of contract, for the freedom is all on one side. There is an unlimited number of applications for every vacant holding, and consequently the landlord is able to dictate his own terms. Landowners in my own district, who are against a Land Court, are strongly in favour of State aid to enable farmers to buy their own holdings when they come to the market. But if the State finds the money it must have a finger in the whole transaction. Farmers are strongly in favour of this provision. It harmonises with the very distinctive "anianawd" [genius] of the Cymro and the Cardi. Furthermore he finds out on his school boards that the Public Works Loan Office lends money to erect school board buildings upon terms which provide for the principal and interest to be repaid in 30 years at 3¾ per cent., and in 50 years at 3½ per cent. He has heard also that the Irishman has been blessed with some such plan, and he cannot see why he is not to get a like boon. The State has already interfered with monopolies by its control of railways and even of cab fares. The Agricultural Holdings Act and the Ground Game Act admit the principle that the tenant farmer requires protection against the unfettered will of the landlord. It is evident that to attain these objects, to redress the pressing grievances referred to, which affect the whole community, legislation is required, and whether it be by the establishment of a Land Court, or by a comprehensive Land Act providing for all the circumstances of the case, it is to be hoped that the Commission will recommend that Parliament should take up the matter without delay.

To that I wish to add there are scores, if not hundreds, of acres of uncultivated land in the area of the Aberayron Union which should be cultivated. I believe that compulsion, in some form or other, should be brought to bear upon the owners. Either they should cultivate it themselves, or have to surrender the lands after some equitable plan, to others who would do so.

One more point as to labour. All the genuine labour has gone away to Glamorganshire, and other parts, but we have imported another kind of labour, viz., the labour of boys from reformatories. I suppose they can be got cheaper, but I believe the influence of those boys who do not understand the Welsh language, which is an excuse for not attending any place of worship, and who go about on Sundays teaching the young people to smoke, and all sorts of demoralising habits, will have a serious effect on the morals of the country before long. See 38,652, 38,669.

47,496. What lands do you say are uncultivated, can you mention them?—Yes, I should think there are scores, if not hundreds of acres.

47,497. Where?—Within the district of the Aberayron Union.

47,498. Mention any specific instance?—Shon Quilt and the Mynydd-bach districts.

47,499. All hill lands?—No, fairly low lands.

47,500. In what sense are they uncultivated?—There is nothing done to them, they only bear rushes.

47,501. Have they been cultivated before?—I could not answer that question.

47,502. It is a question whether they would pay for cultivation?—Entirely.

47,503. In your opinion they would?—I am not a specialist; but I can see in going through the country that some portions are brought to use.

47,504. Are you acquainted with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have taken a great deal of pains to understand it now, since I have taken this matter up, 47,505. Do you think it would be any advantage to the farmers if it was translated into Welsh?—I think this Commission in this country will do more good than anything else.

47,506. Do you think it would be an advantage to the farmers if they could have it in Welsh?—I think it would, but I think the coming of this Commission into the country will do more to enlighten them on the provisions of the Act than anything else.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,507. I think you said that your county council passed a resolution in favour of collecting evidence to place before the Commission?—They did.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

47,508. Are there any landlords on your county council?—There are a few.

47,509. Did they take an active part in collecting evidence?—I could not give you any instances of anyone doing so, except Mr. Vaughan Davies. I do not know in what capacity he acts in the matter.

47,510. It was a unanimous resolution?—It was passed unanimously, but things are sometimes passed unanimously which are not really unanimous.

47,511. No one raised his voice against it?—No, no one raised his voice against it.

47,512. I see there is a very long list of witnesses to give evidence before us to-day. What kind of people are they? Are they people in good circumstances, or needy tenant farmers?—Those that I know of, who came to me to write their evidence, are people in a very poor state as farmers, most of them, and invariably they are not under the same landlords now as the landlords they are going to speak about.

47,513. They speak about other estates besides the one that they live on?—That is it.

Lord Kenyon.

47,514. Are they content with their present places?—No, I do not think they are more so than before.

47,515. That we shall find out from them?—Yes, perhaps.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,516. You think that really the tenant farmers are still governed by the terrors of 1868–9?—I do really and absolutely believe it, although I should like to add that I do not think in this special district there is very much reason for that feeling now.

47,517. But the impression exists in their minds?—That is so.

47,518. Do you know whether any of the local landlords have publicly announced that the tenants were at perfect liberty to come and place evidence before the Commission?—I have not heard of anyone, there may have been some.

47,519. On the other hand, they have not discountenanced their appearing?—Not in the least, so far as I have found.

47,520. Being a tradesman in the town, I suppose you have an opportunity of knowing pretty well what are the circumstances of the farmers?—Well, I have.

47,521. You think that a lot of them are on the brink of ruin?—Very, very much pinched indeed. My trade is not very large in artificial manures, but although some are prompt in payment, I find during last year more people came for it a second time without payment for the previous lots than in other years.

47,522. Do any of them ask for money to pay the rent?—I have often been bail at the bank for farmers, and have lent money too.

47,523. Do you find that the tenant farmers are more anxious to pay the landlords than anyone else?—Much more.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

47,524. Why?—One reason is that they are tenants from year to year, and the landlords would not brook delay for a long time, and the tradesmen here have a system of very long credits, and they take advantage of that.

47,525. What do you say about preferential claims for rent, have you anything to say about it?—No, indeed, I am not a specialist, but it is considered quite unjust.

47,526. How would it affect the question of competition if the preferential claim was abolished. You know that the landlord can claim a preference. He is a preferential creditor?—Yes.

47,527. Supposing that was abolished, do you think it would affect competition for farms. Would it make the landlord more careful in the selection of his tenant?—A great deal.

47,528. He would be more likely to select a man of capital than a man of straw?—I think so. I say as a matter of opinion I do not see why the landlord should have a preferential claim. I fail to discover any reason for it.

47,529. Do you think it prejudices the credit of the tenant with the tradesmen?—How.

47,530. Do you think the fact of the landlord being a preferential creditor prejudices the credit of the tenant with the tradesmen?—I should not say that, so far as my observation helps me to form an opinion. See 47,716.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,531. You stated that there was a very strong feeling in favour of some thorough measure for giving compensation for improvements?—Yes, a great desire.

47,532. At the same time you say that the present Act is hardly known in the district?—That is so.

47,533. Now, do you think that if that Act was improved, so as to make it as nearly perfect as possible, there still would be the difficulty in using it; would it still be a dead letter?—Unless it was an absolute law of the land. In that case, I think, if it was extended and perfected, it might answer a good purpose, but as there is power to contract out of it people seem to think that it is of no use.

47,534. That, again, arises from their not understanding it. There is no power to contract out of it except in two specified points, one as regards the six months' notice instead of one year's notice, and the other with regard to compensation for manures and so on, in which case there must be a better provision, or as good a provision, as the Act gives. Now, supposing that that Act were made as perfect as possible, what would still be required to complete the security of tenure? You stated, I think, that fair rents would also have to be provided?—Yes.

47,535. By fair rents you mean something under the competition rent?—That is so.

47,536. And, therefore, what the farmers want to be protected from is the high rents caused by competition?—Just so.

47,537. Now, I suppose, that the landlords, as a rule, do not raise the rents up to the competition price?—I know of cases where tenants offer more—competing would-be tenants.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

47,538. But I mean that the existing rent—the 15*s.* 4*d.* or 16*s.* 6*d.* per acre, whatever it is—is not up to the competition rent?—You mean the average of 16*s.* 6*d.*

47,539. Yes?—No, in the best lands.

47,540. So that putting it at the worst, the landlords, though they may not have been a sufficient shield, have yet been a great shield against the competition prices?—I do not think there has been any shield at all against the high rents. They generally let to the highest bidder.

47,541. I thought just now that you admitted that the 15*s.* 4*d.* or the 16*s.* 6*d.* per acre, which is the average, would not be up to the competition rent?—Not on the best lands, because we have land up to 1*l.* 10*s.* an acre.

47,542. But I mean on the average?—Yes, on an average, it is as you say.

47,543. It is the competition rent?—Well, it is the average of the competition rent. I have taken the assessment of the income tax commissioners, and that is the rent.

47,544. If any one of these holdings were to let to-morrow there would be a great number of applicants for it?—There would.

47,545. And many of those applicants, or some of those applicants, would pay a good deal higher rent than the present rent; is not that true?—It is true to some extent.

47,546. Then the landlords, looking at it from their own side, and wanting to have good tenants, have been to a certain extent, a shield in favour of the farmer against the competition rent, but not a sufficient shield. That is, as I take it, what you mean?—Well, I think there are large estates here who would look upon the character of the tenant, and would not accept a tenant who made an exorbitant offer.

47,547. The good landlords have been, to a certain extent, a protection to tenants against competition prices?—No doubt, because on the Llanaeron estate, the tenancies go from father to son.

47,548. Exactly, and the evidence goes to show that it is very strikingly so throughout large portions of Wales. Then do we not come to this point that the protection is really required against the land hunger?—Yes, we want that, too.

47,549. That being so, how do you think that a tribunal would fix a fair rent which was less than a competition rent?—Well, not except by having independent valuers on both sides, whether under a provisional Land Act or under a Land Court.

47,550. What I want is that you should acknowledge the difficulties of the question. It is so very easy to say simply "Let us have a "Land Court to do justice"; but the difficulty is to get at the lines upon which justice is to be done?—Quite so.

47,551. Then, again, with regard to State aid in loans. We have had that before us over and over again, and we are met to a certain extent by this point, that if you were to lessen by Government loans the rate upon which tenant farmers might borrow money for the purchase of their holdings, would the advantage of that go to the tenant, or would it go to the landlord; would it not tend, to a certain extent, to raise the prices—to increase the competition and raise the price given for the holdings?—There is no mistake about it; there is that side to the question.

47,552. I will not ask you anything more about it. All I want is that that side should be looked at?—Yes.

47,553. After all it brings us, does it not, very much to the point of trying to erase the spirit of bargaining which is ingrained in human nature?—Just so.

47,554. Now I want to ask you one question. Do you think the legislation we have already had—the erection of county councils and the erection of parish councils by last year's Act—will be fully availed of in Wales, and that there will arise out of it more independence and more intelligence and more capacity to deal with these questions with freedom of contract?—I am quite sure they will; they will be more able to fight their own battles 10 years hence than they are to-day.

47,555. And by reasonable combination, farmers might probably even now gain very much protection for themselves?—They would gain far more than they possess at present; but how far can we carry combination without being called outlaws.

47,556. Well, I think reasonable combination is a perfectly well known thing in England?—It is not here.

37,557. But I was going to ask you what is the real difficulty in the way of combination. Is it mutual suspicion of one farmer against another, owing to the competition for land, and the land hunger, and the fear that one man will outbid another?—No, it is not; it is a feeling of respect on many estates for the landlord, and that anything they do in the way of holding meetings will be construed as an act of hostility.

47,558. That, you say, is almost entirely owing to the past; it is owing to the times of 1868; but do you think that that will last in the future. Do not you think that there is the beginning of a better day in that respect?—It will last as long as the present generation lives. The people who were under the lash at that time will not be able to shake off the impression, but perhaps we shall be emancipated little by little.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,559, You mentioned one of the districts where the land is not brought under cultivation as it might be. Did I understand it to be Mynydd-bach?—Yes, there is a large tract there which is very poorly cultivated.

47,560. Does the owner think that it is scarcely fit for cultivation?—Well, really, I could not answer the question. There is a gentleman here who will be able to give you a better answer, Mr. Thos. Davies.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

47,561. I have not heard all your evidence, I am sorry to say; that is my loss. You mentioned that the memory of 1868 is still vivid in people's minds?—It is.

47,562. How do you find that. What traces are there of that now?—I attribute that—of course it goes only for what my opinion is worth——

47,563. What has made you think that the memory of 1868 is in their minds still?—I know it from my personal contact with farmers. The farmers who are going to give evidence here to-day do not give evidence as to their present condition under their present landlords, but about things that have passed under other landlords. I attribute that fact to the fear of some retribution now.

47,564. You see, in 1868 there was no ballot, and the canvassing was very severe on both sides, I daresay?—It was.

47,565. Now there is the ballot; does not that alter things a good deal?—It does a good deal, but to come here to give evidence is yet beyond their courage.

47,566. Beyond the courage of the present generation?—Yes.

47,567. Have you any other evidence of that?—Well, I know it from—— 47,568. You infer it from this case?—Oh, they tell me. I have spoken to every tenant farmer within my district within the last 12 months upon this point, and it has come out in conversation.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,569. Just one question. You have mentioned some obstacles to combination amongst farmers?—Yes.

47,570. Does another occur to you?—Not at this moment.

47,571. May I suggest one that you may think of afterwards. In order to promote a combination it is necessary for two or three persons in a place to take a matter of this sort in hand?—It is.

47,572. Is there not a danger, or at least is there not that sort of feeling existing among farmers, that if they start to promote an agitation or a combination they become marked men, and that they will be punished in some way or other?—Well, there is, but the fault lies in this, that they do not grapple the nettle boldly enough; they have not got the energy to come out straight and do it openly. Therefore they are punished.

47,573. Do you think they would be less likely to be punished if they came out openly?—That is my own experience at any rate.

47,574. So that really it lies on the tenant farmers themselves?—Well, how far it arises from the condition of their lives I cannot estimate.

47,575. With regard to the establishment of a Land Court, do you think that the establishment of a Land Court would affect good landlords to a great extent?—It is not wanted for good landlords, I am quite sure of that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

47,576. You have said that practically they have security of tenure already under good landlords; that the son succeeds to the father?—Yes.

47,577. So that really in one respect there would be no innovation?—No, not a bit. I understand you, I do not think it would disturb any of those estates at all.

47,578. You suggest the establishment of a Land Court to catch bad landlords?—Yes, and bad tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

47,579. What do you mean by a fair rent?—By fair rent I mean that the people should have something for their labour after a year's hard work.

47,580. How do you propose to get at that?—Well, I have tried to ponder over the matter. I thought by showing you that it is wanted you would be able to do the rest.

47,581. Is it to come from the clouds? As a practical man, cannot you arrive at any means of getting at it. If you fail, why should not I fail?—Quite so, my Lord. Well, the legal machinery for the revision and fixing of fair rents might be attached to the county court or the local justices' clerk's office. The law could be put in operation wherever a man felt that he did not get the proper remuneration for his labour, and he might, without prejudice, go to this court and set the machinery to work.

47,582. But how is he to show that?—Well, by and bye we shall find that people will keep accounts better than they do.

47,583. They do not keep accounts now?—They do not, I am sorry to say.

47,584. How are you to arrive at a fair rent now; suppose this Land Court were established now?—I can only say this, that I know tenants who work hard and are thrifty men, who do the best with the land, and make the most of their opportunities, and who, as honest men, tell me that they have not had a single penny for their labour for one or two of these bad years, and that at the best the farmer himself does not get the return that his man servant has, and he gets nothing for his capital. There is a man in the parish of Llanddewi Aberarth, one of the best farmers there, who works harder than any man servant, and he says that last year he was at a loss, and that he never makes 4 per cent. out of his capital, taking his stock and crop to be worth 500*l.* He never makes 20*l.* out of the capital, nor does he get for himself a sum equal to the amount of wages that he pays to his servant. He gets nothing for himself, only his food and clothes. Legislation should be devised to afford relief when such cases are made out.

47,585. That is taking one year?—That is taking last year.

47,586. But suppose he made a very large profit the year before?—Well, one year certainly balances the other to a certain extent.

47,587. You must take an average of a certain number of years?—Yes, but on the whole, I think the remuneration which the present condition of things affords tenants is not what it ought to be.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,588. You cannot help me to arrive at a fair rent any more than that?—No, I cannot, really.

47,589. I have got some questions to put to you by Mr. T. Davies—"Will you mention any "farm let at 1*l.* 10*s.* per acre in the three parishes "or even at 22*s.* an acre"?—No, I cannot. It was Mr. Davies himself who told me that there was land of that value in the Vale of Ayron.

47,590. Of that value?—No, at that rent.

47,591. (Mr. Thomas Davies.) In the Vale of Ayron, but not in the parishes you mention.

Witness.

Well those parishes extend six miles upwards along the river side.

Lord Kenyon.

47,592. Then there are some more questions by the same gentleman—"Can you give any "hardship that the tenant of Cilfforch suffered, "except that the lease for lives expired?"—No, Mr. Davies has quite misunderstood the connection in which I brought that fact before you. In the syllabus—I suppose he has not studied it carefully—you will find that you ask about rents, whether they are higher or lower, and I mentioned that case as giving perhaps the value of 179 acres of land 70 years ago.

47,593. And its value now?—And its value now.

47,594. Or at least its rent now?—Yes. I may say that the sons or grandsons of the person upon whose life the lease depended tell me that there was a tradition in the family that it was offered to them as long as water ran for that rent, but they were afraid to take it because it was so much of a risk, they thought, at that time.

47,595. They did not wish for security of tenure in those days?—Well, they wanted leases at any rate.

47,596. "Do you know that Cilfforch was "actually free of any rent by the underlettings "of the farm?"—I dare say it would be so at that time, but not now, 47,597. "Would it pay to cultivate the land "you refer to?" I suppose that is the uncultivated land?—No, I do not think it would pay directly.

47,598. Now I have some questions by Mr. Vincent—"Do you complain of the present management of the Monachty Estate?"—I do not. I think they are very fair-minded people as far as they are able to be.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,599. "Is any unfair effort whatever made "to influence the tenants in their voting now?"—No, I do not think there is.

47,600. "Was not the reason way the tenants "of Monachty were called upon to sign new "agreements to be found in the fact that up to "that date many of them had no agreements"?—Well, I do not think it was so. I can tell you what I hear was the reason, if that will satisfy you.

47,601. Yes, what was the reason?—The reason, supposed by the tenants, is that the mansion of Monachty, having been recently let to a gentleman from Scotland, the lessors required new agreements in order to protect the game for this gentleman. That is what the people in the neighbourhood believe to be the real reason.

47,602. Of course that is only an expression of opinion?—Yes.

47,603. Is that the Monachty agreement?—I have got one here; I am not authorised to put it in.

47,604. Is that the agreement (handing document to witness)?—It is.

47,605. "Would you have gone bail for farmers "at the bank or have lent them money if you "had not thought they were reasonably likely to "fulfil their engagements"?—Well, at the risk always incurred by doing anything of that kind. Of course, I believed they were honest men, or I would not do it.

47,606. I suppose you thought you had fair security for your money?—Oh, I thought they would surely pay me.

47,607. If you give credit, it is at your own risk, is it not?—It is entirely.

47,608. "Do you not see that a landlord is practically compelled either to give credit day by day for six months or to claim rent in advance"?—I did not understand that they impose terms.

47,609. I suppose you know that the rents are not paid to the day?—No.

47,610. That is what Mr. Vincent means by that, I suppose. "Do you not see that a landlord is practically compelled either to give credit day by day for six months or to claim rent in advance"?—I see that, but I wish tradesmen were able to recover their debts in six months. If you could pass a law to that effect, it would be a good thing for the tradesmen of this country.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 47,716.

Dr. Enoch Davies, recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 45,641–45,722.

47,611. What do you wish to rebut?—I wish to rebut some evidence given at Lampeter before this Commission by Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, of Rhydowen.

47,612. Is Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, of Rhydowen, here?—(Mrs. Elizabeth Jones.) Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

47,613. Each sentence of this evidence will be translated to Mrs. Jones as it is given.

Witness.

The evidence of Mrs. Jones charges my brother David Davies and myself with certain things. I beg to say that my brother is too ill to be present himself. He was the first to put his name on the list of farmers to give evidence last April, this April 12 month.

47,614. May I point out that that has nothing to do with Mrs. Jones' evidence. You say he is ill and cannot come?—Yes. Of course, I have no medical certificate, because I attend him myself; but will you take my word.

47,615. Certainly?—I thank you. At question 45,643 of Mrs. Jones' evidence, she states that Dr. John Davies, Dr. Enoch Davies, and Mr. David Davies, three brothers, bought her farm. I say that that is not true, and further, that Mrs. Jones, when she gave this evidence, knew that that was not true.

47,616. What are the facts? What is the statement that is not true?—Dr. Davies and I were not parties to the sale.

47,617. But what are the facts as to the buying?—That Mr. David Davies bought it himself. Shall I give the documentary facts now.

See 44,409 –44,429.

47,618. Yes?—Mrs. Jones quotes a letter of Mr. Walters, Mr. David Davies' solicitor. I produce this letter from Mr. Walters, dated the 20th February, 1882, to her. "St. Mary Street, "Carmarthen, 20th February, 1882. Dear "Madam, Gilfachronow. I act for Mr. Davies, "of Bargoed Farm, the purchaser of this farm "at the recent sale of the Altyrodin estate. "The sale was made, as you are aware, subject "to the lease which is vested in you and which "is unexpired. My client would have no "objection to take the farm up next September, "if convenient for you, without having regard "to any breaches of covenant which may have "been committed by you. Of course, you must "not understand me as suggesting that there "has been any breach, for I know nothing of "the matter. If, however, you continue in "possession till the expiration of the lease, as I "presume you have a right to do, you will be "expected to conform strictly to the terms of "the lease, which I am told is a somewhat "stringent one. I think it well to apprize you "of these matters at this early period, so that "you may have an opportunity of making your "arrangements. I am, dear madam, yours "truly, Thos. Walters. Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, "Gilfachronow, Bangor, Teifi."

47,619. That is the letter quoted by Mrs. Jones?—Yes.

47,620. (To Mrs. Elizabeth Jones.) Is this a copy of the letter you received?—I cannot be certain. My letters are with them.

Lord Kenyon.

47,621–2. We may take it, Mr. Vincent, that it is substantially a copy.—(Mr. Vincent.) I have not seen it, but the original is in.

Lord Kenyon (to Witness).

47,623. I do not see that that rebuts any paragraph in her statement. It seems to me to bear it out?—The solicitor says that he acts for the purchaser, David Davies. I maintain that I did not buy this farm. I was not at the sale, nor had I anything whatever to do with it.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,624. Have you anything else to say?—Yes, Mrs. Jones seems to complain she was obliged to pay the rent quarterly. Will you take as evidence what my brother told me last night about this? I have no other means.

47,625. Very well?—I asked him last night how was this; did he ever press Mrs. Jones to pay quarterly, and he said no, but Mrs. Jones tendered it, and he accepted it, and she made the remark that she wished to keep strictly to the clauses of this lease.

47,626. Is there anything more?—Mrs. Jones also says that she visited my brother at Bargoed, and that my brother said he was very anxious to close up everything quietly and peaceably.

47,627. This is what Mrs. Jones says in her evidence. Please keep to the rebutting statement?—My brother told me last night that all that Mrs. Jones said that he had expressed about the buidings was not true.

47,628. It is not true that he said that she kept everything better than he had expected. Is that what you mean?—Yes; then later on Mrs. Jones seems to have been annoyed that she had received notice after the conversation, and after she had agreed with my brother to leave. I asked him why he gave her that notice, and he said that he was advised by Mr. Walters that he had better do so.

47,629. Who is Mr. Walters?—The solicitor.

47,630. You do not rebut the statement that notice was served?—Oh, dear no, but it was simply done as a matter of form according to the lawyer's advice. Then further on Mrs. Jones says that the animals were sent off the farm She seems to insinuate that my brother drove them off. If she meant that, it is not true. I asked my brother what was the difference in the two claims; one was for 33*l.* 17*s.* for repairs, and then the writ was for 95*l.* 17*s.* It arose like this. The first claim was simply for repairs for the buildings—dilapidations to the buildings—and when they could not settle this claim, and of course it was evident that they must go to law, he was advised to send the second claim in for non-compliance with the clauses regarding the land, the fences, and the gates, the drains, lime, and manure.

47,631. I understand you to say the claim of 95*l.* includes the claim in respect of the land?—The land and the houses, yes.

47,632. How could your brother put in a claim in respect of the land if the tenant had put in no claim. I thought the landlord could only counterclaim when there was some claim put in by the tenant?—Well, I cannot tell you, only that the lawyer advised him according to the clauses in that lease.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,633. You have got no other explanation?—I have no other.

47,634. I fancy I understood from Mrs. Jones (you will correct me if I am not right) that no details of that claim were afforded to Mrs. Jones at all?—I cannot say; I cannot prove it. Of course that is the difficulty.

47,635. You have nothing to say about it?—I cannot prove it.

47,636. You heard Mrs. Jones say so in evidence?—I did not understand her to say that.

47,637. I remember asking Mrs. Jones the question myself. I cannot deny it, of course.

47,638. Have you any statement of that claim to put in now? Have you got any details now?—No

Mr. Vincent.

47,639. It would be on the face of the particulars. Those are on the notes. (The particulars are printed at question 44,414.)

Lord Kenyon.

47,640. There are no particulars of the 95*l.* claim?—(Mr. Vincent.) Yes, my lord.

47,641. Mrs. Jones certainly said that she had not had particulars.

(Mr. Vincent.) I do not know whether I may explain that; it will simplify matters very much. I think Dr. Enoch Davies will agree. First of all an action is commenced, this is all between lawyers, after the statement of claim is delivered a summons is taken out for particulars of the amount claimed in the statement of claim. That really is a transaction between lawyers, and would probably not come to the notice of either of the individuals concerned.

47,642. (Witness.) May I say one word in explanation of my own? It is not rebutting, but just a word of explanation, if you will allow me.

47,643. Very well, but be as brief as you possibly can?—What I maintain is this, that I had nothing whatever to do with the buying of this farm, nor in the management of it in any way, but my brother came to me months after he bought it and said it was a heavy load on him, and asked me if I would take a third. I lived at the time in Glamorganshire, and, of course, it was nothing to me more than that I would help my brother in his trouble. In the spring of 1886 sometime, I speak from memory, I have no letters, I am sorry to say, the Rev. Thos. Thomas, a relation of Mrs. Jones, wrote to me and asked me if I was agreeable to settle this question out of Court. I wrote back and promised that I would. I met Mr. Thomas at Llandyssul, and we settled it in five minutes.

47,644. Is that all?—That is all. We accepted 25*l.*, and each side to pay his own law expenses. Mr. Thomas thanked me, and Mrs. Jones thanked me.

47,645. Then I may take it you do not rebut the statement that Mrs. Jones was outbid for the farm. You say simply that the only bidder was Mr. David Davies?—Yes, the evicted tenant.

47,646. But you do not rebut the statement that she was outbid?—Oh, no, certainly not.

47,647. You do not rebut the statement that the rent should be paid quarterly. You simply say it was an agreement that it should be paid quarterly?—I simply said what my brother told me, that she tendered it.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,648. As I understand it, your brother gave Mrs. Jones the option of either giving up the farm, or being held strictly to the terms of the lease?—Yes, that is what he told me. That is what this letter shows.

47,649. And you admit that the terms of the lease were rather stringent ones?—Yes.

47,650. We have been told that these stringent terms in leases, these penalising clauses, and so on, are very seldom enforced. Is not that so?—Yes, I believe it is so.

47,651. Then do you not think that there was a cause of complaint—that it looks, on the face of it, rather a cruel thing—to go to a tenant and say, "You must either give up your lease, or I "must put in force these penalising clauses"?—The only explanation I have is this: My brother had been evicted from this farm 10 years previously, and it was taken by his fellow brother-in-law over his head for the late John Jones, and there was a good deal of family feeling in it, and I have no doubt my brother was very anxious to go back to his old home. That is the only explanation I give. I do not defend anything.

47,652. Then whatever the reason for doing so, you admit that there was an act of harshness, and almost of injustice?—Not if we remember how he was turned away himself.

46,653. Two blacks do not make one white?—No, that is quite true, and that is the reason I am strongly against these agreements.

Mr. Richard Jones.

But may I remind Mr. Seebohm that the lease was a repairing lease, and if the tenant took the farm at possibly a reduced rent, binding herself to keep the place in repair, it is very different from an ordinary agreement with penalising clauses.

Mr. Seebohm.

But the 50*l.*, as I understand, were for breaches of the lease, and that was put in afterwards.

Lord Kenyon.

47,654. I have some questions to put to you by Mr. Vincent. "Do you rebut the notice to "quit; is it signed by you?"—Yes.

47,655. "Do you rebut your solicitor's letters?" —I know nothing about them. We left everything in the matter entirely to my eldest brother. We lived far away.

47,656. "Do you rebut the statement of claim for 33*l.* 17*s.*"?—No, I never saw it till I saw it in court, or heard of it.

47,657. This is all subsequent to the notice to quit which you signed?—Yes.

47,658. "Do you rebut the particulars, 90*l.* odd?"—No, I cannot; I do not deny it.

47,659. "Do you rebut your own valuer's "estimate, 30*l.* odd?"—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,660. "Do you rebut the fact that the "particulars are about three times the valuer's "estimate?" 95*l.* is about three times the 33*l.*?—Of course, I cannot say. I have explained to you how I was ignorant of the business.

47,661. "Do you rebut the fact that you were "part owner when action was taken against Mrs. "Jones?"—No.

47,662. "In your opinion, is it usual for "people to express a desire to fulfil remarkably "stringent covenants in a lease?"—No, I do not think they do.

47,663. "Does your explanation come to this, "that when your brother and you went to law "with the widow, you asked for every possible "penny?"—I daresay we did.

47,664. You were a party to the action, were you not?—Indirectly.

The witness withdrew

Mr. David Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

47,665. You are Mr. David Jones, and your statement has been examined and is correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

"I live at Commonfynydd, in the parish of Llanbadarn Trefeglwys, union of Aberayron. In the year 1869 I took the whole of Commonfynydd. I occupied a parcel of it before, and my father before me. The total rent for the entire holding previous to 1869 was 13*l.* 10*s.* I took it for 25*l.* per annum from my landlord, Mr. J. G. W. Bonsall, on the distinct understanding that he was to erect a new dwelling-house, and all the out-buildings. Beyond repairing a little of the cowhouses, he did nothing to fulfil his promise till 1891, three years ago, when the dwelling was patched up a little. In this period of 22 years we have paid 253*l.* unjustly, that is, according to 11*l.* 10*s.* per annum increase. Can you, gentlemen, do anything to assist me to retrieve this loss? When I paid the rent from time to time, my landlord kept constantly promising to send a man to see about the buildings, and at last he gave me a letter to give Mr. John Edwards, of Crynfryn, who acted as steward for him in my neighbourhood, which purported to authorise him to build the house. I gave the letter with my own hands to John Edwards, and he opened it there and then, and his son read it in my hearing, and the contents were, not to give me new buildings; and John Edwards remarked: 'There for you, you see for yourself that it is not my fault." In 1883, after some new Act of Parliament had been passed, Mr. Bonsall gave me notice that I must sign an agreement to be a tenant subject to six months notice, or quit. As I had employed two men for five years to fence, wire, and drain the land, I preferred to sign than to leave. Previous to that I could not keep an animal on the land if it was not that I had children to shepherd them (bugeila). I lived under exceptional disadvantages, because my landlord had proved unfaithful to his promise to build as he had pledged himself. Every winter the snow was blown into the houses, covering the cattle in the outhouse, and the beds in the dwelling house. We were obliged to carry it out Every winter I had to collect rushes in the bogs of the district, and I was compelled to thatch it in the wet condition in which I gathered it. Owing to this my knees and legs have become quite stiff, so much so, that I am almost unable to walk. Mr. Bonsall sold the holding this very year, and I am now under six months' notice. Will you please inform me if a six months' notice is a legal notice? I have been in England harvesting during 18 different seasons, and I found out that the English people could not imagine how we, Welsh tenants, were able to farm. In every place I saw in England the landlord sent workmen to make everything convenient and tidy for the tenant, and the landlord drained and did all at his own expense without giving any trouble to the tenant himself"

Lord Kenyon.

47,665A. Who was this model landlord in England?—Mr. Bonsall.

47,666. He is your own landlord; who was the model gentleman you quote in England?—I cannot name the landlord, but I have been to many different places in Gloucestershire and Worcestershire, Kidderminster, Ludlow, Droitwich, and different places.

47,667. If you sign an agreement with a clause to that effect, the six months' notice is legal?—It has been signed, I believe.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Timothy Thomas called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,668. Will you read your own evidence?—No, I cannot see.

47,669. Can you understand English?—Yes, a little.

47,670. Would you understand it if your statement was read in English?—Well, I am willing for it to be read out in English.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of Timothy Thomas, Penybanc, in the parish of Henfynyw, union of Aberayron. I have been the tenant of Penybanc aforesaid for 23 years. Up to nine years ago I spent my time on sea, and quite the greater part of my earnings on sea were annually used to pay the wages of a man servant, &c. For the last nine years I have supplied the place of a man-servant, and during that time I have not made 5*l.* out of the tenancy. My opinion from the long experience just mentioned is, that land is too dear and cannot be made to pay at the present rents. I ought to have said that my daughters have always worked to assist their mother, and that but for assistance that I receive I could not keep things going.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,671. Have you got anything to add to your statement?—No, I have not got anything; but I had a deal of assistance with my boys that are at sea at the present time, or else I could not live there. I have to work hard every day to keep things going, and I pay my way, that is all, I never had a penny for my work.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

47,672. We understand that from this statement you have nothing more to add?—No, I do not complain of my master—my landlord—at all, but if I was to give up my place somebody else would take it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,673. What is the acreage of the place? How large is it?—55 acres.

Lord Kenyon.

47,674. What rent do you pay?—28*l.*

57,675. Were you brought up on a farm?—No, I was not, I was brought up in another farm, but not there. I was in a farm till I was 16 years of age, and I went to sea then, and I have been at sea 35 years.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,676. Are there many people from this place who go out to sea?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,677. You think your living was safer on the sea than on land?—Well, my earning was better there; that is all I can tell you.

Lord Kenyon.

47,678. Mr. Vincent wants to know, "Did "you find that ploughing the seas was good "practice for ploughing the land"?—It was nothing like it. I could plough before I went to sea, and through that I could steer a good deal better than many that went to sea, I think.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,679. You are Mr. Evan Evans, of Pantygwiail?—Yes; I understand the evidence in English.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

See 49,150 –49,163.

Evidence of Evan Evans, Pantygwiail, parish of Dihewid, union of Aberayron, freeholder, formerly tenant farmer.

Up to the year 1888 I was a tenant of Lord Lisburne, at Fronddu, a farm of 193 acres, rental 90*l.* I succeeded my mother-in-law as tenant. When I took the holding I was obliged to ask for new buildings, as the old ones were in a hopelessly dilapidated condition. The agent, Mr. Gardiner, said that I might have the buildings upon the condition of my hauling all the timber, stone, &c., which I did. The new buildings consisted of stables, large shed, and barn, altogether 33 yards long. After completing these new buildings in the autumn of 1887, in the month of February, 1888, I was required to sign an agreement in which one of the conditions was that I should become tenant, subject to six months' notice. In a few weeks after the date upon which I signed the agreement, public notices appeared that my holding was for sale. On the 25th March in the same year I received notice to quit in the following September. The holding was sold accordingly, and all my investments in the new buildings in the way of haulage and labour was lost. In addition there was the worry, the cost, and loss connected with disturbance.

47,680. What was your estimate of the haulage?—From 50*l.* to 60*l.*

47,681. Have you put in a claim to Lord Lisburne?—Yes.

47,682. What answer did you get?—I did not have any answer.

47,683. Did you go to see Lord Lisburne or his agent?—The agent.

47,684. Did you get any answer out of the agent?—No.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,685. Had you to leave the farm?—Yes.

47,686. You think it hard that you received no compensation for the haulage, inasmuch as you had no enjoyment of it?—Yes, I was there two years afterwards.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,687. Do I understand you to say that they never gave you a reply at all?—Yes, no answer.

47,688. When you asked for compensation, they gave you no answer by letter or by word of mouth?—I was there with him myself.

47,689. What did he say to you then?—He said nothing.

47,690. Did you speak on the subject?—Yes, I asked him.

47,691. You asked him then about that particular matter?—Yes.

47,692. What did he say?—He said nothing. He was going on with other talk.

47,693. He never paid any attention to you at all?—No, not at all.

47,694. Neither he nor the landlord?—No.

47,695. Is that the way the tenants are treated on that estate usually, do you know?—I cannot say as to that.

47,696. Have you heard how other tenants are treated?—No; but they are all under the six months' notice.

47,697. Who gave you the notice, Lord Lisburne, or the new landlord, the purchaser?—The old one, Lord Lisburne.

47,698. Did you ask the new landlord to let you remain?—No, I did not. The place was to be sold.

47,699. You did not wait till it was sold?—Yes. I was there until it was sold.

47,700. Who bought it?—A neighbour close by, by the name of David Evans, of Pensarnfach 47,701. Did you ask him to let you remain?—No. I did not, because it was his purpose to buy to come and live there himself.

47,702. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,703. Was he a brother tenant farmer of yours?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,704. Besides the haulage, what other money had you sunk in the farm that you thought you were entitled to. Did you ask for anything except the haulage—the 50*l.* or 60*l.*?—No, I did not.

47,705. Did your neighbours think that you were entitled to anything like 50*l.* or 60*l.*; do you know what was the feeling of the neighbourhood?—Yes, all that knew the trouble and traffic that went towards it.

47,706. Was there any talk in the neighbourhood about the hardship of it?—I cannot say much about that.

47,707. What I want to get at is this: whether this claim was considered so frivolous by the landlord and the agent that no notice was taken of it, or whether it was well known that it was a real case of hardship?—I cannot say as to the neighbours, but all those that knew the matter could say so.

47,708. Who were they; how many?—I cannot say exactly who they were, but generally the people.

47,709. Are there any of them present here to-day?—I cannot say; I did not think of that.

47,710. Were there any of your neighbours in the same condition as yourself with complaints to make against the landlord when their farms were being sold?—No, none that I know of now were present.

47,711. But then?—No, I do not know of any one.

47,712. You were the only one?—Yes, at that time in our neighbourhood.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,713. Was your farm the only farm that was sold then?—Yes, in our neighbourhood there.

[A person in the Court was seen to speak to the witness.]

Lord Kenyon.

I cannot have any interference with the witness. I shall clear the bench behind if anybody interferes. Mr. Interpreter, will you make that quite plain in Welsh—that we will have no interference with the witness at all?

[An announcement to this effect was made in Welsh.]

Lord Kenyon.

47,714. Is there any representative of Lord Lisburne here?

(Mr. Vincent.) Mr. Gardiner is going to give evidence to morrow. Whether he is in Court now I do not know. See 49,010.

Lord Kenyon.

47,715. Is there any representative of Lord Lisburne or his agent in Court to-day? [No response.]

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time

Mr. John Morgan Howell recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,716. Do you wish to say anything, Mr. Howell?—Yes, I desire to explain one answer that I gave, I think, in answer to Mr. Richard Jones. Suffering from a little deafness, I was not quite able to catch what he asked. He asked me whether the preferential claim was detrimental to the tenant.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,717. No, I think this was the question—"Did you think that the preferential claim of "landlords was prejudicial to the other "creditors—to the tradesmen"?—Yes, I say it is. That is all I want to say. See 47,530.

Lord Kenyon.

47,718. At the same time, I think you said there is a great deal of credit given to the farmers?—Yes, there is a great deal of credit.

The witness withdrew.

The Reverend David Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,719. You are the Reverend David Davies, of Tanygraig?—Yes.

47,720. Do you give your evidence in English?—I would rather give it in Welsh.

47,721. Would you understand if your evidence was read in English?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

See 49,191. Evidence of David Davies, Calvinistic Methodist minister, and small freeholder, Tanygraig, in the parish of Nantcwnlle, county of Cardigan.

I was born and bred at Hafodhir, in the parish of Llanbadarn Trefeglwys, in the union of Aberayron, in the county of Cardigan. Hafodhir was in my time a farm of about 340 acres of arable and moorland. It is situated on a high hilly range. Its owner then was the Earl of Lisburne. I worked as a farm labourer, without wages, with my father, till his death in the year 1858. I was then 38 years of age. After his death I became the tenant. My father's rent was 50*l.*, mine was 70*l.* After my father's death, the stock and crop were divided between myself, my mother, my brothers and sisters, according to the provisions of my father's will. When I first remember the holding there were hardly any fences on it. My father and myself and my younger brothers erected some hundreds of perches of fences. No allowance was made to us except for half the cost of the boundary fences. We also gave our labour, and did all the haulage connected with the erection of the buildings, consisting of barn, stable, cow-houses, &c., for which we received no compensation. In 1868, some time before the general election, I remember meeting Mr. Gardiner, agent of Lord Lisburne, at Talsarn fair. Mr. Gardiner told me that a letter had reached Crosswood, saying that I was exerting myself on behalf of Mr. Evan Matthew Richards, the Liberal candidate, and that my influence was likely to operate powerfully against the Conservative candidate; that he wanted me to be quiet, and that that was all he asked of me. I replied, 'That I did not exert myself against the 'Conservative candidate, that I was a Liberal 'by conviction, and that I meant to vote for 'Mr. Evan Matthew Richards.' That ended the talk then. Just one week before the election day, Mr. Gardiner called upon me at Hafodhir, and on this occasion he asked me 'to vote for 'Mr. Vaughan, the Conservative candidate, that 'it was getting to close quarters with them.' I replied 'that I would not; that nothing would 'cause me to turn my back upon my convictions 'and my friends, whatever the consequences 'might be, and if there were to be "conse-'quences," that the responsibility for such must 'rest with him and Lord Lisburne.' So far as my memory serves me, the election took place in November. In the following March I received notice to quit. After this I went up to Crosswood several times to see Mr. Gardiner, and to ask him to withdraw the notice. My mother also went up, and she was piteously anxious to be allowed to remain at Hafodhir. I offered 80*l.* rent for being allowed to remain. Mr. Gardiner threw us off from time to time with ambiguous replies. It was not till July that we were explicitly told our fate. In July he came to Hafodhir in person, and spoke to me as follows:—'You refused to go with us at the 'election, Lord Lisburne does not know what to 'do with you, and at last he has given you up 'to me, and I am going to send you off, to make 'an example of you to your county for the next 'election.' I had to leave in September without a penny of compensation for unexhausted improvements. My eviction is only an ordinary specimen of the evictions that took place all through the county after the memorable election of 1868. A neighbour of mine, of the name of Thomas Evans, of Commonfynydd, who is now dead—a tenant of Mr. Bonsall, of Fronfraith, voted for Mr. E. M. Richards in the same election. He also received notice to quit in March 1869, and he had to leave in the month of September following. The old dread still lurks in the county. I know farmers who will not give evidence before this Commission because they fear they will be punished, if they do, in one form or another. The farmers are downhearted owing to being commercially crippled; and to lose, or to lay themselves liable to lose, any favours in the way of small allowances for repairs or temporary deductions in rent, is more than they are ready to risk in their present condition.

47,722. The size of the holding was 340 acres?—Three hundred and forty acres, about.

47,723. And the rent?—Seventy pounds to me.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,724. How much of that was fairly good land?—It was mountain land without any fields on it, the most part of it.

Professor Rhŷs (to the Interpreter).

He said something more than that.

47,725. How much of that was fairly good land?—Only about four or five fields when we went there first.

47,726. On it altogether?—Yes.

47,727. The rest was open ground for sheep, was it?—Yes. We raised many hundreds of perches of hedges on it.

47,728. How much money do you think you left in the land?—I cannot say at all how much my father or myself left there.

47,729. Can you give some idea?—We could not raise what we did of the buildings and the hedges for 100*l.*

47,730. You did not keep any account?—No, never.

47,731. Do the farmers now, do you think, keep accounts?—I do not know, but I did not.

47,732. It would be a good thing if all the farmers did keep careful accounts, do not you think?—Yes, of course.

47,733. Do the boys or the children now have enough schooling to keep proper accounts, do you think?—Yes, now.

47,734. What election was that you spoke of?—One thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight.

Professor Rhŷs.

We have heard a good deal about that. I will not ask anything further.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,735. Since the Ballot Act, do you think there would be any fear of a recurrence of that sort of thing?—No, I do not believe so, because they would not know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS DAVIES called and examined through an Interpreter.

47,736. You are Mr. Thomas Davies and you live at Bryn peithill, Llanddewi Aberarth?—Yes.

The following statement was read to the witness in Welsh, and afterwards read in English:—

Evidence of Thomas Davies, tenant farmer, of Bryn peithill, parish of Llanddewi Aberarth.

I became tenant of Bryn peithill (owner, Mr. A. T. Davies, Tyglyn isaf), in the year 1862, in the autumn. My rent was 16*l.* I remember three tenants there before me, who failed "to live," there. The houses were in a very dilapidated condition when I went there. The thatched roofs of the barn and cow-houses fell in during the first winter of my occupation. My landlord promised to rebuild in the following summer, and he did so, but I hauled everything for the outhouses and dwelling house without any compensation. In about five years after this work had been completed, my landlord died, leaving three sisters in charge of his property. They had a brother in Australia, but he did not return to take possession of his property for about three years. During this interval, the three sisters employed a man of the name of Mr. Valentine to look after the property. One of the first acts of his was to give the tenants notice to quit, for revaluation. The revaluation took place, and my rent was put at 21*l.*, an advance of 5*l.* I ought to have mentioned that I had put up 35 perches of new fences, and had rebuilt most of the old ones, at my own expense. I was a bit loath to take the tenancy at the advanced rental, because it was an advance, to a great extent, on my own labour. Because I did not show anxiety enough to take the tenancy at the advanced rental, I was told by Mr. Valentine, when I went to Tyglyn, that I should not have the farm for any price. I was, therefore, compelled to hold a sale in the autumn of 1871, and I sold all my stock and crop. My wife died on the night of the sale. I appealed to Mr. Valentine to appoint two valuers to meet two valuers whom I would appoint, to value the improvements which I had made at my own expense, and that I would be quite satisfied, if they adjudged that I deserved no compensation. He absolutely refused During this time, my second son, David, and his sister, went to Tyglyn more than once. They were much impressed by the death of their mother, and were very loath to leave the place. They agreed to take the holding at 25*l.* per annum, in spite of my remonstrances, this being 4*l.* in advance of the new valuation. In the course of three years, Mr. Davies, the brother, returned from Australia. I stated the circumstances aforesaid to him, and appealed to him to readjust the rental. He replied that he was going to sell Bryn Peithill. In a short time I received notice to quit for the purpose of selling. The sale was advertised accordingly, and took place at Aberayron, but Bryn Peithill was not sold. In about two years afterwards, I received another notice to quit for the purpose of selling, and the farm was, on this occasion sold to Mr. Gwynne, Monachty. I complain that the rent in the first instance was advanced to a great extent on my own labour, that it was put 4*l.* higher than even the new valuation, and that it was bought by Mr. Gwynne, most probably, upon the rent, and that thus land is sent up to an artificial value based on the occupier's labour. Furthermore, there can be no peace of mind, nor heart to work in any tenant, who, like myself, was constantly, from one cause or another, under notice to quit.

Lord Kenyon.

47,737. Where do you live?—At Brynpeithill.

47,738. Where does your landlord live?—In Australia he lived at that time, and subsequently at Tyglyn.

47,739. Who are his representatives now?—Do you mean the first Mr. Davies?

47,740–2. Yes, is there any representative of that landlord? I want to know, because you make some charge against him?—No, he has not sold it all.

47,743. Is there any representative of that late landlord alive now?—That gentleman now has children of his own. [A voice—The late landlord is alive now, I know him. He is a cousin of mine, and he is living in London.]

47,744. Where? I want to have his address?—They now live the other side of London; they have left Tyglyn.

Mr. Richard Jones.

47,745. Do you know cases where rents have been advanced for the purpose of sales?—Mr. Valentine raised the rent to that amount in my case, and my wife at that time was poorly, on her deathbed.

47,746. Do you mean to the 25*l.* or the 21*l.*?—21*l.* I mean now, and I did not go directly to Tyglyn at the time. I have been improving the land by liming and working hard myself. I put 30 quarters of lime every year.

47,747. I want to get at the facts of the case. When was the rent raised from 21*l.* to 25*l.* You say that the children took the place at 25*l.*?—Then I went to Tyglyn myself, and I would not take the place for any money myself at all, because I did not go there in time.

47,748. That is at the sum of 21*l.*?—I never took it for 21*l*, but the valuation was 21*l.*, and the steward then told my children that they would have it for 25*l.*

47,749. Was Mr. Valentine aware then that the place was to be sold?—No, he was not, because Mr. Davies, the Australian gentleman, had not come home at that time. He knew that he was coming.

47,750. Why did the children take the place at 4*l.* above the valuation, knowing partly, at any rate, that the place could not pay them?—They called upon a neighbouring farmer, Daniel Jenkins, of Coed, and this Daniel Jenkins told my children, "If I was your father I would "take it for three years, to receive some re-"coupment for the improvements that I made "on it, and the lime I put in it."

47,751. But what is the good when they are paying an extra rent?—They had not then taken their place they had not taken the place at that time.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

47,752. But Daniel Jenkins was making a suggestion to that effect?—My children told Daniel Jenkins they would have it for 25*l.*, and then Daniel Jenkins told them it would be better for them to take the place for three years.

47,752. I will just ask one question to clear it up; did they take it in order to work out the place, or did they take it because they were attached to the place?—They were telling me that if they went from there at that time they would feel that their mother was left there after them. That was what my children always thought.

47,754. They did not like to part with the old home?—They did not like to leave it like that at once.

Lord Kenyon.

47,755. Some questions are handed up by Mr. Thomas Davies: "How much did the union "valuer in 1888 value Brynpeithill in the "gross"?—They value much too high. They valued it nearly 20*l.*; but I brought much of it down from that.

47,756. "Did you appeal and get the 25*l.* gross valuation reduced to 21*l.*"?—I do not understand you.

47,757. What is the acreage?—About 65, I believe. Some land there is not worth 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre.

47,758. There are some questions by Mr. Vincent: "Is Mr. Valentine alive"?—No, he is not. Mr. Davies is alive.

47,759. "How long did you enjoy the result of your haulage"?—Before I had notice?

47,760. No, while you were there, before you left?—It was about five years that I was there having quietness to work, but I was under notice since then all along.

47,761. How long were you there from the beginning of the haulage till the time you left?—I say that it was five years.

47,762. Was it only five years from the building of the house to the time you left?—I have not left yet. I mean the change of landlords.

47,763. How long is it since that building was put up?—About 30 years ago.

47,764. Then what have you got to complain of about the haulage. You are still enjoying the results of it, are you not?—I have no complaint except that I am paying too much rent by 4*l.* every year.

The witness withdrew.

Major Price Lewes called and examined

Lord Kenyon.

47,765. You are Major Price Lewes, late of the Royal Artillery, but now retired?—Yes. I should not have been here to-day, being a very small landowner in Cardiganshire, but that I wish to urge what I think would be a great improvement in our agricultural districts 47,766–7. You live at Tyglyn Aeron, Ciliau Aeron, South Wales?—Yes. As I am here perhaps I may be allowed to speak a few words with regard to other matters first. I would speak first with regard to the relations that I have with my own tenants. I have been in possession about 16 years.

47,768. How big is the estate?—About 1,000 acres altogether. For the last 11 years, almost ever since I left the Army, I have managed the small estate myself. I may say, then, that I have always had the most excellent relations with my tenants, and I believe my predecessors before me had the same, going a very long way back. We have never had the slightest difficulty one way or the other, and I must say, if I may be allowed, that I think it is the exception in this county of Cardigan, in the estates of any size, to find any different result so far as I know. I heard this morning two things stated which I should like to say what I think about. One was the fear of tenants—the fear of farmers to come forward. I do not believe in it. Having managed my own little estate, and having to deal with the farmers, having attended board of guardians pretty regularly for 11 years, being born in this county, and having spent now a good deal of my life in Wales, I think better of my countrymen. They are a far more independent body of men than that. I utterly repudiate that. They are not of that craven nature. I was not in the country much in those days, nor did I interest myself in politics at that time, but before the ballot in those days I daresay there may have been cases of fear; I do not say there were not, but I maintain that to-day there is nothing of the kind. That is my opinion. Another statement that was made was that there was great competition for the farms, in fact, almost leading up to the idea of a land hunger. I read in the paper that something of the same kind was said in Carmarthenshire lately. Well, there may be a good many competitors for a farm when it comes up, but I deny entirely, so far as my experience goes, that one man goes over another man's back to bid a higher price. I have never had a man coming forward and saying, "I will give more than Tom "Jones, or Timothy Jenkins, or anybody else." It is rather in this way, that a man waits until you can say to him that you are clear of the other man. That is my view of it, and that is how I have found it. I do not believe in it. Now, with regard to a land court, I do not believe that a land court is required in Wales, nor do I believe that the best farmers want it. I believe it would only tend to create ill-feeling where excellent good feeling prevails at present.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

It would rather tend to make a very mercantile affair of the letting of land, and the taking of it. I think that the landlord will, if that comes to pass, insist on his rent the day it is due. He will be more like the landlord in a town. I have lived in a town, and had to pay my rent—I had to pay it to the day it was due. I did not get three months, or six months, or more credit. I had to pay it the day it was due, and I think it would come to very much of a hard and fast arrangement between landlord and tenant if that came about. I do not believe the land court would hurt the good landlord at all. I do not think anything will hurt him; but I do not believe the farmers want it themselves. I heard myself, in a meeting of farmers, one of the best farmers in this district, speak, and what he said was, "I do not want a land court." I think it will be an evil day for the tenant when a land court is established in Wales. Now, with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, I cannot make out why farmers have not availed themselves more of that Act. It always seemed to me a very fair Act as between landlord and tenant, but I believe myself that they have not availed themselves of that Act in Wales. I think a great deal of it is through ignorance on their part. I will say this: I heard myself the farmer I referred to just now, an excellent good man, one of the best men in Cardiganshire, say that all he wanted was that when he made improvements on his farm, the value of those improvements should be secured to him. Well, I am sure all landlords want the same thing, and he himself said that he did not know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. Well, I thought that was very odd. However, I believe that they really do not know, but I do think this, that if anything is required it is perhaps—I do not think so myself, but if it is thought that anything more is wanted than that Act, let that Act be widened and extended to some degree, let it be printed in Welsh, and circulate it through every board of guardians in Wales. Now, with regard to the undoubted depression in agriculture which has existed not only in Wales but everywhere, accentuated last year by the very dry season and the difficulty in selling store cattle,—that hit the farmers in these parts more than anything. Well, how can we wonder at a depression in agriculture when this island is made the dumping ground of all the surplus agricultural produce of the world, contributing nothing to the revenue or to local taxation, carried on our railways for preferential rates, foreign meat sold by many very dishonest dealers labelled best English beef and mutton? I say that that is most unfair to our farmers. Talk to any farmer—I have talked to scores of them—and that is the first thing they say, "How unfair "that all this stuff should come into our "country without contributing a halfpenny to "our local taxation, we hard pressed farmers,

Lord Kenyon—continued.

" and labelled 'English meat.' It is most unfair." Again, I will dwell just for a moment on one other cause of the depression. I do not say that agriculture is very hard hit by it, but still it is to some degree, and that is the low prices that we suffer in common with other industries in Great Britain, and in common with other mono-metallic countries of Europe, from those countries having excluded silver from their currency. I myself think that that has a great deal to do with the question of low prices. It is a very difficult question to enter into, and it is little known in the country, but I think myself that it is daily becoming more known, and the question of the appreciation of the sovereign is being better understood — the industrial classes are beginning to understand it. It will take some time to permeate through them, but they will understand presently that the demonetization of silver is responsible in a great measure for the low prices existing at present in all industries in England. These low prices in Europe and in England have started from the time—almost from the time when demonetization of silver took place, and I think that one of these days—one of these tolerably early days—the industrial classes will find out that when we come to bimetallism, prices will rise, but their wages will also rise at the same time, and trade will be enormously benefited and increased. If I might be allowed, I would suggest what would tend to the improvement of agriculture generally. First, cheap and easy transfer of land; secondly, advances by the Government at low rates of interest where landlords are willing to sell and tenants to buy their farms—the Government to loan their money, the redemption to extend over a long period. Thirdly, I would advocate the same for buildings and improvements both to landlord and tenant—both to landlord and purchaser, I would say—to landlord or purchaser. Fourth, the labelling of all foreign meats as such. The fifth and sixth I shall advance; I expect they will be jibed at, but no matter. A very small duty on all food supplies imported into Great Britain. I cannot myself see why the beast bred in the Western States of America or in Texas, not paying one fraction of local taxation, or anything of that sort, should come into this country without payment of anything. I would put it very small, but still I would have it, and I would have it on all foods. Sixth, bimetallism. Now I come to the last, which is the main thing on which I wish to address you, and that is improved and cheapened railway transport for agricultural produce, both with regard to the existing railways, and by means of State-aided light railways. It is now nearly five years ago since this matter was brought up in the first County Council of Cardiganshire. It was very well received indeed, so much so that the whole council voted unanimously for the motion, which was that other county councils should be invited to join with Cardiganshire, in brief, to bring about these light railways. There was very little response made at the time, but I can safely say this: I do not think you can speak to a farmer, or anyone in this county of Cardigan, five miles from the Manchester and Milford Railway, but he would go with you in saying that that was the greatest need that we have in Cardiganshire. I may say that we have hardly got a railway in Cardiganshire. We have got the Manchester and Milford between Carmarthenshire and Cardiganshire, but we have this great wide area from the Manchester and Milford to the sea without any railway communication at all. Nearly every foreign country, and our great colonies, India, and Australia, and Canada, all assist railway communication by Government means. Every country in Europe is going ahead with light railways, and making them. What for?—to benefit agriculture. We alone are behind. We, do nothing in that way. Our great companies which serve us so well as main lines, do nothing to help agriculture. What will they do if you propose a railway, unless a great lead mine is at the other end, not a lead mine, that would not pay them at all, but a gold mine at the other end They will do nothing for us. I saw in the "Times," the other day, a very good suggestion, a name for what is required. They said we have our railway highways, but we want their byeways as well. We want railway byeways to assist our agriculture. I do not speak with regard to Cardiganshire or Wales alone, but I speak of the whole of Great Britain. We want to assist our agriculture, and that is one of the first things. The best thing that Government can do is to assist, by Government money, in building these light railways—building them themselves, or assisting them—do it in any way you like, but let us have these railway byeways. Cardiganshire is exceedingly unfortunate in railways. I was talking to two old men not very long ago, and they described to me the roads in Cardiganshire—what their fathers told them it was at the beginning of this century. I think I am right in saying that horses went along with pack saddles even then, and then they came to poles—a very useful thing in a rough country—making a kind of sledge trailing behind them. Then at last they built a road about two miles from Aberayron to Lampeter, and after that they began to have the benefits of roads. What a fearfully uncivilised condition this county must have been in then. I think it is Meyrick who says in his History of Cardiganshire, written at the end of the last century, talking of the excellent breed of horses you read of, that they were about 13 hands high. He mentions the horses on a particular farm as being very excellent.

47,769. Where would you run these railways from and to?—Well, we will start from here. The first one that occurs to me is from here to Lampeter, and eventually to Llandilo. That would be an enormous improvement here, cutting through the centre of Cardiganshire. That would bring the cattle dealers easily right into the centre of Cardiganshire. Not only that. Here is a point I want to make about that—in the summer-time it is the fashion for people from Glamorganshire to come down here in great numbers to the sea. They come down, I think, I may say, in thousands during the season, but I maintain that if we only had this railway from Llandilo, this little town that we are in would become a thriving place; they would come in their thousands from Glamorganshire.

47,771. Would you get local aid as well as Government aid?—Yes, certainly you would.

47,772. You think the county would contribute?—Yes, certainly. When a railroad was talked of from here—that very one I speak of, by Llanrhystyd to Llanilar, there was at once a good deal of money subscribed. I am told 15,000*l.* was subscribed in Aberayron here. Those are three railways that I name at once. With regard to the gauge, some people say you must have the same gauge as the ordinary lines, Well, I quite agree with that if that is possible, but if we cannot have that, for goodness sake let us have a smaller gauge. Other countries use smaller gauges; why should not we? Of course there is the objection of the transhipment, but still there it is; that is a very small matter. What we want are railways to benefit the country. I will not trouble you with any further remarks about it, but I do hope this, that your Commission will recognise that very pressing need of Cardiganshire particularly, and for the whole of Wales. I do say it is one of the most important things, and one of the things that would benefit farmers in this country enormously.

47,773. I think every witness whom we have asked has said the same as you—that they would be much in favour of light railways?—I am glad to hear it.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,774. With regard first to these railways, of course the great thing is to come to some practical solution of the question. You would advocate, I understand, that the State should find a part of the money, and that the county council should find part of the money, and that the landlords should give up their land, if not gratis, at agricultural prices?—I may say at once from what I can make out, I doubt if landlords would give their land, but, I believe, that all would be agreed to give it at fair prices.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

47,775. At agricultural prices?—Well, I can only speak for myself. I should be very glad to do so.

47,776. Then with regard to the small gauge, what is the objection to the small gauge. Is it the change from one system to another?—The change of material from one truck to another.

47,777. Could not that be met by, say three small trucks being so constructed as to go on to one big one, or something like that?—Yes, to be hoisted up.

47,778. Is there any other objection to small gauge that you could think of?—That is the only objection that I have heard of.

47,779. Then with regard to the rest of your evidence, there is just one point I should like to put to you. Do not you think the cheap and easy transfer of land and loans to purchasers, and so on, would raise the value of land—raise the price of land, I mean?—It would raise the price of land.

47,780. In other words, would the farmer get the benefit of the money lent by Government, in the low price?—Yes, I think he would.

47,781. Would it not tend to competition?—I believe this. I should like myself to see a larger number of holders. I think the Settled Estates Act was one of the most blessed things ever given to this country. I should like to see the number of holders of land increased to a very great extent. I believe myself—I do not think I shall be alive to see it, but I think the day will come probably when land may be much dearer than it is in England, but everything will be much better then, but I do not think the immediate result will be to increase the price of land.

47,782. You think the advantage of the low rate of interest that the Government would charge would not increase the competition for farms, so as to raise the price to a higher amount?—No, I do not.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,783. As to one of those railways, I think you said the money is subscribed, or a large part of it, for constructing it?—Yes, it was at a period of election times. The late David Davies, ex M.P. for Cardiganshire, the great railwayman, I believe, told the Aberayron people that if they would find half the money he would find the other half.

47,784. Is it not the fact that one of these schemes was dropped because some of the landowners about here either refused to give land or refused to give it at a reasonable price?—I think what you must be referring to must be the line up the Vale of Ayron. It may have been as far back as in 1865. I was talking the other day to the engineer who, I believe, made that offer—I was talking to him a few days ago, in fact.

47,785. I know. I have heard some talk to that effect, and your mention of it brought it to my mind?—I will tell you exactly what this engineer told me—the man, in fact, who made the offer. He offered to build the railroad at so much a mile if the landowners would give the land, and his words to me were: "They "would not give the land, and the reason was "that they hoped another contractor was "coming along who would give them better terms." That is what he told me.

47,786. If you had a railway from here to join the Manchester and Milford, I suppose you would expect to bring to bear competition on the rates inland, would you not?—Well, that might happen.

47,787. What is the proportion in expense of sea carriage and railway carriage?—Between where?

47,788. Carriage by sea is supposed to be cheaper, is it not?—I suppose it is from Bristol to Aberayon, or from any place to Aberayron.

47,789. I was rather staggered by the statement which I heard this very morning, about half way between here and Lampeter, that coal is cheaper at Lampeter than it is at Aberayron—a seaport town?—Well, I expect at Aberayron they suit the prices; they know what a man must pay when he goes to Lampeter.

47,790. But that would tell both ways?—Well, it does, yes. I suppose then it is cheaper at Lampeter.

47,791. It is cheaper about Lampeter?—Yes, I think it is. Well, it is cheaper to me to buy coal at Aberayron, because I live four miles from it, and I can make two trips in the day.

47,792. I do not mean that?—You mean the actual price.

47,793. The actual price?—Well, I am not sure the same coal goes there, for one thing. I never get the same sort of coal at Aberayron that I do at Lampeter.

47,794. But is it better at Aberayron?—Well, they are both good in their way. I am not very well up in that subject, to tell you the truth.

Lord Kenyon.

47,795. What Professor Rhŷs means, I think, is that there is something wrong in the sea-borne rates?—I wish you would ask these questions of an Aberayron gentleman, who will follow me presently. I think he is very well up in it all.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,796. I assume that railway rates are generally very high, but why should freights by sea be so high?—Well, I suppose they want as much as they can get.

47,797. Anyhow, I suppose we have not got all the data. Now, with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, you seem to expect that the people should have taken it up more in this part of the country, but we have had a suggestion several times from legal men that they were not at all surprised, since the Act was so badly constructed that it was not easy to understand or to make it workable. You do not think so, do you?—Well, it seems to me a very easy Act; at least so it appeared to me, not being a lawyer, to provide for the difficulties of the case.

47,798. Yes; but you would not say it was an easy Act for people, generally, to understand, would you?—Well, I could not see any difficulty in it. I have not read it myself lately. I studied it at the time it came out. I have not looked at it lately. It seems to me a very simple thing for a tenant, if he wishes to get drainage, to go to his landlord, and, in accordance with that Act, give notice that he wishes to make it, and that kind of thing; but, as a rule, they do not do that.

47,799. Then you said you would like to see the number of freeholders very much larger?—Yes.

47,800. What do you think of those who are small freeholders in these parts, now—perhaps there are none though?—Well, that all depends on how they have bought their land. That is one argument of mine for Government loans. I am afraid some of them have bought their places with borrowed money at too high a rate of interest.

47,801. But then, I am afraid, that what my colleague has suggested, would follow. If I can borrow money at 3 per cent. I can offer more for the farm, and outbid John Jones, or Tom Davies, or William Thomas, whoever it may be, who has to pay 4 per cent.?—I do not think that would be the case.

47,802. I am sure there is room for fearing that it would. How do your tenants generally succeed. Do relatives follow one another?—Yes.

40,803. You seldom have a farm to let to an outsider?—Certainly not. If there is a son there, or a widow, decidedly not.

47,804. You do not turn out the sons or the widows?—Certainly not.

77,805. That is, if they are fairly competent farmers?—Certainly not.

47,806. You spoke of the excellent relations between landlord and tenant; that is very valuable evidence, and we have had a great deal of it before, but you must be aware that there is something different to be heard also every now and then. Perhaps you heard the evidence we had this morning?—Well, I spoke with regard to myself and my tenants ever since I have had to do with the property, and under my predecessor. As far as I know on nearly all estates—what are called estates in Cardiganshire—it is the same.

47,807. I do not know whether you were here when that last man gave evidence this morning?—Yes.

47,808. I would like to ask you if you treat your tenants in that way. He had asked for compensation, and he had not even had a reply?—Do you refer to Lord Lisburne's tenant?

47,809. Yes.—Well, I should like to hear what Lord Lisburne's agent said before I decided about that. If he did not give a satisfactory answer I should think it would be a very hard case, and a very unusual one.

47,810. You think that is a most unusual case?—Most unusual.

Professor Rhŷs.

I am very happy to think so too.

Lord Kenyon.

47,811. I have several questions to put to you; one from Mr. D. Lloyd, "Does the produce "of foreign countries come here except in "exchange for the produce of this country"?—All the surplus stuff of the world comes here. Of course, if he wants to enter into an argument as regards exchange, that will be a long matter.

47,812. Exactly. I do not think we can go into that. Then this is a question by Mr. Evan Hughes, of Dihewyd, "You referred to a very "well-known farmer, who personally did not "want a land court. Did the meeting, in which "that particular farmer expressed that opinion, "concur with him"?—That I cannot say. There was no dissentient voice to what he said.

47,813. This is a question by Mr. J. M. Howell, "Did the farmers, at the public meeting you "attended, express a fear that a light railway "might send up the price of land without "proportionately benefiting the farmer"?—A good deal of the meeting was in Welsh, which I am not a good enough Welshman to understand. Mr. Howell, who was acting as chairman there, interpreted it to me, but I did not understand that. I do not recollect that to have taken place. You say that it might send up the price of land?

47,814. Yes, without proportionately benefiting the farmer?—Yes, I now remember. That was in a casual conversation at the door after the meeting was over. The farmer I referred to did put that forward, and another farmer, an excellent neighbour of mine, at once sprang forward and said that he happened to live at Llanybyther on a farm when a railway was mooted there and built there, and he said that from the enormous advantage that he had he recognised the advantages of railroads at once. Then, said the other farmer to him, "Why did "you come down to our part at all"? He very naturally said, "I had not a place to go to, the "estate on which my family lived had been "sold, and I was out of a farm, so I came down "here." But he spoke very strongly in favour of railways, having had practical experience of the benefit.

47,815. I suppose it would be going rather back to the dark ages to suggest that railways should not be put up because they would not benefit any particular class. I mean to say railways are an inestimable benefit to the country, wherever they are?—Yes, I should imagine so. Well, my Lord, referring to the county council meeting in which all this talk of five years ago took place, an alderman, who now, I am sorry to say, has gone over the bourne, a very intelligent man, spoke in support of it, and he did not know, I think, until he received the agenda paper, that it was coming forward; he said, "Of all the 10 notices on the agenda "paper this is the best"; and he spoke the truth; at least I do not know that he spoke the truth about that, but it was a good motion.

47,816. Then, Mr. Howell asks, "Did not the "good farmer whom you referred to as not "wanting a land court, say that he required "something more than the Agricultural Holdings "Act secured for the tenant?"—Yes, he did. He spoke very well and very properly about it. The tendency of his speech was this, that he wanted to be perfectly secure that if he put 100*l.* into the ground he should have it out of it again, and no man could say anything to the contrary.

47,817. "You said that you believed that "farmers were not as craven as described by a "witness in the morning, but have you not read "in the records of the doings of the Commission "enough to bring home to your mind that "farmers had reason to fear to come before the "Commission"?—Well, I refuse to credit it. There may be cowardly fellows among any class, but all I can say is that they are cowards if they are afraid to come forward. What is there, I should like to know, to prevent any man coming forward.

47,818. This is a question by Mr. J. J. Jones, "If the relation between the landlord and "tenant is so satisfactory at present, how do you "account for the numerous changes on the "Brynog estate of late?"—Perhaps the writer of that would refer to which changes he means, because I do not know what changes he refers to. As a matter of fact, I know of one farm that has not been let out for some time. I do know that, but I do not know what changes he refers to. I do not know of many tenants having changed. If he will refer to the particular farms he means I will answer.

47,819. I do not think we can go into that detail now. We have a tremendous lot of witnesses before us. Then there is this question by Mr. Vincent, "Do you, in fact, agree with me "in thinking that what is really wanted is an "adequate law of compensation?—Yes, my Lord.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,820. You are Mr. Thomas Davies, of Compton House, Aberayron?—Yes, my Lord. I appear before you as an independent witness, and not representing any particular party or association. I have been a postmaster for the last 20 years, and have also carried on a business as a contractor and builder for the last 25 years. My general evidence will be on the district comprising the Aberayron union, for which I have been district surveyor for the last 15 years.

and my particular evidence, if necessary, on anything pertaining to the Monachty estate, which comprises about 4,000 acres, and for which, and the manor of Llyswen, I am a sub-agent.

47,821. You have a statement there?—Yes.

47,822. Will you kindly read it?—Certainly.

In my monthly rounds of the Aberayron highway district for the last 15 years, at all seasons of the year, I have taken particular notice of many things concerning the farmer and his mode of living.

Buildings.—The buildings vary a great deal in the different parishes. Some landlords purposely leave the old thatched buildings to become so dilapidated that they cannot be repaired, and then build a complete new homestead of splendid buildings, the farmer doing nothing to help, and then arrange with the tenant as to certain extra rent on account of buildings. Another class of landlords, whose farms are very reasonable, expect the tenant to keep the buildings in repair; and if they want any new addition, such as sheds, &c., they must do it themselves, the landlord feeling satisfied that he lets his land so much under adjoining estates that the tenant can well afford it. The other class keep on regular doing little repairs at different farms, and putting up a part of new building in rotation, year by year, without raising any of the rent, the tenant doing the haulage. The tenants of the first-mentioned landlords are never so happy in the new homestead as in the old, and generally the parlour and best kitchen is seldom used, the family living and eating in the out kitchen. The tenants of the very cheap farms with poor buildings, when they do build themselves, do so without any method, and in the most primitive way, but having built them themselves, and often with their own hands, they value it very much; and when a change of landlord takes place, or the farm is sold, it is, generally speaking, between this class of landlord and tenants that difficulties arise when the rent is raised. It is the third system of building that sits the easiest with the tenants in this district. They are adverse with doing away with old associations even in their out-buildings, especially for the old style of a large kitchen with open chimney, paved floor, and fire on the hearth, and, unless the haulage is very heavy, they do not grumble at it. There has a great change taken place in the buildings during the last 20 years; the districts which used to be the worst are now the best, the old mud walls and thatched roof buildings having given place to stone walls and slates. At this progress, 20 years hence there will not be much to grumble at as to buildings.

Planting.—There is nothing so important to farmers in the upland parts of the county as shelter, and there is nothing of which the county is so devoid. Landlords as a rule plant in dingles and in sheltered places simply for the sake of the crop of timber; and there are numerous groves of first-class larch all over the county, some larch in the Vale of Ayron measuring 120 feet high, and containing 50 solid feet of timber. But all this is beside the question. What is wanted is systematic planting in long beltings along the high ridges of the county of hardy trees for shelter only, that cannot be cut down. If this was done, say from Cro-shands and Bank Shon Quilt all the way towards Cardigan, in 30 years the land on both sides of it would produce double what it does at present. The same might be said of the neighbourhood of Nebo and Penuwch. Some few landlords in the beginning of this century did a little of this, and it is astonishing to see the effect it has had on those neighbourhoods.

Tenants, two classes.—I mean by this, one class of tenants holding farms of 50*l.* and under, and the other above 50*l.* to 150*l.* The Aberayron Union was valued in 1888 by a competent valuer, and according to the gross rental, which did not average more than 10 per cent. under the rentals, in that valuation there are only 34 tenant farmers above 100*l.*; 64 from 70*l.* to 100*l.*; 77 from 50*l.* to 70*l.*; 154 from 30*l.* to 50*l.*; leaving the bulk of the tenants, 80 per cent. of them, under 30*l.* gross valuation. It would be thought that the Small Holdings Act of 1892 would meet the want of Cardiganshire in particular for these small holders to become their own freeholders, but such has not been the case. If these tenants were converted to freeholders, they would make their holdings very soon to bear double their present crops. But as to the tenants of 50*l.* and upwards, who have to pay a man-servant or two and two servant girls, the outlook is very different. In some counties the consolidation of farms means the possibility of making them pay. But in Cardiganshire the tenant of 15*l.* to 30*l.* is the one who is going to weather the storm, as he and his wife and a child or two do all the work. It is the large farmers in this district that feel the depression most, as the seasons have been very hard of late years and prices low. The average price of land in the Union is 8*s.* 6*d.* per acre.

Agreements and leases.—There are but very few in the Union who hold their farms by lease, and fewer still who now desire to have them; unless a farm happens to be very cheap; then there might be a desire for it; and by observation I find that those who have leases do not farm anything better than those without. If anything, it is the other way. Many hold their farms by word of mouth only. This has led often to litigation, and is of disastrous consequences to landlord and incoming tenant, the outgoing tenant, for spite, cutting down every bush about the house and all the hedges, and otherwise doing wilful damage to the buildings, &c. There is nothing better for a landlord and tenant than a reasonable agreement. I have seen many of the old agreements full of penal clauses, but do not remember it ever being put in force in this neighbourhood; and I have seen farmers that would work out of any agreement that could be devised.

Landlords, Large and Small.—It was an unfortunate day for the county when the large old estates were broken up to be sold. The saying is a truism, the larger the estate the better for the tenant; and taking the landlords who have land in this Union, they will compare favourably with any similar situated in the country. That there are some better than others is true. It is also true that many acts of questionable character, and even hardships, have been committed on their estates during the last 40 years. And, after admitting this, it is my opinion that it will be impossible to devise any form of tenure that will work, as a whole, better than the large landlords. The failings of this class will be well ventilated here to-day. So that I can treat on what has not been touched, viz.:—

The Small Landlords.—The first are those farmers who have inherited freehold farms of their own. Being in easy circumstances, they see a much larger farm vacant close by with a large landlord; they take it at very reasonable rent, and then let their own freehold for the highest rent possible to secure, and no abatement for depressed times. I could mention many. The second class of small landlords are those who have bought farms at sales and let them quite irrespective as to what they cost (whether cheap or dear) for the highest possible penny; and their petty interferences are unbearable. These landlords, as a class, have been the curse of agriculture (I admit that there are noble exceptions). The class of landlord I speak of are the successful shopkeeper, the sea captain, the tradesman, and others. They screw the very marrow out of their tenants, and pass them by like the Levite in the parable. I have many of these now in my mind, but as some might think that I have any personal spite in the matter, I will be so merciful as not to name them. But I will give typical cases well known to scores present. A tradesman buys three small farms at very reasonable prices. At once he rises the (old Tory landlords') rent, 30, 50, and 100 per cent. Another bought a farm fairly rented at a fair price. In it was a hard-working and good tenant. He was offered the place at 33 per cent. advance, this he pleaded he could not pay and live, he offered a small advance but to no good; he was evicted and sought shelter with a Tory landlord six miles distant. The two landlords mentioned above were methodist deacons, and their tenants were non-conformists. I will give another type of the rare good small landlord. He bought three farms near the above, built on them, and takes great pride in his tenants, and refused 5*l.* advance by a new tenant who wanted the farm of a sitting tenant. This landlord is a stray Yorkshireman, and a rag and bone merchant by trade, and his name is Mr. Henry Loyn.

Difference of language of landlord and tenant.—So far as the actual bargain of taking and letting a farm goes, this difference is immaterial as always there is a neighbour present who interprets. But for the mutual sympathy between the parties afterwards it does interfere greatly. So far as the generality of landlords goes, their sympathy, and that of their families, is always with the tenant, and those who are in distress. But the tenant, being wholly Welsh, cannot appreciate it, and many in their inward hearts have formed erroneous views of their landlords, simply because they cannot understand one another. And there is no doubt that the exclusion of the Welsh language from the large landlords, families has been the means of estranging them from their tenants in influence, sympathy, and politics, and the sooner the better they add Welsh as part of the education of their sons and daughters.

The alleged preference of certain creeds.—We hear a great deal in the country, and the Commission has heard a great deal, of preference given by Tory landlords to tenants who are churchmen. No greater libel could be said of the landlords as a class. And yet there is something in the saying which those that use it never have taken any trouble to fathom. In the end of the last and the beginning of this century, when the church neglected her duty (the penalty for which she was last night asked to pay) churchmen were few, and consequently church tenants were very few. But to-day, when the church is a power in every parish, and churchmen numerous, there are numerous applications by church tenants for vacant farms. And in the nature of things church tenants must become more numerous as the church is gaining ground in the county and nonconformity at a standstill. And I have yet to learn the hardships of a church landlord giving a farm to a church tenant, all other things being equal, provided nobody was evicted to make room for him. As a considerable quantity of evidence has been before you as to preference given to church tenants, it would be interesting for you to hear that on this small Monachty estate there are now living nine deacons of chapels in different parishes and 10 more lately deceased, and this is not an isolated case.

Local Rates.—Rates have become much heavier than formerly. The landlords that are considered of the best class who have left farms to go from father to son, escape all the new rates that have been imposed, the farmer paying the rent as usual, and the rates whatever they be. The school rate some time ago was very heavy, in some districts, being as much as 2*s.* in the pound per annum. The parson, the preacher, and retired tradesmen paid on from 8*l.* to 14*l.* valuation whilst a struggling farmer paid on from 50*l.* to 70*l.* and upwards.

Tenants who bought their own holdings.—In the year of about 1870, when portions of estates were thrown into the market, the tenants who had made a little money bought their own holdings at from 30 to 70 years' purchase. In the latter case the rents were low. They invested all their savings, in some cases as much as 1,500*l.* And mortgaged their farm for the remainder of the money at 4 per cent. The times being good, they did very well for some years, although their interest came equal to their old rent. But when the depression came they were the first to feel it. The 4 per cent. money-lender had no more compassion than an Egyptian taskmaster. If the interest was not paid to the time mortgages were called in and much further expense incurred, and lawyers made a rich harvest. There is no doubt that these farmers who bought about 1870 were the cream of the neighbourhood, and to-day are worse off than a tenant farmer adjoining them. A noted case took place in the parish of Llanbadarn Tref Eglwys (something on the Irish line). A hard-working farmer bought a farm, invested all he had in it, and mortgaged it for 1,000*l.* Time came, when he could not pay the interest. The mortgagee called in the money, but nobody would advance on it. He tried to sell it, but nobody would come near the price. The tenant and his family turned out of it, and went to live to an out-house of an adjoining farm for many months, to watch his derelict farm, to see what would become of it. There was neither a new mortgagee, a buyer, nor a tenant, that would have anything to do with it. At last the old mortgagee offered to wipe off 200*l.* of his capital, and make other abatements, which were accepted, and he was a clergyman. Other freeholders tried these tactics in a way, but had lawyers to deal with, and not clergymen, and consequently did not succeed. Since then scores of tenants have bought their holdings at 25 to 27 years' purchase, and seem to do very well.

Labour. — Labour is much higher than formerly, the best and most able-bodied men have gone to Glamorganshire. Of the 40 men working under me on the highways, there are not 20 what I could call able-bodied, and these would not remain unless they had a small holding to keep a cow or two, which necessitates them to be at home for harvest. There are but few young boys when leaving school that take to be farm servants, indeed, since the first crop of boys from Forster's Education Act came from school, there are but few of them that take to manual labour. Apprentices to joiners, masons, smiths, and other handicrafts are not one sixth of what they used to be, and scores of English boys from Reformatories, Industrial Schools, and Muller's Orphan Schools have been, and are, constantly imported into the county, as farm boys, apprentices of smiths, tailors, saddlers, &c. In Aberayron alone, and within a mile, there are some two dozen English boys in different situations. During my life I have had as many as three apprentices (of different ages) in the building trade at one time, and several others waiting a vacancy to be taken on, and there passed through my hands from 40 to 50 of such, and mine was not an isolated case. But now for years there are hardly any applications, and, I venture to say, that there are not throughout this Union of 14 parishes, not 14 boy apprentices in the building trade to-day. Our young men have actually got drunk on their education, and have rushed off to England and the colonies as noncomformist preachers, schoolmasters, pupil teachers, doctors, lawyers, mechanical engineers, clerks in banks, clerks in post offices, clerks in mercantile offices, shop clerks, and managers of the leading shops of London, to sea, to qualify for officering ships, city police, and bus conductors, in fact anything except the mechanical trades and farming in Cardiganshire, whilst in return we have the unfortunate waifs and strays, and the scum of England and Ireland to be brought up through a lot of trouble to fill their place. But the unfortunate part is Cardiganshire will soon lose the envious name of being the most purely Welsh county in Wales, and the names of the O'Brien's of Ireland and the Smiths' of England will appear on our rate books as householders very soon.

Remedies.—As remedies I would suggest that the Government should grant loans to landlords and tenants on the basis of the Irish Land Acts. (even if we could get it on the same terms as Mr. Gladstone's original Act, we would be satisfied, leaving other later Acts alone, which were a great deal better—Lord Ashbourne's and others). To landlords to erect better buildings for farmers and labourers without raising the rents. To tenants to buy their own holdings. To the farmers that have already bought their farms, and who now pay high interest. The general application of the Small Holdings Act of 1892. Powers to county councils to open light railways to distant agricultural districts. The rating of the farmer's house and building on a rising scale, and not on his land. Compensation for permament improvements to outgoing tenants. A small duty on imported corn and cattle.

47,823. Judging by the witnesses we have heard, the name of Davies seems pretty common in this country at present?—Yes, but I think the O'Brien's will come quite as numerous by and bye.

47,824. Is it much encouragement to the landlords to build new houses if the tenants, as you say, prefer the old thatched ones?—They do not prefer the old thatched ones, but they prefer these common ordinary buildings to plastered rooms.

47,825. They do not like them too big?—No they do not want to have to work to keep them clean, and so on; they simply want a comfortable place to live in, especially a large kitchen.

47,826. We have heard the condition of the freeholders in this country is not very good?—It could not be much worse.

47,827. Do you think there is some danger of multiplying the body of freeholders by giving the tenant farmers money to buy their holdings?—No, I should not hesitate. Land is at about the lowest ebb that it will go, in my opinion.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,828. Do any of the large families now have Welsh taught to their children more commonly than they used to, do you know?—I do not know of more than one or two in the county who know Welsh, except a smattering of it. The Lord Lieutenant, I hear, teaches his children pure Welsh. I do not know of any other. They can talk a little, of course.

47,829. You think it would be a good thing if some member of the family who has to do with the estates understood Welsh?—If every one of them understood Welsh it would be a good thing. It would attach them to the country and the country to them. That is my opinion for years.

47,830. I quite agree with you. What was the cause of the break up of the old estates to which you referred just now?—Various causes, litigations, paying off encumbrances, and after one began to sell and got 50, 60, and 70 years' purchase, the landlords at once saw that it was better for them to sell than to receive a small reasonable rent. The Gogerddan estate sold a very large quantity of land down about Newcastle Emlyn and thereabouts.

47,831. I think I understood you to say that there were no farms, or very few farms, in the Union above 150*l.* rent?—I have not got the number above 150*l.*, but the number above 100*l.* is very few.

47,832. Then the number above 150*l.* would be still fewer?—Yes, there would not be more than 10.

47,833. With regard to the landowners, you said you thought they did not plant enough trees and in the proper places?—No, they do not.

47,834. Do you mean the exposed places; that it is possible to grow trees on the exposed places?—Perfectly possible, because what has been done already will prove it, provided they plant the proper trees, hardy trees, ash, alder, sycamore, Austrian pine, and Scotch and wych-elm.

47,835. You sometimes see trees on the side of a hill all bending one way?—Yes, larch; they are no good in the sea wind, they ought never to be planted here.

47,836. Then you say it only requires the proper trees to be planted?—That is all. You can see it in the Menai Straits coming down to the water's edge, a splendid forest of trees, as green as can be.

47,837. I was talking of somewhat higher ground than that?—Yes, but those would be affected by the same wind exactly. We have them here now, in sight of me sitting here, on that hill yonder, growing on a rock, quite clean.

47,838. Then if you have grown some you could grow more in the shelter?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,839. Just one word more about these freeholders. Do you know of many instances in which they have been able to pay off their mortgages?—Very rare. Small freeholders might have done it, but the large freeholders, that bought for 3,500*l.* or 4,000*l.*, there is no chance of their doing it.

47,840. Do they charge their freeholds in their wills for their younger children?—No, there is hardly any of them to be charged. I know of cases where they have actually given bills of sale to secure the interest on the stock for fear that the freeholds would not be enough for the money lender.

47,841. So that the freehold has no value, you mean?—Has no value in many cases.

47,842. And they make bad landlords when they let their land?—Well, I should not like to live under them.

47,843. Do you know that in France, where they are nearly all freeholders, they have lately in these times, with protection, clubbed together to let their land in some cases to big farmers?—I have not heard that.

Mr. Seebohm.

The prospect is not very encouraging, I am afraid, in all cases. I will not ask you any further questions.

Lord Kenyon.

47,844. I have some questions to put to you by Major Lewes: "Does not Sir Pryse Pryse, "one of the largest landowners in Wales, speak "Welsh"?—He can speak a little Welsh, but you cannot call him a Welshman. Mr. Hughes, of Alltlwyd, whom I saw in Court this morning, is a thorough Welshman. By "Welshman," I mean a man who can read Welsh and write Welsh. I do not mean a man with a smattering of Welsh. There are lots of those about the country.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,845. You are not quite satisfied with a gentleman who can just pick up a few words from his groom?—No, because in very many instances a word or two in a sentence makes all the difference. When a landlord thinks he has made a tenant understand, and when the tenant thinks he is understood the other way, there is a bone of contention at once.

Lord Kenyon.

47,846. Major Hughes, of Alltlwyd, I think you say, can speak Welsh?—He is a thorough Welshman.

47,847. Then Colonel Lewes, of Llysnewydd?—I have never spoken to him. I do not think he can read Welsh. It will be new to me.

47,848. Then Mr. Tyler, of Gernos?—I do not think he can read Welsh. You will not find half-a-dozen in the county.

47,849. Then Mr. Lloyd, of Gilfachwen?—Yes, Mr. Lloyd can, he is a thorough Welshman.

47,850. Then Mr. Lloyd, of Waun Ifor?—I mean Mr. Lloyd, of Waun Ifor.

47,851. But the other one, Mr. Lloyd, of Gilfachwen?—I do not know him.

47,852. Then there is a question by Mr. J. M. Howell: "You say that it is not right "to say that preference is given on estates in "this country to members of the Church of "England. Do you say that this applies to "Cardiganshire"?—As a rule I would say it applies to Cardiganshire, with the qualification I have given, that church tenants are more numerous than they used to be.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,853. "The Union consists of 64,000 acres; "the county assessment, which is based on the "income tax returns, is 46,000*l.* an acre. How "do you make it 8*s.* 6*d.*"?—The calculations that I have had for some time make it 8*s.* 6*d.* an acre. I suppose Mr. Howell, or anybody else that has sent that question up, includes the tithes, which I do not. He includes all the mansions, all the houses, all the villages, and towns, and all that. If you take all that out you will find the residue will be about 8*s.* 6*d.* an acre.

47,854. Yours is, I take it, what you consider to be pure agricultural land?—Yes, certainly.

47,855. Then there are some questions by Mr. J. C. Jones, of Llanarth: "How many "apprentices in the building trade are there "in the parish of Llanarth"?—What I have said is that I do not believe there are to-day, in the 14 parishes, 14 apprentices in the building trade. I go through them every month. I know every carpenter in the 14 parishes, and, speaking roughly, I repeat it, that there are not 14 boys apprenticed to the building trade to-day.

47,856. In the whole union of Aberayron?—In the whole union of Aberayron.

47,857. "Do you know, as a fact, that there "are more than 12, as you suggest for the union "of Aberayron of 14 parishes"? I suppose he means in every particular parish?—No, I do not, because I do not know 12 master carpenters throughout the whole parish of Llanarth. There are not six there.

47,858. It is not my question. It is so badly expressed that I cannot understand it myself. Then these are questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do "you not think that the attitude of many wit-"nesses before the Commission is calculated "to induce landlords to put their estates into "the market"?—It is a great deal, and if the Small Holdings Act came generally into force there would be no difficulty in finding one-fourth of the county of Cardigan in the market within five or six years. It would change hands at once.

47,859. "May I understand that landlords—"Lord Penrhyn, for example—who have planted "belts of timber for shelter, have done good "work"?—That goes out of my jurisdiction. I know nothing about North Wales.

47,860. But taking the question without Lord Penrhyn, do you say that landlords who have planted belts of timber for shelter have done good work?—Thoroughly good work—thorough good work to the country at large.

47,861. "Would you not say that the aggre-"gate acreage of the body of large and good "landowners was many times greater than that "of the body of small and grasping landlords"?—Oh, yes, a great deal.

47,862. They own more land than the small ones?—Oh, dear me, yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Rowlands called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,863. You are Mr. Evan Rowlands, tenant farmer and landowner of Pantanamlwg, Llannon, Aberystwyth?—Yes.

47,864. Do you believe differences of language, creed, or politics make any difference to the relation between landlords and tenants?—Not in my neighbourhood.

47,865. Have you a statement there that you wish to rebut?—No, I have not particular.

47,866. Do you prefer a tenancy from year to year to a lease?—A yearly tenancy at the present time.

47,867. State your reasons?—For these reasons, that I do not wish to bind myself for a number of years, as the market is so uncertain for such a long time, while the yearly tenancy is fixed, when the rate of wages and the price of labour of every description is so fluctuating, and has a tendency from year to year to go upward, and the taxes in the same way.

47,868. Judging by your own experience, do you think tenancy is reasonably secure in Wales?—According to my own experience I fully believe that the tenancies are quite secure in my neighbourhood.

47,869. Are you familiar with the terms on which you occupy your holding? Have you a copy of your agreement?—I have no written agreement between my landlord and myself. I have not heard of anybody that has been fined, or penalised, or oppressed through the agreements between them and their landlords.

47,870. State your objections to a land court?—A land court would be sure to damage the friendliness that now exists between the landlord and tenant; secondly, hitherto the various landowners, nearly without exception, have been long-suffering and patient, waiting for their rents during times of lowness of the markets. In consequence, it appears to me that the establishment of a land court would cause the landowners to require the rents to be paid at a fixed time. It is not likely that if a land court is established the landlords will spend so much upon their property.

47,871. What class of work is done by landowners in the way of building, draining, and so on?—The rule in our neighbourhood is that the landlords pay for the buildings of all kinds, and the tenant does the haulage towards the buildings. The landlord opens the drains and ditches, and the tenant closes them.

47,872. Is there any ground for saying, as we have heard from some of the witnesses, that farmers are afraid to come forward?—No, there is no room to think that the farmers in this neighbourhood are afraid to come forward to give evidence.

47,873. Have you anything further say?—It seems to me that the landlord should recompense the tenant for all improvements that he has made on the farm, and, on the other hand, that the tenant ought to recognise the rights of his landlord, that is, if he has made it worse, if he has let the farmhouse fall into disrepair. It would be a great benefit in this part of the country if the Government would give us the privilege and advantage of having light railways, and also it would be a great advantage to the farmers if they could have protection—a duty on foreign articles—as the farmers at the present time cannot well compete with the produce of foreign markets that is filling our country.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

47,874. You are Mr. David Jones, of Lluest y Maen, Llanon. We will have the statement of your evidence translated, I think?—As you please, my Lord.

[The following statement was translated to the witness in Welsh, and afterwards read in English, as follows] :—

I, David Jones, of Lluest y Maen, Llanon, wish to give evidence on the following facts relating to the parish of Llansantffraid, Llanon, Cardiganshire. (1.) Insecurity of tenure. That I rented Lluest Hen, a farm of 40 acres, at a rent of 20*l.* per annum, about 30 years ago. That the farm was in a wretched condition, for the most part undrained. I soon found that in such a state the produce of the farm would not be sufficient to keep me and family and pay rent. I asked for a lease, and trusting to my landlord's word, I set about draining the land. But no lease was forthcoming, and when, through my labour, I had improved the farm, my landlord demanded more rent, and by increments of 2*l.* and 3*l.* my rent was raised to 28*l.* Luckily, as I thought, I took another farm, and was now offered my old farm at a lower rent. But having been treated so meanly, I determined changing my landlord. (2.) That the present farm is held under like conditions, and cannot get a lease. So I am rather loth to exert myself in improving my farm, as I know that some day I shall be taxed for my improvements. However, I cannot help improving my land. (3.) That I would humbly suggest that a law be passed securing the tenant compensation for improvements made by him, which would benefit hundreds in like condition to myself.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,875. What was your rent originally?—20*l.*

47,876. To what figure was it raised by the several increments?—Up to 28*l.*

47,877. And what you want is security for compensation for the money invested in the farm?—Yes, or to have a lease on it. But I could not get a lease for years to repay me for my labour.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,878. Will you be able to follow your statement, if it is read in English, sufficiently to correct it if neccessary?—Yes, my lord.

47,878A. [The following statement of the witness was read] :—

Evidence of Evan Evans, retired tenant farmer and small landowner, of Wernllaeth, in the parish of Llansantffraid, in the union of Aberayron. In the year 1858 I took the farm of Monachdy-bach, parish of Llanbadarn Trefeglwys, union of Aberayron, from Captain Gwynne, of Monachdy. My fathers had lived on one of his farms from immemorial. Captain Gwynne was one of the best landlords in the world, and one of the most beloved men that this country ever saw. He looked upon his tenants with as much pride as he viewed the old oak trees which surrounded his mansion. My landlord farmed the holding for the two years previous to the time I took it. He improved it a bit during the first two years, but in the second year he made the best of it. He sold off at the end of the second year. He left the country and went to reside at Jersey. Although the farm had changed hands frequently previous to the time I speak of, I took to the tenancy courageously, feeling certain that I had a generous landlord. I kept strong men-servants. I ploughed deeply where there was depth of soil and land saw light that had not seen it probably ever before. I drained portions of every field where the drains had choked up. I conveyed on an average from 180 to 200 loads of manure to the land every year (in addition to the manure in my own farmyard) from the neighbouring village and other places. I limed a good deal, and used a considerable quantity of artificial manure. My landlord used to come home from Jersey every year in February in order to receive his rents in March. He complimented me on the character of my farming. I asked him for a lease, he replied that he did not grant leases to anyone, but he added "you shall be in the tenancy as long as you live," and I am quite sure that I should have been there to the present day if he lived. But to my bitter regret and disappointment he died in the year 1865. Another king rose to power who knew not Joseph from Egyptian stock of a policeman. He knew no more about farming than the cuckoo knows about making her nest. Captain Gwynne's heir was only a boy at the time. The agent I refer to, Mr. Daniel Jones, dealt hard by us Nonconformists and Liberals, and he was exceptionally hard to me. No one occupied the Monachdy mansion (my farm was close to the mansion) from the time of the departure of my landlord till the time of his death, and in consequence there was no preserving game carried on, but when my landlord died, Dr. Gwynne, his brother, came to live to the mansion. The game was nursed. Rabbits became as numerous as the locusts of Egypt; they ate up everything. I had three hayfields abutting on the wood close by. The rabbits ate up one field of hay completely. No scythe was put into it. It was not only near the boundary that they depredated the produce, but over the entire fields. Near the hedges next the wood, where they breed, they eat all. During one frosty winter they eat up three acres of turnips. I was not allowed to kill a single one; I had no gun; I once borrowed a gun to shoot those that came to my garden. Once I killed five with one shot, so numerous were they. My man on one occasion took out the gun without my permission and he killed a rabbit; Dr. Gwynne came across him, and took the gun and rabbit away with him. I was called to account by Dr. Gwynne. He told me that I was killing the game. I replied that I could not help the servant, because I was from home at the time. I begged of him to give me back the gun because it did not belong to me. He refused; I afterwards saw that gun sold at the Monachdy sale, I met the agent one day and I told him that the rabbits were destroying the whole of my produce, and asked him would he come and see the depredations they were making for himself. He would not even stop to speak to me, but turned away in a pompous and contemptuous fashion. The agent came to me one day and said that I must close up the fences between my lands and the woods of Monachdy, an extent of about 1½ miles. I replied that that was unreasonable, that it was an understanding between me and the late Captain Gwynne that he was to keep up the boundary fences. He asked me if there was any such provision in the written agreement. I replied that Captain Gwynne's word was always enough for me. The agent replied that every understanding between Captain Gwynne and me had now ended, and that I must close up the fences. I saw that the world was being shut up against me, and felt that my energy failed me. Here were the rabbits eating up my crops, and here was an edict that I must go to the expense of closing up about 1½ miles of boundary fence. A small holding called Frongoy was then on sale: I bought it at a high price. Land was then very high. I would not have bought it if it were not that I saw that I could not live at Monachdy bach. I had not half enough money to pay for Frongoy, but I was anxious to have a secure home anyhow. In the month of March, 1868, I had notice to quit. A churchman and tory was chosen to take my place and to reap the fruit of my labour. I had no compensation for the improvements I had made. I had rebuilt one old house which was in ruins, so as to have a home for a farm labourer whom I employed. I erected pig styes, gates, and hedges, and I had opened up the drains at my own expense. The house referred to was rented for years afterwards for 2*l.* a year. I applied to the agent for justice. He put me on one side with scorn, saying that there was nothing in the agreement to compel him to grant me any compensation. It was useless for me to say that there was an understanding between me and Captain Gwynne, and that I had worked on the holding like a man who was to remain there for the term of his natural life. He would not stick to anything in the agreement which was advantageous to me, but he stuck to every clause that was advantageous to the new tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

47,879. Is Dr. Gwynne alive?—Yes, he is alive.

47,880. Where does he live?—I hear from the audience at Tenby.

47,881. Was he trustee for the estate?—No. I never came to understand that.

47,882. Who appointed Daniel Jones as an agent?—Those down from Aberayron here somewhere.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Timothy Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,883. Will you be able to sufficiently follow your evidence in English so as, if necessary, to make any correction when it is read?—I think so.

[The following statement of the witness was then read]:—

Evidence of Timothy Evans, tenant farmer, Drefnewydd, parish of Llanddewi Aberarth, union of Aberayron.

I remember living with my father and mother at Cefn ty'ncoed, in this parish, a farm of 55 acres, on the Llanaeron estate. In my recollection the following improvements were made at our own expense. The dwelling house was extended about 7 yards in length to meet the requirements of an increasing family. A new cow house was built, large enough to tie six cows therein. A capacious furnace house and a small cart house were also built. We also built a cart house and stable besides, but we were given the timber for the roof, and the slates for these. When my father and mother came there first I often heard them say there was not a single field fenced in on the land. My father and the sons (myself one of them) put up almost all the hedges. For the first 10 years of my father's occupation the estate, my father and mother used to say, paid half the cost of draining. We made at our cost hundreds of perches of drains. In 1884, because I was not given a new roof to the barn and cow house I was compelled to leave. I asked the agent for some allowance for the building and work I was leaving behind, but the answer I had was that if I did not give up possession at once, the extreme rigour of the law would be brought to bear on me.

47,884. That represents your evidence?—Yes.

47,885. Who was your landlord?—Mrs. Lewis, Llanaeron.

47,886. Was she the landlady then?—It was Major Lewis when I first remember.

47,887 Was there any other reason given for not building?—No, there was no reason given for not building.

47,888. I understand you gave notice to quit, not they?—No, I had a notice.

47,889. What reason did they give for giving you notice?—Because I took another farm, and I was going to leave that farm to my brother, and the reason was that the houses were so bad, and they would not repair them.

47,890. Had you taken another farm before they gave you notice?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

47,891. What was your rent?—Twenty-four pounds, and they raised it to 28*l.*

47,892. How many acres had you?—Fifty-five acres.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,893. Did you intend to keep on both farms?—I intended to leave the farm, where I then lived, to my brother afterwards.

47,894. And they refused to take him as a tenant?—Yes.

47,895. On what grounds?—Because he was too much of a radical, and they wanted to put in a churchman.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,896. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am not in a farm now, but I used to be. I am at present a shopkeeper.

47,897. Who was your landlord then?—Mrs. Lewis, of Wernddu.

47,898. That is not the same as Mrs. Lewis, of Llanaeron?—No.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of John Davies, Mount Hope, parish of Cilcenin, Aberayron Union.

I became a tenant of Lloegrfach, parish of Llansantffread, on the Wernddu estate, in 1869. Several tenants had failed to live there before I went there. I was there seven years. I was driven away in seven years because I was not willing to accept an advance of rent, as that would be paying for my own improvements. In nine years after leaving I became a tenant of the Monachdy estate, in a cottage, to which some land was attached, called Penloncoed. I had taken it from Mr. D. Davies, Tynyffynon. I had improved it considerably in six years, when it was wanted by the Monachdy authorities to be a home for a gamekeeper for Mr. Aylward, a gentleman who had taken the Monachdy mansion. I was forced out of the occupation in quite an illegitimate fashion by six or seven of the Monachdy estate workmen, who came to my house in a threatening manner.

47,899. Had they given you a notice to quit?—Yes, and I took the holding afterwards.

47,900. Had they given you a notice to quit from the Monachdy estate office?—No, it was from the tenant I had it.

47,901. You were the sub-tenant?—Yes.

47,902. Had you any agreement with the other tenant?—No, no agreement.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,903. What was the rise of rent Mrs. Lewis made?—She had no chance of raising it to me.

47,904. What did she ask?—I did not ever hear how much she wanted.

47,905. You said you gave notice because they wanted a rise in the rent. Is that your evidence?—She gave me notice.

47,906. Were you a sub-tenant under Mrs. Lewis?—No.

47,907. What do you mean by saying you were not willing to accept a rise in the rent?—Because it was too dear before.

47,908. You told me just now you did not have a rise in the rent. What was the attempted rise in the rent?—Giving me notice.

47,909. How much did they want more for the farm?—They wanted more, but I did not ask them how much more.

47,910. Was there not any other reason given?—Nothing else.

47,911. Then how do you know that it was for that reason you were given notice to quit?—Because she was down there herself, and told me there was no reason why such a farm should be rented at such a low figure; but much of the land is not worth 1*s.* an acre.

47,912. I cannot see your grievance against Mrs. Lewis. So you left?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,913. Who were the men you say were sent to frighten you out of your house?—There were six or seven.

47,914. Who sent them?—Mr. Thomas Davies, the agent of Mr. Aylward, the gentleman who lives in the Mansion, and the tenant I was paying the rent to was along with them.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Timothy Evans called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,915. Are you a tenant farmer?—No, I am not now.

47,916. You were?—Yes, but at present I am a grocer and pig merchant.

47,917. On what estate?—On the Llanaeron estate.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

47,917A. Evidence of John T. Evans, grocer and pig merchant, of Bristol House, Aberayron, county councillor for Aberarth.

I was a farmer, and was considered to be one of the best in the neighbourhood. I was a churchman till I was 30 years of age. At that time I married the daughter of a farmer and merchant, who was also a zealous congregationalist. In 1862 we took to business at Aberayron. My family increased, and my children were frequently ailing. Dr. James told me to keep a cow so as to get plenty of milk for my children. In 1868 I applied to Mr. Daniel Jones, the agent of the Monachdy estate, for a small field so as to enable me to keep a cow, and he promised to take my application into his consideration In 1869 the final answer he gave was that he would let me have it so far as I myself was concerned, but that my wife was too much of a radical, and consequently he could not on any account grant me my wish. After this, in the year 1873, I succeeded in getting a house, garden, and a small field from a woman who was leaving the neighbourhood to go to Glamorganshire to her husband. I then bought a cow, and I bought the whole of the effects on that small holding for nearly double the value, in order to secure the boon of a field, relying that I should remain in the tenancy, and Mrs. Lewis, of Llanaeron, did permit me to remain. I had been born on Mrs. Lewis's estate. The house was a thatched one, and I was obliged to thatch and do considerable other repairs to it before I could get a tenant for it, which took place in the year 1874. In 1887 I had to thatch again. Immediately afterwards, viz., on March 25th, I received six months' notice to quit from D. Lloyd, solicitor, Lampeter, Mrs. Lewis's new agent. I had to quit; no reason has been given for it. In 1888 I sent him a bill for 8*l.* 5*s.* for the repairs I had done there, but I have not had a halfpenny. I have been requested by a majority of the farmers in my county council division, viz., Aberarth, to present their request to you. Their desire is that a land court be established; if it is possible also to get money at a cheap rate of interest to buy their farms; also that they have no special reason to complain of their landlords or their agents, except that rents are far too high. See 48,883.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,918. There is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Is Mrs. Lewis, of Llanaeron, the same Mrs. "Lewis who owns an estate called Clynfiew"?—Not to my knowledge.

47,919. Do you know Mrs. Lewis, of Clynfiew?—No, I do not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Evans (tenant farmer, of Esgerwen fawr, Llanarth) called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,920. Upon what points do you wish to give us evidence?—That the present law does not provide sufficient compensation for improvements made by tenants.

47,921. Have you suffered any personal hardship?—No.

47,922. What do you wish for—security of tenure?—Security of tenure, with compensation for improvements when the tenant is leaving.

47,923. So that everything he has put into the land shall come back to him?—Yes.

47,924. Is there anything else you can suggest?—I wish to see the Government providing agricultural teaching for the country.

47,925. Do you think that would be well taken up in this neighbourhood, or the neighbourhood of Llanarth?—I am not quite sure, but I firmly believe it would be in time.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,926. Have there been any attempts by the Aberystwith College to give any lectures there?—Yes, there have been attempts at Llanarth, but I am living a bit out of the place, and we have not had any yet.

47,927. Do you think light railways would do any good?—Yes, they would much facilitate the accommodation for carrying our produce to the markets. They are wanted very much in this country.

47,928. If the Government advanced money at a cheap rate of interest, do you think the people in your neighbourhood would take advantage of it to buy their holdings?—Yes, to a very great extent.

47,929. Have you anything more you wish to say?—No, nothing more at present, so far as I know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

47,930. Where do you live?—I am a master mariner, and live at Rose Green, Llanarth, Cardiganshire.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,931. What evidence do you wish to give us?—In 1862 my father took the farm of Cilgynllefach, of C. R. Longcroft, Esq., Llanina, at the annual rental of 30*l.*; about 1865 it was advanced to 33*l.*, but a promise was made to put the buildings in good repair, which was not kept. About 1871 the Rev. J. Griffiths, the then rector of Llanllwchaiarn, called upon my father to ask him to join in a voluntary scheme to put the school accommodation of the district in a satisfactory condition. He refused to join in so impractical a matter, as he knew some of the largest farmers, who were known to him to be misers, would not join in the movement. Very soon after this incident his landlord served him with a notice to quit. On speaking to him he found that the cause of the notice was that the landlord was not willing for his land to be taxed for the maintenance of the new school wanted; his rent was advanced 4*l.*, bringing the rental up to 37*l.* About 1876 the buildings were put in good order. My father did all the cartage free. After completion my father was asked if he would pay an advance of 3*l.* 12*s.* without a notice. This was ultimately arranged, by my father agreeing to pay an advance of 3*l.*, bringing the total up to 40*l.*, which remained the same until my father's death in 1891. Without the assistance of his children working at home with him, and those on sea rendering assistance, my father could not pay this rent. My father was accredited by his landlord to be a doubtful Tory. My brother applied to C. E. Longcroft, Esq., the son of the late landlord, for the farm after my father, but was refused it, and the preference given to a man who went to church, although my father had lived close upon 30 years upon the farm. I am of opinion the present condition of the land laws should cease, and after many years of study, being a prisoner on board my ship for at least two months out of every three, I have arrived at the conclusion there is nothing for it but the nationalisation of the land on the lines laid down by Michael Flürcheim, the President of the German Nationalisation League, which, I am sure, is quite known to you, my Lord and gentlemen. There is another piece of evidence about a person alive now, a sister of mine, who is not able to come here herself, she is totally uneducated, and I have a brother who will substantiate what I say. I should like to mention the case of my sister, Jane Lloyd, who, when she had to leave my father's holding after his death took a field of the same farm from the incoming tenant at a higher rental than the farm itself, although it is the most uneven field on the holding; she had all the manure on the farmyard then carted to this field, and divided into plots by fencing wire at her own expense. She went to considerable expense in putting up a cow-house and other necessary convenience to keep a cow on another landlord's premises; last September she had notice to quit the field, and all her labour will be in vain, as she cannot get any compensation. This should not be, and it is high time for some remedy to be formulated to prevent this kind of wrong, and I feel sure if the farmers of the district, whom I know to have grievances, were to come forward and speak out their minds, that it would but bring conviction to the minds of the Commission that some change should be made in the land laws, but I fear serfdom has been ingrained into their very souls, and fear rules their innermost hearts, and but a few of them will come forward. This is all gone, and the actors in it are not all here. Then I wish to say a little more upon another matter in which I was an actor myself, and the agent of the landlord is here. I was following at sea when my father gave up the farm. We wanted to keep it as children. I had a brother actually farming. When I came home my father had given notice to retire from the farm on the 29th of September. It was in October or November when I came home. My father told me that my brother could not get the farm, because he was what they choose to term a Radical. I was not satisfied; I went down myself to this landlord, but, unfortunately, the gentleman himself was not at home. I happened to meet his steward. I told the steward what I wanted. Well, what he told me was this, that my brother was an anti-tithe payer, it had happened the summer before that the trees were cut on my father's farm. Now these trees did a certain amount of damage in being carted away, and it was agreed that the damage should be settled by arbitration. The agent told me that my father went to Radicals to arbitrate or assess the damage, and that these Radicals assessed the damage 3*l.* above what his principal valued it at, so that he did not think there was much chance in the case, and so it turned out.

47,932. Who is that agent?—The agent is Evan Thomas, Bwlchcefn. I told him I was going to give the evidence so that he could be here, and I told him the evidence.

47,933. When was this?—In speaking to the steward?

47,934. Yes?—When I was speaking with him about the farm it was about November 1890.

47,935. And about your brother being a Radical?—Yes.

47,936. When was that, conversation?—That was about November 1890.

47,937. And about the damage done by hauling the trees?—That was the time I spoke about the damage, or that he spoke to me about the damage.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,938. If land was nationalised who would pay you for your improvements?—Nationalised? We do not nationalise the improvements, we nationalise the land. We give the improvements to the present proprietor.

47,938A. In the future, supposing you took the land of the parish council?—New buildings are built on leases, and it is often the building is sold quite separate from the land. Any improvement that would be submerged in the land that could not be justified would have to go with the land, but anything that was distinguishable would go to the present proprietor.

47,939. But in future the parish council would be your landlord?—No, I hold that the land of England by right belongs to the nation of England.

47,940. What local body would have the letting of it?—The local body, I presume, would be Imperial, and if the Imperial deputed it out to certain local bodies, of course that would be it.

47,941. You think you would get more justice from the ratepayers who would have to pay for the improvements than from the landlord?—Yes, one man would not have such a power as he has now. The power of a landlord over the neighbourhood is too much altogether. There is nothing to stop a Gould or an Astor coming across here, and buying everything, and giving England notice to quit.

Lord Kenyon.

47,942. There is an Astor already in England?—Yes.

47,943. He has begun to purchase. He has begun on the banks of the Thames?—Yes, perhaps he will buy the whole of the English nation up and give the English notice to quit.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,944. Perhaps the English nation would be a bigger tyrant to the individual than the landlord is?—Quite possible.

Lord Kenyon.

47,945. This is a question by Mr. Vincent:—"Who is this agent"?—Evan Thomas, Bwlchcefn.

47,946. To whom was he agent?—Agent to this Longcroft. See 48,150.

47,947. Is he in this Court now?—He was here; and I told him I was going to give the evidence.

47,948. Do you think he is in the other Court?—He may be gone there now, but he was here.

47,949. I have a question by Mr. T. Davies: "Did you buy Cefnperthpiod farm over the "tenant's head"?—Yes, I have bought it.

47,950. Over the tenant's head?—I do not know I was at sea, and my wife bought it at a public sale.

47,951. "And afterwards raised his rent"?—And afterwards raised his rent.

47,952. "And will not do any building for "him"?—No.

47,953. Can you explain that?—No, no more than this: I am not speaking against a single individual, I am speaking against the nation that allows on individual to hold.

47,954. I want you to explain your own case?—My own case is this: It was simply a matter of money interest with me. If he pays an advanced rent I will build, if not I will not.

47,955. Do you think that is a kind way to treat him?—Well, I do not know, the law of the land allows it. So long as the law of the land allows it, I shall do so.

47,956. You go by the strict letter of the law?—Yes, by the strict letter of the law.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Jenkin Thomas called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

47,957. You are Mr. Jenkin Thomas, and you are a small tenant farmer, living at Bwlch y bryn, Talgarreg?—Yes.

47,957A. On what points do you wish to give evidence?—That I have been sent away from my place, and other people offering more rent for it than I was giving.

47,958. What was the estate?—I cannot say who it belongs to, but it was sub-let by Davies, Blaenagwenog.

47,959. The then tenant of Blaena sub-let to you; is that it?—Yes.

47,960. You do not know whose estate?—No, I do not. It was at Abergwili that the landlord lived somewhere.

47,961. Would you rather let straight from the landowner?—Yes, very much.

47,962. What was your rent to start with?—I was paying 35*l.*, but I am not living there now at this time.

47,963. What do the present tenants pay now, do you know?—No, I do not at the present time.

47,964. What did they offer when you gave up the farm?—I complained to my master that the rent was too high, and he reduced it 5*l.* to me.

47,965. But what did you say at first. I thought you said that you left the farm because somebody offered a higher rent?—Yes, I did. I had a reduction of the place down to 30*l.*, and they told my master that the farm was worth 40*l.* a year rent.

47,966. Did they give you notice to quit, or did you leave of your own accord?—I left of my own accord, thinking to give it to my son.

47,967. Thinking they would let it to your son, I suppose?—Yes.

47,968. What did they do. Did they give notice to your son?—They did not give it to my son. They told him that he would not have it.

47,969. Is there anything more you wish to say?—No, I think not.

47,970. Did you take another farm?—No, I did not. My two children went from me.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

47,971. What are you doing now?—We are living on the little money we had, and we have a little place to keep a cow, me and the old woman.

47,972. Do you consider your case typical of the evils of sub-letting?—I reckon that the harm was done by the other man offering more for it before I had notice.

47,973. Behind your back?—Behind my back.

Mr. Seebohm.

47,974. Is that a case that often happens?—Yes, in some places. I cannot say; but that is the way I found it.

47,975. Were the people who offered the higher rent any relations of yours?—No, not at all.

47,976. Were they living in the neighbourhood; were they neighbours?—Yes, they were not far off me; they were near enough.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Aberystwyth.

SECOND COURT.

Town Hall, Aberayron, Cardiganshire, Friday, 27th April 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. MORGAN EVANS called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,977. You are Mr. Morgan Evans, of Oakford, Llanarth, and you are a justice of the peace for the county of Cardigan?—I am.

47,978. Would you kindly give your evidence to the Commission?—Having spent my life in close contact with farmers and agricultural labourers, I have had every opportunity of becoming acquainted with their views, and of understanding their difficulties. Farmers in particular are ever ready to ventilate their grievances, and to express their opinions in private conversation, but are most reluctant, under present circumstances, to do the same in a more public or formal manner. As the result of my intercourse with them I find:—

(1.) That insecurity of tenure is generally held to be a great bar to successful farming. In prosperous times, advances in rents being often made on the tenant farmers' own improvements, the advances are nearly always made on farms well cultivated. At all times, owing to this insecurity, he is open to receive notice to quit his holding, fictitious reasons being often given for the same, though, possibly, the real causes are interference with the game, or differences in religion or politics. For anyone to say that politics and religion do not affect the conduct of some landlords in Cardiganshire, would be to make a statement which many of us cannot accept. I have had some experience of this as a tradesman. I can mention one instance: Owing to having taken part in some of the meetings held in the county to promote the question of disestablishment, when Messrs. Edward Miall and Henry Richard visited Wales in the year 1866, I lost for a time the patronage of my best customer, and he was honest enough to tell me the reason why. The gentleman I refer to was the late Mr. John Boultbee, of Noyadd, Llanarth That there are honourable exceptions I most willingly admit. I had some direct information given me as to the compact entered into by the landlords to evict the Liberal tenants after the election of 1868. Having to call on business early in the spring of 1869 at Noyadd, then occupied by Mr. Edmund Lloyd, he told me that if I knew what was to take place I should be sorry for the part I took in the late election. I asked Mr. Lloyd what he was referring to, when he replied that many of the landlords had joined to evict those tenants who voted for Mr. E. M. Richards, so as to stamp out this disobedience. "I hope," I said "in the interest of the poor tenants, that " is not true," and also made the remark that politically it would be the most foolish thing that the Tories could do. "It is," he replied, "a fact," and he named several estates in the district where it was to take place. The thing has not been carried on on such a large scale afterwards, but the work of extirpating Nonconformist and Liberal tenants on some estates has been carried on gradually, but most effectually. The terrorism occasioned as the result of the evictions of 1869 can hardly be said to have quite subsided to this day. The names of the Rev. David Evans, Penrhiwdrych; Messrs. William Richards, of Rhydalen; Morgan Jones, of Cefngrugos; and John Davies, of Gofynach fach, are still held in great respect, as they had to leave their holdings; but they were not by any means the only sufferers in the district on that memorable occasion. Some way of protecting tenants against arbitrary evictions is essential to the prosperity of the farming community in this county. Leases are not so much in demand as formerly. Many reasons could be adduced for this.

(2.) That the tenants have sustained great losses through having to leave their holdings without compensation, or remuneration for labour given, or money spent, in erecting new buildings, making waterwheels, and many other necessary improvements, for which they had not received any pecuniary assistance from their landlords. In many cases such much-needed improvements have not been provided, neither by the landlord nor by the tenant, the former refusing to incur the expense, and the latter either unable or afraid of doing so on his own responsibility. The present state of the labour market makes this a great inconvenience and loss to the tenant farmer.

(3.) That great improvements in the dwelling-houses both of farmers and labourers have been made of late, but in many instances they are yet left in a most unsatisfactory condition; that there is great need of improvement in both classes of houses. Good dwelling-houses are not only a source of great comfort, but also necessary to protect the morals of the country. Some landlords have done well in this way, but the result is mostly perceptible in the case of people who have bought their holdings—freeholders take the lead in this.

47,979. I do not quite understand how freeholders take a lead in that respect?—In building better houses; outhouses are often inferior buildings, inconvenient and insufficient for the farmers to carry on their work and accommodate their stock.

(4.) I find that if some measure could be devised to secure for those who till the soil the prospect of an ownership in their holdings, it would ultimately be of general benefit to the community at large, as the increase in the produce could, in many instances, be doubled, and more. And also it would materially assist to develop the best side of the character of the nation. I have not as yet found a single tenant farmer, whatever political or religious opinions he may hold, who is satisfied with the present state of the law as regards agricultural holdings. The excuses given for not appearing to give their evidence before the Commission were to me certain proof that they were afraid of doing so, the general impression harboured amongst them being that the landlords do not look favourably on this inquiry. The excuses given were very numerous, fear of losing their holding, of displeasing their landlords, or of being made marked men, being the most general. Before the Welsh character can be fully developed it must be placed in circumstances of greater independence.

(5.) That a court of appeal in questions affecting land should be provided. Such courts appear necessary in the interests of landlords, tenants, and labourers.

(6.) That in order to induce agricultural labourers to remain on the land, and to secure the return of those who have left the country districts for the coal pits, the iron works, and the big towns, plots of land should be allotted them at a fair price. And I am convinced this would have the desired effect to a very great degree, since labourers and their families are very much attached to country life. I have heard the remark made over and over again, by several of this class, that if they could only have land sufficient for a garden, and to keep a cow, they would never think of leaving the country for the works, or the towns, as the case happened to be. Doubtless many of our most promising young men leave the country districts because they can get better opportunities to cultivate their minds, as well as bettering their circumstances. Something ought to be done to make country life more enjoyable, by providing reading rooms and places for mutual improvement.

(7.) That rents and the price of labour have greatly increased in the district I come from in the last 50 years, while the produce of the land on the other side has materially reduced. Rents have gradually reduced of late, but labour is still getting higher, without any prospect of reduction; at the same time the produce of the land continually decreases. The inevitable result of this state of things is that farming has become to a great degree artificial. Many farmers depend solely on their own exertions, together with that of their children, with the result that labourer's children are eventually better off than those of farmers who so employ them. Liming, hedging, ditching, trenching, and other operations requiring outside labour, are nearly abandoned, with the unavoidable result that the value of land has deteriorated to a perceptible degree in several districts. Unless some measure is devised to remove impediments to agricultural developments, and to place farmers in a better position than they now occupy for meeting foreign competition, successful farming is to a great degree at an end in this country. I can see no remedy for this state of things except in a general revision of rents.

(8.) That it is a great disadvantage to farmers in this part of the county that they have no direct communication with the great central markets. If the Government were to assist in forming a system of light railways, it would help the farmers immensely. No doubt it would draw thousands of visitors to enjoy our healthy air and good scenery, as well as to carry the productions of the county to the best markets. I have compiled the following statistics comparing agricultural labour at the present time with what it was 30 years ago. There is something like 36 per cent. less hired labour engaged now than at the period mentioned. That is, where then one hundred people were engaged, there are now at the utmost only about sixty-four.

Mr. Grove.

47,980. May we ask you how you arrived at those figures?—I have arrived at them by calculating the number of workmen in the district, with the assistance of friends that remember the time as well as myself. The cost of labour meanwhile has risen about 100 per cent., so that the 64 now employed will cost the farmers 1,024*l.*, whereas the 100 would cost them only some 800*l.*, 30 years ago. This calculation is made by fixing the average of farm servants then at 8*l.* a year, and now at 16*l.*, which I am convinced is near the mark. Supposing the same number to be now employed as then, the farmers would have to pay 1,600*l.* on labour which then they obtained for 800*l.* Thirty years ago women were constantly employed doing field work, whereas there are now scarcely any, reducing labour on land to something like one half. This reduction in the quantity of labour employed necessarily reduces the producing power of the soil, which is a ruinous loss to the farmer, as it is the source from which he must get his rent. I wish further to draw your attention to the following fact. Thirty years ago, on the sea-board between New Quay and Llanddewi Aberarth, a village about a mile and a half to the north of Aberayron, a distance of only 8 miles, there were at least 12 lime kilns in constant operation during the summer months, while now there are none at all. At the period mentioned carts were also constantly sent to the lime kilns of Carmarthenshire, but now that is also quite discontinued. The insignificant quantity of lime now used is carted from a station 13 miles from the district.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,981. You are a county councillor, I think?—Yes.

I have some documents here that I thought of putting in evidence for your information. We started, or at least a gentleman from London started, some years ago, a project of constructing a light railway to the district, and I think that you can find some information in regard to it in these documents. (The witness handed in documents, for which see Appendix.)

47,982. Yes, that would be interesting; perhaps you will speak to that?—I have spoken about it in my statement.

47,983. I will ask you a question or two about the matter?—Yes, and I will put those documents in as evidence.

Mr. Grove.

47,984. Can you leave those documents with us?—Yes, I can leave them with you; they are for your use.

Sir John Llewelyn.

47,985. They are very interesting. Since you are upon that question, I should like to ask you a few questions with regard to it now, because these light railways are certainly things that might benefit the country very much?—I think so.

47,986. Do you think it ought to be done with Government money?—Really, I have no plan to suggest, but I thought that if some assistance could be given, local money could be got for the purpose as well.

47,987. I think that would be the best plan?—Yes. I think if any plan of joining the two could be devised, that local money could be given—say that the Government should advance money on a certain proportion of money advanced locally.

47,988. That is a very interesting point. I want to get from you your views upon this, if you have thought the matter out—if you have not, please do not answer it; do you think there might be a danger that the local landowners would raise the rent because of the existence of light railways?—There is no doubt they would, but I would go in, if possible, for having more peasant proprietors.

47,989. We shall hear something more about that. But then the peasant proprietors would benefit?—Yes.

47,990. But they would benefit upon their own property by the expenditure of public money?—It would be public money to help to build light railways, upon which money full interest would be paid.

47,991. Then you think it should be paid partially by private money and partially by public money?—Yes, and that there should be sufficient interest paid, and that the return of the loan should be secured to the Government.

47,992. Before we could ensure the interest of the British taxpayer we should have to show that it is done upon proper commercial lines?—Yes. I think in this district, at all events, after the experience that I have had in trying to canvass for shares in the railway that I referred to, that sufficient money could be got to do that.

47,993. That is a better suggestion, to my mind, than what we received yesterday. I think that is a fairer proposal than was put before us yesterday. May I ask you, with regard to the political evictions of 1868, have there been any since that time?—They have not been so openly made, and there have not been so many at the same time, but they are carried on on some estates even to this day, I really think, though I cannot of course produce evidence as to names; but there is no question about it at all.

47,994. Do you not think that the Ballot Act is sufficient protection?—No, it is not sufficient protection at all, because, for one thing, they go in now for keeping the voters at home.

47,995. How do they know how they vote?—They go in for keeping them at home altogether—not to vote at all. They know how they would vote if they were allowed to go to the booth, and the only secure way of managing it is to keep them at home.

47,996. You used the words "arbitrary eviction"?—Yes.

47,997. Can you give any instance of arbitrary eviction since the Ballot Act?—I have left that branch of the evidence to a friend who will bring before you sufficient evidence upon the point—Mr. J. C. Jones, who is here; I think he will carefully go into that. See 48,098.

47,998. Then we shall have some instances from other witnesses; is that so?—Yes, I leave that to other witnesses.

47,999. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act, is that known in this district?—It is known as something that cannot be worked.

48,000. Why will it not work?—I have had many instances of farmers coming to me asking advice under circumstances of difficulty. I do not want to act as a quack lawyer any more than as a quack doctor, and so I send them to lawyers, and the reply invariably is that it is an unworkable Act—that the cost of putting the clauses into operation would be more than the gain in the end.

48,001. Are there a large number of freeholders about here now?—A great deal of property has changed hands, but it has gone more into the hands of smaller landlords than of freeholders.

48,002. Does that mean that a man will buy a farm and then let it?—That is the case very often—gentlemen from towns, and mariners who have made money, invest it in land, and let the land out again. That has been done to a very great extent in these districts.

48,003. Are there any men who have bought their holdings and occupy them?—There are some few, and those do good work in regard to building new houses and improving the farms in every respect.

48,004. In your opinion, is that beneficial to the country?—I think it would double, and more than double, the produce of land. I know that from my own experience of what I have spent on the little farm of my own. I am certain that I am within the truth when I tell you that the produce now is three times what it was previous to my taking it in hand, but I had to trench every field, and to do much work, and really buy it over again.

48,005. Do you think that these men who have bought their holdings have done so with their own money or with borrowed money?—With borrowed money to a certain extent, and some nearly altogether, and those, in my opinion, are now even worse off than they were when they were tenants, with the only exception that they farm better in many instances. I know of many that have got to pay more interest on mortgage than they did pay before in rent, then they were not making money, but I know that they now reduce the mortgage by better farming.

48,006. Could you tell us what kind of proportion of land in this country is held by small freeholders?—Really I cannot give you any estimate as to that.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,007. You say in your evidence that farmers are reluctant, under present circumstances, to come forward and give evidence before the Commission?—Yes.

48,008. What do you mean by under the present circumstances?—Their being tenants at will; many that have given us evidence are not here to-day.

48,009. And are not likely to come here?—They will not come, some of them; they have said that they will not dare come.

48,010. Then it is a fact that farmers are really afraid to come forward?—There is no doubt whatever about it.

48,011. You say with regard to the advance in rent, that it is more marked on farms that are well cultivated than those that are not?—I could go further, and could say that it is invariably so, and when valuers are sent round, those that farm badly will get reductions in rent, and those that farm well are advanced in rent.

48,012. You do not blame the valuer, then; of course he has to make his valuation?—Well, valuation, as a rule, is made to order.

48,013. Do you consider, then, that the present system of valuing is not a proper system?—I do not think it is a good system; it is as arbitrary as the notices to quit that are sent to Liberal and Nonconformist tenants.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,014. Do you think that the valuer should not be employed alone by the landowner?—That is for his own guidance.

48,015. Yes, but what do you recommend from the tenants' point of view?—A land court is the only thing, or some independent authority to appeal to. Privately, I believe this, that if a land court were established it would be very little used.

48,016. That is, in the case of the best landlords?—I think that they and their tenants would come to terms; a land court would be very little used.

48,017. Except in cases where there are bad landlords?—Bad feelings are more than anything else the cause of disputes.

48,018. You say that Nonconformist tenants are gradually replaced by Churchmen?—I think you will be furnished with startling statements and names by a future witness.

48,019. Then we will leave it to others to come forward, and I will pass that by. You speak with regard to the construction of good dwelling-houses, and say that they are not only a source of great comfort, but are also necessary to protect the morals of the district. How do you explain that?—I will tell you; there are many of the dwelling-houses that have no divisions, that are not divided into rooms.

48,020. They have very few bedrooms?—There is hardly any partition at all, except furniture between the beds.

48,021. You mean there are no proper divisions?—There are no proper divisions. More than that, a dwelling-house very often is too small for the family that is occupying it, and there is no room for the servants to read, or in any way sit quietly to improve themselves.

48,022. What accommodation have the men-servants; do they generally sleep in the house, or in out-houses?—They sleep more in the house lately, but there are a great many of them yet sleeping above the cows and horses.

48,023. You say that those who have purchased their farms, if they have any means, take the lead in getting better accommodation?—They take the lead. There are splendid dwelling-houses newly built on farms which have been recently purchased in our district.

48,024. I understand that you are in business?—I was in business at one time.

48,025. What business?—A general shop keeper.

48,026. Then you cannot speak with regard to the present depression, how it affects the tradesmen in the district?—Partly, I can; it is my son who carries on the business now.

48,027. How does he find times under present circumstances?—Not so flourishing as they used to be, by a good deal.

48,028. You believe in labourers having a plot of ground to cultivate?—I believe in that; I firmly believe in it, at a fair price.

48,029. Do you think it would be beneficial for them to be able to keep a cow or two?—I think they ought to have that opportunity. I base that on the applications made whenever any little land becomes vacant, with proper houses on it. The rule with the farmers is that they try to bind these people to work for them, and they, of course, do not care to do so, but they prefer not having the land rather than being bound to serve the farmer.

48,030. But would it not be to the interest of the farmer to keep a good labourer on his farm?—Yes, but they do not pay sufficient wages.

48,031. It is quite proper that they should be paid, but under present circumstances you think that they cannot pay them?—As I explained in my evidence, I think they can hardly pay at the present rate of wages, and at the rate of rents. The fact is that there are thousands of acres of land within 12 miles of the place where we are now sitting, that are out of cultivation altogether.

48,032. Do you think they would pay for cultivation?—They would not pay for cultivating at the present rate of rent and labour.

48,033. Have you any other remedies to suggest, besides what you have mentioned?—In what way?

48,034. In the way of improving the position of the labourers and the farmers generally?—The only suggestion I have to make is this, that some help should be given by the Government, on terms that would protect the ratepayer, and help the cultivator of the land to buy his holding. I go in most decidedly for security to the ratepayer, because any extra amounts paid for land would be money direct to the pocket of the landlord, the seller.

Mr. Grove.

48,035. Mr. Evans, we gather from you, I think, that there is not sufficient labour on the land, and that if more labour could be brought to bear, the land would produce on an average double what it is producing now?—I think so.

48,036. As to light railways, I would like to ask you one question. When you tried to get together the capital for this light railway from Llandyssul to New Quay——?—I do not bind myself to that line absolutely; it is any line I would refer to.

Mr. Grove—continued.

48,037. Did you feel that locally there would be a very substantial sum subscribed towards the money required?—I have been out two or three days with a friend canvassing for shareholders towards the railway, and we have been very successful. I have no hesitation in saying that local help could be got.

48,038. Would you go so far as to say that the present condition of a good many of the farmhouses would lead to an increase of immorality?—I think so, most decidedly.

48,039. Then you think that if some plan could be devised, by which the tenant farmers should get security of tenure, they would become more independent and more manly in every way?—I think so.

48,040. Are you acquainted with the Small Holdings Act?—Yes, as being something quite useless for any purpose; it was made for show and not for use.

48,041. Some of our Acts are so regarded but it has not been put into operation by the county council, has it?—I make that statement because in all instances that I have consulted lawyers about, they say it cannot be used to any good purpose.

48,042. The Agricultural Holdings Act, and the Small Holdings Act were passed on purpose to give relief in the direction you are indicating; if they are unworkable, that is a great misfortune. There is no compulsory power to purchase under the Small Holdings Act, but probably there will be now, with the parish councils; so that they may be corrected?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,043. There are two questions put in by Mr. Stephen. "Do you consider that farmers "who fear to come forward have any ground "for that fear"?—I think so.

48,044. "Has any landlord in this district "done anything to deter witnesses from coming "forward"?—Not to my knowledge, but it is a general impression that the landlords are opposed to their tenants coming forward.

The witness withdrew.

Dr. Garrod Thomas called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,045. You are Dr. Garrod Thomas, of Newport, Monmouthshire, but a native of this neighbourhood?—That is so. My father, Lewis Thomas, of Panteryrod, took that farm in 1843, the rental being then 60*l.* It was considered dear at the time, as the previous tenant had, by five annual sales before his ultimate failure, exhausted the soil; in fact I remember hearing my father say that the ground would not produce enough for the use of his household and his own stock. It was very untidy, and there was scarcely a hedge on it, and the buildings were poor, dilapidated, and thatch-covered, with not a single one slated. Mr. Thomas Lloyd, of Nantgwyllt, one of the best landlords in the county,

See 52,938–52,950.

was the landlord, and I think, certainly, that my father was one of the best farmers in the county. He set to work, improving the place vigorously; the dwelling and all the out-houses were rebuilt, towards which rebuilding the landlord paid for timber, for slates, ironmongery, and skilled labour, such as masons and carpenters. These men were, however, partly boarded by the tenant; the landlord did not pay one penny for hauling, the stone mostly was hauled from the sea shore a mile off, and up a steep hill; nor did he pay for unskilled labour, —those who attended to the masons, and so on My father also built hedges all over the farm; thousands of loads of stone, during his lifetime, were carried for facing and making these hedges, and they were put into a condition so that they would last for generations with a little care, the land itself, at the same time, receiving attention by draining, liming, manuring, and so on. Mr. Thomas Lloyd died about 1870.

48,046. Is that Mr. Lloyd, of Nantgwyllt?—Yes.

48,047. That is in Radnorshire?—Yes.

48,048. But he had an estate down here?—He had, Sir John. Mr. Thomas Lloyd died about 1870 and my father died in 1873. Then my mother took on the farm. Mr. Robert Lloyd, who succeeded his father, was also a good landlord, but, unlike his father, could not speak to his tenants in Welsh, and being one of a family of four or five, he was probably not in such a good financial position as his father. He had the whole of his estate revalued in or about 1874, by a stranger to the neighbourhood, who came down in the spring of the year, when the land looked at its best, as in the summer time it gets burnt up, and especially in dry summers. Right up to the time of the valuation the farm was kept in first class condition, both as regards buildings (several of the smaller having been erected without a penny of contribution from the landlord), and as regards the land with respect to liming, manuring, and so on, that was steadily kept up, and the hedges and drains were kept in repair. The result was that the valuer recommended the rent to be raised from 60*l.* a year to 119*l.* 10*s.* a year. Mr. Lloyd very kindly took off the 9*l.* 10*s.* fixing it at 110*l.* Then he also made a little reduction in that after a few years. I consider that my mother, for the time that she remained there, and afterwards my brother who succeeded her, had to pay in rent the penalty of my father's good farming. No other farm in the neighbourhood, or on the estate, was raised in anything like the same proportion.

Mr. Robert Lloyd, in 1889, sold the whole of his Cardiganshire estate, and I bought the old nest for my brother William to live at, but of course I bought it in open sale, and I had to buy on the basis of this increased rental. Thus the purchase money paid by me to Mr. Lloyd was, on account of my father's and mother's good farming, nearly double what it would have been if they had been incompetent farmers.

I would, with your permission, like to draw attention, very shortly, to the case of another brother of mine, Captain David Thomas, a retired master mariner in good circumstances: he took the farm of Pentre, on the same estate, I believe, in the year 1880; he spent a good deal of time and thought in improving the buildings, and in liming and draining the land, constructing altogether over 6,000 yards of drainage. He lost, for the first two or three years, about 70*l.* a year, that is to say, he spent it on the ground, afterwards gradually reducing this, so that during the last couple of years of his tenancy, the farm paid, or perhaps a little more than paid, for itself. In 1889, this farm, being on the same estate, it was also put up for sale; my brother was the highest bidder, but it was withdrawn, and the only compensation he had was a compliment from the auctioneer, who had also been valuer, to the effect that he was the best farmer on the estate. He received no compensation otherwise. It was afterwards sold privately, and now I believe it is let at 35*l.* a year. That is about all I have to state.

48,049. I do not understand your brother's case. Do you not think the Agricultural Holdings Act gave him perfect protection?—I have thought so since, and I believe, possibly, if my brother had been well advised, and had cared to venture into it, that he might have been protected; but there is in this neighbourhood, and I believe in other neighbourhoods also, a fear of litigation in regard to that matter, because they are advised by solicitors as a rule that it is throwing good money after bad.

48,050. I do not believe it is generally known, but the Agricultural Holdings Act does give protection on behalf of a tenant who drains. All he has to do is to give his landlord notice?—That is the point.

48,051. Then in case of a sale, or in case of disturbance, he has a right to have his money back?—That is just it, but my brother thought he was there for life; in fact, I wish to repeat very emphatically that he was in the hands of a very good landlord. Mr. Lloyd is very much respected.

48,052. But even a good landlord may do injustice by selling his property?—Yes, circumstances may arise which cause him to think it wise to sell.

48,053. Your evidence goes to show, I think, that practically the provisions of the Act are not taken advantage of?—They are a dead letter in this county at any rate, Sir John.

Mr. Grove.

48,054. You spoke about the valuer visiting the farm at a favourable time?—That is so.

48,055. Then in your opinion, I suppose a valuer should visit a farm and look over it at two different seasons?—I do think so. This farm is extraordinarily deceptive. It is of a rather rocky formation, and in the spring of the year, on a day like this, for instance, it would look infinitely better than on, say, a day in July, when it gets burnt up very quickly. It is close to the coast, where the dry winds come and scorch it up.

48,056. Have you any idea at all as to how much was expended on this farm in improvements?—Do you mean my father's farm?

48,057. Yes, at the time that the family entered into it?—I could not say that I have an idea.

48,058. It was a large sum, I suppose, altogether?—It was the labour of a lifetime. The valuer said it was a much better farm than the surrounding farms. It was in a much better condition.

48,059. Was it the auctioneer who said that, or the valuer?—That refers to the valuer in the case of my father's farm.

Mr. Grove—continued.

48,060. Does that go to prove, as I suppose it would, that there had been so much labour and so much money expended on the farm, that it was in distinctly better condition than the surrounding farms?—It unhesitatingly proves that, because I emphatically say that at the time my father took it it was not much better than a sheep walk.

48,061. Therefore, when you bought it, you had to pay over again for the money and labour that your father had expended upon it?—Exactly.

48,062. There is one other question that I will trouble you with. From your knowledge, and probably from conversations with your father, do you think that political or religious differences did cause in years gone by, or do cause even now, any serious unpleasantnesses between landlord and tenant?—My memory does not carry me further back than the election of 1868. My father died in 1873. I do very clearly remember that in 1868 Mr. Lloyd was down here, and had sent word, or himself called, on a great number of tenants desiring them to vote for the Conservative candidate. My father was a Nonconformist and a Liberal, and a few of the tenants put their heads together, and the most they could do—they were afraid to go any further—was not to vote at all, so that it was really a condition of fear and serfdom, and they dare not give expression to their political convictions.

48,063. Would you say to-day that there is more or less suffering of the kind still?—I have no doubt of it, although I am not quite so much in touch with the neighbourhood now as I was some time ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,064. You speak of several failures on this farm before your father got into possession of it?—That is so.

48,065. The tenants could not pay the amount of rent?—They could not pay the amount of rent.

48,066. Is this a farm which I think I have been through many years ago, that is between here and New Quay?—It is about half way between Aberayron and New Quay.

48,067. On the right-hand side?—On the right-hand side going down.

48,068. It is rather hilly ground, is it not?—Yes, it is hilly ground.

48,069. And very apt to scorch up in summer-time?—Yes, it is very apt to do so. It gets scorched to lliw cadno—the colour of a fox.

48,070. It would take a shower of rain every day to keep it green?—Yes.

48,071. And it is very deceptive to a stranger?—Yes; coming there in the middle of the spring, you would go away with a totally different conception of it than in the summer-time.

48,072. You spoke of a valuer who went there. What was his name?—Mr. Blathwaite.

48,073. I knew Mr. Blathwaite whom you refer to. He is dead now. Did he speak emphatically about the value of this farm?—I cannot remember. I think he came in and peeped at the corner of a field, and walked away to the next, and so on, and he only saw the farm on one occasion.

48,074. You spoke of carting some stones; that was down from the quayside, I suppose—going down the hill and then bringing them up?—Yes, going down a steep hill and bringing up many loads.

48,075. Hundreds of loads?—Thousands, I should say. I put down hundreds in my statement, but my brother, who is older, and who knew the farm better than I did, and also a neighbour, said, "You put in thousands, and you "will be then on the right side."

48,076. That was not only for building, but for hedging?—Yes, for hedging.

48,077. It was very expensive work?—Very expensive work.

48,078. It was a great advance, from 60*l.* to 110*l.*?—Yes, it was 100 per cent., all but half-a-sovereign, on the original valuation.

48,079. Then you say that you cannot speak as to the probable amount of draining?—Really, I could not. I am sure you could form a better opinion than myself.

48,080. That must have been expensive?—That is so.

48,081. Have you any remedies to suggest for the bad state of things?—There, no doubt, comes in a difficulty. I am in favour of the establishment of a land court, if it could be established on reasonably cheap terms. At present Admiralty disputes are settled, I believe, by the county court judge, assisted by two assessors to advise him on technical points. Those assessors, I believe, are appointed by the Board of Trade. I would throw out a suggestion that there should be something of the same sort with regard to agriculture, namely, that a thoroughly impartial tribunal should be in existence to be appealed to if necessary. I would not be in favour of the county council making these appointments, for instance. I think it would be better to have thoroughly outside influence. I believe, however,—I want to be as fair as I can—that five-sixths of the tenants are now better treated, or as well treated, as they would be if this court were in existence.

48,082. Quite so?—But there are a few hardships which I think would be remedied by such a state of things. It would give the tenants, I think, the feeling of fixity of tenure, which is one very good thing, and also a feeling somewhat of independence.

48,083. I suppose you agree with the last witness, that if they had security of tenure they would farm their land better, and make the land produce more?—Without a doubt. My father had that feeling, and if it had not been for the ultimate sale he would have been all right. Still, his rent was raised, and that was the hardship.

Mr. Grove.

48,084. I gather from you, as to a land court, that you think that most of the landlords and tenants would agree between themselves mutually, without going to the land court?—If the tenant felt that there was something like that behind him he would be more comfortable, and, speaking as a miniature landlord myself, I may say that I think it would be a comfort to the landlord himself, because the tenants are sometimes, it may be, unreasonable, and perhaps they are unreasonable as often as the landlord. I do not say anything about that, but I think it would be mutually to their comfort.

48,085. I suppose you would want an effective but a cheap machinery?—I think it is essential that it should be cheap.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,086. You bought your farm for your brother?—Yes.

48,087. He is your tenant now?—He was until his death, and now his widow is the tenant. He was killed some time ago.

48,088. Do you own any other land besides that?—I do. I have about 1,000 acres, mostly in this county.

48,089. Have you had any difficulty yourself in dealing with your tenants by freedom of contract?—I have not.

48,090. But you think there is a certain proportion of the tenantry in this country that requires protection from bad landlords?—Yes, I do, and perhaps landlords from bad tenants sometimes, when the tenants get misbehaving themselves—drunkenness, or what not.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

48,091. How do you think security of tenure is best obtained—by leases?—I really cannot say that I have given very much attention to such a subject, but I should say, on the face of it, by leases.

48,092. Are there many leases in this neighbourhood?—I think not.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,093. You purchased some land, Dr. Thomas; do you find the transfer of land rather expensive?—Terribly so.

48,094. Do you not think it would be a good thing if we could get a cheaper way of transferring land?—Yes. I find dealing with lawyers in any way is very expensive.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,095. I made a particular note that your idea of a land court is that it should be a cheap one?—I think so, strongly.

48,096. There is one question handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen. "Do you mean to say that "Mr. Lloyd would have injured any tenant "because he voted contrary to Mr. Lloyd's "wishes?"—Well, he took rather a prominent part in the election of 1868, and created the impression of dread amongst farmers to go against his wishes.

48,097. That was in the days of open voting?—It was. But I should trust the late Mr. Lloyd, or the present Mr. Lloyd, when they were landlords in this district, as soon almost as any landlord I have ever heard of; they were thoroughly good men.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Caradog Jones called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,098. Are you Mr. J. C. Jones, of Llanarth?—I am.

48,099. Will you kindly state to the Commissioners what it is you wish to give evidence upon. Is Llanarth near here?—It is 4½ miles away.

48,100. Is it upon the road which we came along this morning from Lampeter?—No.

48,101. Which way is it, inland?—It is about 2½ miles from the sea.

48,102. It is a large parish?—It is one of the largest in the county.

and, indeed, outside it in the neighbouring parishes. Some exceptions may be cited, viz., the freeholders, leaseholders, and a few others who have not lost all faith in their landlords. The Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883, is a dead letter to all intents and purposes. The population has declined in the last decade from 2,001 to 1,850—80 cottages at least have been allowed to fall into ruin during my recollection. Of these 80, 17 of them were on the Llanina estate alone, which comprises but a comparatively small area. As a member of the sanitary committee of the Aberayron Board of Guardians, I can testify that during last year many complaints were brought of farms and cottages being in an insanitary and uninhabitable condition, and it has been the committee's duty to issue notices to several landlords that unless the same were attended to forthwith, steps would be taken to have them remedied. Although great progress has been made of late years in regard to better buildings, I venture to say some landlords house their dogs and horses better than they do their tenants. The fare of the tenants as a class is hard, and I am almost sure, if I commenced describing the same, it would carry on the face of it the air of exaggeration. The chief meal of the day is cawl, or broth, with bacon or dried beef and potatoes. Fresh meat is out of the question. Labour is very scarce, and more than that, farmers have no money to engage what there is. The pay of farm-servants ranges from 6*l.* to 14*l.* for girls, and boys above 14 1*l.* for every year of age, i.e., a lad of 15 years old would get, as a rule, 15*l.*, and strong young men would get from 18*l.* to 24*l.* Labourers by the day get 1*s.* to 1*s.* 4*d.* and food, and those on their own food from 10*s.* to 15*s.* a week. Charwomen for in and out door work get from 10*d.* to 1*s.* a day and their food. Many young men leave for the works in Glamorganshire, because of the better pay they can get. There are many of our best workmen and small farmers who go to Glamorganshire and come home at harvest time. They leave their families here, because they see it is a better place to rear their families. Many of them tell me how happy they would be with small holdings in the country in preference to better earnings in the different industrial centres. Some years ago reformatory children were imported pretty freely into the district, but many farmers are of opinion that their services are dearer than what can be got at home, even if more money has to be paid, and they seem now to pause and consider as to what may be the result of such importation on the future morals of the district. Farmers with no families find it most difficult to pay their way anyhow, but those that have children growing up, who are able to do without the services of any outside their own families, do better, but it is at the cost of their children, and I hold that the lot of the children of farmers is harder even than the servants who are paid for their services. It is next to nothing these children get when they start in the world for themselves. When I heard the Land Commission was coming into our district I hoped it would come to Aberayron from Cardigan, Llandyssul, or Newcastle Emlyn by road. In this I have been disappointed. They would then have seen a state of things which I believe would be impossible for anybody to describe and convey to you a just estimate of the condition of the land. Generally there is much poor land, so poor that it would take a person with much faith to hope to make it pay; but it is certain that there is a great deal of good land if brought into cultivation. The landlord will not do so; the tenant cannot dare do so, because he knows if he does he will have to pay an enhanced rent (judging from past experience) on his own improvements. Those farmers who have in the past improved their holdings have had to suffer through their rents being advanced, and the gross estimated rentals also put up for rate-collecting purposes. A valuation was made of the Aberayron Union about six years ago, when those who had improved their holdings had their gross estimated rentals advanced, and those who had neglected their holdings received reduction. I have taken particular notice, lately, how careful the tenants are in these days not to undertake anything but remunerative work. I do not think the Celt is so heedless of beauty, as can be seen in the surroundings of villagers' homes who do not depend on tilling the soil for their livelihood, as to leave their hedges and the environments of their dwellings untrimmed and unkept, but at present every effort must be utilised for making the farms pay. There is a great land hunger in the district, and until some remedy is found for bringing some hundreds of acres into cultivation now lying waste, this is likely to continue.

Next I wish to refer to the political evictions of 1868 which took place on the Llanina estate, and before proceeding I beg leave to quote a letter written by the late Mr. C. R. Longcroft to his Carmarthenshire tenants under the date of November 20th, 1868. That letter is as follows:—"I received "a memorial yesterday, by post, with the "names of my tenants in Carmarthenshire "attached to it. Yours being the first in the "list, I shall address my reply to you, and "request you will make known its contents to "those hereafter named. I cannot allow it to "pass without remarking upon it, and first of "all I must express my surprise at your making "any difficulty in complying with my request "conveyed by Mr. Bowcott, who was authorised "by me to ask you to vote with me for Messrs. "Jones and Puxley. As I am better acquainted "with you, from seeing more of you than I am "with my other tenants, and from all you have "professed for me, I feel surprised you should "not have set a better example. Many, if not "all my tenants, have lived with me for many "years, and upon terms of confidence and good "will, and the continuance of such good under-"standing ought to be the aim as long as the "connexion between landlord and tenant con-"tinue. The severance of such good feeling, I "fear, is the object of teachers who mislead "them. As I said before, it is not desirable "that a breach of confidence should take place "where none existed before. I rarely, if ever, "asked you or either of you to do anything for "me, and as circumstances, from time of life, "may prevent my ever asking you again a "similar request, and as you well know my "wishes, I certainly expect you will vote with "me for those gentlemen. I am your well-"wisher, C. R. Longcroft. To John Jones, "E. Williams, Dd. Francis, J. Owen, W. Wil-"liams, and Evan Jacob." The result of this reply to the memorial by the tenants was that five voted for the Conservatives and one for the Liberals, and this one had to leave his holding.

The Cardiganshire tenants living in the parishes of Llanarth, Llanllwchaiarn, Cydblwyf, and Llanina were canvassed by the said landlord, C. R. Longcroft, Esq., himself, and his farm bailiff, who were not backward in using threats if any of the tenants showed unwillingness to vote according to their landlord's wish, with the result that in March 1869, John Davies, Gofynachfach, William Richards,

Rhydalen (a son of his former farm bailiff), and Morgan Jones, of Cefngrugoesfawr (an uncle of mine), were served with notices to quit, and quit they had to, in the following September, as threatened before the election. These men were as good farmers as any on the estate; they had to leave without any compensation for the improvement made by them. In 1868 there were about 20 Nonconformist tenants on the estate to five Conformists, but the process of elimination had taken place gradually, but surely, until in 1890 there were eight Nonconformists to 16 Conformists. For about 19 years from 1871 there were only two exceptions to a Nonconformist having a farm on the Llanina estate, and those were two sons of the old tenants who had held farms on the estate for long periods. About 1878 two tenants changed from chapel to church quite suddenly; I shall leave you gentlemen to divine the reason. I would further draw your attention to the fact that I once went to Mr. C. E. Longcroft, as a J.P., who lived then within a quarter of a mile to my house, to have some proxies in liquidation signed, when he demanded 1*s.* 6*d.* towards the Church Defence Association for so doing, which I considered at the time a joke, but rather a coarse one. In about 12 months afterwards I went again to sign a document which required to be attested before a magistrate, which he refused to attest because I had not paid the money to the Rev. D. J. Jones, the vicar of the parish. The matter was reported to the Lord Chancellor, and he was reprimanded. My authority for this last statement is L. P. Pugh, Esq., Abermaide, the then member for the county. This happened about 1884.

On the Llanina estate the solicitor who acts as agent charges for the copy of agreement prepared for the landlord about 15*s.*, and another 10*s.* if the tenant requires a copy for himself, and owing to this charge very few tenants care to have a copy, as it is, in their opinion, too dear a luxury. In most cases where permanent improvements were made, such as buildings, by the late C. R. Longcroft, Esq., an advance of 5 per cent. was added to the rent, and when C. E. Longcroft, Esq., lived at Lon, the tenants were expected and did cart coals free of charge.

With your permission I beg leave to refer to the Penrhiwgaled estate, in the parishes of Llanllwchaiarn and Cydblwyf, bordering on the parish of Llanarth, as I have been pressingly requested to do so by several farmers in that district. It is a well-known fact that no Nonconformist need apply for a vacant farm on that estate, as all vacancies during the last 20 years have been filled by Conformists, and in four cases the new tenants on entering their tenements left chapel for church.

To remedy the existing evils in the present system of land tenure, I am of opinion that:—

(1.) The law of distress for rent should be abolished; this would materially make the landlord more particular as to the character of his tenants, and not seek the tenant that would promise to pay the highest rent, many tenants now, to my knowledge, borrow money to pay their rent, and are noted, as a class, for long credit.

(2.) Longer period of notice to quit on both sides should be given, say three or five years, provided rents are paid regularly, but by mutual agreement after or on receiving notice to quit, the notice to terminate at any date.

(3.) A land court to fix fair rents based on the average prices of agricultural produce, and to secure to the tenant compensation for improvements made during tenancy.

(4.) Light railways.

(5.) Government to lend money for tenants to buy their holdings on similar lines as now in force in Ireland.

48,104. Are you a farmer?—I am a country shopkeeper and a postmaster, and I do not know what else.

48,105. You are the son of a farmer, perhaps?—I am the son of a farmer. My father commenced business as a shopkeeper when he was 33 years of age; failing to get a farm he turned to shopkeeping.

48,106. Which do you find the most profitable?—I have never farmed myself at all.

48,107. You tell us that there is at present a land hunger, in spite of the difficulties under which farmers are labouring?—Yes.

48,108. You consider that greater security of tenure ought to be obtained, and you subsequently explain that by making a suggestion of a longer notice to quit. Do leases operate; are there many leases?—Very few.

48,109. Do you think that is a good system or a bad one?—A bad one.

48,110. You think that the system of leasing is a bad system?—That is my opinion.

48,111. Why do you think it bad?—For this reason: Assuming a tenant gets a lease, say, for 21 years, he does all he can to improve the farm for the first 14 or 15 years, and then he would do all he could to take out of the farm what he had put in; that is my opinion.

48,112. Is your opinion based upon what you have observed in other countries; for example, the Scotch system is, I believe, a system of 19 years leases?—I could not offer an opinion as to that.

48,113. Do you base your opinion that a tenant would treat the landlord as you have described, upon any personal observation of your own?—I know that there would be a temptation for him to do it.

48,114. It would be scarcely fair to the landlord if that was done, would it?—It would be unfair, and it would be worse for the community than for the landlord.

48,115. I do not quite follow you; you think that a longer period of notice to quit, say, three or five years, would obviate that difficulty?—In many instances it would. It would give the tenant an opportunity to get some return, while he fails altogether to do so now.

48,116. Take it at the maximum time that you suggest yourself—five years; if a landlord said at the end of five years, "I should like to take the land up," what is to prevent the tenant from running the land out at that time?—If he has limed it, and if he has improved it, he ought to have the benefit of his improvements.

48,117. I think we are all of opinion that he ought to have the benefit of his improvements in that way. Do you not think that he would get that under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That is quite a dead letter in the district; they do not know anything at all about it. There were some cases down Aberystwyth way where there was litigation over the matter, and that sort of news travels very fast. In those cases of litigation the matter was referred to an arbitrator, and before they could take up the award they had to pay more costs than the award itself.

48,118. Have you had any experience of arbitration?—None.

48,119. Perhaps that is because you think it expensive. You have not had any experience of it yourself?—No.

48,120. Has there been any in the neighbourhood?—No.

48,121. I should be very glad if there could be devised some form of arbitration that was not expensive?—The cheaper the better.

48,122. Certainly. Do you think that the Agricultural Holdings Act has been a dead letter because of the expenses attaching to it?—There is one very great detriment to the Agricultural Holdings Act, a sitting tenant cannot claim compensation; if there is an advance in the rent he would have to leave before he gets compensation, and I think that that is very wrong.

48,123. The compensation is for improvements made, it does not mention rent, I think; it is compensation for improvements done upon the land?—Yes, but presuming the landlord gave a notice to the tenant to advance the rent or leave, he is on the horns of a dilemma, and of course if he prefers to remain he will not get a penny for his improvements, although his rent is advanced.

48,124. Have there been any capricious evictions since the year 1868?—They try to take care now to get Tories or Conformists, so that they need not turn them out, and, as a rule, that is so. Mind you, when I give my evidence I do not want to say that they are all bad, but I have cited cases by which I think, having given a list at the end of my evidence, I am able to stand to it.

48,125. You think there are some changes in tenancy which have not been actuated by improper motives?—Yes, I do not accuse them all.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,126. You say in your evidence that there are still some farmhouses and cottages which are in a rather insanitary condition in this part of the world?—Yes.

48,127. Did the board of guardians send down inspectors to visit those places?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,128. Did they suggest any remedies?—Yes. The remedies have been carried out. I mean to say they have been put into a somewhat better condition.

48,129. Still, there is room for more improvement?—Oh, dear, yes.

48,130. Then you consider that servants wages, both of men and women, have advanced very much?—Not too much.

48,131. In the case of farm servants?—Yes, they have been advanced.

48,132. How do you account for farmers that have no family finding it difficult to pay their rent?—Because they have to pay for labour.

48,133. Then they have not the means to pay for the labour that is employed on the farms?—No.

48,134. I daresay you hear the farmers complaining that more labour could be expended on the farms to advantage if they had the means of paying for it?—Yes.

48,135. I think you mentioned, with regard to Mr. Longcroft, a person of the name of Mr. Bowcott. Who was this gentleman?—He was some agent, I suppose, who was employed. I believe he was a clergyman.

48,136. Do you consider it is still difficult for a farmer to vote unless he votes along with his landlord, and that even the Ballot Act does not make him so free as he would like to be?—When he votes he is perfectly secure if he holds his own tongue, and does not keep bad company.

48,137. I do not quite understand you now?—Of course, they know perfectly well that they can vote, and that they are perfectly safe with regard to the vote. They believe in the ballot, they have had plenty of experience of it; but a man is despised if he goes with the wrong company.

Mr. Grove.

48,138. But that is his fault, is it not?—I am not accusing now the Liberals any more than the Conservatives.

48,139. But you say that if a man keeps his own mouth shut, nobody need know how he votes?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,140. Is it a fact that there are some still who do not like to vote at all?—Yes, there are some.

48,141. You say you are a grocer. How do you find the money coming in at present; is it rather difficult to get money?—Wretchedly difficult.

48,142. Has it been so of late years, or since how long?—Say the last eight or nine months, things have been very bad. I have been in business now for over 30 years, for myself and with my father, and the nearest approach to these bad times was in 1880, but they are worse now than they were then. I might, perhaps, say this, that we feel the depression later than in towns, but it lingers longer with us.

Sir John Llewelyn.

The Secretary will now read the list of names that has been put in by the witness. I think it ought to be read out. It shows the farms where changes have taken place between 1868 and 1890 also showing where the tenants of the farms have been changed from Nonconformists to Conformists, in some cases there being no change.

The following list was then read :—

List of Farms on Llanina Estate, showing Religious Convictions of Tenants.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,143. I think you told me before that you did not assert that in every one of those there was a change made for the purpose of a change in the religion of the tenant?—No, in some it was not so. You see, in some cases there was a determination of the tenancy when the tenant died, and when the vacancy occurred, perhaps the preference was given to a churchman. I simply state the fact that that estate is in that condition now. I do not impute motives, but I simply state the facts; I let you draw a conclusion.

48,144. Does not it show an increase of Church feeling in the district?—Yes, strongly so, and those are the grounds upon which the Church is said to prosper in Wales, by refusing Nonconformists farms and giving them to churchmen.

48,145. Although you gave me the answer that you do not impute motives, it seems to me that you do impute motives?—No, excuse me, Sir John; I think that I should make that clear; I do not say that they were turned out for the sake of making room for Conformists.

48,146. I am sure I do not want to do anything unfair to you, but I only wish to get from you what your contention upon these figures is?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

48,147. When an agreement is entered into, do you think that the tenant farmer should have a copy of that agreement supplied to him?—From a business point of view I think it is not right that he should be without a counterpart of the agreement.

48,148. And that he should have it free of cost?—No; what I say is this, if he wants a copy perhaps he should pay for it, but why, in the name of fortune, should the tenant pay for the landlord's agreement?

48,149. The agreements, generally, are drawn up in a settled form in print, are they not, and they are filled up with the names?—No.

48,150. They are not?—No.

48,151. You do not know of those sort of agreements?—No; all those that I have seen are written.

48,152. Do you think that if the Agricultural Holdings Act was printed in Welsh, or a summary of it made in Welsh, that it would be of more service?—It might be of more service, and if it was improved it would be of more service still.

48,153. Are there any farmers' clubs, or is there any co-operation between the farmers at all?—None at all, and that is the worst of it.

48,154. Then you say that years ago there were large numbers of sales in this district?—Yes.

48,155. You consider that there should be complete compensation made for improvements effected by tenants?—Yes, and I think evidence will be given to-day to show you among how many there is suffering by reason of that, and how much suffering is caused by that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,156. The following questions are put in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Who is the owner of the "Penrhiwgaled estate, I mean the second estate "you mentioned, where no Nonconformists are "taken as tenants?"—I do not quite know who he is; he is a Mr. Evans, or Captain Evans, or Lieutenant Evans, or something like that; he lives near Llandyssul now.

48,157. "You have given us a list showing "the change of religious opinion of the tenants "on one estate; can you give us any similar "account as to the district generally?"—You see that is outside my parish, and it was only a day or two ago that I got that information. But I will give you the names of those, to my knowledge, that turned to the Church, if you like. Of course I could not give you the particulars in the same way as I have given them upon that estate, but I will supply them later on with pleasure, if necessary.

48,158. The following question is handed in by Mr. Evan Thomas: "What are the changes "in tenancy mentioned by you as having taken "place in the farms?—I have read that out in plain language, I think, I have given that information in my statement.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Thomas called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See 43,679.

48,159. What are you?—Farm bailiff at Llanina.

48,160. You wish to rebut this evidence?—Yes, I wish to show who may be a Conformist, and who may be a Nonconformist. He has said that no one is allowed to have a farm on the estate unless he is a churchman.

48,161. That is not what he said?—I say there was nothing of that with us.

48,162. Is it the case now?—No.

48,163. I think, according to Mr. Jones's own statement, there are several Nonconformists on the estate now?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

48,164. He said so. Do you wish to rebut anything else?—I do not wish to rebut anything else. I am a Nonconformist myself, and I have been on the Llanina estate for the last 38 years, and they never asked me to go to church at all.

48,165. Mr. Stephen puts this question: "Is "there any ground for the allegation that "Churchmen are preferred to Nonconformists "on the Llanina estate"?—I cannot say less than that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John James called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,166. You are Mr. John James, and you are a freeholder, living at Synod Parc, Llanarth, but you were previously a tenant farmer?—Yes.

The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the Interpreter as follows:

The evidence of John James, Synod Parc, Llanarth: I was brought up from infancy on Pantgwyn, a holding at that time in the possession of the late John Lloyd Davies, Esq., Blaendyffryn and Alltyrodyn, being 137 acres in extent, for the most part high land, and poor soil. My father took this holding in the year 1838 for the yearly rent of 56*l.* When my parents came there the buildings were in a bad state, and the hedges were just the same, but as my father was a carpenter, and that according to his agreement he was to receive timber for repairing the buildings, he succeeded to keep them up for 15 years. In the year 1853 the landlord decided to have new buildings in an entirely new place, and he told my father that he would have to haul everything towards them, and he would acknowledge this in the end. We were obliged to carry everything towards them, two miles distant at least,—600 loads of stone and sand, and everything which was remaining in the old buildings. We had to put up the walls round the new buildings without receiving as much as a penny for them, although the landlord had promised differently. And worse than that, before the buildings were perfectly finished the owner sent a valuer to value the whole estate, and our rent was raised 4*l.* a year more. We were dissatisfied at the outset with this, but after a few years we got to feel better. The new buildings were very much better than the old ones, trade had improved a great deal, and we, as children, as well as my father and mother, worked hard, paying but little in wages. About this time our old landlord died, and the estate was thrown into Chancery, so we had quietness and peace for 15 or 18 years. During that time we managed to make a little money over and above our liabilities. In the year 1870 my father died, leaving the care of the holding to my mother and myself. By this time the heir of the estate had come of age. On the first 25th of March after the burial of my father we received a notice to quit, and immediately the same valuer came over the land, namely Mr. Blathwaite, and he raised the rent 10*l.* yearly, making the total 70*l.* We had to agree to this, or to leave, and we signed a very stringent agreement this time, thinking that we undoubtedly would have peace for ever after this. Exactly five years afterwards we received another notice to quit, and another valuer came there, and our rent was raised 8*l.* yearly. Now the rent was 78*l.* instead of 56*l.*, as at first. We re-took the place again, and signed another agreement as formerly. I have a copy of that agreement in my possession now. [Agreement handed in.] We were by this time quite discouraged, and saw that we could do no good there. About the year 1880 the whole estate was sold, and my mother and myself had determined to buy Pantgwyn if we could get it at anything near what it was worth, anything that would pay us, owing to the trouble and cost which we had incurred to make our holding a little tidier than any other holding, I can assure you, in the district. The reserve price was placed too high for us to do anything with it. In our hardship we determined to buy Synodganal, on the same estate. We saw it was a little more reasonable in price than Pantgwyn, although it was there we had set our hearts, and we had intended to spend the rest of our lives. We made a mistake in buying this place. The prices given for land were too high by far at that time, as we, to our sorrow, have understood by this, and we wasted a good deal of money.

In the face of all these things it is obvious to anyone that we want a change in the method of holding land. It has been very uncertain during the years that have gone by.

Mr. Grove.

48,167. Your rent was raised from 56*l.* to 78*l.*?—Yes.

48,168. Do you consider it was raised because of the improvements you had made upon the land?—Yes, to a great extent.

Mr. Grove—continued.

48,169. You put in a copy of an agreement. Do you object to any of the clauses in that agreement?—Yes, I do object to some of the clauses.

48,170. Have you marked those clauses that you object to?—No, I do not recollect that I marked them.

48,171. Do you regret having bought your farm?—Yes, I have stated that the place was very high rented at that time.

48,172. Do you still owe money for that farm which you bought?—Yes, I owe money on it.

48,173. So that you would be glad if any scheme for the Government to lend money at a reasonable rate was brought about?—Yes, I should be very glad of such a scheme.

48,174. And you would like two things to be done, and to help those who are at present in debt because of buying their farms, and also to enable any fresh tenant farmers to buy their holdings as opportunity occurs?—I should be very glad.

48,175. What rate of interest would you consider it would be fair to suggest?—3*l.*

48,176. What rate do you pay now on the money that you have on mortgage?—Until lately I paid 4*l.*, but now I pay 3*l.* 15*s.*

Mr. Griffiths.

48,177. You say there was another valuer called in after Mr. Blathwaite. Who was that?—John Howell Thomas, of Carmarthen.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,178. Did he advance the rent?—Yes, by 8*l.*

48,179. Is it a fact that you could not go on farming very well while you were having all these notices to quit?—No, towards the end I got quite tired of it.

48,180. Was it not whilst the estate was in Chancery that you had the most peaceable time and made the most money?—Yes, by far.

48,181. How much did the landlord expend upon this farm from the time that you paid 56*l* rent to the time that you paid 78*l.*?—All that he did was putting up a building. No more. I cannot say how much the building cost him.

48,182. Did he build a dwelling-house or outhouse?—A dwelling-house and outbuildings.

48,183. You consider the rent was too high after all?—Yes, it was too high by far towards the end.

48,184. Do you think it would be a good thing if you could go somewhere else to settle this matter of rent?—Yes, I think it would be a good thing.

48,185. Who would you like to settle it?—Indeed I cannot say.

48,186. There is a question put by Mr. Stephen: "Can you tell us how much a year "your father spent on his farm while he had "it for 56*l.*"?—I cannot say for certain, but I know that he spent a lot of money.

The witness withdrew.

David Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,187. You are Mr. David Evans?—Yes.

48,188. And where do you live?—Pantteg, Llanllwchaiarn.

48,189. We will have your statement read?—If you please.

[The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the Interpreter, and read as follows]:

Evidence of David Evans, of Pantteg, in the parish of Llanllwchaiarn, freeholder, previously tenant farmer:

I took a farm in the parish of Llandyssiliogogo, on the Pentre estate, Pembrokeshire, in October, 1855. Before I went there the holding was valued, and the rent which was asked of me was 38*l.* a year. I followed my grandfather and grandmother there, and their rent was 32*l.* a year. My relatives lived there before me for hundreds of years. The dwelling-house was rebuilt in 1861. I hauled all the stones, and all the other materials that were necessary towards this building without pay. In 1865 or 1866 another valuer came there, the result being that the rent was increased by 9*l.* yearly. I had no vote until 1868. Before that ever memorable election, my landlady's steward called yonder several times, and asked me to vote for Malet-Vaughan, Esq., the Conservative candidate for a seat in Parliament for the county, but I refused to promise. One of the last times that he came, I told him emphatically that I would vote for Richards, because I believed that he was a better man; "If you do," said the agent, "perhaps you will repent." The day of the poll came, and I voted for Richards. The following March I received notice to quit from my holding, and in spite of every effort, I failed to get it back. Sometime in July of 1869 I and my wife went to Mrs. Saunders Davies, to Pentre, and we had food ourselves, and food for the horse and every cordiality, but no promise for the holding. In going out, I met John Davies, my landlady's working bailiff, who was a Conservative and Churchman, who told me I would be sure to get a holding were it not for those devils of clergy and their wives who came there to worry his mistress. We were obliged to leave the place after making several improvements, and after hauling everything towards the building which I mentioned, without receiving even a penny for the improvements. I believe that the law should be so changed as to protect the improvements of the tenants for their own benefit; a land court for establishing a fair price between the landowners and the farmers, and when the farmers buys his holding, that the Government should lend money to him something in the same manner as is done now in Ireland.

48,189A. Where was it you were in 1868 when you got notice to quit?—Erwanfach, in the parish of Llandissilio-gogo.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

48,190. Under whom do you hold the farm now?—I bought the place.

48,191. What is the name of the farm from which you were evicted?—Erwanfach, Llandissilio-gogo.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,192. You went to considerable expense, did you not, to haul some materials to the buildings?—Yes.

48,193. When you did so you did not expect to have an advance of rent afterwards?—No, I did not think they would do that.

48,194. In consequence of your not voting as Mrs. Saunders Davies wished you to do, you were to leave without having any payment for hauling?—That is what I thought.

48,195. How many years did you enjoy it after you had done the hauling?—The buildings were put up in 1861, and I had to leave at Michaelmas of 1869.

48,196. When you went to your landlady, did she tell you that it was owing to your voting as you did that you would have to leave?—She did not say a word to me, but the agent came to me, and he said he was afraid that it would be so.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,197. Do the clergy of the neighbourhood do much canvassing?—The clergyman influenced the landlady; he did not go out to canvass.

48,198. And if it had not been for the clergy, this bailiff thought you would not have to leave?—He said he believed that if the clergy and their wives did not trouble the landlady, that I should be left alone.

Mr. Grove.

48,199. Did you buy your present holding at a very dear price?—Yes, the price was high enough.

48,200. Did you buy it on purpose to have some place where you could feel secure?—Yes that was my object; so that I should not work for others.

48,200A. Do you regret it now?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. Evan Bateman called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,201. Is this the statement of your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Evan Bateman, tanner and currier, Castle Hill, Llanarth, Cardiganshire.

About 1876 I took the tannery in the village of Llanarth, and in consequence of my keeping a horse, I wanted land. I succeeded in obtaining a few fields, about five acres, and outbuildings from Mr. W. Rees, Llanarth, at a rent of 9*l.* When I first took the land it was quite out of cultivation. In a portion of a field the first year I put vetches and oats; they sprouted and that was all. In the second year I sowed barley and rye grass, but I did not receive more than three sheets' full of grain and straw; the soil was heavy yellow clay. After incurring considerable expense for lime and manure and old bark, I received notice to leave, and in the same portion of the field which I have described, I received 25 bushels of barley the year I left, about 1887. When I took the little place, I received a promise that so long as I paid the rent I should remain there, but a lease was refused me. The reason I was obliged to leave was because the landowner said that he wanted it himself. When I left the place undoubtedly it was double the value it was when I took it, but I received not a halfpenny of compensation for the improvements.

Towards the end of 1881 I took a field of three acres on the Llanina estate, close to the Llanarth village, at a public auction, for three years. At the termination of the three years I went to the landlord, C. R. Longcroft, Esq., and asked to have the field for the future like the other tenants, as it would not be of value to me unless I spent money on it in improvements, and the gentleman told me I should have it and welcome. With this promise I spent 14*l.* on it the first year, in lime, manure and labour, as well as much care in the following years. The field became more and more productive, and thrice as productive as it was when I first took it.

On the death of C. R. Longcroft, his son, C. E. Longcroft, came into the possession of the greater part of the estate, and the first opportunity he had he gave me notice to leave, the only reason, so far as I imagine or know, was that I was a Liberal and Nonconformist, and there was a churchwoman who was asking for the place, and who received it. I determined, when I received this notice to leave the field, that I would not spend another penny on improvements for any landowner, and the first opportunity I had I bought two fields, and I am now free to do what I like with them—and thank goodness for that—without fearing the foolish whim of any landowner. I believe it is high time that the Government should prepare a measure of security for those tenants who are so open to be oppressed by the landlords and their agents, and the small agents who are ready to make mischief between the landowners and their tenants. Undoubtedly differences in language, religion and political views go a long way to make misunderstandings possible where there would be none if things were otherwise. I am afraid that bowing and scraping and tale-bearing is a necessary element in their tenants by some landlords.

I desire to give evidence in reference to my brother, John Bateman, who was turned out of his holding, called Ffinantuchaf, by Llanwnen, on Dolebach, or High Mead estate, the owner of which at that time was Mrs. Seymour Davies, the mother of the present Lord Lieutenant of Cardiganshire, because he did not vote as requested in the 1868 election. He was threatened that if he did not vote for the Tory candidate he would have to leave his holding, and he had to leave in accordance with the threat. My father had been farm bailiff in Dolebach, or High Mead, as it is now called, for 38 years, and the son was expected to be servile, but John refused to bend, and he was obliged to suffer in consequence, and he was obliged to live in a small house for some years. From there he went to Felin yr Aber, but afterwards had a holding of the name of Glantrenfach, near Llanybyther, from an old friend of his youth who had bought holdings in the neighbourhood. According to his taking of it he was to be allowed 14*l.* yearly for three years in order to pay for lime and other things, so that the holding might be brought into better condition, but the owner died before my brother went to the place, and the widow or trustees of the owner did not give him a penny back. Before long he found out that the place was too highly rented. He had four children old enough to assist him. He died last year, and his widow will have to leave the coming October, for the only reason that the rent is too high, and that she cannot get any reduction in the rent. I believe that the Government should prepare measures to protect the farmers from suffering wrong, on the same principle as that on which they have already provided against over-working women and children in factories and in mines.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,202. How much money do you think you would have saved if you had not spent it upon other people's land?—It was only five acres, and it cost me a good deal before I improved it.

48,203. You cannot fix the amount. Did you build at all upon this place?—No, I only improved the land.

48,204. Do you think that agents, as a rule, do much mischief between landlord and tenant?—I think that they are inclined to do that in order to please their masters. But it is impossible to please the agents with the gifts; they expect to get many gifts from the tenants.

48,205. Then, I suppose, they are not above receiving some presents from the tenants now and again?—Very likely.

48,206. Is it true that the one that brings most, generally fares best?—We have had room to believe that at times, we think so.

48,207. Is there any tale-bearing going on in this part?—They are not infrequent here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,208. I suppose the tales are sometimes to the advantage of the tenant, are they not?—It is very possible, sometimes.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,209. Is it true that the widow had to leave this place owing to the rent being too high?—Yes, I know that.

48,210. What means do you suggest to remedy that state of things?—I believe that, as was suggested this morning, the Government should have some means of fixing a fair rent, so that the occupiers should pay for their holdings. With regard to the farm on which my brother lives, he is assisted by four grown-up children, and they receive no wages for their work.

48,211. How large a farm is that?—I do not know how many acres it is, but the rent is 85*l.*

48,212. Are all those young men grown up?—They are 22 years of age and upwards.

48,213. What would you consider your brother would have to pay for those young men; how much would it cost him a year for each of them?—He has two sons and two daughters; the two sons would have 24*l.* a year each, and the two daughters would get 24*l.* between them.

48,214. How much in value do you consider they have from your brother in the way of clothing and pocket money?—They do not get what they deserve. They are almost without clothes.

48,215. I ask you how much?—About 5*l.* would quite represent what they now receive.

48,216. Then you consider that there is 15*l.* difference between what they receive and what they should receive?—Yes, there is certain to be. Two of them have left home; they have been unable to remain there because they did not get anything for their work.

48,217. But does not the father put this 15*l.* a year in the bank every year for them until they get married?—I have two or three times lent him money to pay the rent.

48,218. What becomes of this 15*l.* then?—It goes to the landlord, of course.

Mr. Grove.

48,219. Just one question; you seem to say that some of the agents are not above taking a present from the tenants?—I live near an agent, and I know that he took them; I cannot say more.

48,220. Do you think that the landlord would approve of it, if he knew about it?—No, I do not think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,221. Mr. Stephen asks the following questions: "Has not the land which you have "taken generally been accommodation land"?—The land which I am renting?

48,222. The land which you rented, I suppose. It is not my question?—The land was near the village of Llanarth, and I had to pay double its value in consequence.

48,223. "Who was it who threatened your "brother before the 1868 election"?—An agent of Mrs. Seymour Davies, of Dolebach.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. William Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,224. You are William Evans, of Penlone, Cross Inn, Llanon?—Yes.

48,225. Is that in the parish of Llansaintffraid?—No, it is in the parish of Llanbadarn Tref Eglwys.

48,226. Is this your statement, and is it correct?—Yes, it is correct.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:

I am a freehold farmer, and wish to give evidence relating to the parish of Llanbadarn Tref Eglwys. I am living in a farm with my family, the rent being 14*l.* a year. With regard to the state of the farm, I should say that there are poor buildings for family and stock. As to my purchase of the farm, it was compulsory, and I had to buy the farm at too high a price, and, having no money, I had to mortgage it.

Then I suggest as remedies that the Government may greatly relieve many persons of my class by advancing money at a moderate rate of interest: That the difficulty of disposing of the produce of the land greatly handicaps farmers, and if light railways were run, farmers could dispose of their produce at a higher price and secure more servants on their farms.

Mr. Grove.

48,227. What would you call a moderate rate of interest for the Government to lend money at?—The same as they get in the banks, 50*s.*

Mr. Grove—continued.

48,228. From what bank do they get it at 50*s.*?—That is what we get when we put money in the bank.

48,229. That is a very different thing. I will put my question again. You speak of a moderate rate of interest; what do you think would be a moderate rate of interest for the Government to lend the money at?—3*l.* per cent.—10*s.* more than the banks give.

48,230. But that does not include the repayment of capital, of course?—No.

48,231. Then you would be satisfied, perhaps, with 4 per cent. if it covered the repayment of capital?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,232. How do you say it was compulsory for you to buy your farm?—The landlord would not put any buildings on the place, and I had no other place to go to, and he also would not give me a lease of the holding either.

48,233. What did you pay for this place which you rented at 14*l.* a year?—420*l.*

48,234. That is 30 years' purchase?—The buildings were worthless.

48,235. Had you sufficient money to pay for it?—No, I had not a quarter of the money.

48,236. I understand you wish the Government to lend money at a cheap rate of interest?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,237. What rate of interest do you pay now?—3*l.* 15*s.*

48,237A. That does not carry redemption, of course?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Enoch Thomas called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

28,238. You are Mr. Enoch Thomas, of Oernant, in the parish of Llanina?—Yes.

28,239. I will ask the interpreter to translate the statement of your evidence.

The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the Interpreter, as follows:

I took Gofynachfawr, in the parish of Llanarth, in 1860 from the agents of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, for 70*l.* After the previous tenant had failed, and the land had gone out of cultivation to a very great extent, I gave him 14*l.* for leaving, and I paid him half a year's rent before going there to live. The promise in the taking was that I should get all the buildings new, but soon after the buildings had been put, the rent was raised by 10*l.*, but in less than two years I gave notice that I would leave. Rather than let me leave, I received the holding again for 70*l.* as at first. I endeavoured in every way to improve the holding by liming, draining, and hedging, and because it was rather in a bad state, I spent hundreds of pounds in doing so. In 16½ years, when the place was beginning to pay me, I received a notice to leave because it was [illegible] to be sold, and I failed to get it from the buyer. The consequence was that I and my wife and nine children had to go to a small holding and to sell the greater part of the stock. In a few years I succeeded in getting another holding of the name of Blaenbedw isaf, in the parish of Llandissiliogo, but as the buildings there were in a very bad state, and quite unfit for man and beast, I left, and in the year 1881 I had another holding called Oernant, in the parish of Llanina, where I am now. My relatives have been living there for 300 years. I received a notice to quit in 1888, and the place was sold in 1889. I endeavoured to improve the place, but I received no payment for this. A son of my father's old master bought the place, and he recently died, and now the heir is under trustees, and my complaint is that I do not know when I shall have to leave, and if I work hard to improve the place, I shall have no acknowledgment for so doing. I venture to say that no one could pay the rent which I pay without receiving the assistance of his children to work with him, or else lose money. I am at this time assisted by my children. I have five children working hard every day, and I am not able to give them what they would receive if they went out to service, and I am sure that they would not be called upon to work harder than they do at home. The trustees have rented the game to an English gentleman, and he comes to kill the rabbits and hares, which is contrary to the principle of the Ground Game Act, 1882. I strongly believe that we want a change in land tenure from what it is now. The tenant ought to have greater security for his improvements, and the time of the notice to quit should be longer from one side than the other, and the rent ought to be ruled, to some extent, by the rise and fall of the market. I do not know of any better means to bring this about than a land court composed of practical men.

Mr. Grove.

48,239A. Do you suffer much from game?—No, I do not.

Mr. Grove—continued.

48,240. Then why do you not avail yourself of the Ground Game Act?—I did not like to displease my landlord when he was alive.

48,241. You know about the Act, of course?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,242. Who was the agent to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners?—Mr. John Harvey Haverfordwest.

48,243. Why did you leave that place?—Because I had no money to buy it.

48,244. It was sold by auction?—Yes, in Newcastle Emlyn.

48,245. Would you have bought it if you could have had the money from Government at 3½ per cent. interest?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN EVANS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,246. Is this your evidence, and is it correct?—That is my evidence, and it is correct.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

The evidence of Mr. John Evans, Trefaes Isaf, Bethania, Llanon, R.S.O., Aberystwyth. I am a freehold farmer, and I wish to give evidence referring to the parish of Llanbadarn Trefeglwys. I formerly rented the present farm for 40*l.* a year. My landlord died, and his successor raised the rent to 50*l.* This increase was caused because of the better condition of the land, which had been brought about by my own industry during 18 years. I was compelled to pay the increased rent or leave the farm, which would be very hard to do with a family of 11 children. The landlord made a sale, and I was again compelled to buy the farm, and, having no money, my farm was mortgaged for 1,200*l.*, and my last state is worse than the first. I think that if the Government would advance money at a low rate of interest it would be a great favour.

48,247. What price did you pay for the land?—1,300*l.*

48,248. And you are mortgaged for 1,200*l.*?—Yes.

48,249. Who lent you the money?—I had them at Llanon. It is not all on mortgage.

48,250. It is very nearly all. I understood you to say that you mortgaged it for 1,200*l.*?—Yes. Although they are not on mortgage, it is to me exactly as if they were on mortgage.

Mr. Grove.

48,251. It is not on mortgage?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,252. How long is it since you bought this place?—Two years.

48,253. Then you have not paid up any of the money, I suppose?—No.

48,254. Was your rent raised from 40*l.* to 50*l.* just before the sale?—When the present owner came of age.

48,255. How soon after was it sold?—From two to three years.

48,256. Is it customary to raise the rent, as a rule, before a sale of land?—I cannot say that. That was not done purposely with my holding, so far as I know.

Mr. Grove.

48,257. What number of acres did you buy for that 1,300*l.*?—231 acres.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,258. I suppose it was a good deal of it mountain land?—Yes, without ever having been cultivated—about 40 acres.

Mr. Grove.

48,259. And you felt that you wanted a place that you could be sure of, and that was the reason that you bought it?—I had such a large family, and I did not wish to be turned out without a hope of getting another holding.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,259A. Is it difficult to get a farm in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Morgans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,260. Where do you live, Mr. Morgans?—At Llainpenpwll, Cross Inn, Llanon.

48,261. Your statement will first be read in Welsh and then translated?—Thank you.

The witness's statement was translated by the Interpreter as follows:—

I am an agricultural labourer. In the present state of agriculture the agricultural labourer has been sent out of the country. The farmers are unable to pay sufficient wages to keep them in the country. The labourers' cottages are left so that they get into an uninhabitable or untenantable condition. I say that the rents are too high, first, to allow farmers to pay labourers and to make the improvements on their farms, and, secondly, to provide the means of improving the labourers and the farmers. I say that the rents must be reduced, that the tenant must have security of tenure, and that the farms should be less in extent in several parishes, so as to allow every farmer to manure his own holding well.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,261A. How do you account for the fact that the agricultural labourers are sent out of the country?—There are several reasons.

48,262. Please give us one?—The first reason is because there is not sufficient work for an occasional labourer who is not in service.

48,263. Is it that work is insufficient, or that the money to pay for the work is insufficient?—It may be both. That is the complaint of the farmer, that he has no money to pay for work, and I believe it is so too.

48,264. Are the hedges and ditches kept in such good order now as they used to be?—No, they are all left to go down—the ditches, and the hedges, and the fences.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,265. Then it is a fact that the labourers are obliged to leave because the farmers cannot find the money to pay them?—Yes, and even if they had the money, there is not enough to keep a large family.

48,266. Would you like all the labourers to have sufficient land to keep a cow?—That would be a great advantage, provided it was let for reasonable rent, and provided proper cottages were built.

48,267. Would they be able to pay for those proper cottages?—It is very difficult to say whether they would be able to pay unless they got work from the farmers, according to the present state of things.

48,268. If they could work on their own bit of land, do you think then that they would be able to pay for the cottages?—Some land would be too little, but if it was sufficient for a family, that, I think, would be best.

48,269. You complain of the farms being too large. How large do you consider farms should be?—It depends on the land. Where there is good land 30 acres might do.

48,270. As a labourer have you any other complaints to make?—No, not particularly.

Mr. Grove.

48,271. Do you say that the land is really getting into worse condition because there are not sufficient labourers kept to do the work?—I am sure of that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,272. There is one question handed in by Mr. Stephen: "Has there ever been a time when "agricultural labourers' wages were higher"?—No, not any time.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,273. Does this statement contain your evidence?—Yes.

48,274. Do you know who wrote it?—It was written according to my instructions.

48,275. It is written in English. Would you like to have it translated to you into Welsh, so that you can follow it as it is read?—Yes, I cannot understand English.

The interpreter translated the statement of the witness into Welsh, and then read it in English as follows:—

The evidence of Mr. John Evans, tenant farmer, of Dyffryn Arth, Cross Inn, Llanon, R.S.O., Aberystwyth. I wish to give evidence relating to the Cilcennin parish. The acreage of my present holding is 120 acres. But my evidence refers to Tirbach Cilcennin, a farm about 80 acres, which I rented at 50*l.* in 1872. The landlord paid for opening drains and I closed them; as soon as I had finished closing up 100 perches of drains in a particular field I received notice to leave, only 2½ years after I had entered the farm. The landlord sold the farm to another man without giving me a chance to buy. I sold all my stock and crop, and had to live in a cottage without any land.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Mr. Grove.

48,276. What rent did you pay when you were at your farm?—Fifty pounds.

48,277. Was that sold by auction, or how was it sold?—No, it was sold by private treaty.

48,278. And you knew nothing of the sale, I suppose, until it took place, did you?—I did not know anything till I received a notice that it had been sold.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,279. Who was it that bought the farm?—Timothy Jones, of Velindre, who afterwards occupied it.

48,280. Another tenant farmer?—Yes.

48,281. Who was the landlord?—David Morgan.

48,282. Was he a farmer?—Yes.

48,283. Would you have liked to have bought your place yourself if you had had the chance?—I had no money, only that someone else assisted me. I had a large number of children, and I did not know where to go to.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,284. Did you lose when you had to sell your stock?—Yes, I lost a great deal.

48,285. When did you have to sell your stock?—About 22 years ago.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Davies called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,286. You are Mr. Evan Davies, of Bontfach, Bontsaeson, Llanon, Aberystwyth?—Yes.

48,287. Is this your statement, and is it correct?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

I am a retired farmer. My evidence refers to the parish of Llanbadarn Trefeglwys. I took the farm of Brynmân in 1847—30 acres, at a rental of 12*l.* a year. The rent was raised gradually, 2*l.* or 3*l.* at a time, until it was 22*l.* annually. I went down to Glamorganshire to work, and sent money home to my wife to help her pay the rent. When I stopped sending money home from Glamorganshire my wife failed to pay the rent, and consequently she received notice to quit. Then the place was rented at 4*l.* less than we paid. I had improved the farm, and fenced and planted some of the hedges with trees.

Many houses have been allowed to fall down, and there are many less families living in the district now than 50 years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,288. Do you consider that the rent was too high?—I consider that I had to pay out of pocket for half of the labour that I gave the farm, instead of being paid by the produce of the farm for my working upon it. I had to leave the farm to my wife, as she was not willing to give it up. I went to the works to work, and sent her the rent home; and at last I saw that she was getting the rent-money from me and not from the farm, and thus she got through nearly all of what was on the farm. At last I did not send her the rent home at one time, and I had a distress put in before the rent was due. Then I rented out the farm to another person at 4*l.* a year less than what we had it for. There was much put into it in 25 years, making 100*l.* worth more than the stock that was put on the farm.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,289. Why did you not continue sending more money home?—The reason was because she was not willing to give up the farm, and then when I did not send the money home she was obliged to give it up.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,290. What you think you ought to have had is security for the money that you had spent upon the farm, or compensation for it. Is that so?—I thought that it was so, because the place was a part of the common, and all the hedges were bare, and I had to plant the outside hedges and some of the close hedges.

48,291. Would you have been satisfied if you had had compensation when you left the farm?—Yes. There were three families in the lower part of Llanbadarn Tref Eglwys parish 60 years ago more than there are now, and I can mention them if you wish me to, and the places they were at—little cottages on the farm.

48,292. What you want to say is that there are many men who now go to Glamorganshire and send money home to support their families here?—Yes, there were a good many.

48,292A. Are there many now?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Rees Lewis Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,293. You are Mr. Rees Lewis Jones, of Rhosgoch-shop?—Yes.

42,294. I will ask the interpreter to read the statement of your evidence?—If you please

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

"In the year 1840 my parents began life in a farm called Ffosdwn, on the Rhiwbren estate, in the parish of Dihewyd, measuring 80 acres, and the rent 45*l.* In the year 1849 they received notice to quit, because the place was to be sold. In August of that year it was sold by auction to the highest bidder, and was bought by Mr. James Morgans, Drewen. I do not recollect the sum paid, but the new owner was willing that my parents should remain there for an increase of 10*l.* in the rent, but rather than pay the increased rent, they chose to leave, and they took Blaenclettwr where my mother was brought up. Her parents had become old, and so had determined to give up farming. The extent of the farm was 400 acres, rent 60*l.* and the owner was Captain Saunders, of Tymawr, Cilcenin. All the buildings were in a pretty bad state, and in the year 1854, Captain Saunders came down and offered to make arrangements with regard to putting up new buildings. It was arranged that they should be removed entirely from the place where they were then about 120 yards higher up the hill. The conditions were that my father was to haul everything, and to provide "Gwlyb"* for the masons and the carpenters, and then he was to be undisturbed in his holding whilst he lived for a rent of 60*l.* The stones were about 3½ miles away, the timber and slates 7 miles. The work of building continued for three summers, and after it was finished my father began to improve the farm by draining scores of acres of wet land, and putting up proper fences in order that the fields might be more convenient. This was all done at my father's expense. At this time a good deal of lime was carried to the farm, a distance of 32 miles. About three years after finishing the buildings he received a notice that he would have to pay 10*l.* increase in the rent, or to leave. Rather than leave after having incurred so much expense, and that so recently, and seeing that his children were growing up, and becoming able to work instead of servants, he decided to take it now for 70*l.* Every member of the family worked hard, and there was not one child receiving any wages, except his food and a few clothes. In 1864 Captain Saunders died, and in the next year another notice comes from the widow, Mrs. Saunders. She had by this time come into possession and had determined to value the estate. One of the name of Blaithwaite, from Kidwelly, was the valuer. Its value was put at 100*l.* After months of anxiety and sorrow and a good deal of debate my father succeeded to take it once more for 90*l.* The times had improved a little by this time, and all the children had grown up, and had come to fill the place of menservants and maidservants. During the succeeding 10 years we worked hard with the only object of improving the farm by draining, hedging, and carrying lime and manure, so that by this time the place was able to hold a much larger stock. In the year 1850 seven milch cows were quite enough for the farm, but before we left we were able to keep 14 cows easily. The only money that the owner had spent was on buildings alone. As the stock had increased there was need for more buildings, and the landlady was applied to, but she emphatically refused, so that my father was obliged to build a new dairy instead of the old one, which had become too small, as well as two sheds where the cattle might be fed in winter.

In the year 1876, after the Agricultural Holdings Act had been passed, notice was received that the landlady claimed to be under the old state of things. In October of the same year we were informed that our home was to be sold in three weeks. It was sold by auction to the highest bidder. Blaen Clettwr was bought by Mr. Thomas Davies, Cefnmaes, for the sum of 3,600*l.* I do not hesitate to say that Mrs. Saunders received hundreds of pounds for the improvements that we had made in the place. I also have no doubt but that hundreds of pounds of the purchase money should have come to my father, as it was through his labour and energy, and that of the family, that the place fetched such a sum. We had at this time 20 tons of lime on the land, not having taken one crop from it. In the month of March next, after the sale, we received a notice to quit from the new landlord or to raise the rent by 70*l.*, so that it would be 160*l.* after the demanded increase. 100*l.* was offered, but refused, and my father had to leave with but little acknowledgment for the lime and for the other things which were left behind. Thus between the years 1850 and 1877 we received four notices to quit, first so as to raise 10*l.* on the buildings, secondly, on the valuation, third, to contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, and fourth, by the new landlord. My father by this time was an old man, and he was obliged to turn his back on the place where his strength and capital had been eaten, leaving it to others to enjoy the fruit of his and his family's labour.

* "Gwlyb" is the Welsh expression used for all "liquid" food, which in this case would probably mean broth, tea, and milk, while the workmen would bring with them meat or bread and cheese (W. "enllyn") to eat with it. (Cf. statement at Question 48,382A.)—D. Ll. T.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,294A. Up to the present time you have been speaking of your father's farm?—Yes, I was with my father.

48,295. How long ago is it that we are now going to enter upon. We are now going to deal with Rhosgoch-ganol?—Yes, 1873.

48,296. Is Rhosgoch-ganol the same as Rhosgoch-shop?—No. It was there I went to live after my marriage. It was 60 acres in extent, containing some high land, and a good deal of wet land. The rent the preceding tenant paid was 22*l.*, but as competition was so great we were obliged to give 30*l.* The owner was Mr. T. Davies, Cefn Maes. He urged me to farm well, stating that I should be allowed to live there whilst I lived, and I consequently went at it in earnest. The first thing I did was to buy 8*l.* worth of manure from a neighbour who was leaving his farm. To carry or haul this alone meant a great deal of expense. I also went for a good deal of lime and manure, in order to get the place to produce moderately well. In three years I received a notice to quit, but up to to-day I do not know why I received such notice. There was another place that was becoming vacant, so I went to look at that, as I saw and had experience that my present landlord was not keeping his word. I took Rhosgoch-shop, 160 acres, pretty much of the same quality of land as the preceding farm, at a rent of 55*l.* on a yearly tenancy, with a promise that I should remain there as long as I was able to pay the rent. In five years I received a notice to quit as the farm was to be sold. I was in great straits, because I did not know of a vacant place. It appeared as if I was going to lose the holding, and so go without a home. I determined to buy it although I had no money of my own. I purchased the farm for 1,350*l.*; at this time the difficulty was to get money, and I am paying

4 per cent. interest on that. Were I to pay the interest for 1,000 years the capital would not in the least melt away. In view of the insecurity of tenure I should much like to press on the Government the desirability of passing a measure in order to advance money at a reasonable rate so that tenants can buy their own farms when being sold; also the establishment of a land court to act between the landlord and the tenant, and full compensation to the tenant for improvements made by him before the rent can be raised, or before he can be turned out.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,297. Do you think it would be a good thing for tenants to be paid for all the improvements they make?—They ought to receive payment after working hard.

48,298. What effect do these frequent notices have on the neighbourhood?—They stop working.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,299. They do not get so much produce from the farm as they could?—No.

48,300. Do you think you trusted rather too much to word of mouth?—Yes, far too much.

48,301. You said the landlord did not keep his word. In what way did he not keep his word?—He had promised to let me remain there as long as I lived, and then sent me a notice to quit in three years.

Mr. Grove.

48,302. When the farm was re-valued, did they want to put 70*l.* on to the rent of it?—They wanted 100*l.* for it after Blaithwaite had valued it.

48,303. And I understand you to say that the tenant offered 100*l.* for it?—Yes, to Mr. Davies of Blaenmaes, after he had sold it.

48,304. So that what is on your mind is that he had worked very hard for other people, and had to leave all the benefit of his labour for other people?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,304A. Where do you live, Mr. Jones?—Llawrycwrt, Llandissiliogogo, of which place I am tenant.

48,305. The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the interpreter as follows:—

My father took Rhydycwrt in the Parish of Dihewyd, about 1871. He only lived a twelvemonth afterwards. My mother succeeded him under D. Thomas, Esq., of Llanfair, Llandyssul, for 39*l.*, with a promise of 5*l.* reduction of rent every year for three or four years, in order that the place might be improved as it had got into very poor condition, but we only received 7*l.* 10*s.* back because the estate had been thrown into Chancery. We received two loads of timber from the wood in Llanfair, but we were obliged to haul it without being paid, in order to improve the stable, the cow-houses and pig-styes, and were obliged to pay the carpenter for his work. We spent a great deal of time in improving the land and make tidy the farm during the first two years, and we had scarcely enough food for us as a family and for the cattle.

In 1874 the holding was sold, and we were allowed to take it again from the new landlord with an increase of 5*l.* 10*s.* in the rent without a promise of a reduction, but we received a promise that we should have the holding while we lived. We were promised that if we left we should be paid in full for the lime the year we left, and half the price of the lime for the previous year. The reason why the rent was raised, said the new landlord, was that the holding was much better than when we took it at first, and this is perfectly true; but who made it so? About three years afterwards my mother died, and I received notice to quit; but I received the place again with a further increase of 5*l.*, and with an emphatic promise that I need not be anxious about leaving the place, that neither he, the owner, nor any of his children would ever come there. About seven years afterwards I received a notice to quit, and I was obliged to leave, although I had spent a great deal of time and money in order to improve the farm. The landlord had refused to pay for the lime in accordance with his promise.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

48,306. What date was the refusal to pay for the lime?—About 1881. These changes have killed my spirit in connection with farming. After leaving Rhydycwrt I took another place of the name of Meini gwynion bach, in the parish of Llandyssul, which, on trying to live there, I found to be too high, and a reduction was refused me until I took Llawrycwrt, where I am now. The day after I had made sure of Llawrycwrt 3*s.* in the £ reduction was offered to me. The insecurity of tenure is enough to crush the spirit of a giant, and it is high time the Government should change the laws.

Mr. Grove.

48,306A. I suppose you are very wishful to have security of tenure?—Yes.

48,307. And to have payment in full compensation for all improvements effected?—Yes, it is what everybody ought to have.

48,308. You consider that a great deal of the labour of your life has been lost through having to leave these improvements behind you?—Yes, a great deal.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,309. How many notices to quit did you receive?—Three with regard to Rhydycwrt.

48,310. How many with respect to the other places?—I gave that other place up myself, because the rent was too high, and they refused to reduce it for me, but they offered to reduce it after I had taken another place.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,311. I do not quite understand the last part of your evidence. You said until you "received" Llawrycwrt. In what way do you mean you received it?—I meant until I had taken it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,312. There is a question by Mr. Stephen: "Who was your second landlord at Rhydycwrt?" Messrs. Cookson and Co., London.

48,313. Who is your present landlord?—Rees Davies, Lampeter.

48,314. Have you a lease?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

48,315. Did you ask for one?—No, I did not.

48,316. What in your mind is the best form of security of tenure?—I ought to have a lease for the farm, and to be assured that I should have full compensation for any improvements I should have made on the place.

48,317. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act and the security for compensation for improvements in that Act?—Yes, I have heard of it.

48,317A. Do you think that that is sufficient to save you in what you require?—It would be a great encouragement to one.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

43,318. You are Mr. David Jones of Wern-newydd, and a tenant farmer, I think?—Yes.

48,319. The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the Interpreter as follows:—

Evidence of David Jones of Wern-newydd, in the parish of Llanarth, Cardiganshire. In September, 1883, I took Melin-y-Wern (Wern Mill), as well as the land belonging to it, the whole consisting of 47 acres, most of it being hilly land, and naturally wild, at the rent of 25*l.*, as well as keeping a mill in good order; my landlord gave me a pair of mill stones for barley the first year I took it. The owner of the place at that time was Robert Lewis Lloyd, Esq., of Nant-gwyllt. Before that David Thomas and his wife, namely, my uncle and aunt, had lived there for 40 years under a lease for life. In the month of September 1889 the estate was sold. I intended to buy the place where I lived as I was aware of the expense which was entailed in building and putting up the mill which my late uncle and aunt had gone to whilst they held the holding. I failed in my object inasmuch as a gentleman of the name of Mr. Longcroft had made up his mind to get the place for himself. The week after the sale I went to the gentleman to ask him for the place, and I got it for the same rent, but he would not allow me to kill any of the rabbits which were there. I asked him whether he would keep them away from the farm, and he promised to do so, and that he would repay me for the loss which I had if it so happened. On those terms I took the holding, but I did not intend to keep it on as I knew it was not possible to live peaceably under such an agreement. Inasmuch as I was under command to leave the rabbits alone in a little time the farm was covered with them. I sowed corn as usual, but the rabbits went there, and I only received one bushel more on one field than the quantity of seed which I had sown. In September 1890 Mr. Evan Thomas, farm bailiff, Llanina, came to me and told me that I was wanted at Llanina, the gentleman's home, on a particular day, and at a particular time. I went there, and Mr. Davies, the agent, was there expecting me. By request I went to the room to him. He told me it was customary on the estate of Mr. Longcroft to sign an agreement, and that the tenant was to pay for such agreement, and he asked me if I would sign the agreement, and I answered that I wanted to hear the agreement read out first. In the agreement I received the freedom which was given to the tenant by the Ground Game Act, 1882, and I told Mr. Davies that that part of the agreement was better than I expected it to be. To this Mr. Davies replied that the ground game was the property of the tenant. I said that I had received an emphatic command not to kill a single rabbit, and that I then wanted to have a clear understanding on this point, so that before signing the agreement, and at my request, Mr. Davies went to the room to Mr. Longcroft to ask him if he gave the right to kill the rabbits, and the answer received was that he did not allow me to kill the rabbits, and that I had received no loss from the rabbits the year before. In the face of such a reply I said I would not sign the agreement, and so I received notice to leave, and leave I did.

In the face of such oppression as this it is time that the Government should prepare a measure to prevent cruel landlords to ignore the law which gives people fair rights, and such acts as I have detailed are sufficient to destroy the confidence which there should be between a landlord and a tenant.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,319A. Have you left the place;—Yes.

48,320. Is it let now to anyone else?—Yes.

48,321. Did you get no compensation at all for the mischief done you the year before?—None.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,322. Have you a copy of the agreement?—No.

48,323. Have you ever had a copy of the agreement?—No.

48,324. To prove that you sustained a loss you say you only had one bushel more when you reaped the corn than when you sowed it, is that a fact?—Yes, it is a fact.

48,325. And with all that the landlord would not allow you anything?—No. I did not actually go to him and ask him for compensation, because I really thought he would bring the matter first to me.

48,326. Did you ever send a claim for compensation?—No, I did not.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,327. Why did you not do it? I cannot make it out. Why did you not kill the rabbits yourself?—Well, I killed them after I had notice.

48,327A. You had a right to do it before?—Yes, certainly.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,328. Do you understand English, Mr. Jones?—No.

48,329. I will ask the Interpreter then to read your statement first in Welsh and then in English?—Thank you.

The witness's statement was then read as follows:—

Evidence of Evan Jones, tenant farmer, Synod-ganol, Llanarth. In the year 1865 I took a farm of the name of Gelli Isaf, in the parish of Llanarth, from the late C. R. Longcroft Esq., Llanina. The principal reason of the former tenant leaving the place was that the landlord was increasing the rent by 4*l.* a year. As I was in great want of a farm at that time I agreed to pay 25*l.* for it, as well as signing an agreement which was, however, unreasonable in my opinion, taking into consideration the state of the place at the time, but I cannot well say what it contained. The agent read it out to me, and I was obliged to sign it after that. I did not receive a copy of it. I would have to pay for that, and I could not do that, because I saw that there were many other things which I had to pay for. I can testify that Gelli Isaf when I received it was quite out of repair, both the buildings, the hedges, and the land. I was hard at work at it repairing fences, draining the land, and thatching the buildings, and so on, until I had succeeded in making the farm pay its way much better than at first. But in 10 years I received notice to quit, which caused me and my wife great sorrow, until we were unable for some time to sleep at night as we ought. At that time it was almost impossible to obtain a farm, and consequently we had to bend to beg it of Mr. Longcroft for the second time. After asking several times I succeeded in obtaining a promise that I should get the farm, but I had to pay 3*l.* more a year for it, that is 28*l.* instead of 25*l.* as formerly. I was there 8 years, so I paid 24*l.* in consequence of the increase of rent, and I conscientiously believe that the demand of that sum was dishonest, as it was raised on my own improvements. In consequence of such things as these, which have been so frequent during the last few years, I thoroughly believe that the farmer should have some security of tenure, as well as compensation for improvements, instead of his being obliged to pay for his own improvements.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I left there for Synod-ganol, which my mother-in-law and brother-in-law bought, and I can now work with much more confidence, but I see how difficult it is for others; there are many unable to give evidence as I do owing to fear.

Mr. Grove.

48,329A. Do you know yourself of cases where farmers are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—I know that it is so from their conversation.

48,330. When you signed that agreement, you did not get a copy of it?—No, I could not get a copy unless I paid for it.

48,331. But is it not reasonable that a tenant on signing an agreement should have a copy given to him?—Yes, I had been obliged to pay for an agreement which I had had from them, and I should have been obliged to pay for the other.

48,332. It was read over to you at the time, was it not?—Yes.

48,333. But could you remember all that was in it?—No, not half.

48,334. Then you did not know the conditions of it?—No, I could not remember them well, because they were so long.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,335. Did the agent read over the agreement to you in Welsh?—Yes.

48,336. What do you think the tenants are afraid of?—They are afraid of their landlord—that he would be offended and would cause them trouble.

48,337. Have you any reason to think that the landlords in this neighbourhood are not willing for their tenants to come forward before the Land Commission?—That is what we believe, and we have believed all along during these years.

48,338. I mean to come forward before this Commission?—Yes.

48,339. Do you know of any landlords who have prevented the tenants coming forward?—No, I do not. I should like to say this, that with regard to the holding which I now occupy, I would be unable to pay all my liabilities were it not for the fact that my children assist me at home.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,340. Where do you live Mr. Evan Evans?—Bargoed Llanarth.

The witness's statement, which was written in the Welsh language, was translated by the interpreter as follows:—

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I began life at Llwynderw, in the parish of Llanarth, in 1842. The rent was 50*l.* The place was in a rather untidy state, wet soil, no drains, all the fences down, and the buildings in an exceptionally bad state. In about five years after going to the place I got a new dwelling-house, but I was obliged to pay for opening the quarry, getting up the stones, and I had to carry every load without being paid, and again at the end of about three years I had a stable, cow-house, pigstyes, and a new barn. I was obliged to haul all the materials towards them without receiving payment. At the time of the Church rate my rent was increased 1*l.* one year for having voted against it. I drained a great deal, and put up several fences, but I received no payment for this, except for one fence from the Reverend Mr. Davies, of Cardigan, when he became possessor of the holding as Rector of St. Mary's, Cardigan.

When the Reverend Mr. Thomas, my old landlord, died, I received notice to leave. I asked for the place, and I offered the rent which was asked for it, namely, 60*l.*, but inasmuch as I was not a churchman it was given to another from the parish of Llangeler, in Carmarthenshire, who was in the habit of going to church.

Without any hesitation I say that I and my children made the place of greater value by 10*l.* a year, and I only received 6*l.* for my improvements. When I left the place I had put in clover seeds and rye grass. It is customary in this part of the country that the new tenant or the landlord pays for the seeds if the old tenant leaves, but I was not allowed to keep back the 6*l.* when paying the last rent, to go without being paid for the clover, and the consequence was that I was put in the County Court for that money, and I preferred paying to going on with the matter. The reason why I had sown the seeds was because I had received a promise of the place on condition that I should do so. I removed from there to Hafodfawr, where the buildings were bad, but they were repaired in the course of the year that I remained there. I hauled all the stones and timber without payment, and inasmuch as I wanted to return to my old home I left the place at the termination of the 12 months, and I came to Bargoed, where I again hauled many things towards part of the buildings. The holding was sold, and my rent was increased 3*l.*. Some change ought to be made in the land laws, but one like myself is hardly able to give suggestions to such as you.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,340A. Who was your landlord?—The vicar or clergyman at Cardigan then. He had asked me to do everything, and said that I would be allowed to remain in the place.

48,341. Was this voting you speak of done at the vestry?—Yes.

48,342. Why did you not vote with your landlord then?—It was contrary to my conscience.

48,343. Was it in consequence of that that you had notice to leave?—I do not know.

48,344. How soon after did you have the notice?—I was three years when the old clergyman was alive.

48,345. I ask you how soon after did you have the notice?—About four years.

48,346. Then do you think that anybody that has a case like yours, and has had to haul towards all the buildings, such as you have named, ought to be paid?—Yes, they ought to be paid, but I did not ask them for a single halfpenny.

48,347. Why did you not ask them?—I was afraid that I would not get anything.

Mr. Grove.

48,348. You were not likely to get it if you did not ask for it?—I cannot say that. At any rate I did not receive anything.

48,349. Before you went to Bargoed, what amount do you think you left behind you in improvements?—I left a good deal of money.

48,350. You do not know how much. Then you speak of a churchman being preferred as a tenant?—Yes.

48,351. Were you quite sure that he was preferred because he was a churchman?—I do not know that, but that is what they did.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,351A. Is your landlord a churchman now?—No, he is a congregationalist.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Lloyd called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,352. You are Mr. James Lloyd of Pantycefn, Llanarth?—Yes.

48,353. I will ask the interpreter to translate the statement of your evidence?—Thank you.

The witness's statement was translated by the interpreter as follows:—

I have held Pantycefn since 49 years last October. The rent at that time was 40*l.* The soil is clay, and it is difficult to cultivate. When I took the place all the buildings were straw-thatched, and I spent 25*l.* before going there to live, in order to put the buildings in fairly good condition, as well as giving food to those who roofed the buildings—to the masons and the carpenters. About three years after going to the place I took an additional field from the same landowner for 7*l.* This field was being let without rent and without tithe. My holding is the same in extent now as it was 45 years ago, and now I pay 60*l.*, only I pay the taxes and the tithes, which my landlord formerly paid instead of me, for the 7*l.* field. About five years after going to the holding I paid at least 15*l.* for an aisle behind the barn, as the barn was so small. About three years later on I put up a new stable for six horses, but I only received 25*l.* from the landlord, and some timber from the wood. Before I had finished the work my rent was raised by 5*l.* Again, at the end of 3 years more I asked for a shed to keep the carts and the barren cattle in, but it was refused me for a time. After much persuasion, I received a promise for 10*l.* and timber towards it, but soon afterwards my rent was raised 2*l.* 10*s.*, although I had spent about 50*l.* more than I received. I also put up pigstyes, for which I paid 17*l.* I have cut from 2,000 to 3,000 perches of drains and I only received 1*l.* from my old landlord, and 6*l.* from my present landlord. I received no payment for the fences or for the other improvements which I made. I brought up six children; three are grown up and are working with me every day; one is dead, the other two have married. Although they worked with me on the holding for many years I was unable to give them what they ought to have had for their labour. I erected two cottages for the workmen in order that they might have a place to live in, but I did not receive anything for this. Besides my labour and that of my children, I consider that I have spent at least 300*l.* in improving the holding, and I have no right to compensation for my improvements. The farm was sold to the present Lord Bishop of Bangor about 12 years ago. I consider that my old landlord should not have received from that sum more than the capitalised amount of 47*l.* a year, and that I should have received the difference for the improvements which I had made. When I promised 60*l.* for the holding to my present landlord he promised me a new dwelling house, and I have had it. He also promised me slates for the roofs of the out-buildings, but I have not received them. The straw-thatched buildings which I have, measure about 80 yards. Had it not been that I was fortunate enough to receive a little money from my relatives, and that I have the services of my children, it would be impossible for me to pay my present rent. I hope that this Land Commission will give birth to several Acts of Parliament more fair than the present ones, to protect the interests of farmers who are being oppressed, by providing for fair rent, security of tenure, and compensation for improvements.

Mr. Grove.

48,353A. When you commenced farming why did you spend so much money without a lease?—When I took it from Mr. Harvey, the father of the present Mr. Harvey, he said that if I set about to farm the place properly I should have it whilst I lived; but he died about six years afterwards.

48,354. What is the acreage of your present farm?—Ninety acres and some poles over.

48,355. Your rent is 60*l.*?—Yes, it is now. It was 40*l.* at first.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,356. Who was your first landlord?—Captain Edwards, Neuadd.

48,357. Did you consider the agent's word as good as a lease in those days?—I only depended on my landlord, but that is how things went.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,358. Your present landlord is the Bishop of Bangor?—Yes.

48,359. Is he any relation of yours?—No, he is not.

48,360. It is the same name, and that is why I asked?—He was born and bred not far from me.

48,361. There is a serious question I wish to ask you as to the feeding of the workmen, of which you complain, when material improvements were done upon your farm; you had to feed the workmen, which is quite a new arrangement for us to meet with. Was that a part of the agreement with the landowner?—No.

48,362. It was not by any contract with the landlord?—No.

48,363. Is it a customary thing?—No. It was not customary—it was just as one chose to do it.

48,364. Then you did it of your own free will?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,365. We shall be glad to hear what you have to say as shortly as possible?—I have handed in my statement, which is in Welsh.

The witness's statement was then translated by the Interpreter as follows:—

The evidence of John Evans, tenant farmer, Penrhyn. About the year 1862, after the death of my father, and after my brother had married, I left my vocation as a sailor and went to farm Tyrhos, in the parish of Llanllwchaiarn, with my three sisters. The rent at that time was 22*l.* a year, and the owner was Robert Lewis Lloyd, Esq., Nantgwyllt, near Rhayadr. During the time that I remained we made several improvements, I put up several hedges, I made many drains, and manured a good deal of the land where formerly gorse and brambles grew, besides making a water wheel for threshing, which cost about 40*l.*, exclusive of the expense of bringing the water towards it.

In 1874 we received a notice to quit, the place was valued, and the rent was increased to 38*l.* a year. Undoubtedly the valuer took our improvements into consideration when he raised the rent. Within two years after this the place was sold. At the sale the bidding remained for some time at 1,200*l.*, but the auctioneer praised the water wheel and the tidyness of the place, and this brought up the price to 1,500*l.* Two fields were left out, and the rent was increased to 50*l.* I paid this until I went to live at Penrhyn.

In the face of the fact that the tenants have no security worth mentioning for their improvements, it is high time that the Government should meet these circumstances rather more than they do at present, and that the tenant should receive longer notice to leave than a twelvemonth.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,366. Why did you leave your vocation as a sailor. It is more profitable than farming is it not?—Yes.

48,367. You have not answered why?—I went home to three sisters who were not grown up, in order to make them a home.

48,368. Did they work along with you on the farm?—Yes.

48,369. How much a year did you receive when you were at sea?—About 3*l.* 10*s.* a month.

48,370. Is it true that you were disheartened when you saw the rent raised on your improvements?—Yes, I was disheartened. I could not do anything.

48,371. Did you not receive anything for the water wheel on bringing the water to the place? No, nothing.

48,372. Why did you not take it away?—I did not take care to take it away soon enough.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,373. Did you ask for compensation for it?—Yes, I asked my landlord.

48,374. What answer did he give you?—He did not say anything.

48,375. He did not say that he would not pay?—No.

48,376. All you know is that you had no money?—Yes, for all my labour I received nothing.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,377. If the Agricultural Holdings Act had been enforced at that time, would not that have protected you?—Yes, perhaps it would have, but then it would cost something to put that into operation.

48,378. Yes, it does cost money, I am afraid. As a sailor who has been on the sea a good deal, would you give us any opinion as to whether the trade of this neighbourhood might not be improved by the use of the sea?—No not much. There is nothing to be had here to improve it.

48,379. But there is agricultural produce which might be taken to Bristol and other big ports?—Yes, but that would be expensive after all.

48,380. That would be expensive, you say?—Yes.

48,381. Do you not think it could be done more cheaply than by railways?—We get our goods cheaper now by railway than by steamers.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. Anne James called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,382. Where do you live Mrs. James?—Chapel Street, Llanarth. I wish togive evidence with regard to the Golden Lion.

48,383. Is that the name of a farm or of a public house?—The name of a farm.

The witness's statement, which was written in the Welsh language, was translated by the Interpreter as follows:—

"I, Mrs. Anne James, Chapel Street, Llanarth, wish to give evidence with regard to the Golden Lion. About 1871 my husband took a small holding called the Golden Lion, in the Llanarth parish from C. R. Longcroft, Llanina for the annual rent of 8*l.* The buildings were almost down. The expense of pulling the old buildings down was incurred by my husband, and we lived in the old dwelling house, which was leaking fearfully, whilst the new buildings were being put up. He carried all the stones and the materials towards the new buildings, besides giving the masons their food as well as the carpenters, according to the old custom which was in vogue at this time. The only things which the workmen brought with them were their bread and meat (enllyn). My husband made an estimate for the haulage of the materials towards building, and the sum, so far as I can recollect, was 26*l.* In three years we received a notice to quit or that the rent would be raised on the new buildings, but rather than leave we gave the 3*l.*, although we had spent a great deal of money in lime and drains, and tidying the little place in different ways. At the end of a twelvemonth we received notice to leave, and we were obliged to do that the following year, and the only payment which we had was 50*s.* for the new drain from the new tenant. Before we received the second notice my husband was asked by the bailiff of the owner to send my son to the national school rather than to the Board School, or we would probably repent, but as the Board School was ever so much better in our opinion, we did not change, and the natural conclusion in our minds is that if we had decided to change the school to which our son went we should have remained in this little place.

See note at question 48,294.

We were followed in the Golden Lion by a church family from the neighbourhood of Llanrhystyd, about 10 miles from Llanarth. He was son-in-law to a church family which had come to the neighbourhood a little before this under the same landlord.

In view of these facts every tenant ought to be repaid for the improvements which he has made, and for the sake of those who will follow as tenants, I hope that the Government will prepare some measures for the protection of farmers.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,383A. What was the acreage of this little place?—I think it was 10½ acres, I am not sure.

48,384. What rent did you pay?—We took it at first for 8*l.*, but the rent was raised 3*l.*

48,385. How much money did the landlord spend when the buildings were done?—I cannot say, beyond that we gave the food to the carpenters, and so on, except their bread and meat.

48,386. Do you think that the landlord spent 50*l.*?—No. They were very mean buildings that he put up.

48,387. But if you did not pay the 3*l.* advance you were to leave, were you not?—Yes, we would have had to leave, but we took the place for a twelvemonth at that rent, and then we received another notice.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

48,388. Was the next notice sent because you sent your son to the Board School?—That is what some people said, but it is a very good thing for him by this that he has been there.

48,389. How do you explain that?—Because he has a better chance of getting on.

48,390. Then it was a better school, was it?—Yes.

48,391. Surely your landlord would not be against your sending your boy to a good school?—That is what he told me. Some said that he said that we would repent of it.

48,392. Did you repent of it?—No, I did not.

48,393. Then in your opinion every tenant should be paid for all the improvements he makes?—Of course they ought. We worked very hard there to put up buildings for him, and we had to leave in five years.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,394. What is the rent of the Golden Lion now?—I do not know.

48,394A. Do you know whether the rent was raised after you left?—I cannot say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Beynon called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,395. Where do you live Mr. Beynon?—Pencwm, Llanarth.

48,396. Do you give your evidence in English or in Welsh?—Welsh, if you please.

The witness's statement was then read as follows:—

The evidence of Evan Beynon, tenant farmer, Pencwm, in the parish of Llanarth. I took Pencwm, which is 16 acres in extent, in 1848 from the Rev. G. Thomas, the rector of the church of St. Mary, Cardigan, for 10*l.* a year, and after voting against the Church rate, I received notice to quit, but I obtained the holding for 11*l.* About 1859 the Blaenpant land became vacant, about 16 acres, and I had this added to Pencwm. Between the two the rent was 20*l.*, and as the buildings were too small, I was obliged to build an additional building, and to pay for it. I put up a dwelling house instead of the old thatched cottage, and I received 40*l.* from my landlord, but it cost me a great deal more than that. Yet again I built an outer kitchen near the house, but I only received 10*l.* towards this, although I had paid more than 30*l.*, without mentioning the fact of my hauling stones, wood, and timber, without payment. After the death of the Rev. G. Thomas I was obliged to pay 24*l.* yearly for the holding, but now the rent is 20*l.* My complaint is that

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I received no payment for the improvements which I made on the place during the 46 years that I have lived there. We ought to have some method to protect the tenants who improve their holdings.

48,396A. Then your landlord is the Rector of St. Mary's, Cardigan?—Yes.

48,397. Politics and religion make no difference between you and your landlord, do they?—No, I cannot say that.

Mr. Grove.

48,398. When you voted against the Church rate, where did you vote?—In the church.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,399. In what church?—In Llanarth Church.

48,400. But did not your landlord live at Cardigan?—Yes.

48,401. Then how did he know that you voted against him?—I cannot say.

48,402. Then how do you know that you had notice to quit because you voted?—I did not know that, only it followed.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Thomas Jones called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,403. You are Mr. Thomas Jones, a tenant farmer of Singrugcoch, Llanarth?—Yes.

The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the interpreter as follows:—

In the year 1868 I took a farm of Cwrtyrhydlyd, in the parish of Llanarth, the owner being Daniel Davies, Lone, Neuaddlwyd, and the extent of the farm 70 acres, and the rent 24*l.*, with conditions. Buildings were wanted, and so far as I can remember, our agreement was as follows: First, that I had to haul everything towards the buildings; second, that I was to receive full compensation at the conclusion; third, that the boundaries were to be put up, and to be placed in a satisfactory condition at the expense of the landowner; and fourth, that the rent was to be increased 4*l.* after this. Having finished the buildings, I went to ask for compensation for the haulage, and this is the answer I got: 'I cannot pay you anything; I do not allow anything to anybody.' I carried 184 loads of stone from three to four miles distant along a road which is exceptionally difficult and uneven. I spoilt my carts, and my animals were much abused, and I toiled much myself, and this at least without any payment. I was obliged to carry from this distance, because the stones were to be had on the same estate. The boundaries were not put up in accordance with the conditions. Out of the 14 years that I lived there I had to pay the 4*l.* increase for eight of the 14 years. I had received every encouragement from the landowner to make improvements. When I complained he promised to bear every expense, but when he saw the bill all his promises were scattered to the four winds, and I was in their midst without anything. I did not even get as much as a halfpenny for the work, or for the improvements which I had made on the farm.

After being disappointed, and suffering loss by these deceptive promises, I went to look for another farm of the name of Bryngwyn, on the Monachdy estate. I took this, and in October 1882 I moved up there. It measured in extent about 65 acres, and the rent was 26*l.* My landlord told me that I would be allowed to remain there as long as I could pay the rent, and that I would receive timber from him towards putting up gates on the farm without payment, but that I was to leave them where they were, should I quit the farm. I received notice to quit the first September after going there. The farm was being sold. I went to see a farm called Penforfach, the owner being Mr. Davies, Rhydlas, Llanrhystyd. I took it for 47*l.* 10*s.*, but before the year was over I understood that

I would never be able to pay for it, and I went to offer it back or to have a reduction of 2*l.* in the rent. My landlord told me that he had a tenant ready to pay 5*l.* more. Still he would not take the holding off my hands, so I was obliged to look for somebody to take it, but I did not receive half the cost which I incurred for seeds and for fallowing. This tenant remained there a twelvemonth, and now the farm is rented to another for 27*l.* or less. I had an offer of taking it for 27*l.* after I had left. The rates at this place were 8*l.*, and the tithe was 8*l.* The rates belonged to the two Unions, namely, that of Aberystwyth and Aberayron, and the tithe belonged to four different persons, and Heaven knows how many objects.

Whilst I was a young man in service I was able to put a little by. After marriage, I was able to take to a farm of 70 acres, and that without being in debt. I conscientiously say that I have been energetic, and that I have been thrifty, but by to-day I am obliged to be contented with a farm which is only sufficient to keep two cows. Undoubtedly insecurity, fickleness, and deceit have sent me to this position. I should like to see every landlord receiving justice, and I should like to see every farmer receiving the same thing, but I believe that it will not be had until different laws to those which are now in vogue are obtained; and until we are able to obtain some middle authority between landlord and tenant this will not occur.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,403A. You say the seeds and following were not paid for?—Yes, I received no payment.

48,404. Were they not valued?—No.

48,405. That is rather an unusual thing. Is that the custom in the neighbourhood?—No, I am not aware of it. I have not seen that done, so far.

48,406. You have tried these farms, have you not?—Yes.

48,407. Under these landlords?—Yes.

48,408–9. Do you consider that the rents were too high on each of them?—I think that the first was too high. I do not know with regard to the second, but the last was too high.

48,410. Then would you wish to get some other authority to settle with regard to the rent which a tenant has to pay?—I should like it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,411. I have a question put in by Mr. Stephen: "Who was your first landlord"?—Mr. Daniel Davies, Neuaddlwyd.

48,411A. Was there nothing in writing between you?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Sir John Llewelyn.

My brother Commissioners wish me to say, before we conclude that the Witnesses' Protection Act, which was passed a year or two ago, will unhesitatingly be put into force, in the case of any offences against it. We are determined as Commissioners to try and elicit all the truth we possibly can, and as some witnesses here have stated that they think there was some fear of their landlords in regard to their coming forward, we are determined to do all we possibly can for the protection of witnesses. Of course there are good landlords and bad landlords. We do not believe that there are any landlords who would take advantage of the tenants coming here to say what is merely the truth, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that such things have occurred, and if any case is brought to our notice of any form of intimidation by which witnesses are prevented from coming forward, we are determined to do our best to make that Act operative and effective.

Mr. John Evans called and examined through an Interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

48,412. You are Mr. John Evans of Quarre?—Yes, in the parish of Llanarth.

48,413. I will ask the Interpreter to read your statement?—If you please.

The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated by the Interpreter as follows:—

Evidence of John Evans, tenant farmer, Quarre, in the parish of Llanarth. My father took a holding called Brynne, in the parish of Dihewyd, when I was 20 years of age, about the year 1842, on the Brynog estate, at an annual rent of 25*l.* This was 4*l.* more than its previous rent. It was 70 acres of land, but most of it was wild land, without ever having been drained. The most part was very wet soil, and a good deal of it had not been enclosed. We started to put up fences, and to drain and to clean the land thoroughly at our own expense. One field cost 30*l.*, and the rest of the farm more than double that amount. We put 200 perches of new fences, and our neighbours told us at that time that we were doing ourselves harm. We were not for some years receiving anything like our subsistence on the place, although we were only five in the family, and all of us able to work. To our great sorrow our father died a few years afterwards, and I and my mother got the farm. In about 15 years we had enclosed the whole of it, and had dried up most of the place, and we brought water to the farm-house for threshing, and did all of this at our own expense. At that time, 1860, a valuer came there, and some of my fellow tenants, who had not made any improvements, received a reduction, but we had an increase of 6*l.* a year for our work in improving the place. This continued for the nine last years that we remained there. Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, the valuer, told us that the place had been sold for 300*l.* or 400*l.* more than it would have been sold for, had the improvements not been made, but we received not a penny. I got another farm called Rhiwbrenfawr, in the parish of Llanarth, in 1870, which was 151 acres in extent, for the rent of 90*l.*, namely 10*l.* more than the former tenant paid, because I was obtaining a convenient shed for the cattle. I also spent there 200*l.* in seven years on improvements, such as building on a small place called Pengribin, and putting up hedging and draining. In the eighth year I received notice to quit, or to raise the rent by 10*l.* yearly, so I left, because paying 5 per cent. to my landlord for my own improvements was more than my human nature could bear. Besides this, I was unable to cultivate the place properly and to pay the rent that was asked, although my children were with me working without wages.

So I was obliged to leave this place again, without as much as even a penny compensation.

This was in the year 1878, when I bought a holding about 40 acres in extent, but in consequence of my having bought it at a dear price I was obliged to sell it last year. But I am still there as a tenant. I hope I may finish my earthly course there. I think that I have a good landlord, but I think that we want something of exceedingly more importance than that, namely, just laws to protect the farmer and to secure his improvements, and security of tenure for a fair and reasonable price, and I do not know of a more excellent method than having a land court, made up of practical gentlemen, although I know that a large number of oppressive landlords shudder when they think of such things. But I am glad that my present landlord believes strongly that this is the only way to protect the farmer, and I know of others of the same opinion. I appeal strongly to you, my Lords and Gentlemen, that you should give the most serious consideration to this, in order to protect the farmers, who are in this part of the country almost crushing the dust as small dust of the scales.

Mr. Griffiths.

48,413A. Then, if I rightly understand, you would wish to confirm the opinion of the first witness, that rents are raised upon those that farm well, and lowered upon those that do not farm well?—That has had a very bad effect upon the country.

48,414. Do not the farmers farm so well now as they used to?—No, they do not. Farming began to be paralyzed 30 years ago.

48,415. What price did you pay for the farm that you bought?—800*l.*

48,416. What did you sell it for?—I sold it for less than I gave for it.

48,417. You could not pay the interest on the money, I suppose, could you?—No.

48,418. Was the interest more than former rent?—They were bad times to sell in; everything went very cheaply, almost for nothing.

Mr. Grove.

48,419. Then you consider that there should be payment made for all improvements?—When certainty of payment is lost, one as no spirit to work.

48,420. You think there ought to be security of tenure?—Yes.

48,421. And you think that if those things were secured the land would be made to produce a good deal more, do you?—Undoubtedly.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

FIFTY-SEVENTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Aberystwyth, Cardiganshire, Saturday, 28th April 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON (IN THE CHAIR).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.
Mr. FREDERICK SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Lord Kenyon.

Owing to the large number of witnesses to be examined to-day, the Commissioners will sit in two courts. We have heard so much expression of opinion that witnesses are afraid to come forward, that I will read what Lord Carrington said at the opening of our first meeting: "We have no reason to believe "that undue pressure will be brought upon "any class of witnesses or any individual wit- "ness; nor have we reason to think that the "giving of evidence by any person in this "county will lead to his being in any way "injured. But it is, of course, possible—we "cannot shut our eyes to what has before now "taken place in regard to affairs of this kind— "that some men are less scrupulous than others, "and that it is possible that witnesses who "speak here what is in their minds may be "subjected to loss and annoyance. We desire, "therefore (and it is our duty to do so), to "point out that the recent Act, the Witnesses' "Protection Act, 1892, affords a remedy ade- "quate to meet any ordinary case."

Mr. J. EDMUND VINCENT called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,422. I believe you wish to hand in a statement?—Yes, my Lord; I hand in a list of abatements and reductions on 18 estates in the county of Cardigan, with observations as to the history of rents. Those are obtained in this way. Shortly after the Commission was appointed, I sent out a list of questions, numbering 22 in all, to all the landowners whose names I could discover, in South Wales and Monmouthshire. In each case the answers as given to those questions have been copied exactly. All answers given upon these three points have been included, whether they are favourable to the landowner's cause, or unfavourable. Of course I do not contend for one moment that any of them are evidence in the strict legal sense of the word, but I call the attention of the Commission to the fact, as I submit properly, I have omitted all matter which could considered in the slightest degree controversial. For instance, it was suggested to me in North Wales, after the first table of this kind had been accepted in South Wales, that the answers to various other questions might be included in this table. There was a question, for example, "Have you had any "evictions on your estate within the last 20 "years?"—or something of that sort—"if so, "please state the cause." I at once considered I could not expect any Commission to receive evidence of that kind, because that evidence would be distinctly controversial. I think it well to make this statement at each place where this table is handed in, in order that those who are present in the court may know the exact nature of the table that is handed in. I may add, as before, that I am ready of course to be cross-examined on this table at any moment. (The witness handed in the following table.)

Lord Kenyon—continued.

CARDIGANSHIRE.

LIST OF ABATEMENTS AND REDUCTIONS.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Thomas Harman Brenchley, Glaneirw, Cardigan.	Blaenporth - - (120 acres.)	From July 1886 to January 1888, I returned 7½ per cent.; in 1889, 5 per cent.; January 1893, 5 per cent.	In 1880 I reduced the rent of principal farm 30*l.* per annum, from 270*l.* to 240*l.*	——
Mrs. Brigstocke, Blaenpant, Boncath,	Blaenpant - - (In Pembroke and Cardigan, 4,900 acres.)	In 1879, 10 per cent. from the Michaelmas rents; in 1881, 10 per cent. from the Michaelmas rents; and from 1885 to the present time 10 per cent. from every half year's rent.	I have permanently reduced the rents of three farms, one to the extent of 50*l.* a year, another 15*l.*, and another 5*l.*	The estate has never been revalued as a whole. There have been some increases of rent on change of tenancy.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Earl Cawdor, Stackpole Court, Pembroke.	In Carmarthen, Pembroke, and Cardigan, 70,000 acres.	For three years, from Lady Day 1885 to Lady Day 1888, allowances of 15 per cent. were made to the farm tenants. For one year, from Lady Day 1891, the tithes have been allowed, being about 7½ per cent. For the present year, from Lady Day 1892, the tithes are again allowed, and an additional 10 per cent. out of the rents.	No permanent reduction of any consequence up to the present time. Now a few trifling reductions are proposed.	All the estates were valued about 30 years back; and the rents were increased by re-lettings about 5,000*l.* a year.
Major Parry Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, Allt-Lwyd, Aberystwyth.	Allt-Lwyd and Mabws (In Cardigan and Pembroke, 3,500 acres.)	In some cases 5 per cent.	All rents have been permanently reduced. Some instances: Farm 140*l.* per annum for 50 years is reduced to 90*l.*, present rent. Farm 180*l.* per annum for 50 years is reduced to 130*l.*, present rent. Farm 290*l.* per annum for 40 years is reduced to 230*l.*, present rent; and other farms have been reduced 10*l.* and 5*l.* per annum. These farms are upon the Allt-Lwyd estate, corn land, and were let by my father about 45 years since. No rents have been raised by me.	The Allt-Lwyd estate was revalued five years since; the old rents were reduced 15 per cent.
David Jones, Tynyffhynon, Llanon, R.S.O.	Penlan - - (165 acres.)	- - - -	Rent reduced in 1890 from 113*l.* to 90*l.*; in 1893 from 90*l.* to 80*l.*	Rent remained the same from 1841 to 1890.
Mrs. Jones, Tiburwen, Carmarthen.	Elm Lodge - - (In Carmarthen and Cardigan, 1,805 acres.)	For the years 1886 and 1887, 10 per cent.; the half year ending Lady Day 1888, 10 per cent.; Lady Day 1892, 5 per cent.; Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent.	- - - -	My estate has been valued twice, each time increasing my receipts. In several instances rents have been raised.
Captain Jones-Parry, Tyllwyd, Newcastle Emlyn.	Tyllwyd - - (1,200 acres.)	Abatements are constantly granted. I have returned 5 to 10 per cent.	- - - -	The estate was revalued in 1874. In one case there was a decrease; in the others some were unaltered, the rent increased ranging from 5 to 2 per cent. The increase was almost nominal. The property had not been revalued since 1818 or perhaps before that even. Very large sums had been laid out in buildings and improvements.
Colonel John Lewes, Llanlear, Talsarn.	Llanlear - - (1,350 acres.)	I have granted abatements of 10 per cent. in the years 1885, 1886, and 1887; in 1888, 7½ per cent.; in 1891, Michaelmas half year, 10 per cent.; and in 1892, Michaelmas half year, 10 per cent.	No reductions have been made.	The estate was valued on the death of my father, in 1860. The valuation on the whole was an increase, but it had the effect of equalizing the various holdings, which was much to be desired.
Colonel W. P. Llewellyn Lewes, Llysnewydd, Llandyssil.	Llysnewydd and Grange. (In Carmarthen and Cardigan, 4,200 acres.)	My father, who died in 1890, granted abatements from 5 to 10 per cent. on several occasions. Last year I granted 5 per cent., and at the last audit, for Michaelmas, I granted 10 per cent.	I have permanently reduced the rents in two or three cases; but the rents generally are the same now as they were when valued in 1871.	The estate was valued in 1871, the rents being raised slightly in some instances.

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
Mrs. Lewis, Clynfiew, Boncath.	Clynfiew - - (In Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen, 4,870 acres.)	Abatements have twice been granted; 10 per cent. was given on the rents payable Michaelmas 1885 and Michaelmas 1892. Reductions have frequently been made at other times during this interval in individual cases.	A slight reduction has been made in the case of two farms, 5*l.* a year on each.	The estate has not been revalued for purposes of rental, but in the year 1888 a competent local valuer went over the whole property for the purpose of inspecting the state of repairs and cultivation, of rearranging boundaries and readjusting values where necessary. The estate was at that time very unequally let, and the valuer advised a reduction in some cases and an increase in others. His recommendations were followed, but the rents were not raised to the figures mentioned by him in any one case, and in many cases no change was made at all. The net result of the valuation was a net result of the estate rental.
Earl of Lisburne, Crosswood, Aberystwyth.	Crosswood - - (39,544 acres.)	Considerable portions of the estates have been sold since 1888.	The permanent reductions on my rent roll since 1877 amount to 573*l.* 14*s.*	My estates were revalued as a whole for purposes of rental in my late father's time, in 1874, and the result was to increase the receipts. I entered into the possession of the estates in 1888, and made no revaluation. I believe the rents of my property have not been raised in any particular instance except at the revaluation.
Thos. Edwd. Lloyd, Coedmore, near Cardigan.	Coedmore and Trewern. (In Cardigan, Carmarthen, and Pembroke, 4,500 acres.)	For the Coedmore estate, 5 per cent. was allowed in Lady Day 1886, Michaelmas 1886, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1887, Lady Day and Michaelmas 1888, and Lady Day 1889; and for Michaelmas 1892, 10 per cent. (except where there were leases). For the Trewern estate, 10 per cent. allowed at Michaelmas 1885 and Lady Day 1886; the same at Michaelmas 1886, the same at Lady Day and Michaelmas 1887, the same at Lady Day and Michaelmas 1888, 5 per cent. was allowed at Lady Day 1889; and 10 per cent. at Michaelmas 1892.	Since 1877 rents have not been reduced very materially.	The Trewern estate was revalued in 1864, for the purpose of a partition between my late mother and uncle, Mr. Longcroft of Llanina, Cardiganshire, and such valuation has not been materially altered since that period, except in cases where old leases have fallen in.
Captain Herbert Vaughan, Brynog, Talsarn.	Brynog - - (2,800 acres.)	Ten per cent. some half-dozen audits.	Since the passing of the Tithe Act in 1891 I pay the tithe, and in rearranging the rents, my income is reduced by some 50*l.*	Every farm of mine has a field valuation made some 30 years ago, but in no instance has any farm been let at a rental as high as the valuation.
Mrs. Vaughan, Llangoedmore, Cardigan.	Llangoedmore - - (550 acres.)	I returned 5 per cent. to my tenants when they paid their rents in 1887, and paid a half year's tithe rentcharge for each tenant in 1892.	I have not permanently reduced my rents since 1877. One small holding only was reduced from 14*l.* to 10*l.*

Name and Address of Landowner.	Estate.	Abatements.	Reductions.	Observations as to History of Rents.
T. J. Waddingham, Hafod, near Aberystwyth.	Hafod - - - (In Cardigan and Montgomery, 15,000 acres.)	For the two last half years 10 or 15 per cent. has been allowed to all who paid punctually.	After 1877 the rents of those who had no leases were permanently reduced by 10 per cent. To the largest tenant (3,000 to 4,000 acres) besides the 10 per cent. reduction of rent, 100*l.* was allowed in 1885 for that year, and last year his rent was reduced by 30*l.* The permanent reduction has been about 38 per cent. I should add that from 17 to 18 per cent. of the rents are paid by hauling for the landlord at so much a load.	The estate has not been valued during the time for which I have known it, viz., 22 years. The rent of one newly purchased farm was raised, but buildings have since been erected thereon.
Mrs. Lloyd Philipps, Penty Park, Haverfordwest.	664 acres - -	For the last four or five years 10 per cent.	No reductions.	——
Arthur Picton Saunders-Davies, Pentre, Boncath.	Pentre - - - (In Pembroke, Cardigan, and Carmarthen, 6,700 acres.)	No abatements - -	In one case the rent of a farm was reduced from 90*l.* to 80*l.*	The Pentre old estate was revalued about 30 years ago. Some of the farms were increased in rental and some reduced. The Pentre Cilwendeg estate was bought in 1884, and the rents have remained the same, with the addition of the tithe.
Captain Stewart, Alltyrodyn.	Alltyrodyn - - - (1,123 acres.)	In 1888 an abatement of 5 per cent., and in 1893 of 10 per cent. on all farms.	In 1887 reduced the rent of Blaeneinon 10*l.*, from 85*l.* to 75*l.*; in 1888 reduced the rent of Pullbryn 4*l.*, from 34*l.* to 30*l.*, tenant to expend 4*l.* yearly in lime.	——

DAVID JENKINS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

48,423. Where do you live Mr. Jenkins?—At Cerrigcaranau.

[The following statement of the witness was read.]

My father, David Jenkins, held a farm, called Cwm-meurig Uchaf, in the parish of Gwnnws, on Lord Lisburne's estate. My ancestors had lived on the place for many generations. I can trace them back for four or five generations. I have heard my grandfather say that the rent asked at one time was 3*l.* a year. This was afterwards raised to 4*l.*, when the tenant threatened to leave, fearing he would not be able to pay the advance, but the agent persuaded him to attempt it, and promised not to be hard on him. By the year 1797 the rent had been raised to 8*l.* I have a receipt for 4*l.*, a half-year's rent, dated the 23rd of March of that year. Jenkin Morgan Jenkins was the tenant at that time. He was the first to plough the land with horses. Before that time the ploughing was done by oxen and a wooden plough, which they could carry on their shoulders from one place to another. This, however, was good enough for their purpose, as there were no fields on the farm. The place was a desert, without hedges or fences, and without any but natural boundaries. In the year 1826, Jenkin Morgan Jenkins' rent was advanced to 21*l.* He held the farm until his death in 1838. He was succeeded by my grandfather, William Jenkins. At that time the buildings were miserably poor. The dwelling-house, if worthy of the name, was a one-roomed mud cottage with a thatched roof, and the only mediums for light were the door and the chimney. Under the chimney-piece there was a strong pillar, which presumably bore the weight of the whole building, and this was also used for hanging bacon. This was the house my grandfather had to live in or build another. This he did the following year, in 1839, entirely at his own expense. He also made many improvements on the farm by fencing, draining, manuring, and liming the land. To put lime on the land at this time meant great trouble and expense. It had to be carted from Aberystwith,

a distance of 15 miles. The carts had to be started on the evening of one day, in order to be early at the lime kiln on the following morning. After bringing that load home, they rested the following day, starting again the next evening. In this way they could only procure about three loads in a week. In the year 1848, he further built a stable and cow-house at his own expense, excepting only the timber, which was supplied by the landlord. In 1858 the rent was raised from 21*l.* to 28*l.* In 1859 he built a house on the farm entirely at his own expense, intending to live there the remainder of his days. When he removed into this house, my father became tenant of the farm, and occupied the farm-house. He at once set about improving the farm, but in the very next year, 1860, the rent was again advanced by a new agent, named William Burman, from 28*l.* to 31*l.* In 1861, a barn and cart-house were built, probably on the same terms as the previous buildings, although I have no direct proof of the fact. The greater part of the improvements on the farm were effected during his tenancy. He brought the farm to such a condition that it was a model of what a farm on such high land ought to be. In 1875 the rent was again raised by the present agent, Mr. Gardiner, from 31*l.* to 46*l.*, making an increase in 17 years of about 120 per cent., and in 80 years of nearly 600 per cent., and this entirely on the tenants' improvements. In this year, 1875, my father and a neighbour were looking at a swede crop, which was being destroyed by hares and rabbits. His neighbour advised my father to set a few traps to catch them, and he did so. When he went to look at the traps the following morning, he was met by two of Lord Lisburne's gamekeepers, who at once reported the matter to his lordship. This happened at the beginning of the year. On the 20th of the following March he received notice to quit, and, although he and my grandfather went several times, both to the agent and landlord, to beg to be allowed to continue in the farm, he was compelled to leave in the following autumn. The sin was an unpardonable one, being an offence against one of the most sacred laws of the estate. Thus, my grandfather was turned out of his own house, where he had intended spending his declining years, and my father out of the farm where he had spent the best years of his life, working hard for its improvement, and upon which he had spent hundreds of pounds, to fare as best he might with his family of seven children, the eldest only 13 years of age, without a penny piece of compensation; but Providence took care of him and his family. He obtained a farm which had been well cultivated, but upon which there was room for several improvements. I often tried to persuade him to undertake this work, but to no purpose. The cruel and inhuman conduct of his former landlord had effectually killed every desire for improvements. I state this to show the effect produced on his after life as a farmer, and the effect which such unworthy conduct must have on agriculture generally. I believe agriculture cannot be prosperous in Wales

See 49,190.

until we have a Land Act which will deal justly with landlord and tenant, will provide fair rent, security of tenure, and compensation for improvements to the tenant. The law should also secure to the tenant the right to please himself with respect to game. As he pays rent for the farm, the produce should be secured to him; but, since the landlord requires a portion of the crops for his game, he should be made to bear a part also of the rent, tithes, and taxes.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,424. What date was it when the wooden plough was in use?—That was before the year 1797.

48,425. And the style of cottage with the pillar on which the bacon was hung—was that at the same time?—Before the new one was built, in 1839.

48,426. Was the fire-place in those old cottages against the pillar or at the end of the cottage?—Against the pillar.

48,427. The fire-place?—Yes, against it.

48,428. It is an interesting survival of the very old style cottage which is mentioned in the early documents?—Yes, it is.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,429. Did your grandfather apply to the landlord or the agent to erect a house for him?—Yes, but that was of no use.

48,430. Before building the house did he try to obtain from the landlord or the agent a promise that he would not be disturbed in his tenancy?—I am not quite sure on that point.

48,431. Is the Ground Game Act utilised now by the tenants on the estate?—No, I do not think so.

48,432. Do the tenants know that they have the right of killing the ground game?—I dare say that they know, but they are afraid to do so.

48,433. Has the agent or the landlord discouraged the tenants in any way in making use of it, by threats or otherwise?—I think they have on some estates.

48,434. You speak of Lord Lisburne's estate, do you not?—Yes, of that estate.

48,435. They do make use of the Ground Game Act?—No, they do not make use of the Act.

48,436. Are the tenants troubled by ground game?—Yes, very much.

48,437. Do they not kill any of the rabbits or the hares?—No, only very few. I know a farm where the game spoil the whole crop.

48,438. Have they applied to the agent to allow the gamekeepers to kill them?—I think they have done so.

48,439. Have the gamekeepers done anything to keep them down?—Very little.

48,440. You really think that it is from fear that the tenants do not make any use of the Act?—Yes, it is from fear, I believe.

Lord Kenyon.

48,441. Are you on Lord Lisburne's estate now?—No.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,442. Are you a tenant farmer now?—Yes, on the Cwrt-mawr estate.

48,443. Have you anything to complain of in your present holding?—No.

48,444. With regard to the rabbits on Lord Lisburne's estate, you say the gamekeepers do not kill them, and the tenants do not kill them. Does anyone kill them?—The landlord kills a few of them.

48,445. They ought to swarm if no one kills them?—Yes, so they are.

48,446. Do you mean seriously to say that the tenants never kill rabbits at all?—Some tenants kill them but the others are afraid to do so.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,447. What do you think of those who are afraid to do so; are they not rather foolish?—Well, I should think they are.

48,448. It is not much encouragement to pass laws for the sake of the tenant if he is afraid to make use of them?—No, in some way it is not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,449. I understand your contention is this, that the tenant is afraid to incur the landlord's displeasure by making use of the Act?—Yes, he is afraid that the landlord might show some displeasure towards him further on.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES JAMES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,450. What are you, Mr. James, and where do you reside?—I am a freeholder, and a justice of the peace for the county, and I live at Ffynonhowell, Llanrhystyd.

48,451. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—My brother, Jenkin Morris James, was adopted when a very young child and brought up by his uncle, his mother's brother, Mr. Jenkin D. Morris, who lived at Brynhir, on the estate of Miss Mary Morice, of Carrog, Llanddeinol. Mr. Jenkin D. Moris was a member and a faithful deacon of the Calvinistic Methodist Church at Tabor, Llangwyryfon. He died in November 1856, at the age of 76 years, having lived at Brynhir for about 50 years. After the death of his uncle, my brother, Jenkin Morris James, who was married about two years previously, took and farmed Brynhir. In April 1860, J. M. James, together with all the other tenants of the Carrog estate, received the following letter from Miss Morice, his landlady. Later on John Jones, Bridgend, sent in a report, and stated in that report that the letter which was sent by Miss Morice to her agents was written in the vernacular. I beg to state that that is not correct. I have here the original letter which was sent to my brother, and it is in English, and you can see it. That letter is as follows:—"As I firmly believe the principles of "our Church which I have embraced to be in "strict accordance with the Word of God, I "therefore take great interest in the church in "the parish of Llanddeinol, and feel it a duty "incumbent upon me to do all I can for its "success. Having been placed by Divine Providence here as a landowner, I feel the responsibility of my situation, and have come to the "conclusion of making that use of the property "entrusted to my care which I deem consistent "with the religion of our blessed Saviour by "conscientiously choosing those persons to be "my tenants who can and will support our "church from principle and conscience. Deeply "impressed with these considerations, I feel "myself morally bound to set before you two "alternatives, and you are at liberty to choose "for yourself, namely, to attend our church

"service with your family, and thus to support "its principles, or otherwise, if your conscience "will not allow you to comply with my request, "you must quit the farm which you hold of me, "because my conscience also forbids me to allow "you to make use of the advantages which you "derive from your connexion with my property "as a tenant to the support of those principles "which are at variance and hostile to those of "your landlady. Far be it from me to make "the attempt of forcing or compelling any of "my tenants to become Church people, and far "be it from themselves to be so inconsistent "with themselves as to expect they shall continue to be my tenants unless they are Church-"going persons, because by so acting I shall "consider myself doing else than patronizing "what is quite contrary to my own views. I "trust also that as far as religion is concerned "you will be generous enough to allow me that "liberty of conscience in the use of what I can "claim to be my own which you yourself take, "in the use of the same, and thus we shall be "progressing mutually towards keeping that "golden rule of justice, 'Whatsoever ye would "'that men should do to you do ye even so to "'them.' I have thus thought it proper so far "to explain myself that you may know the "nature of the ground upon which it is my "intention to proceed, and may see the fairness "of the course of conduct which I mean to "adopt.—MARY MORICE, Carrog, April 1860." J. M. James and another tenant, John Lloyd, of Palmon, refused to comply with the terms of this letter and to attend with their families the services at Llanddeinol Church. They were consequently served with notices to quit in September 1860, and were driven from their farms in the year 1861, and obliged to leave one-third of their crops and many other improvements without receiving a single penny for them. The family of Brynhir at this time consisted of husband and wife and five young children. When the letter above referred to was issued by the landlady there were of Nonconformists on the Carrog estate 14 families of farmers and 13 families of cottagers. The number of

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Churchmen on the estate at the same time was two families of farmers and two families of cottagers. The Nonconformists on the estate at the present time are three cottagers, one a weaver, one a gelder (both of these dependent upon the country side for their living), and the third a labourer, who used to attend church but now goes to chapel. Many Nonconformists took farms on the Carrog estate during these years, but, having done so, they were obliged, without exception, to go to church on Sundays. Many farmers who went to church when they first took their holdings left them in a few years because they got tired of this condition or from some other cause. I venture, without hesitation, to express my conviction that Miss Morice, who was naturally of a kind and amiable disposition, would not have taken the course she did but for two reasons. The trouble must be attributed, in the first instance, to the inordinate desire of the vicar, the Rev. James Evans (well known under the nom de plume of "Clericus") to fill by any means within his power the church, the services of which were at that time attended by hardly any of the parishioners. It is clear that the original letter was neither written nor signed by Miss Morice. In my opinion, the hand of "Clericus" is very evident in it, and I believe this could be verified by a comparison of the letter with the baptismal register for those years, which is now probably in the custody of the present vicar of the parish. Next to the influence of the vicar, the letter owed its existence, I think, to the fact that the agent, Mr. David Pugh, who was one of the two Conformist tenants at that time, coveted places on the estate for his children. As already stated, only two very moderate farms, viz., Brynhir and Palmon, were vacated at the first attempt, and the best of these, Brynhir, was given to the agent's son. Experience soon proved that Brynhir was only a poor farm, and it was found necessary to look out for a better one. The next step, therefore, was to give Mrs. Catherine Edwards, Pencwmmawr (one of the best farms on the estate) notice to quit, on the plea that she had not been properly converted to Church principles; but whether her conversion was real or not a better farm had to be found for the agent's son. Much to their surprise, seeing that they attended church regularly, Mrs. Edwards and her family had to leave, and it is estimated that she was a loser in consequence to the extent of 500*l.* After Mrs. Edwards' departure the agent's son removed from Brynhir to Pencwmmawr. A couplet from a song written at the time in honour of the agent comes to my mind, and is a striking commentary on the transaction—

"Dafydd Pugh ydyw'r cawr Sydd wedi llyngcu Pencwmmawr."

My brother, Jenkin Morris James, removed from Brynhir to Wernddu, on the Nanteos estate, in October 1861. He received notice to quit this farm for voting in favour of Mr. Evan Matthew Richards, the Liberal candidate, in the General Election of 1868. He came from this place to my mother at Penycwm Llangwyryfon. He received the sum of 150*l.* from the eviction fund to compensate him in some degree for the loss he had sustained in leaving Wernddu. I sent a detailed account of these circumstances to the late Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., and he made excellent use of them in his speech on the second reading of the Ballot Act. His description of the husband and wife with 10 young children, the eldest not 14 years of age, being turned out of their home because of the father's fidelity to principle had a profound effect upon the House. Jenkin Morris James died three years ago, leaving a widow and 12 children.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,451A. Do you think that sort of thing goes on now?—Yes.

48,452. The same sort of feeling?—Yes, there are only three Nonconformists on the estate now.

48,453. Is the same sort of notice given to those three Nonconformist tenants?—No.

48,454. How long have the three been in their holdings?—I cannot say exactly. I think one of them about 15 or 18 years, others less.

48,455. Who is the present owner of the estate?—The Rev. J. Hughes Sinnett, Llangadock, Carmarthenshire.

48,456. Did he buy it?—No.

48,457. He inherited it?—Yes.

48,458. Have you any letter to show the case of Mrs. Catherine Edwards?—No, my lord.

48,459. Was that the impression that that is why she was given notice to quit?—Yes.

48,460. Only an impression?—I think there is no evidence of that only what they say at that time, that that is the reason.

48,461. It is difficult to say what proper conversion is if she continually went to church?—Well, I cannot explain that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,462. Do tenant farmers exercise the rights of citizenship as freely as artisans and tradesmen, that is, in the way of attending public meetings, and showing their side?—On any estate, do you mean?

48,463. Do the tenant farmers exercise that right that townspeople do by showing their side when they are going out at times of election. Will they congregate together at a public meeting to discuss matters as they do in towns?—Not generally on estates.

48,464. So that after having the protection of the ballot, they are still labouring under a sort of fear?—Yes.

48,465. Do you think they would be more independent, and speak their mind more freely, if they had security of tenure and also compensation for unexhausted improvements?—Yes, of course.

48,466. Then you think, generally speaking, tenant farmers would be more manly in their character, and more independent, if they had security of tenure?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,467. I did not understand how many of the Nonconformist tenants were turned out from this estate?—Two the first year.

48,468. And how many afterwards?—Well, they left themselves in a few years. Catherine Edwards was turned out the second year.

48,469. Do we understand that all but two conformed?—Yes. A few of the cottagers did not have notice from the landlady.

48,470. We have had a letter read which gave the cruel alternative. I want to know how many accepted the alternative of conforming?—I think all the farmers accepted it but those two.

48,471. And the cottagers?—No, not all the cottagers.

48,472. Were many of the cottagers turned out?—No, not many. The cottagers did not have notice to quit from the landlady.

48,473. Do you say your own belief is that Miss Morrice was naturally a kind-hearted woman?—Yes.

48,474. And, mistaken as her conduct may have been, you still think that she acted from conscientious motives?—I do. She was an old lady at that time, about 80 years of age.

48,475. You told us that those two who left lost money by losing the value of their improvements. Did they ask for any compensation for their improvements when they left?—I think they asked for compensation.

48,476. That compensation was not given?—No.

48,477. That was hardly like the "golden rule," was it?—No.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,478. You say most of the farmers conformed, excepting the two. Are there any of them alive now?—Yes, those that turned to Church at that time, there are some alive now.

48,479. Do they go to church still?—Yes.

48,480. All of them?—Yes.

48,481. What made you think that there was a complaint that that letter was not written in Welsh?—I do not think so, but Mr. Jones says so.

48,482. You would not care very much what the language was so long as the contents were such as they were. What makes you think that "Clericus" wrote that letter?—One gentleman told me that he was very well acquainted with "Clericus's" hand, and he was shown that letter, and he said, "that is very much like the hand of 'Clericus.'" I do not know the hand of "Clericus" myself.

48,483. How old was Miss Morice at the time?—She was nearly 80 years of age.

48,484. I do not think it looks like the handwriting of a man or woman of 80, but some people are very vigorous at 80, no doubt. Why is he called "Clericus"?—I do not know,

48,485. He had a nom de plume, you say?—He used to write to the newspapers under the title of "Clericus."

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

48,486. On what subjects did he write to the newspapers?—I do not remember well now, but he wrote many letters at that time.

48,487. On the land question or any religious question, Church and State, or what?—On that question at that time.

48,488. On the question of the religious convictions of the farmers?—Yes, but I do not remember well about those.

48,489. What papers used he to write to?—I think he wrote to the "Baner ac Amserau Cymru."

48,490. That would be Mr. Gee's paper?—Yes.

48,491. He was not quite of the same opinion, I suppose, as Mr. Gee?—Oh, no.

48,492. This is rather a long way back. You admit that, do you not?—Yes.

48,493. In what way do you connect that with the present day?—Because the same kind of thing is carried on through the whole estate now.

48,494. What evidence have you on that point?—I think that gentlemen here to day will give you evidence on that point.

48,495. Have you any yourself?—No, only there are a great many Nonconformists ask for farms on this estate, but they turn to Church every one of them.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,496. This evidence is almost entirely confined to the Carrog estate?—Yes, only the Carrog estate.

48,497. Is it your opinion that this is an exceptional estate?—Well, yes, of course, it is exceptional.

48,498. There are a great many landlords who make no difference between Churchmen and Nonconformists?—No, not to that extent however.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,499. Do you know whether it is still made a condition that a tenant has to become a Churchman in order to have a farm?—It is.

Lord Kenyon.

48,500. You said just now that you did not think the farmers exercised their right of attending public meetings?—Yes.

48,501. Are most of the farmers in this neighbourhood Liberals?—Well, I cannot say that.

48,502. At any rate, they are successful in returning a Liberal, are they not?—I think most of them are Liberals.

48,503. You think most of them are Liberals, whether they attend meetings or not?—Aye.

48,504. I have a question to put to you by Mr. Samuel Evans: "Are not the three Non-"conformist tenants on the Carrog estate at "the present time cottagers." You said they were?—Yes.

48,505. "Is there a single Nonconformist "tenant farmer on the estate now."?—Not one farmer.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,506. This is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Who was the clergyman whom you say in- "fluenced Miss Morice"?—The Rev. James Evans. He died many years ago.

48,507. Is there any representative of the estate here? [No response.]

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,507A. Does the Carrog estate belong to Mr. Sinnett?—Yes; the Rev. J. Hughes Sinnett, vicar of Llangunider, Breconshire.

48,508. This is a question by Mr. Bonsall: "Was not J. M. James taken in at Pencwm by a "Conservative and a Churchman after quitting "Wernddu"?—He was.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. KATE JONES called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,509. You are Mrs. Kate Jones?—Mrs. Jones, of Holyhead.

See 46,323 –46,416.

48,510. And you wish to rebut some statement of Mr. Thomas Hughes?—Mr. Thomas Hughes, of Pendre, given at Lampeter on Wednesday last.

48,511. A statement as to what?—First of all as to his giving evidence with regard to Mrs. W. R. Jones, the wife of the Rev. W. R. Jones, Calvinistic Methodist Minister (Goleufryn), Holyhead, whereas it ought to have been against Mrs. Kate Jones, of Holyhead, and Mr. David Lloyd, acting as agent on account of the other party. I am only part owner of the land of Erwtomau, whereas I understand that the evidence has been given against me as the sole owner of the place.

48,512. Yes. What he says is this, "James "Rowlands, Troedrhiwlwba, Penllwyn, Aber- "ystwyth, was my landlord, and the present "owner is one of his daughters, namely, Mrs. "Kate Jones, wife of the Rev. W. R. Jones, "(Goleufryn), Holyhead." You say that is not right?—I am only part owner. Mr. David Lloyd has been mortgagee for the other owner, and he acts as agent for myself as well. My husband has nothing whatever to do with the matter. He gave me sole control of the property under a marriage settlement. I wish to rebut that evidence, as it may affect him materially, being a public man.

48,513. I quite understand that. Your husband has nothing to do with it at all?—Nothing at all to do with it.

48,514. What further statements do you wish to rebut?—I may say this, that when my mother died, in the year 1869, I received the rent from Mr. Thomas Hughes, which was not paid to me as it should have been. He gave evidence at Lampeter that it was paid up to date, but it was not paid up to date; it was paid any time he wished. He would pay the other owner when he was asked for it, but as for me, I was treated just as he wished. I was then an orphan, and I think he was taking advantage of me, and even three rents would sometimes be running. What I had to do was to ask Mr. Evan Evans, the solicitor, to act for me to get the rent. I have letters to prove that. I have kept letters that I received from Mr. Evan Evans to show the difficulty he had in receiving the rent. I can refer to them now if you wish it.

48,515. You may put those letters in. You inherited this estate from your father?—Yes.

48,516. And he inherited it?—He inherited it from his father.

48,517. We were not quite sure whether it was a case of a sale or not?—No, it was during my infancy, I was three years of age. My mother died when I was 19 years of age, and I came in as part owner. It was divided between three sisters, the only children. My two other sisters are dead, and I am the only one living.

48,518. You say the rent was very hard to get. Is there anything else you wish to rebut. He has put in a large statement of claim. Have you anything to say about that?—I wish to object to the evidence given by Mr. Hughes as to his not receiving any compensation, and about his being ejected unmercifully from the farm; it appears in the papers as if he had been ejected by myself, whereas Mr. Thomas Hughes had been turned out of the house before I knew of it. It was through Mr. Evan Evans, the solicitor, that I first heard of it.

48,519. Perhaps it will explain matters if you read one or two of those letters?—Yes. This is a letter from the solicitor, Mr. Evan Evans, to me—"Aberystwyth, 19th June, 1882. Dear "Mrs. Jones, I have received your letter and "enclosure. Thomas Hughes' affairs are in "liquidation, and all his effects and property "are now vested in a trustee on behalf of the "creditors; he has no interest in the tenancy, "that has also passed to the trustee, but of "course the trustee holds subject to the terms "of the agreement, under which Thomas "Hughes has been holding. I have not been "able yet to ascertain what the intentions of "the trustee are with regard to the farm, but "we have a right to demand him either to "disclaim the tenancy or to continue it. "Hughes, however, cannot interfere in any "way; the rent has been already secured; and "you need not give yourself any trouble on "this head. I am sorry to say that Thomas "Hughes has for some time past been removing "his cattle and stock from the farm, and hiding "them at different places, and criminal pro-

" ceedings are now pending against him. The " whole of his effects are advertised for sale " next week. The handbill contained hay as " well as stock, but from inquiries I have made " I find that the hay they intend selling is a " small quantity of last year's growth, worth " 10*s.*, or thereabouts. No part of the present " year's crops has been as yet touched, but it " would be well for me to see the agreement " that Thomas Hughes speaks of in his letter, " and if you can procure it, please send same.— " With kind regards, yours faithfully, Evan " Evans." There is another letter as regards his not paying the rent. This is dated 14th February, 1882: "Thomas Hughes has not yet fulfilled " his many promises to me, but my patience is " exhausted, and am therefore taking steps to " enforce payment." That is to contradict the evidence that he paid regularly up to date.

48,520. I suppose, as to the compensation, you do not know whether he spent his money or not on the farm?—I do not believe he did. I have an old rent-book here, and that shows that he did not pay the rent up to date. This is a bill of sale (handing same), to show that he was selling and in liquidation—that he was not ejected, as he says. Mr. Lloyd will explain that. Here is the agreement (handing same). By that he is supposed to have allowances made to him for building fences and opening up drains. I believe he has had that allowance.

48,521. He was compensated for those things, was he?—Yes. From what I have seen from some old books in my home, my mother employed labourers to do the work.

48,522. As to these buildings that he says he made, do you know anything about them?—I have not had time to read the evidence through.

48,523. I will read just this bit of the evidence, and perhaps you will be able to say something of it. He says: "I improved the " dwelling-house by rebuilding the pine end " with stone and mortar, flagging the floor, and " boarding the loft. The whole cost me 72*l.* The " barn I rebuilt entirely, with a wall. I laid a " threshing floor of boards, with both ends flagged " with stone bought at Aberystwith. This cost " me 52*l.* I made a stable sufficient to keep five " horses, including proper stalls, with loft, and " stone paving. The whole cost me 31*l.* I erected " a shed (14 yards long, 8 yards wide, and 5 yards " high) of stone and mortar, carting the stones " from the quarry myself, and roofed with zinc. " It had a loft above to keep hay, and divisions in " the floor to put calves and colts. This cost me " 62*l.* I also built two other sheds for young " calves. Those were boarded on the sides and " covered with zinc, and cost me 10*l.* I also " erected a boiler-house, with an oven in it. " This was built of stone and mortar, and the " timber of oak, and cost me 20*l.* I also ex- " pended 12*l.* in building pig-styes. I also " erected two cart-houses, and a place to keep a " trap at a cost of 20*l.*" Do you know anything about those?—I know that in the year 1868, my mother allowed to him 60*l.* in three half-yearly rents, 20*l.* each, towards building an addition to the dwelling-house. Then he alludes to a boiler-house. I think that was included as well.

48,524. Then he did have some allowance?—I am certain of that.

48,525. He suppresses that?—I have a memorandum at home to show that. It is written out in the handwriting of my brother-in-law, with my mother's name added to it, and the stamp and all.

48,526. Then he puts in a large claim for manures; I do not suppose you know anything about that, a claim for 890*l.*?—I really think he is exaggerating a great deal.

48,527. I should think it is very probable.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,528. He has a claim for guano amounting to 565*l.*; then, in answer to questions from Mr. Seebohm and myself, he admitted that he had had probably all the unexhausted value of that within about 100*l.*, so that there is about 450*l.* off this tremendous claim at one stroke?—Then about the outbuildings, he says that he had been rebuilding them. We have had to rebuild them now since he has left. We have allowed for one shed only 18*l.* for the incoming tenant. Mr. Lloyd will explain that later on.

Lord Kenyon.

48,529. You say that he was allowed something towards these various things. Then he says: "I had to leave the farm because we were " told it was too cheap, and it was refused both " to myself and my children. I offered 50*l.* for " it, but I was told that I should not have it." Is that a fact?—He was turned away from the farm, as I say, by the trustee in liquidation. The trustee would not on any account allow us to have possession of it if we were to have Thomas Hughes as tenant.

48,530. He did not consider Mr. Thomas Hughes a desirable tenant?—He did not. I have letters to prove it. Mr. Thomas Hughes' son, as he says, did come to Holyhead on two occasions, and he was treated with every cordiality and received every hospitality, but we told him, I think, the second time he came that the farm was already let, and that it was useless for him to come, and of course he knew very well that I was acting conjointly with Mr. Lloyd. The fact of it is, my husband was rather advising me to allow the son to have it, and Mr. Lloyd, in one of his letters, thought so, but it was useless for us to try; we could not get possession of the property at all from the trustee if we were going to deliver it up to him.

48,531. Then you were not quite a free agent?—There were other things, too, that turned up when things were pending, some criminal proceedings were brought against Mr. Thomas Hughes.

48,532. Then you say it is untrue that he paid the rent every time. That is one of his statements?—That is a great mistake. He was very aggravating towards me, and I was at the time dependent chiefly on the rent for my livelihood.

48,533. He also says that the landlady did not incur any expense on the building. You can prove that he had 60*l.* odd worth?—I can prove that.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,534. I think he also suggested, at least, that is the impression on my mind, that you treated him with very scant civility, and had scarcely been polite to him. I suppose you do not admit that?—Well, I strongly object to that; it is not true.

48,535. It is not true?—We treated his son when he came to Holyhead—well, we could not have treated him better than we would if you had come there.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,536. Do you know whether he kept the horses which he used as a timber merchant in the place?—Yes, as a timber merchant, and the liquidation, of course, was entirely on account of his occupation as a timber merchant.

Lord Kenyon.

48,537. A lot of these buildings were in pursuance of that trade, and had nothing to do with the farm at all. I daresay some of the stables that he put up were connected with his trade as a timber merchant, and had nothing to do with the farm?—I do not know that he has put them up.

48,538. Is there anything more you wish to say?—I should like Mr. Lloyd to prove our characters as landlords, because it reflects upon us.

48,539. Yes, we will take Mr. Lloyd's evidence at once?—I may say that he left the farm in a very dilapidated state.

48,540. He says he left it in an improved condition?—Oh no, he has given us a lot of expense.

48,541. I am afraid you have had to come a very long way here, madam?—Well, my husband's character was in question, and I was very anxious that Mr. Thomas Hughes's evidence should be rebutted without any further delay.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of preceding witness.

48,542. What have you to say, sir?—I am David Lloyd, of Aberystwyth, accountant; I am mortgagee in possession of a moiety of this farm, Erwtomau, and act as agent for Mrs. Jones, the owner of the other moiety. The former tenant, Thomas Hughes, said, at least according to the reports, that "he was unmercifully turned "away from the farm" by her, meaning the landlady. To rebut that, I say that he became bankrupt in the year 1882, and under the Act of 1869 a trustee was appointed, and he took possession of everything on the farm. Thomas Hughes and the trustee became unfriendly.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,543. When was he turned out?—In 1882. The trustee came into possession and ejected him; he sold out everything in his power as trustee under the Bankruptcy Act, every stick and every creature on the land. The trustee informed us that he could retain the farm for a year and a half, and "run the land down," as they say in the country.

Lord Kenyon.

58,544. What time of the year was this—some time after March, I suppose?—Yes, it was in June. I may add that, judging from the land and the buildings at that time, it did not appear to me that one-fiftieth of the amount mentioned by him in his evidence had been expended there. As to the galvanized iron roof he speaks of, we paid 18*l.* to the trustee, which went to his creditors. We also allowed 20*l.*, a half year's rent, for wire fencing, which went to his estate. I think that no landlord would like to take a man not worth a penny back to the same land, where he was, attending to his timber business and neglecting the farming.

48,545. He failed in the timber line, I suppose?—Yes; the landlady had nothing whatever to do with it, neither had I. We were passive in the matter. Of course there was a bitter feeling between him and the trustee; the tenant took away cattle and hid some, and was brought up before the court on criminal proceedings, in consequence of his acts. I say this, that the landlady had nothing whatever to do with his leaving the farm.

48,546. This was all after his liquidation?—Yes, he would have been there up to to-day as far as we were concerned if he had behaved. Of course we could not take him back. He says we refused 50*l.* rent. We did not want exorbitant rent, but we could not take a penniless man as tenant. As to his reputation, I may say that he had to go to another district in consequence of the ill-feeling created at the time, but we had nothing whatever to do with that.

48,547. Can you tell me what the farm is let at at the present moment?—The farm of Erwtomau?

48,548. Yes?—40*l.* a year now. We reduced it to 35*l.* on account of bad times. It was 35*l.*, I think, in 1884, and 1885, and 1889. It is 40*l.* now, but we allow 10 per cent. for the last three years on account of bad times; we do not really get that rent at present. I am mortgagee in possession, and I get my interest, and therefore I speak quite without any feeling in the matter. We have allowed the present tenant a considerable sum, in addition to the 18*l.* for the galvanized roof, and the 20*l.* for the wire fencing, within the last 10 years.

Lord Kenyon.

49,549A. I think we may fairly say, Mrs. Jones, that you have proved to our minds that your husband and yourself are completely exonerated in this case from any blame whatever.

Mrs. Kate Jones.

Thank you.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,549. Was that for repairs which he had carried out?—Yes, on outbuildings and the land. Last half-year, again, we have improved the dwelling-house. I got the house re-roofed, and we paid a contractor 20*l.* for doing it, and now we say that the farmhouse is equal to any farmhouse in the neighbourhood. I simply say that I support Mrs. Jones as being a considerate landlady, and we do not exact anything, but meet the tenant in every way. That would apply also to Mr. Hughes, if he had only behaved himself properly. I say there was no unkindness in any way shown to the tenant. We make allowance in every way on account of the bad times.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Morgan called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

48,550. You are Mr. David Morgan, of Gilwern?—Yes.

48,551. Do you understand English?—No.

48,552. Do you understand it sufficiently to follow the reading of your statement?—Yes, I understand it enough to correct him.

[The following statement of the witness was read.]

See evidence of next witness.

David Morgan, of Gilwern, Llanfihangel y Creuddyn. I am a farmer, and have held Gilwern from Captain Vaughan for the last seven years. I have no written agreement. Last September I went to Mr. F. R. Roberts, Captain Vaughan's agent, and took from him Rhosrudd, a farm of about 300 acres, at 52*l.* a year, he allowing me to leave Gilwern if I could find a suitable tenant for it at once. I found one, and some time in September I asked Mr. Roberts if he would allow me to take my corn straight up to Rhosrudd, and so save stacking it at Gilwern. He said, 'Yes, by all means if the tenant will 'allow you." The old tenant did so, and I took nearly all my corn there, about 3½ miles away from Gilwern. When I took Rhosrudd, Mr. Roberts also told me that I must buy all the sheep. I did so at 13*s.* a head. After I had taken my corn there, and bought all the sheep, but before the 29th September, when I was to get possession, my son, 13 years old, and two other lads, coursed a rabbit from Gilwern land into the Trawscoed plantation and killed it, about a yard from the fence on the plantation side. Lord Lisburne's gamekeeper caught them, and they were prosecuted and fined. Captain Vaughan, my landlord, is an uncle of Lord Lisburne. I had arranged with Mr. Roberts to call at his office to sign the agreement for Rhosrudd on the Monday after the rabbit was killed. That morning I went to Lord Lisburne at Birchgrove, because James Morgan, his head keeper, had told me that he was not willing for me to have Rhosrudd. James Morgan came with me, and went in to tell him I was there, while I stood at the door. Almost directly after James Morgan went in I heard Lord Lisburne cursing and swearing, and damning me, saying he did not want to see the Gilwern devil about the place, and James Morgan came out and told me to go off. I went off by train to Aberystwith. I called at Mr. Roberts' office to sign the agreement, as arranged, but he told me that I should not have it on any terms, because my boy had been catching rabbits. I pointed out to him that I had already taken my corn there, and had bought the sheep. He told me that I would have to take the corn back at once, that he was bound to have the place free by the 29th. I asked Mr. Roberts if he would not carry it back for me, but he simply said I would have to take it back myself. The following morning I went again to Birchgrove to try and see Lord Lisburne. I met him on the New Bridge, and touched my hat. He took no notice and passed on, but after he had gone about 20 yards he called me back. I went to him, but he at once began cursing me: 'Damned thief, damned 'poacher, damn hell,' &c., &c. I begged him to let me speak a few words to him, but he simply swore all the more, giving me some hundreds of 'Damns.' He then went off towards Llanafan. After giving him about a quarter of an hour's lead I followed in the same direction, and saw him near the upper gates. He asked me where I was going to. I said nothing, and he asked me again. Again, I did not answer him, and he asked me a third time. I then told him I was on the public road, and could go where I liked.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Then he asked me if I was going to Mr. Gardiner, I said 'No.' He began cursing me again—'Bloody poacher,' &c. He said he had a summons for my son, and then cursed me again. I told him it was a shame for his lordship to use such language, and I begged him again to let me speak. He then cursed and swore again. I then said 'Don't you think, my lord, that I 'am a dog. I am a man, and you are only a 'man.' He then went on to Crosswood. In the end, I had to carry back all my corn, but fortunately I succeeded in inducing the new tenant of Rhosrudd to take the sheep off my hands at the same price, but no thanks are due to Captain Vaughan or Mr. Roberts for that. When I was taking Rhosrudd Mr. Roberts would not let Gilwern to the new tenant without additional rent. He maintained that it was worth from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a year more than when I took it seven years ago, but would allow me nothing on going out beyond the last years' lime and the last years' hay seed. He would give me nothing for my improvements, which had, according to his own statement, enhanced the value of the farm from 3*l.* to 4*l.* a year.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,553. What was the rent on the farm you were leaving?—16*l.* 10*s.*

48,554. What was the acreage?—About 30.

48,555. When you were obliged to leave the new farm without taking possession of it, had you done anything else to offend the landlord?—Never at any time. I had been under him ever since I had been born.

48,556. Had you a sort of reputation of being a poacher yourself?—I cannot say that I was, but no gamekeeper had ever caught me at any time poaching.

48,557. Is it the habit of this landlord to curse and swear at his tenants in that way?—Yes, very often.

48,558. Are you quite sure it is not a way of showing his affection for them?—No, I am not aware that he shows his affection in that way.

48,559. He was angry with you?—Yes, in a bad temper.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,560. Just one word about the rabbit. If your son had caught the rabbit on the farm, and not in the plantation, nothing could have been done?—No, nothing would have been done if it had been a yard outside.

48,561. How far inside the plantation was it?—A yard inside the plantation.

48,562. One yard inside the plantation?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,563. What is the custom between an incoming and an outgoing tenant with respect to the sheep. Are they always taken at a valuation?—Not with us. The tenant is free as regards that.

48,564. Is there any mountain land. Is there a sheep walk attached to Gilwern?—Yes, to keep a few.

48,565. A sheep walk?—Yes, a little bit of a bank for sheep.

48,566. Why did the landlord want to make it a condition that you were to sell the sheep at a valuation?—I did not make any condition as I took that farm at all.

48,567. But when you took Rhosrudd?—Yes, I was to sign the Monday previous before killing the rabbit, but owing to matters Mr. Roberts and myself were very busy that Monday, and it had to be postponed till the following Monday, when I was asked to sign the agreement.

48,568. Who has the sheep now at Rhosrudd?—The owner, the old tenant.

48,569. Is it customary to value the sheep higher than market price?—In some places, but not there.

48,570. But is it always customary for the outgoing tenant to value the sheep to the incoming tenant; is it not sometimes settled by arbitration?—He can make a bargain as to them or put them on sale.

48,571. Does the system work satisfactorily?—I am unable to say.

48,572. Is there a large sheep walk attached to Rhosrudd?—Yes, for 200 or 300 sheep there.

48,573. I suppose you are fully aware that the sheep which are on the place are of more value to you than if you bought a fresh flock, because they are already settled upon the mountain?—People generally give more for them rather than let them go to a sale by auction.

48,574. How much per head?—13*s.*

48,575. But how much per head over the market price?—Well, a shilling or two a head.

48,576. You consider that you were hardly dealt with by your landlord, owing to what one would consider the trivial offence of your lad of 13 years of age killing a rabbit, simply because it was one yard within the plantation?—Yes, I consider that I was dealt with very hardly indeed, after taking my corn up there, and having to take it back again, seven miles altogether, coming and going.

48,577. And you did not give offence in any other way?—Never at any other time.

48,578. What had Lord Lisburne got to do with his nephew's farm?—As far as I am aware Lord Lisburne had nothing to do with the farm, except as much as he had something to do with the game.

48,579. Did Lord Lisburne have the shooting over all his farms?—Yes.

48,580. Had either you or your lads ever been caught poaching before?—No, never at any time caught.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Frederick Richard Roberts called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of preceding witness.

48,581. You are a solicitor, of Aberystwyth?—Yes.

48,582. You are agent for Captain Vaughan?—Yes, Captain Vaughan is a cousin of Lord Lisburne. This farm of Rhosrudd is part of Captain Vaughan's property, and on it are situated some fish pools that afford very good fishing. The dwelling-house of Rhosrudd Farm is on the bank of one of these lakes. Lord Lisburne rents the shooting and fishing from his cousin over this part of the property. In the course of last year the tenant of Rhosrudd, who, with his mother, had been there for very many years, was unable to carry on the farm, owing, partly, I believe, to sickness. He asked Captain Vaughan if he would take the farm off his hands, and when it became known that the farm was to let, the last witness, David Morgan, called upon me and asked me if he could have the farm. Eventually it was arranged that he should have it. He was then the tenant of Gilwern, also a farm on Captain Vaughan's estate. The tenant of Rhosrudd was not under notice to quit, but I took the farm from him then at his request, and he asked me as a favour if I would induce the new tenant to take the sheep from him. There was no agreement that any new tenant was obliged to take the sheep, but he asked me if I would make it a condition that the new tenant should do so, to help him, because he thought he would get a better price at a valuation than he would if he sold them off then, as sheep were very low at the time. I agreed to do so, and I told David Morgan that he could have Rhosrudd, that I would take Gilwern off his hands as he had been a good farmer, he had been farming Gilwern well, and being on the estate I was anxious that he should go to Rhosrudd, which was a larger farm, and which was also considered a cheaper farm than Gilwern, because it had a good bank, a good run for sheep. Arrangements were made for David Morgan to go to Rhosrudd, but I think the arrangement took place in about July, I am not quite sure, I think it was about June or July. I deny that he was to call upon me on the Monday, as he stated, to sign the agreement. I told him that he would have to sign the agreement before he entered in September. What he stated about carting his corn there is perfectly correct; he carted his corn there, and I allowed him to do so, and the old tenant did. Soon after that his son, a lad, I believe, of 13, in company with several others, I am not sure how many, were caught by Lord Lisburne's keeper, as to the exact offence I am not sure—he describes it as killing a rabbit—but at any rate they had gate nets in their possession. I believe also a long net, but at any rate they had gate nets. When Lord Lisburne came to hear of it he was naturally very unwilling that they should go on living on the banks of this fish pool, so he asked his cousin, Captain Vaughan, not to allow David Morgan to have the farm. Captain Vaughan said he would consent to what Lord Lisburne asked. I then informed David Morgan about it. I said, "I am very sorry it has happened, but "know it will be very unpleasant for you to go "and live on the banks of this pool after what "has happened." I said, "You are very lucky "that you are not sent away from Gilwern, but "I will see that that does not happen," and he was not sent away.

48,583. Did you tell him that he would have to cart his corn back again?—I did. There is another matter I did not mention. He said he had had no allowance for what he had done at Gilwern. He asked for Rhosrudd, and of course it was not likely that I was going to give him any allowance for Gilwern when he was anxious to leave of his own accord. I had no tenant in view at the time.

48,584. I suppose you know nothing as to the language that Lord Lisburne used to him?—No, except what I have been told by David Morgan.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,585. He still remains a tenant on the old farm?—He does.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,586. Were the lads caught inside the plantation with the nets, or outside?—I think they were inside. I do not know how far. I think he has correctly stated it. I think he is correct in what he stated.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. James Jones called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,587. You are Mr. James Jones, of Tyllwyd, Llanfarian?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

I am a farmer, and was brought up at Tancastell farm, which then belonged to Colonel Powell, of Nanteos. The dwelling-house and outbuildings at Tancastell are now rather better than any farm buildings in the neighbourhood.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

They were all built while my mother and I were tenants. We did all the carriage, carting the stones a distance of about a mile, and some of the timber about 15 miles. In addition to this, we cleared away from the hillside some thousands of cartloads of earth and levelled up the road, farm-yard, and rick-yard, and fenced in the garden and rick-yard. Some thousands of perches of drains were also made while we were there. We filled in all the drains with stones and closed them in at our own expense. We also made and fenced in with banks and quickset hedges a new road from the Llanychaiarn road about 150 yards long, and wide enough for carts to pass each other. Adjoining the river there was a meadow, on which we kept 10 cows and a bull. About 45 years ago the river, which was then strongly impregnated with lead from the mines, overflowed this meadow and left a mineral deposit which made it not only useless, but dangerous for the horses, and we could only keep three or four cows on it, and the butter of those cows would be quite unsaleable. The meadow was left in this state for many years. About 1862 or 1863 I went to Nanteos and asked the agent for timber to make piles for an embankment to keep the river out. He refused it, and I set about making a stone embankment myself. I opened a quarry on the land and made an embankment. Besides that I paid 84*l.* for lime for this meadow alone. After all my outlay I had one green crop and two white crops out of this meadow before I had to leave, after bringing it once more into excellent condition for grass. For all our outlay at Tancastell, which would amount at least to 1,500*l.*, we never received a single penny. The farm when I left it was at least in as good a condition as any in the county. A little before the General Election of 1868 I and about 17 or 18 other tenants were called up to Nanteos. When we got there Colonel Powell asked each one of us separately to vote for Mr. Vaughan, the Tory candidate. They all promised to do so except myself. When he asked me I said that I could not. At the election in November 1868 I voted for Mr. E. M. Richards, the Liberal candidate. The following March I received a notice to quit in the following September. The only reason for this notice was my voting at the election. Three or four other tenants on the Nanteos estate who voted the same way also had notices to quit. I left in September 1869. A valuation of the hay and straw was made by an umpire appointed by two arbitrators, and amounted to nearly 700*l.*, but I had to sue for it before I got paid. I was out of a farm for 12 months. In September 1870 I took Piercefield from Colonel Powell. Soon after I went in, the river broke through the embankment at the bottom. I saw the agent, and he promised me 10*l.* towards repairing the gap. I did it at a much greater expense, and it is now standing. When I asked for the 10*l.* the agent refused to give it because it was not on his book. The river damaged the embankment higher up. I also made this good at a very large expense. The 20 acres I thus saved, and afterwards improved, made the farm worth at least 1,000*l.* more to sell than when I went into it. When I took the farm in 1870 I said to the agent: "There will be another election and we must "have a clear understanding.' He said, "Damn "the elections; you take the farm." I took and held it for eight years, but during that time I had three notices to quit. During the time of the election campaign of 1874 I was at Aberystwyth one day, and my servant was also there, with horses and cart carting manure. I left the servant to take the horses and cart home and went myself to the Talbot Hotel. As he was going along the street towards home he met a procession coming along with Mr. T. E. Lloyd, the Conservative candidate. Some one carried to Colonel Powell a ridiculous story that my servant man had drawn the horses and cart across the street to hinder Mr. Lloyd's procession. One might have thought that the story was too absurd for any sensible man to believe it, but I received a notice to quit, and Major Phelps told me himself that the reason for the notice was the story which Colonel Powell had been told. However, when September came no new tenant had come forward to take the farm, and I was allowed to stay on. But I soon got two more notices to quit, and ultimately left, after being there eight years only, and after having effected great improvements and spent a great deal of labour and money, without receiving a single penny of compensation.

48,588. What was the date of your leaving the second farm?—About 15 years ago.

48,589. Who was Major Phelps?—Major Phelps was cousin to Colonel Powell.

48,590. Was he agent to him, or anything?—Yes, he was agent.

48,591. How was it you took a farm on the same estate after what took place in 1869?—Well, I was at Ffair Rhos, and Major Phelps came to me and said that I looked very bad, that he had no farm to offer me then, but that I should have the first farm that came free; the farm that he had now was not good enough for me. In about a week or nine days he sent Davy Edwards down to me and asked me to take Piercefield. I asked him the rent, and I saw the rent was very moderate, lower than I expected, and I went up to Nanteos. That is how it was.

48,592. But you say you had to sue for your compensation in 1869, and also you say you were turned out because you had voted. I wonder you went back to the same estate. It was only because you thought the rent was moderate?—Yes, but the Powells were very kind, and they are kind still, but Colonel Powell did not take enough interest in the estate. He left it to the hands of his agent, and I went on the understanding that I was not to go away afterwards, but I should have it any way I liked.

48,593. Who is your landlord now?—Now, it is Mr. Pugh Pugh.

48,594. Have you sent in any claim for compensation on this last farm of Piercefield?—No, the reason I left last time was this: Mr. Powell had died. I had had three notices to quit before, and I said I could not stop in a place with notices all the while. This farm had been empty for some years, and I took this farm for the only reason that I should not be disturbed all the while. If Colonel Powell had looked after the estate himself there would have been no disturbance at all. When my father took the farm first it was considered as a lease on the Nanteos estate, and it was so till Major Phelps came there. As soon as he came there, constantly someone was under notice to quit.

48,595. I do not quite see why you sent in no claim for compensation, if you say you made great improvements?—Well, I could not get any compensation. There is Mr. Powell here; I daresay he will bear me out. He is here now, and Mr. Vaughan Davies, he has the farm now, and he has the benefit of all my improvements.

Mr. Vaughan Davies.—I had to pay for them.

Witness.

No doubt.

Lord Kenyon.

48,596. You did not think you would get anything, so you did not apply for it?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,597. You say Major Phelps sent to you that such and such a farm was vacant. Perhaps he had repented of the action taken in 1869 in turning you out of your farm?—Yes, and he gave me a first-class character afterwards, and recommended me to another landlord, and we were always goods friends.

48,598. Still possibly you would not have taken the farm unless you were pretty hard up for a farm?—Well, that is quite true. We did not like to leave the neighbourhood. He offered me this farm of Piercefield cheaper than the old tenant was offering for it; that is Mr. Ellis, the auctioneer, here. He offered it me cheaper as an inducement for me to take the farm.

48,599. Of course, that would rather accentuate what I was saying, that probably he had repented. You did not send in a claim because you could not enforce a claim?—No, he refused 10*l.* They always kept abook at Nanteos, and the clerk was supposed to put down what they promised. They promised me this 10*l.* When I went up and asked him, he said "It is not on "the book, James, and I cannot pay you. I do "not deny your word, but I cannot pay," and I did not get a penny.

48,600. Do you think that somebody had carried a tale to Major Phelps that you had turned your horses across the road to stop the procession?—Yes, Major Phelps told me so himself. Somebody must have told Major Phelps, because we were carting manure that day, and I sent the servant home with the cart. The landlord of the Talbot told me that he knew the member was coming to town, and asked me to go out and see him. Somebody must have told Colonel Powell, because the boy and cart met the member on the road.

48,601. What is the condition of things at the present day. Do you find that landlords are too ready to believe stories that are carried by talebearers?—Well, I believe that landlords do not take enough interest themselves. They leave it too much to their agents. I always find landlords as a rule very kind, but we have a third party and that third party has his own interests to look after, besides our interests.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

48,602. And you think this condition of things will last unless the landlords will take a greater personal interest in their properties?—Yes, I should be very glad to see a law passed that the landlords are not to be put in such a wrong position as they are.

48,603. What do you say?—I should like to see a law passed to alter the position landlords are in. How can I explain it? I do not believe that landlords as a rule are hard-hearted. They are very kind-hearted, but they do not mix so much as they ought to do with the tenants.

48,604. You think that they have really not realised the condition of the tenants at the present time?—No, I do not believe they do; or else they would never charge the rent they do.

48,605. You think that if they really realised that the tenants were so badly off, they would recognise the thing by giving greater abatements or making permanent reductions?—There is no doubt of it. They do not mix half enough even at the fairs or anything. As a rule very few can speak Welsh.

48,606. Do you find a difficulty in approaching them?—Not myself. I can approach anybody, as far as that is concerned.

48,607. But, perhaps, you are braver than the generality of tenant farmers?—Well, the landlords are very kind, if you go to them—very kind.

48,608. But does there exist a sort of fear among the tenant farmers to approach their landlords?—Well, I believe there is; some of them may not be afraid.

48,609. But do you think they would be freer to approach, if they were put in a more independent position?—Yes.

48,610. That is, if they were not so liable to be disturbed in their tenancies?—Yes. My firm belief is this, that we ought to have a land court for the sitting tenant. I am quite willing, when the farm comes free, for the landlord to make the best terms he can, but for the sitting tenant there ought to be a land court, because we are losing money. It is no use quibbling about it: we are losing money every year the last three or four years.

48,611. What jurisdiction would you give to that court?—Well, I cannot go into that.

48,612. Supposing a question of rent cropped up with the sitting tenant, would you permit the land court to settle the question of rent, as well as any other dispute that might arise between the landlord and tenant?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,613. If your case was a typical case, I suppose you would bring it forward to show on what petty grounds notices to quit are sometimes given?—Yes, they were then, at the time Major Phelps was at Nanteos.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

48,614. How long ago are you speaking of?—I am speaking now of 25 or 30 years ago. It was some time before 1868. Major Phelps, I believe, came there five or six years before that. He came there a partially poor man, and went away, when he died, a very rich man.

48,615. Do you think that that is going on now. Do you think that on a trivial ground, or a frivolous story, or on the ground of mere temper, notices to quit are given in this district?—No, I cannot say that. I do not hear of any.

48,616. And even going back to those early times, is it or not the fact in this district, as we have heard in many other districts, that a very large proportion of the tenants have remained on their farms for generations?—Yes.

48,617. That is so?—Well, very few in my neighbourhood of the old families are on the estate.

48,618. To what do you refer that?—I refer it to the same time all the while—when Major Phelps came to Nanteos to manage the estate in that neighbourhood.

48,619. Are you speaking of one estate only, or generally of the whole?—I am more acquainted with Nanteos, because I was brought up there. Nanteos comprises most of the property about that neighbourhood.

48,620. Then there have been sales of land, have there?—Yes.

48,621. And on those sales, rents have been raised and tenants have been removed?—Yes; the rents have been raised for the sake of the sale.

48,622. Then you think that in this district the old plan of allowing the families to remain on the land generation after generation has not been so thoroughly carried out as it has in some others?—Well, it was, as I say, 25 or 30 years ago; tenants were there for generations before that, but now I do not see but very few of the old families on the estate.

48,623. Was it the election of 1868 that made most of the mischief?—Well, that disturbed the whole country; but it was a regular rule then, and the rents were all raised upon the whole of the estates, Gogerddan, Crosswood, and Nanteos, and all; they went up 20 per cent.

48,624. When the estates have been sold, have the tenant farmers bought?—Yes, a great many of them.

48,625. You have a good many freeholders, therefore?—Yes.

48,626. And had they generally to mortgage their purchases in order to pay for them?—No doubt.

48,627. What is your opinion; are they better or worse off than if they had remained under good landlords?—I believe that they are worse off in the money question, but they have got fixity of tenure; there is that confidence.

48,628. If times had not been bad, it would have been very much to their advantage?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

48,629. But times having been bad, they have had to feel the full force of the depression?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,630. How many estates have you been farming upon?—I have only been on Nanteos and Mr. Pugh's estate now. I was brought up on Mr. Willis's, of Cwmllyfni.

48,631. When did you understand with regard to the Liberal candidate coming to town, or was it the Tory candidate?—It was the Tory candidate. That was in 1874. That was the second place I was in—that was when I was at the second place.

48,632. Your landlord then was on the Liberal side?—No. In 1874 he was a Conservative. It was then we had the ballot. We voted under the ballot then, and the Conservative candidate got in by a large majority.

48,633. How do you account for the old tenants having disappeared so much. You say they are not the same families now?—Well, the rents have gone up. When Major Phelps came to the estate he rose the rents all along. Every farm I believe on the estate was risen.

48,634. Do you know anything about the customs that we have heard of in some parts of South Wales, of giving presents to the agents, what they call "cildwrn"?—I never gave anybody anything.

48,635. But have you heard anything of it?—Oh yes; I have heard of it many times.

48,636. Is it a matter of notoriety, a matter of common talk, that such a thing does take place, or is supposed to take place, sometimes in these parts?—It was on one estate, that estate I was on.

48,637. Lately?—Yes.

48,638. Within a few years?—Well, within 10 or 12 years ago.

48,639. But it is not generally supposed to take place?—Well, those are things that you cannot find out, as they say.

48,640. But I thought you were rather hard on the agents?—No, I am not hard upon anybody. The agent has more than one master to serve. He has himself and the tenants and the landlord, and the man that would bring most corn to the mill is the best man, no doubt.

48,641. You say that the landlords are very nice and very kind-hearted, and all that, but how do you know what instructions the agents have got. Do not you think that the agents have got to carry out the disagreeable instructions they may have from their masters?—Very likely. Well, I can tell you one instance of that. When Nanteos was raising the rent about 10 or 20 per cent., my mother was an old tenant on the place. She went up to see Colonel Powell. Colonel Powell had told her dozens of times that she should never be disturbed. Then she went up upon that, and Major Phelps stopped her from seeing Colonel Powell upon the question of raising the rents.

48,642. Then you thought the agent was more hard-hearted than the landlord?—Yes, a great deal more. I am certain of it.

48,643. Are you quite sure that he had not had orders to stop troublesome visitors, troublesome tenants, from seeing the Colonel?—Well, my mother was not troublesome. He had been very kind to her before.

48,644. I only want to find out what you think, whether you do not put a little too much on the agents. Then you touched on the question of language. What language do most of the tenants about here talk?—Welsh.

48,645. Do the landlords and their agents generally understand the language?—The first agent I remember at Nanteos was Mr. John Hughes; he was a Welshman, and Mr. Pugh was a Welshman, but when Major Phelps came, he was an Englishman. Colonel Powell was an Englishman.

48,646. Colonel Powell belonged to an old Welsh family?—Yes, but that does not make him Welsh speaking.

48,647. He could not speak Welsh then?—No.

48,648. Then how did the monoglot Welsh farmers get at him?—Well, they had a man, Davy Edwards, at Nanteos, and he used to translate.

48,649. Who was he. Was he an official on the estate?—Yes, he was a woodman there, and he had to carry messages under Major Phelps. If you asked me now I could tell you this. I was at the office and there was a man there who could not speak English. They were both there at the same time. He was asking Major Phelps, and Davy Edwards put another question altogether to Major Phelps.

48,650. I am not the least surprised. We have had experience of misunderstandings on this Commission?—I had a good mind to tell Major Phelps, but I thought it better for me to keep silent, but he did not say a word that this man said, and he did not say a word that Major Phelps said, but only what he thought himself

48,651. So he was a sort of superior agent, constituted by himself?—He was at that time.

48,652. That is what would happen with other people who do not understand Welsh and English?—Yes. That is the only time I heard it.

48,653. Do you think that is to the advantage of the tenant farmer or the landlord?—No. It is to the disadvantage of both of them, because the tenant cannot tell his own grievance, and the landlord does not know it.

48,654. The moral of that is clear, is it not, that there should be somebody in the management of the estate who understands the language of the tenants?—Yes, I would advise all the landlords to send their children, or some of them, to learn Welsh, as long as they live in Wales.

I hope you may be able to induce them to do so.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,655. As a rule, are the agents in the neighbourhood here practical men, men who are acquainted with the value of land?—Yes, I believe they are.

48,656. They are something more than rent collectors?—Oh yes, some of them are no doubt. There was Colonel Williams, he has always been a farmer and a landlord, of Gogerddan; he is a practical farmer.

48,657. So you have no complaint to make on that score?—No, I myself have no complaint to make. I always go to the landlord or the agent for myself. I have no complaints to make at all, but I believe it is the case.

Lord Kenyon.

48,658. I did not quite understand what you wanted, according to your answer to Mr. Richard Jones. You said you wanted a law to compel landlords to—I do not know quite what—to abolish their agents; is that what you mean?—Not to put the landlords in such a position that they could disturb the tenants. I believe it would be an advantage to the landlords if they could not disturb the tenants.

48,659. But I thought you meant that they were to mix more with the tenants?—Yes.

48,660. How are you going to do that by Act of Parliament?—You cannot do that, and of course there are many other things you cannot do by Act of Parliament.

48,661. I quite agree with you that the more landlords mix with their tenants the better?—Yes, and I am sorry they do not mix with them more than they do.

48,662. I have no doubt agents have to do some dirty work for the landlords, and I daresay the agent often gets the blame when he does not altogether deserve it?—No doubt.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,663. I suppose it is possible to have an Act of Parliament to prevent tenants being capriciously disturbed?—Well, I should think they could. I do not know.

Lord Kenyon.

48,664. Some questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "On what estate do you say the "practice of 'cildwrn' prevailed 10 years ago"?—I cannot say that. I cannot make that out, but I have heard of it.

48,665. "Who was or is the agent?"—Oh, I believe he is dead. He has gone to his rest now probably.

48,666. "Do you know that this is a very serious allegation?"—Yes undoubtedly.

48,667. You are not prepared to substantiate it?—No, only I heard it.

Professor Rhŷs.

48,668. What I asked was whether there was a rumour about it—whether there was a suspicion of that kind?—Yes, and I said I heard it. That is all.

48,668A. We have heard of it in other places.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry Tobit Evans re-called and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 45,578–45,640; 46,599A–46,621; & 70,919–70,990; 73,839–73,897.

48,669. Do you wish to make a further statement?—I do not think it will be necessary for me to say anything myself to-day.

48,670. I wish to ask you whether you have any further information to give us in relation to the evidence produced the other day?—Not with reference to that case. I have another case on Lord Carrington's estate.

48,671. You have not been able to prove to us whether that receipt was the actual disbursement made by that miller or not—whether that 200*l.* which was alleged to be disbursed by Morgan was the actual sum disbursed?—No, my lord, I have nothing except his word on that point.

48,672. You will remember I asked you about that?—Yes.

48,673. Have you tried to get it?—No, I have really had no time to look into that case any further.

48,674. Well, sir, I think that is rather a curious way to treat us?—I have seen the old man, and he told me that was the sum, and I took his word.

48,675. Do you mean to say you have not tried to find out whether there are any representatives of Mr. Jacob to be found or not?—They live in this neighbourhood.

48,676. You came and brought a very serious charge against the Chairman of this Commission, and you have not tried to substantiate the case at all?—I say the case can be substantiated according to my opinion.

48,677. Why did you not try to do so?—The representatives of Jacob live in this neighbourhood, 30 miles away from where I live.

48,678. I know, but you brought the case before us?—I brought the old man and his evidence, and he still states that that was the sum he paid to Jacob.

48,679. You have no further evidence to support that statement?—I have no further evidence.

48,680. Although we asked you to bring it two or three days ago?—I am not aware that I was asked to do that.

48,681. What is the other case?—I believe the other witness can speak for himself.

48,682. I would much rather he did?—But whether he can read the statement or not I do not know. Will you ask some official to read it it out?

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,683. How far does this witness live from you?—The witness is John Evans, Llanfair, and from where I live it is about 15 miles I believe.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

48,684. Why did you go so far afield to search for a case in order to bring before the Commission?—I spend most of my time at Lampeter, within four miles of where he is.

48,685. You told me the other day that you never heard of the other case until a month ago?—No.

48,686. And you say it created a great scandal in the neigbourhood?—So I was told.

48,687. If you spend so much of your time in Lampeter, it seems to me passing strange that you never heard of this case before a month ago?—It may appear so to you, but it occurred 25 years ago, and I was not even in Lampeter at that time.

48,688. I should have thought that the very fact that an inquiry of this sort was coming into the county would be discussed very much among the farmers, and a case of that kind which created a scandal in the neighbourhood probably would have reached your ears?—Not 25 years ago.

48,689. Where were you 25 years ago?—Twenty-five years ago I was in Shropshire, I believe. I lived at Oswestry 25 years ago. I believe Mr. Jones lived nearer to the neighbourhood then than I did.

Lord Kenyon.

48,690. I have before me now the shorthand note of the questions and answers which you gave the day before yesterday at Tregaron. This is it: "(Question 46,619.) Is this man Jacob "alive?—(A.) I believe not, I think he is dead. "(Q.) Could you get anyone to show that that "was the actual sum disbursed by the old man, "but Mr. Jacob?—(A.) I believe that can be "proved. I believe so, from what the old man "told me. (Q.) Lord Carrington has sent "a letter to the papers, and I think it is "due to him to find that out?—(A.) Yes, "certainly." Now, you do not seem to have taken any steps to do so?—I have nothing to add. I quite believe it.

48,691. This is a question by Mr. Vincento "Was it not your view that the Commission "also could, if it chose, have called the "witnesses who could substantiate or upset the "story about the mill"?—I believe I could.

48,692. I do not think you quite gather the point of it, it is that the Commission could call the witnesses. Did you think it was our business to call the witnesses?—No, I did not think so.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

I thought it was Lord Carrington's business to make the inquiry. I thought the duty of the claimant was to make a statement before the Commission, and if Lord Carrington wishes to inquire into it, I think it is his duty to do so.

48,693. "Have you had work of your own "to engage your attention since the Lampeter "sitting?"—Yes, certainly.

48,694. "Have you inquired of the old man's "wife as well as of himself?"—Yes.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,695. I may say, Mr. Evans, that Lord Carrington telegraphed to the Secretary of the Commission to say that if the story with regard to the mill proved to be true he would give compensation at once?—I saw the statement, and I was very glad to see it.

48,696. We received the telegram on the evening of the day upon which the evidence was given. It will be now left for Lord Carrington to see whether he considers the story true or not?—Quite so.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 73,839.

Mr. John Evans called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,697. What is your name?—John Evans, of Llanfair Bridge, near Lampeter.

48,698. May I ask why you did not give evidence at Lampeter?—I did not give notice in time. I told the Secretary. I mentioned it to the Secretary.

The Assistant Secretary.

I received notice from Mr. Henry Tobit Evans that the witness wished to give evidence here to-day. Mr. Henry Tobit Evans also said he would forward a statement of the evidence to be received last night, but it has not come to hand.

Lord Kenyon.

48,698A. Now will you proceed.

[The following statement of the witness was read.]

See 70,952–70,987.

'make it a good, tidy, substantial building, 'and when the landlord will see that you have 'done a tidy building, and when I shall explain 'it to him, I am quite certain he will pay you 'every penny it will cost you'; and upon the consent and promise of the landlord and the inducement of the country agent I made the building. When I finished the dwelling-house and shop and outbuildings in 1863, the whole expense amounted to 495*l.* On the next rent audit after I finished the building, I explained, and gave an account of the whole to the London agent that came down to receive the rent, and he handed me 40*l.*, saying 'this is the amount we promised, 'and as for the remainder of your expenditure, 'all we can say is that we hope you and your 'successors will have the benefit and comfort of 'it.' Between that and 1868 my landlord died, and the son came to the property. In 1868 the son sold the estate. I made an application to have my holding on sale by private contract before the sale, but I was refused, saying that the intention was to sell the estate in one lot. I stated also what I had done, and he said that my case would be taken into consideration. The estates were sold by auction in one lot, and when the London agent came down to receive the last rents he said 'the case has been 'under consideration, and we admit that your 'case is a very hard one, and also we feel that 'we are not bound to give you anything, but it 'is decided that you are to have this cheque of '50*l.*' I took the cheque, and said I hoped they would see their way clear to pay me the remainder, 405*l.*, after reconsideration, and I have not received any yet, but I hope now, when the days of doing justice have arrived (I don't mean justice by law but justice between man and man, as it appears the aim of the present Commission is), I shall be refunded the amount I laid out on my landlord's property. And I wish further to add that the building I made is situated on the roadside in the very centre of the estate, and everyone that came to look at the estate, before the sale, with the intention of purchasing, admired the new buildings I then had just finished, and I have not the least doubt but that this building alone has contributed greatly to the increase of the amount realised at the sale. In equity, I consider that I am

entitled to be compensated in respect of the amount expended by me, and the balance is 405*l.*

48,699. Are you still in the occupation of that holding?—Yes.

48,700. Have you had your rent raised?—No.

48,701. Were you not quite content to build under those circumstances?—Yes, I was.

48,702. All I can see that has happened to you is that you have changed your landlord. You have not changed your circumstances?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,703. May we ask what was the rent?—15*l.*

48,704. You have had the occupation of it for 33 years at 15*l.* a year, when the 5 per cent. interest on the cost would be very nearly 25*l.*?—For 33 years, but not altogether under Lord Carrington. The property was sold in 1868. Mr. William Jones, of Glandenys, bought it then.

48,705. We quite understand that under the existing law there was no legal right to compensation on a sale such as you have described?—No, no legal right.

48,706. And, therefore, there might have been under the existing law a grievance?—It is a grievance.

48,707. But I want to ask you this question. If you had been told in 1863, when you built that house, that you would have 33 years enjoyment of it at 15*l.* a year, would you not have been content?—It was to be for me and my successors in the estate.

48,708. I have one question more. Do you think you were entitled to the whole cost of that building when it was made simply for your own advantage, and not with the consent or to the advantage of the landlord?—Yes, but I spent the amount with the intention of having a place of business.

48,709. Which you have had for 33 years?—And with the thought of being there for my lifetime, and my successors, but about four years after it was sold and went into other hands.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

48,710. We quite understand that there might have been at that time a great grievance but as it turned out, it seems to me that 33 years' possession at the old rent makes it not a very hard case in reality, and that a claim for the full amount of the 495*l.* is in any case an impossible claim?—That depended solely upon Mr. Jones, of Glandenys, upon his kindness. If he had wished he could have advanced. It says upon the particulars of the sale, "The estimated annual "value of this lot is 24*l.* per annum."

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,711. When did it occur to you to present your case before the Commission?—When I heard of it.

48,712. When you heard of the Commission?—When I heard that the Commission was coming.

48,713. Coming into the county?—Yes.

48,714. What is the reason you did not appear at Lampeter?—I did appear there, but I was not aware that the notice was required to be in seven days before the meeting. I gave my name then to the Secretary.

Mr. Seebohm.

I do not want you to be under the impression that we think there was no chance of a grievance. Your case is a very good case to show the necessity for an alteration in the law so as to protect tenants' improvements.

Witness.

Would the Commissioners like to see the particulars of sale?

Lord Kenyon.

No, I think not. We quite understand you erected a very good house, which you have enjoyed for 33 years, and you have changed your landlord.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 70,970.

Mr. David Jones called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See 46,417–46,523 and 73,330–73,542.

48,715. Will you read your statement?—My Lord and Gentlemen,—I, David Jones, of Old Bank, Lampeter, agent to Mr. William Jones, of Glandenys, beg to give my emphatic denial to the accuracy of the evidence of Daniel Jenkins, part owner and occupier of Pentrefelin, Talsarn, farmer, and schoolmaster of Llanfairclydogau School Board, and lodger on the estate, at the hearing of the Land Commission of Lampeter on Wednesday, the 25th of April 1894.

Lord Kenyon.

Is Mr. Daniel Jenkins here?

Mr. Daniel Jenkins.—Yes, my lord.

Lord Kenyon.

48,716. Now, will you proceed?—The following are the syllabus of the accusations in his evidence that I have been able to get from newspaper reports, &c.:—1. Harsh conditions of tenancy. 2. High rents. 3. Occasional abatements given to a few favourites. 4. Land taken away without compensation. 5. Preference given to strangers who are Conservative Churchmen to old Nonconformist tenants. 6. Bad buildings on the estate. 7. No allowance made for haulage; inconvenience of tenants during erection of houses, with a reward of notice to quit. 8. Landlord unapproachable and relations with tenants strained. 9. Game and rabbits; the keeper refuses to kill. 10. Tenants in a state of servility, and spies at political meetings. 11. Landlord interfering with chapel improvements; sanitary accommodation not completed. 12. Land sold at 140*l.* per acre to Llanfair School Board, and no allowance to tenant. 13. That tenants are under the impression that it is to their advantage (a) to put up at a particular hotel on market and fair days; (b) to buy their coal, lime, &c., with a certain merchant; (c) to grind their corn at a certain mill; (d) all the better if they attended a certain place of worship; (e) to vote for a certain candidate in the different elections; (f) to deposit at a certain bank. To all these I give my denial, and tender you this statement of facts in support of it:—1. The agreements referred to at the hearing were forwarded by me on the 8th September 1892 in duplicate to some of the tenants on the Llanfair estate for signature, accompanied by a letter of which the following is a copy:

"Dear Sir, Sept. 1892.

"I enclose you an agreement in duplicate, which I shall thank you to fill up, sign, and return to me tomorrow—together with 1*s.* for stamps.

"Yours truly,

"D. JONES."

They were not returned, and nothing further has been done to this day to induce them to sign; consequently nearly all the tenants on the Llanfair estate are absolutely free, and without a single penalising clause binding them in any way whatever. The clause in the agreement restricting all corn to be ground at the Llanfair Mill means all corn used by the tenant in meal for his home consumption to be ground there. Three only of the tenants voluntarily signed the agreement. No clause of any kind has been enforced since the acquiring of the property. No tenant need sign the agreement in question if he considers it against his interest to do so. The tenants are all fairly well off, and many of them possess property of their own. The landlord has the greatest confidence in his tenants, and no disputes of any kind have ever arisen between them, nor any distraints levied for rent.

48,717. You do not deny that there is that clause in the agreement about the mill?—There is no agreement at all with the miller.

48,718. You do not deny that that clause is in the agreement?—Oh, yes, it is in the agreement if it was signed, certainly.

48,719. Do you think it was a wise clause to put in an agreement?—Probably not.

2. The rents on the estate are considerably below the valuation set on them by the late Mr. D. T. Davies, Troedybryn, when valuing the parish of Llanfairclydogau for the Lampeter Union in 1868. No valuation of any kind has been instituted by the landlord since he bought the property. The estate comprises 2,176 acres, of which 1,388 acres are arable and meadow lands, and 797 acres of mountain land, averaging 14*s.* per acre on the former, and 2*s.* 6*d.* per acre for the latter, as per present receipts, exclusive of tithes, rates, &c., but including property tax. Permanent reductions, I may say, have been made by Mr. Jones on some farms outside of this estate, viz.: Gorwydd Silian, from 50*l.* a year to 42*l.*; Penddol (adjoining to estate), 115*l.*, to 92*l.*; Nanthenfod ystrad, 234*l.* to 190*l.*; Cluttau, 90*l.* to 85*l.*; Penlan newydd Llanbadarn, 20*l.* to 17*l.* 10*s.* The rents on this estate remain the same as agreed upon by landlord and tenant after the redistribution of fields after the sale.

3. Abatements to the amount of 496*l.* 3*s.* 11*d.* have been given to the most necessitous tenants in September and March 1888, and from September 1892 to September 1893, varying from 5 to 20 per cent. No favoritism has been shown in the least in the distribution, merely relieving those that wanted help. The favourites, as they are termed, have been on one or more occasions left without any abatement, while their Non-conformist brethren were receiving it. I can truly state that Mr. Jones has done much more in the way of building, repairs to buildings, and paying for cutting drains, to his Nonconformist tenants than he has done to his Church tenants. There are no religious tests in vogue on this estate.

4. No land has been taken away from a tenant without having received ample compensation for it. The only instances of land being taken are as follows:—Llanfairfawr farm Waen saethwir, for plantation in 29th September 1872, of 17a. 3r. 4p., for which he received reduction in rent of 6*l.* 4*s.*; part of a field for school board in March 1877, and Ddol and Caenewydd in September 1879, measuring 17a. 3r. 5p., for which the tenant received a deduction of 20*l.*; rent, previous to land being taken away, 160*l.* 15*s.*; allowances for land taken away, 26*l.* 4*s.*; the present rent, 134*l.* 11*s.* Froneithin Nantymedd, taken on the 25th March 1871 for planting, 4a. 3r. 13p.; allowance a year, 2*l.* 5*s.*; previous rent, 145*l.*; allowance, 2*l.* 5*s.*; present rent, 142*l.* 15*s.* I have got the rentals to prove this if they should be required.

5. Preference has not been given as stated. The following are the only instances where people outside the parish were selected. Waunwen farm, David Jones (Churchman), rent 131*l.* 10*s.*; Clwtpatrwn, Daniel Jones (Churchman), rent 58*l.* 5*s.*; Tafarndy, J. Parry Thomas, Inspector (Independent), rent 36*l.* 10*s.*; Nantymedd, D. S. Davies (Methodist), rent 142*l.* 15*s.* Also two farms adjoining the estate, and bought long after the estate, were let—Penddol to Jno. Davies (Independent), rent 92*l.*; Rhydyrhenfon farm and allotment, to Thomas Morgan (Methodist), rent 25*l.* The above are the only introductions, and proves plainly that no preference has been given in one direction. All the other holdings are either held by the old tenants or widows or children as the case may be.

6. The buildings are in a fair state of repair but Mr. Jones intends improving one or two places before many days are over or in the course of this year. He has spent about 10,000*l.* already in building and repairs to buildings and drainage since he acquired the property, without raising the rents, or charging interest on the expenditure. I append for your perusal a report made on the 1st of July 1868 by John Evans, builder, on the condition of the buildings on the estate before the sale. [Handing in report.]

7. Allowances have been granted, and that recently, for haulage towards building Llanfair shop, Llanfair fawr, Nantymedd, and Parkneuadd, but the three latter claims have not yet been settled. Before commencing to build Llanfair fawr farm-house in 1892, accommodation had been secured for the tenant and his family to live in a house within 40 yards of his farm, but he refused, saying that he preferred living as best he could, than be a source of inconvenience to his neighbour. The dwelling-house was completed in five or six months. The reason he was served with a notice to quit was that he refused to thatch his cow-house and barn, but after being served the work was done.

8. Mr. Jones has been for the last three years in very delicate health, and has been attended by a trained nurse for the last 15 months, at the advice of Dr. Budd, of Bath; he has been obliged to keep quiet and refrain from any excitement or worry whatsoever. It was not for the want of courtesy or esteem that he could not see his tenants, if at any time they called upon him. He knows them and their families personally, and takes great interest in all his tenants individually.

9. The estate altogether comprises about 7,700 acres, and only one keeper is employed to look after the game and about four miles of the river Teify. He does not breed game, and rabbits are not numerous. The keeper is a tenant farmer, and in perfect sympathy with his fellow tenants in regard to game.

10. This accusation is also as groundless as the previous ones. Political meetings in Llanfair are not of frequent occurrence; one perhaps in six years. I do not remember hearing of a meeting there at the last General Election on either side. It is ranked as being one of the most peaceable in the Principality, and because the tenants are quiet and well-disposed people, and probably not responding to Jenkins' election cries, they are to be persecuted with his vengeance and stigmatised as being cowards, &c.

11. The landlord has not interfered in any way with the improvement of the chapel, nor can I understand why his name should be coupled with the non-completion of the sanitary accommodation, as it does not belong to him.

12. If I remember correctly, the board agreed to pay the owner 70*l.* for sufficient land to meet the requirements of the education department for a mixed school of 120. The present position of the school had been fixed by the school inspector, who would take no other site, and it was considered by the board a fair price, as it was the best situated spot on the estate, Mr. Jones being willing to give a site higher up for nothing but the board would not have it. Compensation was given for this land to the tenant on the 25th March 1880, which was included in the 20*l.* allowance.

13. I will not attempt to answer these scurrilous insinuations, especially the last one, beyond saying that they are the most venomous exaggerations that any man could conceive or give utterance to.

48,720. That is as to putting up at certain hotels?—Yes, and as to depositing at a certain bank. I have endeavoured to place my rebutting statement before you in an unprejudiced manner, observing strictly the facts, and recording them without any bias, as they happened and are known to me.

48,721. You are a bank manager yourself?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,722. Will you tell us the name of the bank you are manager to?—It is a private bank, David Jones & Co.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,723. You act as agent?—Yes, I receive the rents, as well as being a bank manager. Mr. Jones generally looks after the estate, but I receive the rents and tithes, &c.

48,724. You have nothing to do with the buildings or the valuing of the places?—No, I have nothing to do with that.

48,725. Suppose a tenant wanted certain repairs, whom would he go to, you or Mr. Jones?—To Mr. Jones personally.

48,726. Do you interfere at all in the matter?—I do not interfere, except that I receive the rents and generally take an interest in the estate.

48,727. In the matter of repairs to buildings you would not interfere?—No, I generally leave that to Mr. Jones and the tenants.

48,728. You are not able to refute this statement that copies of the agreements have been sent to the tenants containing this clause as to grinding the corn at a certain mill. You do not deny that?—No, it is in the printed agreement. I have a copy of it here if you would like to see it.

48,729. You do not rebut that statement?—No.

48,730. Neither do you deny that a distinction has been made in making abatements?—No.

48,731. You do not rebut that?—No, only that I deny there was favouritism shown in the distribution of the abatements.

48,732. You say it was made to necessitous tenants?—Yes.

48,733. What means have you of determining who are necessitous and who are not?—Well, the tenants that we consider necessitous——

48,734. Then it was a matter of opinion?—Yes, it was as Mr. Jones thought proper.

Lord Kenyon.

48,735. Have you got the report that you refer to?—Yes [handing in report].

48,736. This is a report by the valuer when the estate was bought, I understand?—That is the report of a builder, made in 1868, before the estate was sold to Mr. Jones.

See 48,816.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,737. Do you know anything about a house called Wenallt ucha?—Yes, I do.

48,738. What is the state of the dwelling-house in that place?—It is in a bad state of repair. It is unoccupied in a way.

48,739. What do you mean by "unoccupied in a way"?—Well, it is unoccupied as far as I know. The tenant has given up the place. Here is his note [producing same]. He gave us notice in September 1892, to expire in 1893, and at the expiration of that notice he made a sale of his stock and crop, as he was going to leave the place.

See 48,843.

48,740. He is leaving the place because of the state of the house, is he?—Yes; Mr. Jones will not build on that farm on any condition. It is too wet.

48,741. What is he going to do. Is he going to put the tenant on to another farm?—Yes, it is to be put to another farm.

48,742. In order to save the expense of building?—No, the place is too wet. It is not a wholesome place at all for a man to live on.

48,743. The house?—No, the land being so very wet and boggy.

48,744. Is there no dry place at all on the farm?—No, I do not think there is as far as I know.

48,745. Do you know whether any of the tenants of Mr. Jones, of Glandenys, attended the sitting of the Commission at Lampeter?—Yes, several of them.

48,746. Do you know anything about the Dolau Llanfair meadow?—I do.

48,747. How many acres is it?—It is a little over 17 acres. That is in my evidence.

48,748. What was the rent of Dolau Llanfair Meadow?—I do not know, but the particulars are here. I know there was an allowance of 20*l.* made for it. This is the valuation of Mr. Davies.

48,749. Will you kindly refer to it. What was the previous rent?—Of that meadow?

48,750. Yes?—It was let with the farm of Llanfair fawr. It was part of the farm.

48,751. Suppose that you deducted the amount from the rent, what was standing on the meadows?—20*l.* was allowed for it.

48,752. But you say it was attached to the farm?—Yes.

48,753. But suppose you were to take the amount of the rent of the meadow (that is according to the acreage) from the rest of the farm, what would it be, do you know?—No, the average would be about 14*s.* an acre.

48,754. The land would vary, of course?—Oh, very much so. There is land on Llanfair fawr farm at 12*s.* an acre, as valued by Mr. Davies, the valuer.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

48,755. Do you know a farm called Nantymedd?—Very well.

48,756. Was there a field taken from Nantymedd farm?—There was, and one given instead.

48,757. Which is the better?—Well, they are both on the banks of the Teifi. I could not make a distinction between them. They are on the same level.

48,758. Was not the one taken from the farm better than the one that was put to it?—I do not know. I do not think so.

48,759. Was there any difference made in the rent?—No.

48,760. Was the tenant served with a notice to quit?—Yes, they were.

48,761. What for?—Because the young lady was going to be married, and it appeared they were going to give up farming.

48,762. The people gave you notice?—No, we gave them notice, because we were told that they were going to give up farming.

48,763. If they were, was it not their place to give you notice?—Soon after the death of Mr. Morgan, the young lady and her mother reported they were not capable of carrying on the farm, and intended giving it up, so we gave them notice to quit.

48,764. Did you say that the young lady was going to be married?—Yes.

48,765. To a farmer?—No, not at that time; to a solicitor.

48,766. What do you mean by saying not at that time?—At that particular time she was, I think, engaged to a solicitor, but subsequently she married a farmer, who is the present tenant of Nantymedd.

48,767. But was not the field that you took well limed before you took it?—I do not know.

48,768. You do not know?—No, I cannot say. I cannot answer that question.

48,769. Do you know a place called Gelly?—I know Gellyddyfod.

48,770. Do you know a place called Cae Sarah?—Yes, I have heard of it.

48,771. Was that field taken from the tenant of Cae Sarah?—Yes, I think it was.

48,772. Did you make any allowance in the rent?—That is a case I do not remember. I cannot give you an answer. I do not know. I cannot say that, because it is many years ago.

48,773. Would not your rent book help you? No, I do not think so.

48,774. What was done with the field that was attached to another farm?—I do not know whether it was given to a house on the mine called The Office.

48,775. But surely you would know whether an allowance was made for this field?—I could not, really, because Mr. Jones manages it.

48,776. But you receive the rents?—Yes.

48,777. You ought to know, certainly, as the rent receiver?—But I was not receiver at that particular time. I was only a clerk in the bank when that arrangement took place between them.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Mr. Williams, the manager, was the receiver of the rents at that time. I cannot remember it.

48,778. You do not know what became of the field?—No, I could not say.

48,779. Do you know whether Mr. Jones requested Daniel Jenkins to leave the parish and go to live on his farm at Pentrefelin, Talsarn?—Mr. Jenkins has got a farm 7 miles away from Llanfair, and I cannot say whether Mr. Jones told him that or not. I cannot say, but not to my knowledge.

48,780. Do you know whether Mr. Jones' keeper, Thos. Jones, the Mill, threatened to give notice to quit to the landlord where Daniel Jenkins lodged on account of Daniel Jenkins being lodged there?—I do not believe it; I do not think so.

48,781. Are you in a position to deny it?—No, I should not like to deny it, because it is not in my power. It is not in my knowledge.

48,782. Do you know whether Mr. Jones' keeper asked the head carpenter on the estate not to give Jenkins' landlord any work on the estate, the person he lodged with?—Where was he lodging then, may I ask, because he has changed his lodging so frequently.

48,783. I think it is where he lodges at present?—I do not know where he lodges. He was on the silver mine with John Davies; that is where I heard of him last.

48,784. What is John Davies?—He is a labourer.

48,785. Was there any conversation of the kind at all?—Not to my knowledge. No, I do not remember it.

48,786. Are there any of Mr. Jones' tenants members of the school board of Llanfair, where Jenkins is head master?—At the present time?

48,787. Yes?—There is a son of a tenant of Mr. Jones' there.

48,788. Only one?—Oh, yes, there is Davies, of Nantymedd.

48,789. Do you know whether Mr. Jones requested Mr. Davies of Nantymedd not to attend the board?—I do not think he interfered at all. Mr. Jones has been chairman of the board for years himself, and I am sure he has never interfered with the school board elections or anything else.

48,790. Who sends the notices to quit on Mr. Jones' estate. Is it the keeper?—The keeper, as a rule, yes.

48,791. How many horses does Mr. Jones' tenant at Llanfair shop keep, and where does he keep them?—He keeps one horse, I know. I do not know wherehe keeps it.

48,792. Do you know whether the horse has to be kept at the chapel stable for want of proper accommodation?—I cannot say that. I know he has a horse. I have seen him carting corn from the place.

48,793. Do you know whether he has kept more than one?—No, I do not.

Lord Kenyon.

48,794. Has he ever asked for increased accommodation?—No, never. He has never complained of the accommodation.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,795. Daniel Jenkins made this statement the other day at Lampeter; that eight notices to quit were given to one tenant in the course of the 12 years. Is it true?—I cannot say.

48,796. You are not in a position to deny it?—No.

48,797. Do you deny that this tenant is a good farmer. Do you know anything about him as a tenant?—To what tenant do you refer.

48,798. That tenant who received eight notices to quit?—I do not believe there is a single tenant on the estate at present that has received eight notices to quit.

48,799. Is there one who has received six?—I cannot say—no, not so many as six either.

48,800. Do you know whether any tenants have given offence to their landlords because they have taken their corn to another mill to grind?—No.

48,801. You are sure of that?—Yes, quite sure. That is no offence whatever. They go to Cefn, and they go to other mills; they go to Llanio Mill, Lampeter Mill, and all the neighbouring mills. Of course, they patronise the estate mill, but they are never compelled to support that mill entirely. It was the old custom, under Lord Carrington, when he was the owner of the estate, that the tenants should go to the mill.

48,802. But did Lord Carrington put a clause in the agreement?—I cannot say.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,803. Was it an old soc mill?—Yes; an old-fashioned country mill, with one or two pairs of stones.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,804. But the very fact of the clause being put in the agreement does to a certain extent, at any rate, show that the landlord would discountenance their going to any other; I suppose they went to other mills, because they got better flour there?—For flour, very likely; but for rough meal, such as oats and barley, and things of that kind, they ground there.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,805. Do you know what passed with regard to John Evans' tenancy when Mr. Jones came to the estate, and why it has remained at 15*l.* a year rent when it is worth more?—Yes; I should think it would be worth more. It is a nice building—a very nice building—a very nice country shop, large premises, dwelling-house, and store-house, and probably it would be worth 18*l.* to 20*l.*

See 48,698A.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

48,806. Then, although the present owner was not legally bound to allow him to remain at the old rent, he has done so out of kindness?—Yes; he allowed him at the same rent out of his generosity.

48,807. When a tenant builds upon property with the consent of the landlord, he is entitled to compensation?—Yes; the landlord allows it.

48,808. Do you think that he ought to be allowed to build without getting the consent of his landlord in writing?—Well, they have been building on Mr. Jones' estate small buildings, to the value of 5*l.* or 10*l.*, and Mr. Jones, although they did not get his consent, has always allowed it to them.

48,809. We have had so many cases of difficulty arising from sales where arrangements were made which were not strictly legal, where a person has taken the risk, in fact, and has built on perhaps a merely verbal statement. Do you think that the law could go further than it does with regard to those cases?—I should not like to express an opinion on that. I am not sufficiently versed in such matters as to express an opinion.

48,810. One question about the mill. Was the mill what is called a soc mill, that is a mill which, under the old customs of the country, had a monopoly of the grinding of the tenants?—No; there was no monopoly, only the estate tenants like to support it.

48,811. There was no old custom about it which you have perpetuated in the agreement?—Nothing whatever; only that the tenants of the estate always patronised it, and understood that they were to grind in this particular mill.

48,812. And it was for the benefit of the tenants of the mill, rather than for the landlord, that that clause was put in?—Yes.

See 45,580. 48,813. Is that the mill with regard to which we had evidence of its having been made from one stone to three stones by the tenant?—Yes. Since Mr. Jones got into possession, he has supplied the tenant with a pair of grinding stones.

48,814. Do you remember the mill as to which we had evidence?—That was before my connexion with the estate.

48,815. The old tenant left before you became connected with it?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

48,816. I have looked through this report of the valuer, and I find that the place must have been in a very bad state of repair when Mr. Jones bought the estate, no doubt?—Yes.

48,817. Many of the houses were dilapidated, and even the new ones seem to have been badly built. I think you say now that the estate is in good repair?—Yes, in a fair state of repair, with one or two exceptions, which he intends rebuilding soon. He is at it now.

48,818. Does Mr. Jones do most of his work by contract?—No.

48,819. By his own estate workmen?—Yes; pay-work or piece-work.

48,820. How many masons does Mr. Jones employ?—Two, as a rule. He has employed four. He had four or five, I believe, when he was building the buildings that I have just quoted in my statement.

48,821. And carpenters?—Yes; two carpenters.

48,822. And a slater, besides?—No.

48,823. Perhaps one of the masons does the slating?—Yes.

48,824. With regard to this field for which 20*l.* allowance was made: I suppose it is the field taken away for the school board?—That formed part of a field sufficient for the requirements of the Education Department for a mixed school of 120, and also for a meadow and a field.

48,825. Do you know whether that was 17a. 3r. 3p.?—Yes.

48,826. Do you know whether the rent of these fields was 24*l.* 10*s.*?—No.

48,827. Or whether it was lumped altogether?—No. This is the valuation of Mr. Davies, the late surveyor. It is much above the present rental, and the valuation of those two fields is, the one 26*s.* an acre, and the other 24*s.*

48,828. Could you divide those two fields; could you tell me what the acreage would be of each of them?—One is 10a. 2r. 25p., and the other is 6a. 2r. 30p.

48,829. Which is valued the higher?—The 10 acre field.

48,830. You say it is let below that rental—that would be about 22*l.* odd?—That is the valuation set upon them by Mr. Davies, which exceeds our rental.

48,831. By how much?—180*l.* is the estimate and the present rental is 134*l.* 11*s.*

48,832. The estimate was 180*l.*?—Yes, Mr. Davies' valuation is 180*l.*

48,833. So that 20*l.* would not be very far out as to the value of those fields?—It is a very fair allowance, I should think.

48,834. I suppose it was probably an error in the tenant's mind to think that they were valued at 24*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes, he did not pay according to that at all.

48,835. That was in excess of both Mr. Davies' valuation and of the average of your rent?—Yes.

48,836. These are questions by Mr. Vincent: "Can you tell me when the agreement in its "present form was drafted"?—Sometime in 1890. I had a copy of it.

48,837. "Do you know that an application to "grind at a named mill is a very old custom "indeed?"—Yes.

48,838. "Is that obligation ever enforced?"—Never enforced.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,839. What is the object of putting it in the agreement, then?—I do not know. There was no specific object.

48,840. This is a question by Mr. Daniel Jenkins: "Are the shop and premises now See 48,09

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

" occupied by Mr. Evans the same as they were " when William Jones, Esq., bought the estate " ? —Yes, and improved. A fire took place there not long since.

48,841. What is the name of the holding ?—Llanfair shop.

48,842. " Is it the same rent ? "—Yes, 15*l.* a year. That is what he pays. I do not know whether it has always been so.

48,843. This is another question by Mr. Daniel Jenkins: " Was not the tenant of " Wenallt at the house on Wednesday last " ?— I could not answer that question. That is not in my knowlege.

See 48,739.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,844. Was he at the house on Wednesday last ?—He told me that he would not live there. After he made a sale he asked whether he could be continued as tenant, only holding the land—that he would not live in the place; he was a widower without any children or family, and that he would occupy the land only as grazing land, and not live on the place.

48,845. Is it true that the sanitary inspector reported this place ?—Yes, it has been reported.

48,846. Has any action been taken about it ? —No, there is a certain notice given, and a certain time allowed to enable one to answer, and attend to it. The house will be down probably soon.

48,847. I believe the sanitary inspector is Mr. Jones' tenant ?—Yes, he is a tenant of his.

Lord Kenyon.

48,847A. Thank you, Mr. David Jones, I am sure Lord Carrington will be very glad to hear that the rents on that estate have not been raised although the estate has been sold.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 73,390.

Mr. Daniel Jenkins recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,848. Now, Mr. Daniel Jenkins, do you wish to say anything ?— I should like to make one remark.

48,848A. Have you got anything to rebut. We cannot accept any fresh evidence from you, but we shall be glad to hear any statements rebutting the evidence of the last witness ? — I offered my evidence at Lampeter, and after hearing the rebutting evidence to-day, I have nothing to withdraw from what I said then. I still continue to believe what I said then.

Lord Kenyon.

I do not know what you mean by that. You are welcome to your opinion, sir, of course.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 73,330.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. David Lloyd called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,849. You are Mr. David Lloyd, a solicitor, of Lampeter ?—Yes.

48,850. And you wish to rebut the evidence of Mr. Watkin Davies with regard to the Derry Ormond estate ?—About the Derry Ormond estate.

See 45,878–46,097 and 73,543–73,644.

48,851. And the evidence of Mr. Timothy Evans about the Llanayron estate ?—Yes, my Lord.

48,852. Is Mr. Watkin Davies or Mr. Timothy Evans here ?—No, I am not aware that they are.

48,853. Are you agent for Mr. Inglis Jones ?— I am acting now as agent. The estate agent is unwell and unable to leave the house. I know a great deal about the estate, having acted for many years for the owner of the estate.

48,854. You heard the evidence of Mr. Watkin Davies ?—Yes.

48,855. Now will you say precisely what you wish to rebut ?—Yes, I have a short statement here in writing. I am clerk to the guardians of the Lampeter Union, and clerk to the justices for the Lampeter and Tregaron districts. I have acted professionally for the owners for the time being of the Derry Ormond estate for upwards of 34 years. Mr. Cotterell, the agent of the estate, is at present unwell, and is unable to leave his house. I have read a copy of the evidence given by Mr. John Watkin Davies, at Lampeter, on the 25th instant, and have gone carefully through the portion of it relating to the Derry Ormond estate with Mr. Wilmot Inglis Jones, the present owner of the Derry Ormond estate, and his agent, Mr. Cotterell, and having examined the rent rolls and accounts of payments made for repairs on the estate during the last 12 years, and also from information given to me by Mr. Jones and Mr. Cotterell, I am in a position to state that there has been no unwillingness to make repairs and improvements on the Derry Ormond estate. On the contrary, during the last 12 years 10,069*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.* were expended on new buildings and repairs, and no interest has been charged upon the outlay or the rents increased. No tenant has given up his holding on the Derry Ormond estate owing to the landlord refusing to make repairs. There has been no request on the part of tenants for leases. I have in my possession the book containing full particulars of the amounts spent in repairs on each building. Mr. John Watkin Davies stated that the rents of certain farms on the Derry Ormond estate, namely, Llettycybi, Cilgwynucha, and Glandulas were raised. If the rents of these farms were raised, the advance was made before they were purchased by the owner of the Derry Ormond estate. The facts are as follows:—Llettycybi: The rent of the farm was 32*l.* when it was purchased in 1879, and the rent was afterwards reduced to 27*l.*, and repairs were made which cost about 75*l.* Cilgwynucha: The rent of this farm, when it was bought in 1879, was 75*l.*, which has since been reduced to 50*l.*, and since the purchase about 100*l.* has been spent in repairs. If an advance was made at any time in the rent of this farm it took place before it became part of the Derry Ormond estate. Glandulas: When this farm was purchased in 1879 the rent was 90*l.*, and it was afterwards reduced to 70*l.* In the year 1886 a general reduction of rents on this estate was made, not by an equal per-centage, but the rent of each holding was reduced to what was considered a fair rent, as much as 25 per cent. reduction being made in some cases. An allowance of 10*l.* per cent. has been made on the Derry Ormond estate at the last three audits, but no allowance was made in respect of houses and cottages, and no allowance was made to Mr. John Watkin Davies for the following reasons: About three years ago new buildings were erected for Mr. Davies at his request, and they were made much larger than a small holding of about 15 acres required, as Mr. Davies required them to enable him to carry on the trade of pig dealer, including the salting and curing of bacon. New buildings were accordingly erected, upon the understanding that an additional rent would be paid. About 350*l.* were spent in the erection of the new buildings, but no increased rent has as yet been paid. Cottages on the Derry Ormond estate have gone down, as no tenants could be procured for them, and being thatched cottages, owing to straw being so expensive, they could only be kept up at a loss. I have known the neighbourhood of Bettws Bledrws for upwards of 45 years, and I have never heard of any common called Bettws Bledrws Common, nor that any persons entitled to right of pasture there were at any time deprived of their rights. The tenants on the Derry Ormond estate are not in any way interfered with in the exercise of their rights under the Ground Game Act, and it is their own fault if the rabbits are not kept down, and they ought not to be afraid to exercise their rights. Compensation is given by Mr. Jones to tenants who may suffer through game trespass, and no complaints have been made to Mr. Jones of his gamekeepers having trespassed or injured the lands of any of his tenants. I may add that I mentioned the amount spent in repairs during the last 12 years, but during the last 50 years I believe that something like 80,000*l.* have been spent on this estate in repairs and new buildings.

48,856. What proportion does the money laid out for repairs bear to the incoming rental, will you tell us?—The annual rental is 3,572*l.*

Professor Rhŷs.

48,857. Have you heard of any compensation for game being asked for?—I believe that compensation was asked for and paid.

48,858. And paid?—I believe so.

48,859. There is no difficulty in the tenants getting at the agent or the landlord, is there?—Not the slightest. The agent lives close to Derry Ormond Mansion, in the centre of the estate. It is quite convenient for the tenants to see the agent at any time.

48,860. What is his name?—Mr. William Cotterell.

48,861. Can he talk Welsh at all?—No, he cannot.

48,862. Can the landlord?—No.

48,863. I suppose there are some tenants who are monoglot Welshmen, are there not?—Yes, some of them.

48,864. How do they get on?—Well, I do not think there is any difficulty in their being able to understand each other, although it is a disadvantage, I admit.

48,865. You heard what was said by one witness this morning?—No, I came in late.

48,866. What he said was that he heard a monoglot Welshman trying to get on with an agent who did not know any Welsh, and that there was some sort of man on the estate who was supposed to know Welsh and English; he did not translate what the agent said to the tenant, nor did he translate what the tenant said to the agent; he told them both what he chose?—I have not heard that there has been a difficulty of that kind on this estate. I have not heard it; but I admit it is a disadvantage.

48,867. Would you be likely to hear of a thing of that sort?—I should think so, being close to the estate. Do I understand that that refers to this estate?

48,868. No, I asked if you had heard that this morning. It is what might happen in cases where people do not understand one another? A third person may understand both, but neither of them may understand him?—I admit it is a disadvantage, but I have not heard of any complaints of that kind.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,869. I believe Mr. Watkin Davies said that Mr. Inglis Jones was very reluctant to carry out repairs, and consequently sometimes he received orders from the Sanitary Authority. Is that so?—It is so, as far as the cottages are concerned; not as far as the farm buildings are concerned. There was one cottage in the neighbourhood condemned, at least there was a complaint made by the inspector of nuisances. I know it as a fact, because I am the clerk to the rural sanitary authority.

48,870. Then, as a matter of policy you allow cottages to go down. Is that so?—Yes, in some cases, and several have gone down for the reasons stated by me.

48,871. What would be the consequence of that as far as the labourer is concerned?—I am not aware that any labourer has suffered in any way by it; I do not know that any labourer has left in consequence.

48,872. But the population of the rural districts is decreasing?—Yes, there has been a general decrease of the population in this county.

48,873. In consequence of the houses and cottages coming down?—Yes, owing to labourers going into Glamorganshire, where they get an increased rate of wages.

48,874. It possibly may be that there are no cottages for them if they are allowed to fall down?—Oh, I think the farmers would be very glad indeed if they had more labourers in the neighbourhood.

48,875. But it would be a help to bring them back to the soil, would it not, if cottages were provided for them?—Yes, no doubt it would if they could be induced to come back. If that would induce them I have no doubt landlords would be glad to put cottages up.

48,876. Is it true that Mr. Inglis Jones has spent a lot in ornamenting his grounds?—Yes, he has recently put up a large conservatory, if you mean that, and other landlords have done the same, I have no doubt, in the neighbourhood.

Lord Kenyon.

48,877. I think you said 10,000*l.* had been spent in 12 years?—Yes, it is averaging about 800*l.* odd a year.

48,878. And the rental of the estate you said was 3,572*l.*?—Yes.

48,879. That is somewhere about 25 per cent. That seems to be a fairly generous outlay—a very generous outlay I should think. Are the cottages sufficient for the population at present?—Oh, certainly; I do not think there is any demand whatever.

48,880. What I mean is, do the labourers leave the place because there are not sufficient cottages, or are cottages not built because they are not required?—I do not believe that cottagers leave because they cannot get proper accommodation—proper cottages to live in.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,881. They leave because they can get better employment elsewhere?—Yes.

48,882. There is more inducement?—Yes, that is the inducement.

48,883. You think the cottage building keeps pace with the population?—Yes, certainly. I will now turn to the portion of my evidence with regard to the Llanayron estate. I was not present at Aberayron when Mr. J. T. Evans spoke about the place called Tynycoed, and I wish to make a statement with reference to that: Mr. J. T. Evans was the tenant of Tynycoed cottage and garden for many years previously to the year 1885, at the annual rent of 2*l.*, Evans undertaking the thatching. In 1874 Evans underlet the cottage and about one-third of the garden at an annual rent of 2*l.* 10*s.* to one John Jenkins, and J. T. Evans kept the other portion of the garden for his own use, so Evans made a profit of 10*s.* per annum and he occupied about two-thirds of the garden. The arrangements between J. T. Evans and John Jenkins in 1874, when the cottage was let to Jenkins, was that Evans should thatch the cottage and do certain repairs, and to continue to keep it in repair during Jenkins' tenancy, and Evans accordingly, in 1874, made certain repairs, namely, new baking oven, wooden partition, repairing pigstye, and wire and poles for fencing. John Jenkins afterwards could not get Evans to thatch the cottage and he had to do it himself, but ultimately Evans made an allowance in respect of this to Jenkins out of the rent. In 1885, owing to Jenkins having complained that Evans would not keep the cottage in repair as agreed, I, as agent of the estate, suggested to Evans that he should surrender his tenancy as he (Evans) did not require the cottage for his own use, but sublet it, and his tenancy being troublesome to him, and afterwards Evans was called upon to give up possession, which he ultimately gave at Michaelmas 1887, and Jenkins has since held the cottage and garden as tenant to Mrs. Lewis. Evans made a claim for compensation as tenant when he gave up possession, but inasmuch as the alleged improvements in respect of which the claim was made were made by arrangements entered into between Evans and Jenkins, and Mrs. Lewis was no party to the arrangement, Evans' claim was not entertained and nothing was heard of this claim until a few months ago, after the Land Commissioners had been appointed. There was another point, but I am not in a position to say anything about it. A man of the name of Timothy Evans gave evidence, but not having heard what he said I am unable at this moment to say anything in answer to it.

Re-examined 73,619.

Mr. William Davies called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,884. What do you wish to say?—I am a solicitor, and acting as secretary of the Central Committee of Farmers in Lampeter. I had the conduct of the evidence of Mr. Watkin Davies, which my friend Mr. Lloyd has attempted to rebut. You will remember that he gave evi-
See 73,543. dence at Lampeter; he was about the first witness from the district, and he represented 31 farmers.

48,885. So he said, yes?—He had no personal complaints himself, and we have had no notice of this rebutting evidence of Mr. Lloyd until this very moment. Mr. Watkin Davies would have been here this morning with further evidence to substantiate all his statements had we received notice of this rebutting evidence. My friend Mr. Lloyd knew perfectly well that he was going to rebut, and yet we had no notice of it at all.

48,886. Our first duty when a person is attacked is to let that person know so that he may have an opportunity of giving rebutting evidence within the county, but it is not our buiness to keep everybody informed; it is simply our duty to let those who are attacked have an opportunity of coming forward. We let Mr. Inglis Jones know that he was attacked; and he gave his rebutting evidence at the first opportunity?—I think it is my duty to inform the Commissioners why Mr. Watkin Davies is absent this morning.

48,887. Two questions are sent up by Mr. Vincent: "Professionally speaking, I should "like to know what you mean by having the "conduct of evidence"?—Assisting the farmers, my Lord, to lay their case before your court, preparing them to come into court.

48,888. Assisting the farmers to give evidence before the court—to prepare evidence in due form?—Yes.

48,889. "Did you, or Mr. Watkin Davies, or "anybody else, let Mr. Inglis Jones know that "he was going to be attacked?"—I did not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Richards called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,890. You are Mr. David Richards, of Goginan, Llanfihangel y Creuddyn?—Yes.

[The interpreter read the following statement to the witness.]

I am a farmer's son, and have always been brought up to farming. In 1867 my father took Goginan farm from Colonel Powell, of Nanteos, at 56*l.* 10*s.* He paid 280*l.* to the outgoing tenant. He was then compelled to take the crops, but if he had wished to leave the incoming tenant would have the option of taking the corn or not. No agreement was signed when he entered, but some years afterwards, when my father was at Nanteos carting, the agent called him into the house and told him he must sign an agreement. He did so, but got no copy of it. They sold the farm in 1892, and about two years before that they added to it a small mud cottage, almost in ruins, and about 1¾ acres of very poor land. The cottage and land would not be worth to us more than from 15*s.* to 1*l.* a year, but they raised our rent 3*l.* 10*s.* At that time they clearly thought the rent too high, because to induce my mother to pay it they promised her that they would very soon add to the farm three cottages and premises adjoining, the lease of which would very shortly be up, without any further increase in the rent. These would be worth 10*l.* or 11*l.* a year to us. My father died in 1883, and my mother has since carried on the farm. My father and mother, myself, my two brothers, and my two sisters, up to 1883 all worked hard on the farm, neither myself nor my brothers and sisters ever receiving any wages. We greatly inproved the farm, cleaned and closed the fences, made miles of drains, cleared gorse, and applied lime and artificial manures every year. In 1884 and 1888 we built a hay-shed and cattle-shed.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Before the sale in 1892 we received notice to quit, after which my mother went to Nanteos and asked for a copy of the agreement. The agent refused it, and very insultingly ordered her off the premises. She then said, 'Well, 'I shall plough up all the arable land.' He threatened her that if she ploughed a single acre more than the agreement authorised he would make her smart for it. He till refused her the agreement, in the hope, no doubt, that she would be too much frightened to plough really what she was entitled to, and by so abstaining increase the value of the farm for the sale. Goginan is 51a. 1r. 7p., Pwlly Ucha, the adjoining farm, 109a. 2r. 26p., or more than twice as much. In 1868, when my father took Goginan, the land of Pwlly Ucha was in quite as good a condition, and the buildings far better, and at that time Pwlly on sale would realise 2½ times as much as Goginan, i.e., quite as much per acre for the land, and a substantial additional for the difference in the value of the buildings. In 1892 Goginan sold for 1,960*l.*, or a little over 38*l.* per acre; Pwlly Ucha sold for 2,200*l.*, or very little over 20*l.* per acre. The whole of this difference of 18*l.* per acre, or 918*l.* in the whole farm, is entirely due to the improvements effected by my father and mother. Still, if my mother had not been fortunate enough to get the farm again from the new owner, she would have had to leave without receiving a single penny by way of compensation; and Mr. Powell, as it is, in addition to having received full rack-rent during all those years, has put into his pocket 918*l.* towards which he never contributed a single penny or a single day's work. I consider it a gross injustice that some at least of that 918*l.* was not paid over to my mother. I produce a copy of the Nanteos agreement, and beg to call attention to the following clauses:—1. Tenant to pay 5 per cent. on landlord's outlay. 2. To give a day's haulage for every 20*l.* rent. (This we did during all the years, a man with two horses and cart each day.) 3. To preserve game, rabbits, and fish, and to prosecute poachers. 4. Deductions for dilapidations, bad management, &c., from allowance for fences. 5. The exclusion of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

48,891. Have you got a copy of your agreement?—Yes. I hand up these two agreements (handing same).

Professor Rhŷs.

48,892. You said that when your mother asked the landlord, or the agent I think it was, for a copy of the agreement, your mother was very insultingly ordered off the premises?—She was.

48,893. What did they say; did they say that she already had a copy?—No; we had not a copy.

48,894. Why should they have ordered her off the premises for asking for one?—Well, I cannot say.

48,895. You are quite sure there is no mistake in your account? Is your mother alive now?—She is alive.

48,896. She is not here, is she?—She is not here to-day.

48,897. It seems very strange conduct?—It was very strange.

48,898. Had she or you in any way offended the landlord?—Not in any way whatever, as far as I know.

48,899. Have you had any trouble about game or anything of that sort?—We had a little trouble with the game; in fact our game was let to others. They were not having the shooting over our place. A part of it was let to Lord Lisburne. They had the shooting over it for the previous years after we entered Goginan, and then it was handed over to Mr. Roberts, of Penwyrn.

48,900. Your landlord was Colonel Powell?—Colonel Powell.

48,901. What time was this?—1867, when my father took Goginan.

48,902. When was it, do you say?—Colonel Powell was the owner in the year 1867, when my father took Goginan.

48,903. This was in 1867?—Yes; when he took Goginan.

48,904. When was it your mother asked for the copy of the agreement?—After we received notice.

48,905. What time was that?—That would be in 1891.

48,906. In 1891—as late as that?—Yes. She was there sometime in November, 1891.

48,907. That is the time when she went there?—When she went there to get some understanding with regard to the agreement.

48,908. You have got no explanation to give about this at all?—No; I have nothing at all.

"Ewch gylch y lle ymas, yr hen scolpen." (Get away from me, you old scolpen.) That is what he said; and a very disgusting term to use to any woman.

48,909. Yes; I cannot understand such talk. Then you say you left in improvements on the farm about 912*l.* Is that right?—Yes.

48,910. Did you ask for compensation?—Well, in fact my mother went there. That was her purpose there that day, just to get some arrangement with the agent before the sale came on, to see if he would compensate us to some extent for what we had done there.

48,911. She was not going only to ask for a copy of the agreement?—She had other things as well. After being treated in that way she was advised by someone to write a letter to Mrs. Powell, and at her request I wrote a letter to Mrs. Powell complaining about the treatment we had received, and we have never received a reply to that letter even to this day.

48,912. No reply?—No.

48,913. Would you consider the 912*l.* the value of the unexhausted improvements, or have you not had some part of the benefit of that 912*l.*?—Well, perhaps we have had a part of it.

48,914. Did you write out a claim at all?—No; I did not.

48,915. How much would it have been if you had written out a claim. How much of that would you have considered you ought to have had back?—Well, I should say 300*l.* or 400*l.*, certainly. I consider that Pwlly Ucha in the year 1867 was equally as good as Goginan, and now it is more than twice the value.

48,916. The difference, you think, was due to your improvements?—Entirely.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,917. You say that a hay-shed and cattle-shed were built in 1884–85?—I do.

48,918. Did you write to the landlord to obtain his consent to erect those buildings?—I did not write to him, but I went down there personally myself to ask him if he would supply us with timber; in fact to ask him if he would make us a hay-shed, and he said he could not, but he told me that he would give us the posts like. It is a wooden shed, and he said he would give us posts to erect a cattle shed, and he told me where they were. I went over to look for them with my brother in a cart, and we found only two there. We required six; there were only two there, and I took the two home; consequently we had to buy the others off the forester on Lord Lisburne's estate, and all the planks and boards and everything that was cut up we had to pay for, for the zinc and everything.

48,919. Before erecting these buildings were you aware that in order to obtain compensation in case you left it was necessary for you to obtain the consent of the landlord in writing?—No, I did not know that.

48,920. Under the first schedule of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, because I have never seen that Act.

48,921. Is it the case that the tenants are really ignorant of the Act, in your opinion?—I believe they are mostly.

48,922. And they erect buildings, trusting entirely to the landlord's generosity?—Quite so, yes. We farmed that farm well; we could not have farmed it better if it had belonged to ourselves.

48,923. And you think that occasionally the faith which they put in their landlords is misplaced?—Yes.

48,924. What is your remedy for this sort of thing; have you any remedies to suggest?—Well, I think that a land court would be the best remedy. I think it would protect the landlord from the tenant and the tenant from the landlord as well.

48,925. It would protect the landlord from raising the rent upon the tenants improvements?—Yes, quite so.

48,926. And also protect the landlord from the tenant deteriorating the landlord's farm?—Yes; it is often the case when a tenant is going to leave and a new tenant is coming in he is having many more advantages than the old tenant would have and having a good reduction in the rent as well. Then I think that the land court would remedy that.

48,927. Does that often occur—that the landlord really reduces the rent to a fresh tenant?—Very often.

Lord Kenyon.

48,928. Might not that be through the land having been run out by the previous tenant?—Well, I cannot say that exactly, but it may be there has been just a little ill-feeling arising between the tenant and the landlord, and then he would not do anything for him; he would rather have a new one.

48,929. Who bought these two farms; did the same person buy the two?—No; the man who bought Pwlly Ucha is farming it himself, and our landlord now is a dairyman in London.

48,930. There was more competition over the little farm?—Over ours; yes, I believe there was. In fact, the other farm was not sold at the sale; it was sold afterwards privately.

48,931. Was that farm in a very bad state?—Well, it was in a very bad state indeed.

48,932. Was your rent raised after the sale?—Not after the sale.

48,933. You are still there?—Yes, we are still there, and it is still the same.

48,934. Then I take it all you want is to be secure in your tenure?—Yes.

48,935. I have some questions by Mr. Vincent to put to you: "Are you an undischarged bankrupt"?—Am I required to answer that question?

48,936. You are not obliged to answer any question unless you like?—Well, I shall not answer it then 48,937. "Did you write anonymously about it in one of the daily journals?"—I shall not answer that either.

48,938. Did you deny having written it?—I shall not answer that either; I did not come here to answer such questions as those.

49,939. Of course, you are not obliged to answer any questions. You are not obliged to come here unless you like?—No, I came here quite of my own accord; I am not afraid of anybody.

48,940. I say you are not obliged to answer anything unless you like. "Was an action begun against you for libel by David Jones"?—I shall not answer any single question with regard to that matter at all; I did not come here to answer them.

48,941. Of course, we must draw our conclusions as we think fit. I shall ask the questions, as I think they are fairly put to you: "Did you "answer on oath, in answer to interrogatories, "that you had not written the letter"? Is there no answer to that question?—No.

48,942. "Did you give it up at the trial, and "allow you had written the letter?"—(No answer.)

48,943. "Did David Lloyd get a verdict against you?"—(No answer.)

The witness withdrew.

Mr. MORGAN RICHARDS, called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

48,944. You are Mr. Morgan Richards, of Blaencynon, Llanfihangel y Creuddyn?—Yes.

48,945. Do you understand English sufficiently to follow the reading of your statement?—I understand enough to follow it and fairly enough to be catechised. (The statement was read as follows)—The diligent hard-working farmer is more liable to lose his farm than others. In the year 1860 my father took Pendre, Llanfihangel, and paid the outgoing tenant 50*l.* compensation. In two years' time the farm was sold by the trustees of the late Mr. R. Lloyd, Manordeifi, and purchased by

Lord Kenyon—continued.

Mr. Bonsall, of Fronfraith, and we were obliged to leave without compensation on six months' notice. Mr. Bonsall then let the farm, together with another large one to the vicar of Llanfihangel, who was sold up in less than six months. My parents were without a farm for four years. In 1868 my father took Goginan, on the Nanteos estate, from John Evans, the tenant, with the consent of the agent, and paid 280*l.* for the crops. We worked hard to improve the place, and when the other children grew up I went into service and paid 20*l.* a year out of my wages to help my parents. Later on I returned home to assist in draining the land. In 1892 my mother and brother received notice to quit. In July 1892 the place was sold for 1,960*l.*——

48,946. Is not that the same story we have just heard?—I am brother to the other. We were selected by different men to come here. If it is your wish I will abstain from that clause, I have been chiefly selected to give evidence on behalf of small occupiers, as I am one of them myself.

48,947. I think you had better give only that evidence. It is hardly worth your while to repeat the same story we have just heard?—Very well. (Statement continued)—In 1885, the rateable value of this parish was 4,300*l.*, but now it has been reduced by nearly 1,000*l.*, chiefly on farms in the occupation of carriers, masons, cattle dealers, and butchers. The frequent sales of large estates in the neighbourhood have also made matters worse for the farmers, many of the properties being bought by merchants and tradesmen, who rack-rent even worse than the old landed proprietors. There many farms in the district in which the owner has only a life interest, and consequently no interest beyond getting out of the farm as much rent as possible at as little outlay as possible while he lives. About 1874, when the prices of agricultural produce were high, the rent of most of the farms were raised, and farmers who have spent money and labour in improving their holdings are still compelled to pay that rent, while the rents of farms which have been neglected have been reduced. There is neither security nor encouragement for the farmer under the existing law.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,948. You say the small farmers pay more rent per acre than large farmers. Is not that part of the reason that the buildings are a larger proportion of the value on small farms than on large farms?—There is more demand for small farms; that is the reason, I believe, and a good many of them have been neglected and put together to spare making buildings. In my opinion that was the reason, but perhaps some others think otherwise.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,949. If I understand you aright, what you say is this, that the consolidation of small farms has quickened the competition for farms?—Yes.

48,950. Why was the rateable value reduced on the land held by the carriers, masons, cattle dealers, and butchers. Was it accommodation land, rented at a high figure?—They are going away along the country to make their money, and neglect their land, while others who spend their time and money on the land keep on the land and pay rent, and not only pay the rent, but have to pay higher rates on account that the rateable value falls because the money must come out.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

48,951. What you contend is this, that really the present position of things is a sort of premium on bad farming. If a man puts a lot of money into his farm, and cultivates it well, he is liable to have his rent advanced, whereas if he keeps his land in poor condition he keeps the rent down?—Exactly.

48,952. You also say that merchants and tradesmen make worse landlords than those who have inherited land; is that so?—I do. There is a farm adjoining my farm, which was known as Cynonfach; it was before a sale some time back the property of Nanteos; it was then rented for 24*l.* A man who was then assistant overseer in our parish, and a shopkeeper, bought this farm; he had been trying to farm it himself, but could not make a livelihood on it, and afterwards he rented it for 40*l.*

48,953. Do you think that the old landed proprietors are influenced by the example of these merchants and tradesmen, and that they raise the rents afterwards?—I fear that they do, indeed.

48,954. What do you consider now the reduction in the price of produce and stock; how much per cent. do you think it has been reduced, say, since the year 1875 or 1876?—Well, some produce has been reduced just to half, but others were not so bad. I believe eggs sell as well now as they did then, but sheep and cattle are not half so dear.

48,955. But taking all articles into consideration, what would you say has been the reduction on the average?—Well, I believe I would say 40 per cent.; I am not a very good arithmetician; I will not profess what I cannot perform, but as a hardworking man I give a rough guess of what I consider to be fair.

48,956. If you think that really the price of stock and produce has been reduced 40 per cent., have you had a reduction of rent to that extent now in your neighbourhood?—No.

48,957. Before you go from that, what about the price of labour; is that much the same?—This year it was rather back. The wages of farm servants was not so dear this year as it used to be two or three years ago, because the farmers were so bad off that they could not employ men and pay the heavy rents and the other expenses that were on farms.

48,958. But still they are now possibly as high as they were, say, 15 or 18 years ago?—Well, I was in service myself 20 years ago, and I received 20*l.* then. If I went to service now, I do not know whether it would not be a great deal better for me; I do not know whether I should fetch 20*l.* or not.

48,959. If you got 20*l.*, then the price of labour would be very much the same?—Well, in my opinion, there is not a great difference between 1874 and 1894.

48,960. Then we may take it according to that that the cost of production is much the same as it was 20 years ago?—Well, lime was dearer.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

48,961. To what extent have the landlords reduced the rents?—I received an abatement of 10 per cent.

48,962. And you consider that not enough?—No. I have not come here to speak against my landlord. I think he rented as fair as most landlords, and better than many of these small landlords, a great deal better.

48,963. But still you think that rents have not come down as much as they ought to?—If I and my wife were not very hardworking we could not get the two ends to meet these last years.

48,964. Which do you think it would be better for you to be, a labourer or a farmer?—A great deal better for me to be a labourer.

48,965. Why is it that you do not give up farming and go labouring?—I will tell you. I never took a farm, but I took a wife, and she had the farm, and she would not part with it?—

48,966. You tried to accommodate yourself as well as you could to the circumstances you found yourself in, and you took a wife?—Well, I tell you the truth, and there is nobody here that will deny that.

48,967. Have you any remedy to suggest?—I want to have Imperial valuation first of all for the purpose of rent, to save ourselves from paying the penalties of these idle people that do not cultivate their farms.

48,968. Something the same as Griffith's valuation in Ireland?—Well, indeed I do not know about that.

48,969. Would you have valuations made periodically or one valuation?—Oh, it ought to be made something like the tithe valuation was done.

Lord Kenyon.

48,970. On a sliding scale?—That is it, my Lord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

48,971. You want the principle of a sliding scale; that is, that the rents should be in accordance with the price of stock and produce?—Exactly.

Lord Kenyon.

48,972. You said just now that you thought the old landed proprietors were copying the merchants who bought their holdings and raising the rents?—Well, I do think so.

48,973. Do not the merchants ever copy the old landed proprietors? Why do they buy land to start with?—They are not so good as the old ones. I cannot bring very good evidence for them, but these are worse, and that makes matters worse. We must have some remedy by the law.

48,974. But do not they try to copy the old landed proprietors?—Some of the old landed proprietors do very good buildings, but I must say that on the same estate there are great inequalities; but very few of these small landlords do hardly anything.

48,975. I suppose you mean men who come to buy one or two farms?—Yes.

48,976. Do not you think that a man who farms his farm well gets some profit out of it, even if his rent is raised a bit; it is better than farming it badly, surely?—Well, I believe that tenants that do profit at these times are very scarce; they may be counted, through this whole county, on the fingers of one hand.

Mr. Seebohm.

48,977. Do you think that the peasant proprietors, the owners of their own farms, are doing any better?—They have no rent to pay; they ought to do.

48,978. They often have interest to pay?—Well, I have heard of men who bought their own farms having to pay more interest than they used to pay in rent. They bought their farms, of course, for the want of some security, and they must have some place to live.

48,978A. Do you personally know some instances of people who have bought their own farms?—I never asked anyone was it true, but I have heard of instances which I can mention I believe.

48,979. Those that you know of, would you say that they are doing pretty well or not?—I believe that it was very hard on them, harder, I believe, than it was on me, paying rent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Phillips called and examined through an interpreter.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of next witness.

48,980. Do you wish the statement of your evidence read?—If you please, my Lord.

[The following statement was then read.]

Evidence of Richard Phillips, Erglodd. In 1888 I took Blaenclettwrfach from Mr. Vaughan Davies at 22*l.* a year. At that time the prices of farm produce were going down. The dwelling-house and outbuildings at Blaenclettwrfach were in a ruinous state, but I had to pay Mr. Davies 2*l.* more rent than the previous tenant did. His solicitors gave me the agreement produced, but I objected to sign, the buildings were so bad, and the agreement would compel me to repair them. I was allowed to go in without signing the agreement, and Mr. Davies promised either to repair the old buildings or build new ones. In September 1889, however, I received the letter now produced from his solicitors, threatening to turn me out if I did not sign the agreement. The buildings were then, to all appearances, nearly tumbling down, and, in addition to that, Mr. Davies was very anxious to sell the place. If he did so I should, of course, have had to turn out, however much I spent on the buildings. When I took the place there was a man, with his wife and family, living in the house, and he kept six or seven head of cattle, and he paid me 7*l.* 5*s.* a year, the same as he paid to Mrs. Jones before me. Whenever I paid my rent, I always asked Mr. Davies to repair or rebuild, and he always promised to do so, but he never did. By 1892 my tenant was obliged to leave, the dwelling-house and outbuildings having become too dangerous for any man or animal to live in them. After that I tried to get Mr. Davies to make an abatement in the rent on account of the buildings, but he refused to do so, and told me I might give it up if I liked, that he had plenty to take it. However, I have kept on, hoping prices would go up, so that I could clear out to better advantage. Even when he promised to build he made it a condition that I should do all the carrying, which would be a very serious item, as the place is far up the mountain, five or six miles from the nearest railway station. The agreement produced also contained a clause that if the place was sold before July in any year I should have to leave the following September without any notice.

48,981. You say Mr. Davies promised to repair the old building?—Yes.

48,982. But he never did anything of the kind?—Nothing at all.

48,983. Have you got any promise in writing?—No.

48,984. Did you go to see him?—Yes.

48,985. How many times did you go to see him?—When I paid rent.

48,986. Every time you paid the rent?—Yes; half-yearly.

48,987. Have you got a copy of your agreement?—Yes (handing same).

48,988. You did sign this agreement?—No.

48,989. Were you aware that the clause as to notice was void under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I know nothing about the Act.

48,990. Six months' notice is all that is allowed under the Act; did you not know that, either 12 or six months?—No, I did not know that.

48,991. The buildings were very bad, were they?—Yes, they are falling now.

48,992. What sort of roof; was it a thatched roof?—No, tiles.

48,993. Does the rain come through?—The outhouses have fallen into a heap.

48,994. Where did you put your cattle?—The tenant had left before they had fallen in; the tenant left in 1891.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

48,995. I do not quite understand this. Is the place you are referring to a place you sublet; did you sublet the whole of it?—Yes, a part of it.

48,996. Sublet the whole of it?—A part of the land with the house.

48,997. Then had you another house of your own?—Yes.

48,998. Under Mr. Vaughan Davies, too?—No.

48,999. You kept a certain portion of the land sublet and this house, and another certain portion of land, is that it?—Yes, that was it. It is a sheep walk I hold now.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,000. Did Mr. Vaughan Davies ever complain to you that you sublet a portion of the place?—The sub-tenant was there when the farm was taken from Mr. Davies.

Lord Kenyon.

49,001. Mr. Vaughan Davies did not object to your sub-letting?—The sub-tenant held this land before that.

49,002. I understand that; but Mr. Vaughan Davies never said anything or never allowed you to think that he objected at all?—No, he did not.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,003. Did you take the farm subject to having to repair the house yourself?—The agreement said so. I knew that.

49,004. So that you really went to the farm before you signed the agreement?—Yes.

49,005. And Mr. Davies threatened to turn you out because you were not complying with the terms of the agreement; is that so?—Mr. Davies threatened to turn me out because it was not signed. Here is the letter (handing same):

Corporation Solicitor's Office,
Aberystwith,
September 18th, 1889.

Mr. Phillips, Erglodd.

Dear Sir,

Mr. Vaughan Davies, on his return home has called upon us, and is very much surprised to find that you have not signed the agreement of tenancy of the Sheepwalk taken by you from him, and unless you call here on Monday next to sign the agreement we shall give you notice and take possession of the Sheepwalk and re'et it.

Yours truly,
(Signed) Griffith Jones & Co.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. M. L. Vaughan-Davies recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

See evidence of preceding witness.

49,006. Do you wish to make any statement?—Yes, I should like to. I should like first of all to explain that this farm that has been brought before you is simply a sheep walk, a very small sheep walk, on the mountain, and has been connected with this farm of Erglodd since many years ago. I find that in 1862 it was let to a John Davies, of Erglodd, for 20*l.* He held this farm up to the time of his death in the year 1888, and I think his successor went on for one year or one year and a-half and then it was given up to me. At that time a tenant of mine who lives close by came to me and said that he should like to have this sheep walk, and that he would give me 22*l.* a year for it. The house was down, or nearly down; but he said he would rather be without the house.

49,007. Is that this Mr. Richard Phillips?—No, it is not; that was a tenant of my own. Before I unfortunately settled with him a tenant farmer in my own neighbourhood, Mr. David Rees, the father-in-law of Mr. Richard Phillips, came to me and asked me as a personal favour to let his son-in-law have this farm, as he had been so many years with Erglodd that without it he could not possibly pay his rent there. I, unfortunately for myself, was tempted to do a kind act to Mr. Rees. I said that he might have it. I met Phillips, and I told him that I had been offered by one of my own tenants 22*l.* a year for it, and that the houses were in a very bad state, at least, I had heard that they were; I had not seen them, and that if he liked to have it on those conditions he might have it. He said he would take it and give me the 22*l.* a year. He knew the houses; he told me himself that they were in a terrible state, and I said I had heard it. I had not seen them. He went into the place at the 22*l.* a year rent, and it was a considerable time before I heard anything more about it, but one rent day he told me that the house had tumbled down, and that his sub-tenant had had to leave. I did not know till that time that this sub tenant was not the actual shepherd connected with the place. It turns out that he is only a labourer working some miles off, and therefore it was not essential to the sheep walk that this house should be kept, as the sheep walk was shepherded by another individual living close by. He said I was to allow him 3*l.* a year for this old house; I think that is the amount that he mentioned, which I declined to do. I said I thought from what I had heard about it that the house itself was not worth 3*l.* to buy it right out, much more than giving him 3*l.* a year, but I gave him 10 per cent. back upon his rent for a stated period, so that he should have the benefit of going to the Assessment Committee and getting a reduction there also. I thought that ought to satisfy him, but it did not do so. He said that he must have this amount for this old house, besides the 10 per cent., which I declined to give him. Then came the question, why was he anxious for this old house? I found that with this old house he let certain fields, what they called fields. When I went up to this mountain to see what the field meant, because this is on the Plinlimmon range, I found it was simply nothing but where they had mowed the mountain side. He let these fields, which by the map I have here consists of 16 acres, for 7*l.* 5*s.* to a man called——

49,008. We only want rebutting evidence from you?—I only want to tell you the reason why he wants the money. He lets this field for 7*l.* 5*s.*, which comes to about 9*s.* an acre, for which he pays me 2*s.* That is the object of his keeping on troubling me about this house. I said the farm was worth the 22*l.* a year, because first of all I had been offered it by a man there; and I took the farms that join it. The farm of Blaenclettwrfach is 209 acres, and he pays me 22*l.* a year for it. That is almost in a ring fence. Blaenclettwr fawr, which is unfortunately dovetailing in with another farm, 218 acres (only 9 acres difference) is also 22*l.*, which comes to just 2*s.* an acre.

49,009. What is the size of this Blaenclettwrfach?—209 acres. Then Blaenclettwr fawr, which is unfortunately divided by another person running into the middle of it, and therefore not so valuable, is only 9 acres more, and the man there is perfectly content; in fact, I have been offered more money for that farm, and he gives me 22*l.* a year without a house. Craedy fawr, which belongs to Sir Pryse Pryse, which joins, and which has a house upon it, is the abode of a shepherd who shepherds there two farms of mine for the tenants, and for his acreage, which is 231 acres, he gives 31*l.*; that comes to 2*s.* 9*d.* per acre. This is all in the same body of land, just as if it was on this table. Therefore I did not consider that Phillips had any right to ask me for a greater reduction than I had given him in the 10 per cent.

49,010. I do not think he says he wanted it?—I could not catch it quite. I think he says he asked for a reduction and that I gave him none. I not only gave him 10 per cent., but I gave it him for a stated period. You have had evidence before you of many who have only now and then given abatements, so that the tenants could not go to the Assessment Committee and get a reduction of rates as well. I consider I met the case justly. But I wish to emphasise my remarks at Tregaron, if you will allow me, and to point out to you what I said then—what an immense benefit it would be to landlords if a court that I called there a land court——

49,011. We heard all that before?—All I want to say is that I would like to go to a land court in a matter like this in preference to coming here.

49,012. I want to ask you a question or two upon this man's evidence. Did you promise him that you would rebuild his place?—No, I did not.

49,013. You never promised him?—No, because he told me distinctly when we talked it out that it was impossible to carry building stuff on to the mountains.

49,014. He says in his evidence here: "Whenever I paid my rent I always asked Mr. "Davies to repair or rebuild, and he always "promised to do so, but he never did it." Do you deny that?—I did not do so.

49,015. Then he says, "By 1892 my tenant "was obliged to leave the dwelling-house and "outbuildings having become too dangerous for "any man or animal to live in them." How far off is this place from where you live?—It is, I should think, 10 or 11 miles or 12 miles.

49,016. Do you mean to say that you did not know what state this place was in?—I did not.

49,017. How is it you had not gone down to see it?—Because it was in the hands of John Davies, who used to come down and pay his rent every year, and never made any trouble; he never told me about the state of the house, and I did not know what state it was in till his death.

49,018. Do not you think it is a landlord's duty to know what state his estate is in?—I admit it is, but this is very high up in the mountain. The tenant never found fault, never complained, and therefore I did not think it necessary to go up there to find out the state of that house.

49,019. You did not think it necessary to pay it a visit?—No, I did not.

49,020. With regard to this mowing that you say was let off—the lower part of the mountain land—that is generally what a tenant mows in a mountain farm for his hay, such as it is?—Yes.

49,021. Just enough to keep him through the winter?—No. This is what the man kept his cattle on, because he had not the right to go on to the mountain where Phillips keeps his sheep. Phillips has the whole walk to himself. This is 15 acres separated from the mountain.

49,022. Which he lets off to the man occupying the cottage?—Which he lets off to the man occupying the cottage.

49,023. That for a mountain farmer, I think you will admit, is of considerably greater value with regard to that sheep walk than it would if it was a lowland farm. That is his hay for the winter?—That is so.

49,024. It is of more value than the sheep walk?—Exactly.

49,025. The sheep walk would not represent 2*s.* an acre?—Up there they do.

49,026. That mowing is the most valuable part of the farm?—Oh, undoubtedly it is.

49,027. This is your agreeement, I think. (Handing agreement to the witness)?—This is a very old one. I think so at least. I have not got many agreements, to tell you the truth.

49,028. This man Phillips took the farm in 1888?—In 1888.

49,029. Anyhow, then it is since the Ground Game Act of 1880. I do not know whether it is since the Agricultural Holdings Act. This man said in his evidence that this was a copy of his agreement. He took the farm in 1888. Do you notice this clause in it, that if the premises are sold in any year prior to the month of July the tenancy is to expire in the Michaelmas following?—These mountain farms were then in the hands of the solicitors to be sold.

49,030. Do you think that is a good clause to put into an agreement?—No, I do not think so.

49,031. Considering what is expressly said in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I quite agree with your Lordship, that it is not a right one.

49,032. It is specially inserted in writing in this agreement?—Exactly so; it has been put in by a solicitor.

49,033. Would it not have been wiser to have prevented your solicitor from putting in what is a void clause?—Undoubtedly.

49,034. There are various other clauses here. There are some duties. The tenant has to provide fowls, geese, and eggs, and so on?—They are never enforced; they are not even in the agreement now. They are scratched out from the last agreement.

49,035. Also that the tenant shall have dogs?—Those are all gone now. You have got an ancient agreement.

49,036. Well, this is this tenant's agreement. However, I am glad to hear that you do not approve of the clause?—I do not.

Mr. Seebohm.

49,037. Then we understand that he went into the farm with the expectation that it might be sold?—Yes; because when he told me he was dissatisfied about this house, I offered to sell him the farm, and also to take it off his hands at once if he thought it was at any loss.

49,038. But when he entered in 1888, and took that agreement, was it with the understanding that the estate was probably to be sold in the autumn?—I could not say in the autumn, but it was then I wished to sell it, as I wish to sell those farms now.

49,039. Mr. Richard Phillips asks this question: "Did not you tell me about building an "iron house"?—We were talking over the building of that house, and he and Mr. Rees agreed that it was perfectly impossible to build an ordinary stone house, and I said to him, "If "I could only get you an iron house, and put it "up there, I would," because I wished to meet him, if he really wanted it. I asked them in London for what price an iron house could be got up there, and an iron house up there I found would cost about 200*l.*, and I said I did not think the place was worth it. So I tried to meet him in every way I could.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

49,040. You are agent to Lord Lisburne, are you not?—Yes.

49,041. You have been agent for 25 years?—Yes.

49,042. Have you a statement that you can read?—Yes, my Lord, I have a statement I can read, if your Lordship wishes it. It is a short statement, but I can enlarge as I go along. I am and have been agent for the Earl of Lisburne for over 25 years, and I might state that I was practically trained for the business of a land agent on a large estate of over 50,000*l.* rental. I went in both for the cultivation, the management, and the valuation of land, and also into the improvement of land by draining, fencing, and road making, and also the erection of buildings. I laid off all drains, did all the levelling myself, drew the plans, and made out the specifications. In 1868, when I left that estate, the tenants on the estate gave me a testimonial in the shape of a gold cup and 200*l.* to speed me on my way, when I came to assume the management of Lord Lisburne's estate. The acreage of the Crosswood estates is over 40,000 acres, and is made up as follows: arable land, about 15,600 acres; rough pasture and mountain land, mountain sheep walk, about 19,000; commons, somewhere about 2,500; and plantations about 2,900.

49,043. Of those commons he is only the lord of the manor?—Yes, and his tenants principally graze upon them. There are 132 farm holdings, 140 small holdings, 69 cottages and gardens, 24 small lettings—very small—and 44 leaseholds on the estate. Of late years there have been considerable sales, but that is the estate as it now stands and comprised in the 40,000 acres. The estate lies in the lordships or manors of Penarth, Myfenydd, Yspytty Ystwyth, Croyddin, and Blaenaeron. The Earl of Lisburne is lord of the manors or lordships of Penarth, Yspytty, and Blaenaeron. Leet courts are held by the agent in the different manors as steward of the manor. Sheep walks, when adjacent to farms, are let along with them, and valued as such. The tenants of the various farms have the exclusive right of pasturage; where they are not adjacent to the farm they are still exclusive pasturages, and the boundaries are known. The sheep belonging to the various farms are kept on these separate plots. There is no difficulty in arriving at a valuation, because they are valued just according to their acreage, and also according to the number of stock that they carry. Enclosure would be beneficial so far as it would improve the condition of sheep farming, because as it stands at present, the want of fences is found to be a very great detriment indeed. Large consolidated estates have advantages over scattered ones, and I may add that that is the reason that Lord Lisburne has been selling mostly outside and buying more in the internal part of the estate. Resident landlords are preferable to absentee ones, not but what an absentee landlord may take a great interest in his tenantry and be a very good landlord but a landlord who is resident and going over his estate knows what is going on, and naturally takes a greater interest in the welfare of his tenants. I have found that differences in language have no adverse influence on the mutual relations between landlord and tenant. The entry to farms is generally on the 29th September; they are yearly tenancies almost always. Tenants prefer yearly agreements to leases I have found, because they are not tied down to their farms in the same way as they would be by leases when bad times come round. No material difference in condition of yearly tenants and leaseholders, as far as I can see, exist to any great extent. There have been comparatively few changes on the Crosswood estate during the time that I have known it. In cases of resuming occupation for any purpose whatever, compensation or allowances are made. As to agreements, I put in a copy of the agreement in force on the estate. The penalising clauses are only to protect against bad farming and bad farmers. They are rarely if ever enforced. A copy is always given to the tenants, and the contents, when necessary, are explained. As to the rent, the average rent of upland or sheep walk is generally from 1*s.* to 1*s.* 6*d.* an acre, on the lowland it varies from 5*s.* up to 16*s.*; perhaps, in a few cases it may be a little more, but in very few—very isolated cases. Tenants are generally selected for good character, skill, and the amount of capital that they possess according to the size of the farm that they desire to take. The rents on the Crosswood estate were revised in 1874. Permanent reductions have been given since where required; each individual case has been considered on its own merits. Abatements have been given since 1885, and notice of such is always given to the tenants when the notice of the audit is sent out to them. The abatements have been these: for the half of 1885 10 per cent. was given; 1886 10 per cent.; 1887 10 per cent.; 1888 12½ per cent.; 1889 15 per cent.; the half of 1892 10 per cent.; and the whole of 1893 10 per cent. The whole of the abatements amounted to 7,127*l.* They were given indiscriminately to all the tenants; latterly not to small tenants below, say, from 8*l.* to 10*l.*, but to all above that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,044. What was that last statement of yours?—The abatements were given to all the tenants on the estate except during the last year or year and a-half, only to those tenants above 8*l.* or 10*l.*; the smaller tenants did not receive them, it was mostly the agricultural tenants.

Lord Kenyon.

49,044A. When are the rents collected?—The rents are collected three months after they are due. The question has been asked whether the preferential claim of the landlord is beneficial or not. I fancy it is beneficial; it allows the landlord to be more lenient with his tenantry, and perhaps to encourage a man who has not sufficient capital to take a farm that may be a little beyond his means. Tithes, land tax, chief rent (in most cases chief rent is redeemed), and rates are paid by the tenant; income-tax by the tenant in the first place, and allowed out of each half-year's rent. Rates have increased of late years to some extent, I should say nearly one-fourth, especially in parishes where they have got the school board; the sanitary rate has also tended to increase, and a little increase on the highway rate. In some parishes where there is no school board, the rates have not varied to a very great extent. The size of the farms varies from about 60 to 200 acres. No consolidation to any great extent has taken place, except in cases where the landlord being very fond of farming, thinks it is an encouragement to his tenantry to have a good deal in his own hands, and to farm it well. Subdivision near the villages would be a benefit if care were taken not to injure the large holdings that lie adjacent to villages, that is, farms that run into villages, the lower land is generally the best, and if you deprive the tenants of the low and best land, and leave them with the inferior, some injury may be done to them. Farmers have got to live by their farms, and it would almost seem as if they required the first consideration. I generally find that quite as much practical skill is displayed on small as on large farms, but the latter have the advantage in bad times; in small farms the income is really just enough to bring up a man's family, and in good times he can do that pretty easily. On small farms in ordinary years a man and his family can live in comparative comfort, but when bad times occur—and I am sorry to say they have occurred rather more frequently of late—they feel the pinch, in my opinion, more than they do on the larger farms, on larger farms, by economising to a certain extent, either in labour or otherwise, a man can meet the times, but on small farms they have scarcely got that chance. I find that in later years less land is generally broken up from pasture. There has been an increase during the last 20 years in growing root crops. The causes may be set down to low price of grain, the good price of stock, especially in the seventies and the beginning of the eighties, and the knowledge that farmers have now acquired of the value of green crops for wintering their cattle. The permanent improvements, buildings, materials for fences, drainage, gates, and embanking is done by the landlord. The tenants assist to some extent in the subdivision of farms by bearing part of the expense of subdivision banks, and opening of drains, the landlord finding the pipes. The compensation to the tenant is by agreement. There is a schedule of allowances attached to the agreement; that is principally in substitution of schedule 1 of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Very few have applied for consent to improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Act. The green crops, the manure, and the hay, is taken at a valuation; the permanent improvements are valued according to the schedule, and also any rights or liabilities. I may explain, too, that at one time in the Crosswood agreement the tenant was bound to leave all the straw for the incoming tenant at a fair price, and also to leave any manure that was not used without being paid for it. In 1872 or 1873 that was altered; they made an application that they should be allowed to sell if they could not come to terms with the incoming tenant, especially for the corn crops, and that was readily granted, because the landlord thought that the tenant was quite entitled to make the most he could. A farm was not likely to suffer, because the incoming tenant, if a good tenant, would be sure to see that he purchased sufficient for his requirements, both for the stock and for the farm, during the winter. The manure was not paid for at that time, that was rather a point of grievance, now it is all paid for by valuation by the incoming tenant. A question has been asked about the compensation for general improvements. I wish to notice one case that bears very much upon that, especially from the tenant's point of view. In 1878 the farm of Glanystwith, on the Croswood estate, was under a lease to a tenant, who found it necessary to give it up. There were eight years of the lease then to run. I advised Lord Lisburne to take it off the tenant's hand, and to relet it to a new tenant, and in the event of any increase of rent being got, to allow the incoming tenant the whole of it during the time that the lease would run. The rent of the farm was about 302*l.* The tenant had farmed it very well, and it was relet to a new and a good tenant for 345*l.* In reletting the farm I stipulated that 350*l.* should be paid down in one sum by the incoming to the outgoing tenant, and that he should hold the farm for the eight years at the old rent, and this was carried out. The 350*l.*, for which I produce the receipt, was handed over to the representative of the old tenant. In connexion with this I might mention another case that happened, to show that people sometimes will offer a large sum for their holdings. In the case of a recent sale, one man had a leasehold at a corner of the property, and he had built good business premises upon it, and made his property very valuable. When the estate was advertised for sale it was decided to put it up in one lot, but Lord Lisburne agreed to make this man an offer of his leasehold which was at one corner, if he would make an offer of a certain sum for it. He made an offer of 300*l.*, and in considering the matter I told Lord Lisburne that he had better accept it, but that the man had offered too much, and his Lordship very willingly agreed to give the property for 200*l.* and return the 100*l.* to the offerer—to the leaseholder who offered that for the freehold. There is no right recognised, generally, of the outgoing tenant—no tenant right recognised. The landlord prefers to settle; that is, the incoming tenant is not allowed to pay any sum as far as it can be helped to the outgoing tenant for any interest

he may think he may have in the holding. The landlord prefers to settle with the outgoer, also with the incomer, and the landlord, or incoming tenant, has the option, generally, of purchasing the sheep upon the land at valuation in the usual way. The game is preserved, and I have not known of a great desire to adopt the Ground Game Act. Where rabbits are troublesome liberty is given to kill by ferreting. No cases of claim for damages have been brought before me that have not been settled. The tenants are not expected to beat when the landlord goes out to shoot, but I have always found that they like to turn out to meet their landlord and to show him good sport also. The law of trespass, as far as I have found it, is satisfactory. In this open country, with a good deal of mining going on, one requires to be very lenient. There is a great desire to make footpaths, near cuts to work, and so forth; but with the exception of that, there is no great hardship experienced as to trespass. Railway rates are very high and prohibitive, but the experience in this part of the country has been that the opening of it up by the railway that runs through the middle of this district has been productive of very great good indeed. Formerly tenants would require to carry lime from 15, 20, to 25 miles, and then in disposing of their produce they were dependent entirely upon the local fairs, which only took place at stated times, and if they missed selling at one fair they had generally to hold on until the next, or trust to someone coming round to buy it. The railway has changed all that, and has encouraged the formation of monthly fairs, now, if the tenant misses one fair he generally tries to manage it at the next, with only a month intervening. In the matter of insurance, I do not think that tenants insure their stock as fully as they ought to do. In the agreement you will notice that the tenant is bound to pay the premium of insurance against fire, but on the Crosswood estate the owner found that the tenants disliked this imposition, although it was only a small one, and for many years he has paid the premium himself. There have been considerable sales, especially in 1888 and 1890. A good many of the sitting tenants bought their farms; some bought at a fairly low price, others a little higher; none of them very much out of the way. The tenants, their wives, and their families, work very industriously and hard. I have generally found that a tenant who manages his farm fairly well is able to bring up his children, to give them a good education, and to start them fairly well in life. The ploughmen and boys on farms are lodged on the farm premises, general labourers in cottages, but my experience has been that the allowing of cottages to go down has not been as a matter of convenience or to save rebuilding, but because there was a great disposition on the part of the tenants five-and-twenty years ago, when I came into the country, to have the farm servants in the house. There was no great encouragement given to labourers to live upon the place. If a labourer lived on a farm he did not get constant employment, and he generally got into grief between his neighbours if he went to one farmer in preference to another. The consequence was there was no great encouragement given, by giving work all the year round and so have a regular labouring population. In this country also, when the mines were in full swing labour was pretty plentiful, especially at the time when it was wanted, such as in harvest time. The families of miners themselves generally prefer to live scattered about over the country, and they were taught to assist the farmer in his labour when they were wanted. That, I am sorry to say, has very much altered of late years; the mining interest has gone down, in fact it has almost disappeared, consequently the miners and others who did the labour have had to look elsewhere; they have gone to the south, to other places where they get constant work and good wages, and without the south to go to I do not know what would become of them. The accommodation is not so good as it ought to be in all cases, but it has been very much improved during the last 20 years. So far as I understand the servants take their meals in the kitchen, and generally sleep in the house. Formerly you used to find them, and I daresay they are found in some cases yet, to, sleep in the outhouses, such as stable lofts and what not, but that is in a great measure disappearing. The landlords are doing their utmost to improve the accommodation of the farm-houses so as to let the servants as well as the farmer and his family be properly put up. As for cottage accommodation, where there is a demand for it landlords are generally willing to provide it, but there is no inducement to provide cottages if they are allowed to fall into disuse and to get into disrepair for want of being occupied. They generally, where placed upon the farms, are held by the labourer from the farmer. The depression in this country has been more or less varied. As far as I remember, it was most acutely felt in 1885 and 1886, from that time it has been more or less intermittent. During the last two years it has been pretty acute. The causes to which I would attribute depression are bad seasons, low prices, and small demand. The bad seasons aggravate the matter in this way, that they do not allow the farmer to have sufficient to bring through his stock properly in the winter, to keep them in good condition until he can find a ready sale. He is, too often, when he is short of keep, obliged to sell at whatever he can get for them. That consequently keeps down the price. The remedy would be improved cultivation. I am afraid that in many cases there is an insufficiency of capital for the size of the farms that are taken by many of the tenants. That they strive to do well there is no doubt, but hampered as they are in that way they can neither attend to the cultivation nor the management of stock as they ought to do. A better class of stock, wherever that is looked to, always pays the farmer better. Even at the present time fairly good cattle bring a fair price, while poor cattle are almost unsaleable. It would be a great thing for the farmer if the cost of transit were cheapened, and that the local rates, which press very heavily upon the land, should be re-arranged, that is, that personal property should bear more of local taxation. The mutual relations between the landlord and the tenant during my experience has been friendly under all circumstances. There have been little disagreements and misunderstandings, nothing but what has been settled in a most amicable way, and the relations are such as ought to exist between a contented tenantry and the landlord. In good times this is always found to be so, and it is only when bad times press hard upon a man that anything is felt to be out of joint at all. A large sum has been spent on improvements on the Crosswood estate during the last 25 years. I stated in the summary 38,000*l.* had been spent in 25 years, but I find that the money had been spent on the farms that had been sold had been omitted; so that the actual expenditure on improvements during the last 25 years has been 42,760*l.* The proportion of that to the rental would be from 15 to 20 per cent. In addition to that, as I have stated, the landlord has given wood to assist in repairing fences to a very considerable extent, and has also paid the insurance and done other little things of which no account is taken. Many old families are living on the Crosswood estate. Some of them have been there from 200 years downward. Running over the list as they stand at present, I make out that the number of old families who have been for 200 years and downwards are 35; the number of farms where a son or son-in-law has succeeded to his father in the present farm is 51. The number of tenants' sons who have farms on the estate besides their fathers is 14. That is out of 138 tenancies. In speaking about the relations of landlord and tenant I may say that during the time I have been on the Crosswood estate I have never found that the fact that I could not speak Welsh was at all detrimental to me in being able to understand the wants of the tenantry. I made it a point after I was placed there not to interfere with the rents at all for five years at least, unless from circumstances over which I had no control, that is, change of tenancy, and so on. I did not go about to see how I could raise the rent. In 1874 the revaluation took place, that was when the late earl succeeded to the property. I may say that the present earl is the third earl whom I have served. There was no revaluation when the present earl succeeded, about six years ago. There has been every desire to treat the tenants with the greatest leniency. I have never in any case, I think, except in two, where it resulted from bankruptcy, resorted to distraint to recover rent. There are practically no arrears upon the estate. I may mention that the sum in arrear at present is 57*l.* The arrears when I took the management in 1868 were 1,600*l.* I have found the greatest disposition on the part of the landlord to give land for chapels at a merely nominal rate; there has been no difficulty experienced as far as I have known. The landlord has also endeavoured to assist his tenants by keeping good entire horses so as to improve the breed of horses, and in various other ways has shown that he sympathises with his tenants in all their difficulties.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

49,045. Is this the ordinary agreement from year to year?—Yes, except for small tenants; for small tenants there is a shorter one.

49,046. It is rather a lengthy document, is it not?—Yes, rather; it is settled by the legal profession, and we agents are bound to have from whom assistance.

49,047. I mean it is difficult for a monoglot Welshman to understand if it is not translated?—I am afraid they do not read it very often.

49,048. There is one thing here I see: "Pay "the said earl an additional rent equal to 5 per "cent. per annum for the amount of any outlay "which the said earl may incur"?—That is never exacted.

49,049. Would it not be better cut out then? Well, in dealing with trustees of settled estates at that time it was perhaps considered advisable to have it.

49,050. You say they like your scale, they use it in the second schedule?—Not to the extent I should like to see. That scale was adopted in 1872 or 1873. Before I came to this country I was always used to the system of 19 years leases, where, when a tenant took a place he was granted a 19 years lease, and at once set to work to lay out as much money on the farm as he possibly could, so that he might have as long a time as possible to recoup himself for what he had laid out. When I came here and found they were all yearly tenancies I said, "Why don't you improve and cultivate "your farms a little better?" They said, "Oh, "we are afraid that the rent may be raised; we "are afraid we shall be turned out of our farms." That was all quite new to me. I may tell you that I distinctly refused, except in a very few instances, to use a notice to quit. Then I suggested to the owner, Lord Lisburne, that he should attach a schedule of allowances so as to induce his tenants to drain and improve, and I explained to the tenants, "If you do this, this "will give you fixity of tenure, as far as my "experience of the country goes, for I do not "think there are many landlords who can afford "to encourage the tenants to lay out money and "to incur a good bill for compensation under "these clauses. If you lay out money to any "extent, then compensation will be extended "accordingly, if you are willing to take ad-"vantage of it this will cover that expenditure." To a certain extent it was worked, but not to the extent I should like to see it.

49,051. I suppose you drew this out to suit this particular part of the country?—Yes, my Lord.

49,052. I see a clause here as to keeping buildings in repair; I suppose, as a matter of fact, you keep them in repair generally?—Yes, that was the custom in the country. It is recognised that where repairs are done to any extent by the farmer on his own holding he receives some compensation, but up to within a few years ago there were very few claims made under that head. It was generally found that dilapidations would cover anything that would be allowed except in very large cases.

49,053. Have you any Scotch experience?—All my previous experience was in Scotland.

49,054. In regard to this preferential claim, do not they sometimes exact beforehand rent in Scotland?—Yes, they do.

49,055. There is no preferential claim there, is there?—No, not now.

49,056. You say that in your experience of both countries the preferential claim is a good one?—I do; I think it is much better for the tenant.

49,057. You think it is much better for the tenant?—I think it meets a sentiment that they would not like to pay rent beforehand, for instance.

49,058. That is exacted in Scotland I understand, is it?—To some extent; not in all cases. It is put in the leases, but they get a certain time to pay.

49,059. It is a sort of safeguard, I suppose?—As a safeguard entirely.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,060. Just following up Lord Kenyon's question with regard to preferential claim, you think it benefits the tenant?—I think so; it does not act prejudicially to him.

49,061. In your statement you said that the tenants suffer from a want of capital?—I am afraid that is so.

49,062. Do not you think that the preferential claim for rent is responsible for that state of things?—To a certain extent.

49,063. Then you will admit that practically the tenant is worse off?—No, I do not; where a tenant takes a farm I do not think if the preferential claim were done away with it would bring capital to him. If he did not possess capital the mere fact of the preferential claim not being there would not give him capital.

49,064. Of course, if times improved after he took the farm it would be all right, but when times get worse he is worse off?—There is no doubt of it.

49,065. And inasmuch as times have been bad of late he has fared worse?—There is no doubt the depression is felt in that way.

49,066. And another thing, has not the preferential claim for rent a tendency to quicken competition; we hear that higher rents are the result of competition?—To a certain extent it might; I would not like to say that it would or would not.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

49,067. When you demand a rent in advance as a rule you would have to take less rent; that would be the case?—No, not necessarily so; perhaps it would not make so much difference in practice, because after a rent is paid once it only occurs every six months.

49,068. But would not you require some sort of security if you wanted rent in advance?—No.

49,069. But you would be more particular in the selection of your tenant?—Certainly.

49,070. Well, I take it that you would be a little more discriminate about your tenant; you would not be so eager to get the highest bidder?—Oh, no, it does not follow at all; we try to be discriminating and to take the best tenant, but we do not take the highest bidder.

49,071. But you would be more careful, would you not, if it was necessary?—That is what I say, that it does to a certain extent allow a landlord to take a tenant who perhaps has not the capital that he ought to have to work the farm that he takes.

49,072. What is that?—The preferential claim of rent allows a landlord to take a man as a tenant whom he perhaps has a suspicion has not got the amount of capital to work fully the farm that he is taking; in many cases that is done, we know we have a doubt as to the man having the capability to manage, still, he is an industrious man, and if I find a man with a good pair of hands, and an industrious man, even if he is a hundred pound or two short, I would as soon give him a chance of farm, as a man who probably had a hundred pounds or two more and did not know how to use it.

49,073. Practically you are admitting what my contention has been all along?—I fail to see it.

49,074. You say that you would be more particular; at least, you would be less discriminating when the preferential claim does exist?—Precisely; I say it does allow the landlord to run a little risk, that results, I take it, to the tenant's advantage.

49,075. At any rate it has worked badly in the tenants' interest?—There is a doubt.

49,076. I will ask you a question, you can do as you like whether you reply to it or not. Probably you read the evidence of Mr. Brigstocke?—Yes, I believe I did.

49,077. Did you remember that he made a statement to this effect, that he condemned the practice of landlords paying their agents by commission?—Yes, I saw that; I do condemn it too, I quite agree with him.

49,078. So we may take it that you are not paid by commission?—I am not.

49,079. It may disabuse the minds of certain tenants who may think that you are?—Yes.

49,080. Which do you think, in the interest of agriculture generally, is the best, a Michaelmas or a Lady Day entry?—I believe at Michaelmas, there are fewer complications at Michaelmas, there are almost no tillages, and as there is no wheat-growing to any great extent the crops are severed from the ground, th e outgoing tenant can sell the crop, and the incoming tenant takes the hay at valuation. The green crops are taken at valuation, at least, the swedes, the turnips, and he gets time to remove his potatoes.

49,081. That is to say, if you bind the outgoing tenant to sell his crops at valuation, of course?—We do not bind the incoming tenant to buy them, so that the outgoing tenant is bound to get rid of them in some way.

49,082. Does it occur that the crops on a farm are consumed on the premises?—It might.

49,083. Well, that would not be good in the interests of agriculture, would it?—I generally find a good tenant takes care that he buys sufficient to carry him through the winter. That again, perhaps, may be easier upon an incoming tenant. I found in this country the system of valuations was carried to a most iniquitous extent, the outgoing tenant tried to get more than the value, and the incoming tenant generally offered less. That was why I advised the owner if he could not agree privately with the incoming tenant to allow the outgoing tenant to sell openly, and make what he could. Valuations were abused to a very great extent to my personal knowledge.

49,084. Of course, under the Lady Day entry there would not be so much valuation, that is, of hay and straw; it would be consumed very much on the premises?—No, but the tenant gets in at the Michaelmas entry at a better time for carrying on his work.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,085. I am sorry I was not here to hear the whole of your evidence, but I notice that in 1874 this estate was revalued?—Yes.

49,086. By whom was it valued?—By myself.

49,087. You are a professional valuer as well, I suppose?—I have always thought I was. I find that sometimes I cannot agree with others; they do not perhaps consider me so. The estate where I was trained was a large mineral and agricultural estate, and I had all the valuations, and also all the valuations as between the mineral and the agricultural tenants for damages, which gave me a considerable amount of experience.

49,088. We have repeatedly had the opinion of tenants that they would like to have a voice in the valuation; what do you say to that?—Oh, I generally do it, and talk the matter over with them.

49,089. It has been urged that the tenant should name a man to value on his behalf, and the landlord likewise name a man; what do you say to that?—It might work; you would require a referee then in some cases.

49,090. Very possibly, but do not you think you would get at a fair rent in that way?—In many cases there would be no difficulty in coming to an arrangement; but in some cases I have said to the tenant, "You come along with me; you say this farm is too high; "put your own value upon the different fields

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

"as we go along"; and the tenant has come along with me, and put his value, and after we have got over the whole of the farm, and sat down to compute the rent, he has found that he offered more than I have been asking.

49,091. You generally find no difficulty?—No difficulty whatever.

49,092. With regard to abatements, do you make any abatements in rents?—Yes; abatements have been given in 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, and the half of 1892, and the whole of 1893.

49,093. Do you consider the present state of agriculture most depressed?—There is no doubt of it. We are living in the hope that it may improve. If it does not improve, if it holds on the same as it has done the last two years without any improvement, it will require a great deal of consideration between landlord and tenant.

49,094. What abatement did you make the last two years?—Ten per cent. I will read over the list.

49,095. No; you need not trouble to do that. Do you consider that sufficient to meet the present depression?—Well, it is a difficult question. It is more a mark of sympathy that the landlord makes, until he sees how the times are going to run.

49,096. Do you think that tenants can go on on these estates at that rate of abatement if times continue as they are now?—Yes, I believe so.

49,097. We had in the other court to-day a complaint that out of 25 cottages under Lord Lisburne there are now only five, the others having gone down?—I explained that. That principally arises from the failure in the mining districts.

49,098. Tenants cease to live there?—Yes, and there are many cottages now standing empty round about Crosswood. It is essentially a mining district, and, with the failure of the mining industry, the labour decreased, and there was no demand for cottages.

49,099. Have you built any new cottages since?—Yes, several, especially about the home farm, where considerable labour is employed. Lord Lisburne farms over 1,000 acres, and he employs a considerable amount of labour; in fact, were it not for that, very little labour would be employed in the parish at all.

49,100. Do you consider that it is well, in the interest of the landlord, and of the tenant, and of the labourer, that the labourer should keep a cow or two?—Oh, certainly.

49,101. You have had a great deal of that sort of experience in Scotland, have you not?—Yes, considerable.

49,102. Most of the labourers there keep cows?—It has been more so within the last 25 years than it was previously, but most of the labourers had that accommodation.

49,103. Is it general in this country?—Well, it is becoming more so, and the demand for allotments is increasing. In the case of Lord

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

Lisburne all his labourers on his home farm have grass for a cow.

49,104. Do you think it would tend to keep the labourers on the land instead of running into the towns?—I do not say that it would do that; but it would make those labourers who liked to remain in the country more comfortable. It would improve their condition.

49,105. Are these cottages let by the landlord or by the tenant?—Generally by the tenant.

Mr. Grove.

49,106. Have you had many claims for damages by game?—No.

49,107. I think you said there was no desire on the part of the tenants to adopt the Ground Game Act. Was that your view?—Several of them do exercise the right to kill, especially where rabbits are troublesome. All round about the preserves they are generally protected from damage by, as far as possible, erecting wire fences—wire netting.

49,108. We have heard of cases, I do not say it is so on your estate, but on others, where the tenants do not avail themselves of the Act for fear that they should offend their landlord or agent. Is that so in your case, do you think?—I do not know. I do not think a great number of tenants avail themselves of it. I think they are very desirous to please their landlord, to show him good sport; I do not think they are very much afraid of the agent.

49,109. Then as to railway rates, do you complain of the local railway rates being high?—Very much; on the other hand, the advantage of having a railway is almost incalculable.

49,110. But are they above the legal maximum that the railway companies can charge?—I believe they are.

49,111. I suppose you know that the Board of Trade have published a small book at 1*s.*, which gives all the particulars of what the railway companies can charge for everything. The whole thing is contained in that?—I am not aware of that, but it is almost hopeless to attempt to tackle a railway company.

49,112. I think we shall bring them round gradually. Then you said a short time ago there were a good many farms put up for sale? Yes.

49,113. And that several of what I suppose we may call the sitting tenants bought them?—Yes.

49,114. Do you think they bought them with money they had saved from farming, or did they borrow money on purpose to buy them?—I suspect a good many had to borrow a considerable part of the purchase money; they have told me so.

49,115. And you think that at the present moment, at any rate, the depression is so great that it is just as much as they can do to go on, I suppose?—I believe so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,116. When you have agreements like this do you give a copy to each tenant when he comes to sign it?—Yes.

49,117. Free of cost?—They pay the stamp; no other charge.

Mr. Seebohm.

49,118. May I ask whether on your estate the custom prevails of letting farms go on from father to son for many generations?—Oh, yes.

49,119. Would a large number of your tenants be in that position?—Well, there are about 35 whose families have been on the estate for about 200 years.

49,120. And you are very anxious to continue that?—Very anxious. I find the old tenants quite as good as we can get.

49,121. If a son wishes to succeed to his father's tenancy you would strain a point rather to keep him on?—Yes.

49,122. Then I would ask you, in connexion with that, is not that an instance where you find the preferential claim the most valuable?—Yes, no doubt of it.

49,123. It is not so much when you are dealing with freshcomers, but it is when you want to protect yourself in order to enable a young fellow following his father to work his way up on the same holding?—Yes, that is so.

49,124. I did not quite understand the case you mentioned of the compensation you gave to a leaseholder when the property was sold—a leaseholder who had built good business premises upon the farm?—That was at one corner, and this estate was to be put up in one lot. This man had built a dwelling-house, a shop, and outpremises, and made it very valuable.

49,125. With your written consent?—Oh, yes, he had a lease. He was told that if he would make a fair offer this would be cut off from the property that was for sale, so that he might acquire the freehold of his place where he had built his house. He offered 300*l.*, and, on consideration, I advised his Lordship that the tenant had offered too much, and he returned 100*l.* and the tenant had the place for 200*l.*

49,126. Do you think that in the matter of these sales there are generally cases of difficulty, and of almost injustice, almost necessarily—people who have moral rights, but not legal rights?—It might be. To a certain case I daresay that does exist.

49,127. Do you think that any extension of the Agricultural Holdings Act would meet that case?—I think if the Agricultural Holdings Act were better understood and more adopted it would meet all purposes.

49,128. But in case, for instance, where a man has put up a building on his farm, and the landlord has given him the timber for doing it, of course both parties in that case look forward to a continued tenancy, and if the tenancy is suddenly ended before the tenant has reaped the advantage for any long period, do you not think the law ought to give some sort of compensation?—Certainly.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

49,129. But under the present Schedule I. it does not?—No, it does not.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,130. I am sorry I have not heard all your evidence, but you said just now that you experienced no difficulty in regard to language?—No, I do not think I have.

49,131. Do you think that is a sufficient assurance that some of the tenants do not feel a difficulty?—I cannot say. Possibly they may.

49,132. You see there are two sides to that question, are there not?—But I stand in this position, that after 25 years experience I can almost detect the feelings of the tenant myself. I do not trust entirely to an interpreter.

See 48,648–9. 49,133. Did you hear a tenant farmer who was examined here this morning who overheard a conversation between a monoglot Welsh farmer and his agent; the agent said one thing, a woodman, who acted as intermediary, said something else to the landlord, and he translated differently again the tenant's reply?—Yes, I heard him say so.

49,134. We have no reason to doubt the truth of that?—I have only to remark that the agent was not very sharp if he could not detect it. It might be practised.

49,135. But it is conceivable that agents might not all be very sharp. I mean it is a thing that is very possible, is it not?—I think if they have their hearts in their work they generally lay themselves out to understand the wants and requirements of those with whom they have to deal.

49,136. We have heard it suggested many times that some of the tenants are not very sharp?—They are very fair.

49,137. I do not think that quite covers the possibility of there being a hardship on account of the language?—No, I do not think so. Of course you must take care that you have got a proper interpreter. I do not think that any man, unless he was a very great rogue, would try to interpret wrongly. I do not see what interest he would have.

49,138. Well, I should not like to be very much in the hands of any interpreter, I must say. Now, this is a very formidable agreement in point of length and so on. Is this explained to the tenants in Welsh; those who cannot read English?—Oh, yes, all the necessary parts.

49,139. I am not quite sure that I follow you there, because I cannot at a glance see what is necessary and what is not?—I will give you one instance. After I assumed the management of the estates I wanted to send out a notice to the tenantry and I thought the better way would be to have it written out properly in Welsh and send it out. I had that done. I had it put in proper form in Aberystwyth—put in very good Welsh—and it was sent out. Several of the tenants came to me to have this document explained and I was positively told that if I had sent it out in English they would have gone to parties who would have explained it to them, and it would have been much better than sending it out in Welsh. I never tried to send out anything in Welsh afterwards.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

49,140. Well, there is a good deal of explaining required in the case of a legal document?—That was not a legal document; it was a simple notice. I believe the difficulty might arise in this way, that it was not put in colloquial Welsh, which the people generally spoke.

49,141. There is the difficulty of an interpreter again?—Yes.

49,142. Then you say the tenants are not afraid of you. Are you quite sure of that?—I have a strong suspicion that I am.

49,143. What applications have you had for compensation for damage done by game?—I do not recollect any in particular.

49,144. You never have any scarcely?—Scarcely any.

49,145. Do you ever have to allow any?—Yes, to a certain extent.

49,146. I heard this morning, if I am not mistaken, a tenant from your estate, or one who had been on the estate, I forget which, saying that it is the impression of a good many of the tenants that they dare not avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—It might be so, it is not from any experience that they have had.

49,147. I think it has been said here this morning, if I am not mistaken, that such is very much the impression of many of them?—I have not heard a desire generally expressed by the tenants to exercise the right.

49,148. But I think we heard complaints of the game being very heavy on some parts of the estate. With regard to compensation on leaving, have you ever had cases of tenants leaving?—Not where there was any difficulty. I explained that with regard to the haulage of materials until late years it was not considered necessary that that should be allowed. The application was generally not made, but great care was taken not to be oppressive to the tenant, and he was let off for any dilapidations which might have covered that.

49,149. But with regard to claims from the tenants, have you had any difficulty with them?—None whatever, I have had no disagreement with the tenants neither in cases of leaving or otherwise.

See 47,679–47,715. 49,150. But how do you get over the difficulty, I do not quite understand. A man told us yesterday that he applied for compensation for unexhausted improvements of some kind, improvements to buildings; I think the sum was 50*l.*, he said he never got a reply from his landlord nor from his agent, no kind of reply. I do not know whether you have been asked about this while I have been away?—No, I wish to answer it now. I heard of it only to-day and I wish to reply to it presently.

49,151. He said he wrote to the landlord, and that there was no kind of reply, and he came to speak to you. If I am not mistaken he said you went on talking to somebody else?—Will you kindly refer me to the note?

49,152. I am not sure of the particulars, but it will appear in the shorthand note of the evidence?—I should like to hear his evidence read.

49,153. Yes, it is better that we should have the exact words—

The shorthand writer read the following extract from Mr. Evan Evans' evidence, at Aberaeron:—

"Lord Kenyon:—(Q.) Have you put in a claim to Lord Lisburne? (A.) Yes.—(Q.) What answer did you get? (A.) I did not have any answer.—(Q.) Did you go to see Lord Lisburne or his agent? (A.) The agent.—(Q.) Did you get any answer out of the agent? (A.) No.—Mr. Seebohm:—(Q.) Had you to leave the farm? (A.) Yes.—(Q.) You think it hard that you received no compensation for the haulage, inasmuch as you had no enjoyment of it? (A.) Yes. I was there two years afterwards.—Professor Rhŷs:—Do I understand you to say that they never gave you a reply at all? (A.) Yes, no answer.—(Q.) When you asked for compensation they gave you no answer by letter or by word of mouth? (A.) I was there with him myself.—(Q.) What did he say to you then? (A.) He said nothing.—(Q.) Did you speak on the subject? (A.) Yes, I asked him.—(Q.) You asked him then about that particular matter? (A.) Yes.—(Q.) What did he say? (A.) He said nothing. He was going on with other talk.—(Q.) He never paid any attention to you at all? (A.) No, not at all.—(Q.) Neither he nor the landlord? (A.) No.—(Q.) Is that the way the tenants are treated on that estate usually, do you know? (A.) I cannot say as to that.—(Q.) Have you heard how other tenants are treated? (A.) No, but they are all under the six months' notice."

My recollection of that is this. I might premise by saying that I take particular care always to treat tenants with civility, and to be courteous to them. I think that will be borne out all the time I have been on this property. This tenant was, or rather his father and mother were, tenants of the farm of Fronddu, which adjoins Pantygwiail, and both farms were put up for sale. They spoke to me about buying their farm, and I strongly advised them to do so, but the neighbouring farm of Pantygwiail was also for sale, and those two farms were the only two that were for sale in that locality. On this farm of Fronddu a cow-house had been erected. No claim for haulage of materials that I recollect was ever put in, but when the sale took place they bought the neighbouring farm of Pantygwiail, and another neighbour bought their farm of Fronddu, and in discussing the matter, so far as I remember, there were very considerable dilapidations and other things to be considered, and I think I put it in this way, "We will say "nothing about one thing or the other; you "have bought the neighbouring farm; you "have not been put to great inconvenience, "and the thing will stand as it is," that is that no claim would be made to them. So far as the amount of the claim goes, it was comparatively trivial. There was only a cow-house erected, which was one of considerable length, but the cartage was no great matter at all. I cannot recall to mind his writing any letter. I have met them several times, and I went there and saw them. I do not recollect his coming to me, but I can say this, that if he did come, he was received with every civility, and I listened to what he had to say.

49,154. I do not wish to enter into the question of the amount of the claim, or anything of that sort, but what struck me as very remarkable was the manner in which he was treated. This is what he stated, that he had gone to see you, or see the agent, whoever it was?—If he came to see me the matter was properly discussed with him, for I make a point of taking care of that. I do not think any charge of that sort could be substantiated against me.

49,155. Either he is telling an untruth or else there again arises the difficulty of language, which difficulty you said really does not exist?—There was no difficulty of language there. The best feeling has always existed. His brother got another farm down close to Cilcennin.

49,156. I say nothing about the good feeling?—If I recollect rightly, he is perfectly able to converse in English.

49,157. I am not so sure of that?—I may be wrong, but I think, if I recollect the case, that it is so. His brother can speak English very well.

49,158. He may be here now, or someone representing him. I do not know. But there is room for suspicion that there is some difficulty with regard to the language, after all?—No; I recollect the circumstances of the case quite well, and I also recollect that we did not go into the matter of dilapidations or anything connected with fences or the old buildings not being repaired. As he bought the neighbouring farm, and had not to remove or to be put to great inconvenience, the thing went no further.

49,159. I cannot deal with that now, but you see you did not enter into this question. Perhaps he could not get you to enter upon that?—Oh, yes.

49,160. I am only suggesting the possibility—on account of the difficulty with regard to language, for one thing?—Then I distinctly deny his allegation that I did not enter into the matter, but talked about something else.

49,161. I cannot say anything further, of course?—It is very easy for a man to come forward and make a statement, a statement may be made about anyone, but it is a different thing for him to substantiate it.

49,162. I quite admit that—I will not doubt your word. Do you not think there is a possibility of some of the tenants being afraid of coming forward now and again. This morning a witness referred here to a little incident about a wretched rabbit, and he said that the noble Earl swore at him and cursed him, I think he said. One can understand that a voluble outpour of that sort in a language which a man scarcely understands may produce some effect on a nervous constitution?—Yes, quite so.

49,163. That was stated this morning by David Morgan, I think that was his name?—Yes, I heard the evidence, and I also heard the question asked him, "Were you considered to be a poacher," and the reply was that he had not been found out. See 48,556

49,164. I took that answer for what it was worth; but I do not think it enough to throw complete doubt upon the other statement. I do not think that particular man was likely to be over nervous, but it seems to me that in other cases it might be so?—I think not. He is not a tenant of Lord Lisburne's.

49,165. No, but I do not quite see that that touches the matter. He shot over some of his land, I believe?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,166. You say that the rents of this estate were raised in the year 1874?—Yes.

49,167. You will admit that what was a fair rent in 1874 would not be a fair rent in 1894?—Most certainly, but in fixing rents I may explain that an endeavour has always been made to so fix rents that while a tenant can gain something in good years he has a margin left him in bad ones. A rent ought never to be put upon the full value when things are a little exaggerated, as they were at that time.

49,168. But do you not think that it would be more equitable to the landlord and to the tenant if rents were revised more frequently?—Yes, very likely. No doubt it would.

49,169. So that there is no justification for keeping the rents at 1874 value?—Not if the depression continued.

49,170. You say that permanent reductions are given where required. Is it for the want of asking that tenants do not get their rents reduced?—No.

49,171. Well, what does it mean?—When anyone makes a complaint the case is gone into. There are various circumstances that necessitate a reduction in some cases; for instance, a corn farm has suffered most. There is one farm which I think was rented at 400*l.* and it is now rented at 300*l.*; there was to be an increase to 350*l.*, but that has never been exacted.

49,172. On whose initiative are the permanent abatements made?—Generally on that of the agent.

49,173. As to the time and also the amount?—Yes, and considering the peculiar circumstances of the farm.

49,174. Do you admit what Mr. Brigstocke said, that the price of stock and produce has fallen 25 per cent. in the last 15 years?—It depends upon the year that he takes. Last year certainly the depreciation was very great, but it all depended upon the condition and sort of cattle—whether they were good or bad. There was a very great depreciation in bad cattle, not so much in good cattle.

49,175. But you strike an average?—It is very hard to do so.

49,176. You will admit the depreciation is more than 10 per cent.?—Certainly, but on certain farms it would differ.

49,177. Would you say it was 20 per cent.?—In some cases.

49,178. You say that you make the abatements without any distinction of farms?—Yes.

49,179. So that on your own showing in some places you should have given more than 10 per cent.?—Yes, on some.

49,180. That is if there is a fall in the value of stock and produce of 20 per cent.?—Those that have come for reductions have participated also in the abatements.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,181. Is it customary on Lord Lisburne's estate for the tenants to do the hauling?—Yes, it always has been. There is no interest charged on the outlay, and the tenant does that part as a contribution to help the landlords.

49,182. Do you not think it is full time that tenants should be paid for the hauling?—Supposing that the landlord were to charge interest, the tenant should certainly be paid, but as he charges no interest, it induces the landlord to spend more in permanent improvements to help the tenant.

49,183. Quite so; but, supposing the tenant does the haulage on a large farm, and leaves it after two years, he cannot be compensated in any way?—Certainly, he ought to be paid.

49,184. Do you generally make an allowance?—Yes, there ought to be a scale of allowances under that head.

49,185. You always pay the tenant compensation?—Generally; that is arranged now. Of late years that has been more looked to.

Lord Kenyon.

49,186. I have a question to ask, handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Do you believe that any "agent, except here and there, a rent collector "is paid by commission?—No, I think not.

49,187. It is not the usual way?—No, I think not.

49,188. Is there anything more you wish to rebut?—There was one piece of evidence that was given at Tregaron by John Williams, in regard to the farm of Tygwyn. The statement he made was that he was entitled to a moiety of the farm of Tygwyn, and that two of the fields belonging to that farm, but separated from it, belonged entirely to him; but that for a number of years Lord Lisburne had claimed the moiety of these fields also. I never heard of this before, and I have met Mr. Williams often. Lord Lisburne was entitled to the moiety of the whole holding—not only of the farm proper, but also of these two fields. It is a question of title, and I never heard it put forward in that way. Then he said that in 1888 his brother See 46,993–9.

and he went to shoot over Tygwyn. This farm of Tygwyn, I may explain, lies right in the middle of Lord Lisburne's land, where there is very good shooting. In 1888, he said that he and his brother went there to shoot, and he was told that they were not to do it, and that the tenant had assigned his right to the game to Lord Lisburne. That was a fact, but it was not after John Williams had been over shooting, because the suspicion was that he came over to shoot so as to annoy and to induce Lord Lisburne to buy his moiety. The grant to Lord Lisburne was made, not in 1888, when he and his brother went over the farm, but in 1886, two years previously. He also stated that Lord Lisburne charged 6*l.* more than he did or his father did for their moiety. That was a fact, but after the tenant granted the right to Lord Lisburne, because he did not wish to be interfered with in his shooting, he knocked the 6*l.* off the rent, and made the rent the same as what was charged by them. Then he also stated that he had offered 1,100*l.* to Lord Lisburne for his moiety, or that Lord Lisburne should pay him 1,100*l.* That offer was made recently, and if he had asked a little less than that, possibly some terms might have been arranged.

49,189. Is there anything more you wish to say?—There is one tenant who gave evidence, I See 48,423. believe, this morning, Jenkins; I should, if your Lordship pleases, like to hear his evidence; I was not in Court when it was given. He was an old tenant on the Crosswood Estate; he got notice to quit, and I may say that it was in connexion with killing hares at that time.

49,190. So far as I remember his statement was that his son had been caught poaching. Is that the witness you refer to?—Yes. It was considered a bad case at the time. It is long ago. Although he was a very good tenant, Lord Lisburne decided to part with him, because he was right in the middle of his preserve lands. That was before the Ground Game Act was passed. I was sorry for the man at the time, but it was a case in which the landlord had to make a little example.

49,191. I think the case I had in my mind was a different one?—There was another case brought before you yesterday, of the Rev. David Davies, Hafodhir. I think he stated that in 1868 he got notice for voting against his landlord's wish, and that the agent, in giving him notice, told him so. That case was clear. He did not get notice because he voted against the Conservative candidate, but when the Earl of Lisburne went round the farms to his farmers asking for votes, he said "We will not press you "to give your vote," but he promised he would remain quiet and not take any active interest against them. It was a nephew of Lord Lisburne's who was the candidate. Mr. Davies broke his promise, and made himself very active in opposition. I called upon him afterwards and told him that the landlord was sorry to do it, but that he (Mr. Davies) had distinctly told him what was not true and had broken his promise, and he, the landlord, wished to make a change. Things were done then that would not be done now. See 47,719–47,735.

Mr. Grove.

49,192. I suppose that if a notice is given soon after the voting, a tenant is apt to connect the two together, is he not?—Yes, rather; but there is nothing of that sort now.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned.

The Town Hall, Aberystwith, Cardiganshire, Saturday, 28th April 1894.

Second Court.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART., in the Chair.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS. | Mr. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. STEPHEN DAVIES called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,193. Does this statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes, that is my evidence. I will make such corrections as I wish to make as the evidence is read.

49,194. Where is it you live, Mr. Davies?—At Draenllwyn, about eight miles south of Aberystwyth.

49,195. In what parish is it?—In the parish of Llangwyryfon.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—The evidence of Stephen Davies, Draenllwyn, Llangwyryfon.

I am a farmer and now live at Draenllwyn, which belongs to me.

I was brought up with my father and mother at Llwynfynwent, on the Castle Hill estate. My father died when I was about seven or eight years old, and my mother kept on the farm. She held it under an agreement like the one I now produce. She died in August 1879, having made a will giving everything to me and my three brothers, and appointing us co-executors. I desire to keep the agreement private, but will hand it in for the private perusal of the Commission.

Sir John Llewelyn.

We will consider whether we ought to keep it private or not. If you desire to keep it private, it will not be handed in except for the private information of the Commissioners. (The agreement was handed in.)

(Statement continued.)

We applied to the landlord to let us continue on as tenants, and he refused to take more than two of us. My brother John and myself had therefore to go out. The clause beginning 'The tenants on quitting was acted upon.'"——

Mr. H. L. Stephen. May I suggest that if the agreement is referred to in this way, I ought to see it?

Sir John Llewelyn.

It is only handed to us for our private inspection.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. The witness is just beginning to refer to it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Let me see the clause, and I will decide whether I ought to admit it or not. (Agreement handed to Sir John Llewelyn.) He is speaking of things of his own knowledge?

Mr. H. L. Stephen. I am not in a position to understand what the clause is yet.

Sir John Llewelyn.

So far as we have gone at present it is perfectly intelligible and perfectly reasonable. The landlord finds that four men are coming into the occupation of a farm, and he says that he will accept two and not more than two. That is a reasonable thing; there is nothing at all harsh in that. "In case either party shall "neglect to appoint an arbitrator," that is very reasonable so far as that goes. I see nothing harsh in that so far. We will look over the agreement and read the clause ourselves. I think the statement may be proceeded with. I see nothing at all unreasonable in the clause that he refers to here.

(Statement continued.)

The clause beginning "the tenants on quitting" was acted upon, and we had to accept two-thirds of the value of our shares of the crops. My brothers William and Evan carried on the farm as tenants up to November, 1892——

49,196. That is, from 1876 to 1892?—Yes.

Then William left and this clause was acted upon again in his case. I should also like to call attention to the following clauses in the agreement.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. There again he refers to the agreement, and I object to it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I think it is perfectly right; there is nothing objectionable in this evidence; it is of his own knowledge.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. He refers to the agreement, too, there, and surely if he refers to the agreement we ought to have the best evidence possible. He is referring to things which you and he know of, and which I, for example, as one of the public, do not know of, and it is unfair.

Sir John Llewelyn.

I shall rule the evidence to be admissible. What objection can there be to putting this in? I do not see anything objectionable in the least.

49,197. Have you any objection still to giving the names?—I received the agreement on those terms, and I am afraid, because the landlord is present, or was present.

(Statement continued.)

First, as to duties; secondly, as to reserving the game; thirdly, as to repairs; fourthly, as to dogs; and fifthly, the last clause, excluding the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,197A. Wait a moment; now he is referring to all the clauses in the agreement which he puts in.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. Of course I shall have to ask what the clauses are, Sir John, if I do not see it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,198. There is nothing unreasonable in that clause; it reserves the game, but that is extremely common; it is usual, I may say. Then with regard to the fourth, it is very common to keep one dog, I think. I have it in all my agreements. This is peculiar, the tenant not to keep more than one dog.

49,198A. Those clauses you consider onerous, do you?—Yes.

During the years William and Evan carried on the farm the following outbuildings were erected, stable, barn, cow-house, chaff-house, cattle-shed, and pigstyes, most of them only about two years before William left.

49,199. When did William leave?—In the autumn of 1892.

They did all the carrying timber from Aberystwyth, eight miles; lime and slates from

Llanilar, five miles of very hilly country. William had no compensation whatever when he left.

49,200. Is that all you have to say with regard to that particular case?—That is all I say now.

Rents in our neighbourhood are much too high. They are now on an average higher than they were from 15 to 25 years ago, but farm produce is worth 40 to 50 per cent. less. I can give the following instances of advances:—Rhandir-isa, 6*l.* in 1872; Tynewydd, 6*l.* in 1872; Gwarcaeau, 5*l.* about 1868, and 2*l.* about 1874; Trefaes Isa, 13*l.* 10*s.*; Trefaes Uchaf, 15*l.*

Trefaes Isa and Trefaes Uchaf belonged to the Nanteos estate, but were sold in 1874 to Mr. Loxdale, who at once raised the rents, promising new buildings.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. This is getting into hearsay evidence now, Sir John.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,201. You say, "Trefaes Isa and Trefaes "Uchaf belonged to the Nanteos estate, but "were sold in 1874 to Mr. Loxdale, who at once "raised the rents, promising new buildings." Do you know that of your own knowledge?—Yes.

But the buildings were not made till 1880–82. Many farmers keep their sons and daughters working on their farms without giving them any wages, and still find it difficult to meet their rents. Labour is much dearer than it used to be. Farm labourers have in large numbers removed to South Wales and other places. One reason for this is, that labourers' cottages have been allowed to fall down. I can give a list of 45 such cottages which have fallen to the ground during the last 40 years.

There are in our neighbourhood many freeholders heavily mortgaged, and it would be a great boon to many if they could borrow money repayable by a fixed annual sum at a low rate of interest. One other mischief is that several small holdings have been thrown together to make one big holding. I can give several instances.

49,202. Upon this I would ask you, who is the tenant at Draenllwyn now?—I am both the tenant and the owner.

49,203. You bought it?—My uncle bought it.

49,204. Then what was this farm in which your brother was, which he gave up in 1892?—Llwynfynwent.

49,205. Who is the tenant of Llwynfynwent now?—Evan Davies, my brother.

49,206. William Davies left in 1892?—Yes.

49,207. I do not understand your grievance, then, if your brother is still in the farm. Is it that William did not get his share?—These are the two complaints: that when I and my brother John left and got our shares (about 12 years ago) we had to leave one-third of the whole crop behind unpaid for according to the agreement. Then when my brother William left about two years ago, he had to leave one-third behind for nothing as before mentioned. That almost all the outbuildings were built only about two years before my brother William had to leave. No compensation was allowed him for all the haulage.

49,208. When were the stable, barn, cow-house, chaff-house, cow-house, cattle-shed, and pigstyes built?—The stable, the cow-house, the pigstyes, and part of the barn, were put up about two years, perhaps, before my brother left. The cattle shed had been made about 15 years before that, I should say.

49,209. Who paid for them?—The landlord paid for all the materials and the tenant did all the haulage.

49,210. The agreement says that the tenant is to keep the dwelling-house and the outbuildings in good and tenantable repair?—Yes, that is so, and in that respect the landlord is better than his agreement, and if he happened to be a bad landlord he would not have given us that.

49,211. But the tenant did the haulage?—Yes, my brothers did.

49,212. The haulage of the timber?—Yes.

49,213. And the slates?—Yes.

49,214. And the lime?—Yes, and the stones from the quarry.

49,215. Is not that usual?—Yes, it is usual that the tenant should haul.

49,216. I fail to see the grievance, when the brother is still in the farm. Your brother, Mr. Evan Davies, is still in possession of the farm?—Yes.

See evidence of next witness.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,217. Did your brother leave this farm after he had done all the hauling upon it?—Was he obliged to leave, do you mean?

49,218. Yes?—He was obliged to go, but it was not so much the landlord who was driving him away as it was between the agent and the other brother—that was not Mr. Roberts. He received several letters saying that he must leave, otherwise his brother and he, namely, the agent, Mr. Roberts, would make him leave.

49,219. Did he claim any compensation for what he had done?—They tried to get the other brother to do so, but he showed the agreement, which showed that he had no right to any.

49,220. Is it not customary, if a tenant leaves a place a year or two after he has done all the hauling that he should be allowed for the hauling done?—No, it is not so in my neighbourhood.

49,221. Do you not think there should be a clause in the agreement to that effect?—I think there ought to be. It is a great expense that was incurred by the tenant in haulage, as well as the other expense in keeping cattle, horses, men, and so on.

49,222. Have you any idea what the cost was?—No, I have not thought of that, but they had the horses, and the horses would be employed in doing other work if they had not been hauling.

49,223. Of course they would, and they are worth so much per day. It is the custom in our country, too, but I think it is but fair that the tenants should be paid for what hauling they do. Then the brothers disagreed as to which of them was to be in this farm; is that the case?—Yes, they could not agree. Each of them wanted to be there. There was something in my mother's will to the effect that he who remained single should occupy the farm, but of course the landlord could put anyone he liked there.

49,224. With regard to the provision that you have two-thirds of the value of the crops, that is rather a new condition. We have seen that in the case of hay, but we have never seen an agreement of this kind before, that the tenant should have only two-thirds of the grain, hay and turnips. It seems very unreasonable?—I received great loss from that clause.

49,225. You were to leave the corn?—Yes, the corn, the hay and the swedes. I had to leave one-third of the crop behind for nothing.

49,226. What were the terms upon which your brother entered this farm?—My father was there from the time he was quite a young man. The family has been there from 60 to 70 years.

49,227. Why do you object to farms being consolidated?—One reason is this, I fail to see that the land produces as much after it has been consolidated as it was when it was half.

49,228. Do you think that the small farmers farm better than the large ones?—Yes; I know of several farms in my neighbourhood where there is not half as much produced now, when the farm is a large one, as when there were two farms. Another reason is that a smaller population is being supported on the land.

49,229. Are there many people about that have no farms now?—A farm became vacant a few weeks ago and there were 12 applicants. I know of five or six who applied for it. There is a scarcity of land for farms.

49,230. Were these new applicants in possession of farms already, or were they fresh men?—No, they were not in possession of farms; they were fresh men; they were farmers children who had got married.

49,231. Have you any remedies to recommend?—I should wish for security of tenure for the tenants, and I should like to see a land court to fix the rents in case of a dispute.

49,232. Anything else?—No, nothing else.

Mr. Grove.

49,233. I suppose you would add to that compensation for improvements?—Yes.

49,234. As a rule, do the children help their parents much on the farms?—Yes, the farmers children work very hard at home, when they are a large family.

49,235. Do you know whether it is usual for children away from home to send some of the money they earn back to their parents at home?—I personally do not know of anybody, but I can say this, that they are bound to be assisting them, otherwise they could not pay the rents.

49,236. I suppose you agree that there must be very great depression at the present time in agriculture?—Yes, very depressed for the last 20 years. The cattle which I saw sold on a farm of which I know at 15*l.* 10*s.* were sold this year under 7*l.*

49,237. Are there any farmers' clubs in your part?—No.

49,238. And no agricultural society?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,239. I suppose it was not your brother Evan who asked you to come here?—No, but the tenants, of whom I have a list here, requested me to represent them.

49,240. Evan has not got any grievance?—The name of my brother Evan is among the list which I have here; they do not complain of the landlord, but they complain of the high rents.

49,241. Evan is of the same opinion as yourself, that he would like to see greater security?—Yes.

49,242. But he has not got any grievance with regard to his particular farm and these buildings?—No, nor has he any complaint against his landlord.

Mr. Grove.

49,243. What is that paper which you have in your hand?—It is a petition signed by the farmers in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,244. How many have signed that?—About 71.

49,245. Are they all tenant farmers?—Three labourers unwittingly have signed it and there are about five freeholders.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,246. If you wish to put that in I should like you to do so?—Yes, if you please; and here is a copy of the agreement without the names inserted. I will put that in.

49,247. The only thing is, we declined on the landlord's behalf to take testimonials?—This is not a testimonial. It is a petition. (Document handed in.)

Mr. Griffiths.

49,248. Are the tenants mentioned in the list you have handed in, tenants on the same estate?—Many of them are on the same estate, and others are on other estates. It represents the district in which I live.

49,249. Not only the parish, but the district?—Yes, not only the parish but the district, portions of two parishes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,250. With your concurrence, Mr. Griffiths, we think that this petition should be received and submitted to the whole body of Commissioners as to whether it should be taken in evidence. We have had some documents of the same nature, and I am not prepared to say at the present moment whether we will accept it or reject it. We will reserve this now and submit it to all the Commissioners when we are together, as to whether it should be placed upon the minutes or not. (See Appendix for Petition.)

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Reginald J. R. Loxdale called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,251. You wish to say something with regard to the evidence of the last witness?—I am the present owner of the Castle Hill Estate. I believe that most of these troubles with regard to Llwynfynwent to which the witness has spoken refer to his mother's will, upon which there have always been squabbles. The final decision that Evan should be tenant was a decision entirely and wholly of their own arranging, and had nothing whatever to do with the deceased landlord or myself. The letters which he complains of from the agent or from his brother, I believe arose in this way. It began with a quarrel over a marriage; William married. He then appears to have come home one night and virtually to have broken into the house and fought his brother Evan. Evan came to me the next day for protection, and I told him that I could not interfere in any disputes between them. As regards the repairs upon the Trefaes Isa and Trefaes Ucha farms which have been spoken of, I think it is generally admitted that there is not an estate in this county upon which more money has been spent in the last 20 years than the Castle Hill estate, and the repairs to those two farms were done as soon as it was possible.

Mr. Grove.

49,252. Are you the owner of that estate?—I am, and I should think the repairs in each case, taking them roughly, must have cost 800*l.* to 1,000*l.* on each farm.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,253. I do not think this is rebutting. He did not say that that was not so?—No, but he said that the rents had been raised upon those two farms. I think that would show that there was some reason for it.

49,254. Yes, that is the point?—The present rents of those farms are, of one, 110*l.*, and of the other 130*l.* The farms cost 9,500*l.* The hauling is a general custom of the estate. As to the agreement I cannot be certain—I will not swear to it—but to the best of my recollection my uncle told me that that agreement was drawn up after a full discussion between the tenants and his own solicitor and himself. I cannot swear that, but to the best of my recollection that is what he told me.

Mr. Grove.

49,255. But the agreement is a printed form?—Yes, but that was before it was printed. Further than that, several times shortly before his death my uncle discussed with me the question of a new agreement, and it was then thought that it would be best to see what was done with the tithes. The tithes, as you know, have lately been dealt with, and now that this Land Commission has come about, it has been still thought wise to adjourn the question of a new agreement. But I believe that agreement when it was drawn up was in accordance with what the tenants themselves thought was reasonable and fair. I have during each half year, with the exception of two half years since I came into this property, allowed 10 per cent. owing to the bad times. I am on the very best of terms with all my tenants, who on two occasions lately have made me presents.

49,256. I hope there is no necessity to say this; it is not rebutting evidence?—Very well. Is there anything else that I have to answer?

49,257. No. The point was, as I think we got it from Mr. Stephen himself, that it was a quarrel between the two brothers, and that one of the brothers was still in possession of the farm?—I have had no notice of this attack upon me. If I had I would have had a proper statement prepared.

49,258. I suppose you do not deny that one of the brothers is still in the farm?—Certainly he is.

49,259. An agreement was put in for our inspection, which was dated a great many years back?—Yes, and it was then drawn up in accordance with what the tenants thought to be fair.

49,260. There was an agent at that time. Do you manage your own estate now, or have you an agent?—I have an agent.

49,261. Is it possible that the agent took part with one brother as against the other, and that therefore they may feel upon that ground some grievance?—No. The agent and the two brothers and myself are the very best of friends. I had a letter from one of the men not very long ago.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,262. Do you not think it is fair for a tenant on leaving to be paid—say, if a tenant leaves two years after he has done much hauling upon the farm, that he should be recompensed?—No application has been made for it. If I were to ask any of my tenants to lend me a cart they would bring 20 carts to-morrow for a week, and would never expect to be paid. But that is a matter upon which the Commission has opened my eyes, and it must be taken into consideration.

49,263. It is but fair, for the tenants' sake?—I think it is a matter for consideration, sir, but I am certain that in the past there has never been any question of such a thing.

49,264. Then with regard to the hardship as to these two-thirds of the value of the crops; is it not unfair where a man goes in and does not have those terms when he goes into the farm?—I think it is a question for consideration. It is only very recently that I have had that point raised.

49,265. It is very unfair, I expect, unless the tenant goes in on the same terms. It would not make much difference if he did go in on the same terms?—It does not benefit the landlord; it does not benefit me; it is entirely between themselves.

49,266. Yes, it is entirely between themselves, but there should be something done if a man goes into a farm and does not have those terms, but goes out on other terms?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

You think he should come in and go out on the same terms?

Mr. Griffiths.

49,267. Yes?—I have attended the Commission at the last two sittings, and many things have occurred to me which would help one in governing one's estate.

49,268. That is what we wish to do; we do not want to make things unfair between landlord and tenant?—If this gentleman had had the courtesy to tell us that he was going to attack us to-day I would have had a proper statement to read before you.

49,269. I do not think you can call it an attack. It was only just telling us the position of things on the estate?—I am glad you do not think so.

Mr. Grove.

We do not think it was an attack at all.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. H. C. Fryer called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,270. Is this your written statement that we have here?—Yes, it is my statement of the main points of my evidence.

49,271. Would you kindly read it?—I have a copy of the letter which I sent in; it was giving the particular points upon which I wish to touch, and dealing with those two particular points of loans to landowners and loans to would-be purchasers of farms.

49,272. If you will read that it will be the simplest and shortest way, I think?—I will begin by saying that I am clerk of the peace and clerk to the County Council of Cardiganshire, and that there are two special points that I have been asked to bring before this Land Commission.

49,273. By whom?—By a committee which met occasionally here to discuss matters to bring before this Court. I was particularly asked to emphasize these two points as to loans. In the attempt to make both ends meet, farmers have restricted their expenditure upon manures, feeding stuffs, labour, and cultivation; and improvements have been out of the question. As a consequence farming generally has decidedly retrograded, and the land, instead of being stimulated to produce more, and that more of such products as altered circumstances have created a demand for, now produces less than it did 12 or 15 years since; and, in every direction, the condition of the land appears to be getting poorer year by year, mainly from the want of capital. The present problem, then (or one of the problems), is how to bring more capital into farming and on to the land, and I have a strong opinion that great assistance could be rendered in this direction by a well-devised system of public loans. These loans are required for two purposes: (1) to owners of land for the improvement of the land they own, and (2) to aspiring owners to enable them to purchase their holdings or other land which may come into the market. (1.) Loans for the improvement of land, and by the term all such improvements are meant as are authorised by the Settled Land Act, 1882, and other similar Acts. The yearly rentcharge demanded by the various land improvement companies to repay principal and interest within the usual term of 25 years is so high and onerous that very few landowners now avail themselves of the assistance of these companies, at least, such is my experience as an inspector under the Board of Agriculture. I understand that the rates have been revised of late, and lowered by some companies, but they are still too high for prudent landowners in present circumstances to take up loans for improvements. Now, the State could advance money for the purpose at a rate of from 3 to 3¼ per cent. without loss to the community at large.

49,274. That is the interest only, without repayment of capital, do you mean that?—Yes, that would be calculated by the tables.

49,275. Without any redemption?—Without any redemption, merely the interest at the rate at which it is calculated for a period of redemption, upon a certain period of 25 or 30 years it might be. If this were done, it would enable many landowners to carry out improvements, much needed, but for which they cannot find the capital. These improvements would greatly enhance the value of the land in many cases, and enable cultivators to do the best with it; and might possibly have the effect of bringing a better class of men upon the land, with more capital to do it justice. Then the second point is loans to enable farmers and others to purchase land and farms. In spite of depression and low prices of produce, there is still a great deal of "land hunger" in this county, and a great desire for farms, and if farms could be obtained upon reasonable terms hundreds of tenant farmers would be only too glad to become owners. Many tenants have within the last 20 years purchased farms, but they have generally bought at too high a price, mainly owing to their fear of others purchasing, and of their having to quit farms on which they have been born, and which have been held by their ancestors before them. With but little money of their own, they have in many cases borrowed on mortgage at a rate of at least 4 per cent., and have paid more in interest than they previously paid in rent. Their cases would have been very different if they could have obtained loans from the State on terms somewhat similar to those granted to Ireland, and for this purpose loans are even more needed than for land improvements.

49,276. Is the freehold land in your opinion better cultivated than that which is held by tenant farmers?—No. I doubt whether it is, for the very reason of want of means. There are few cases that I know of in this neighbourhood where great improvements have taken place since they have come into the hands of the owners. For in the majority of cases the owners, particularly in the middle of this county, who have bought the land, have bought so dear that they are more pinched now by the interest upon their mortgages than they were by the rent.

49,277. And, I suppose, finding the cost of the buildings fall upon their own shoulders, instead of upon those of the landlords, the buildings become neglected?—Yes, the buildings become neglected; they have actually not the means to replace the buildings, and of course, as you know, in many cases where farms are sold the buildings are in a poor condition, just for the very reason, probably, that it is a farm that it is no very great object to the landlord to keep. He very often has not kept the buildings up to the same state of equipment as they would be kept up to probably if they were nearer home and more valuable to the estate.

49,278. Then you have told us that the money which has been borrowed to purchase has been borrowed at 4 per cent. There are several cases we have had mentioned in which the money was borrowed at 3 and 3¾ per cent.?—Yes; but that is in exceptional cases; 4 per cent. is about the average.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,279. But at what price do you think the owner could afford to lend with redemption?—That would depend, of course, upon the number of years over which it is spread. By Archer's tables, which I believe are as reliable as any that there are ——

49,280. Without taking them, do you know what the terms were in Ireland?—Forty-nine years, at 4 per cent.

49,281. Do you think it could be done cheaper in Wales?—No, I do not think it could.

49,282. Anyhow, I hope you think that the Welsh credit is as good as the Irish credit?—Quite as good. I think they might be put on the same footing; in fact by these tables of Archer's at 3½ per cent., which is the actual interest for the Small Holdings Act and for other Acts, it is shown that the State can lend that sum without a loss. At 3½ per cent., by Archer's tables, to repay principal and interest in 49 years, it comes to exactly 4*l.* 0*s.* 3¼*d.* So that I presume it was calculated upon this. Therefore, if a would-be owner were to buy on those terms he would be wiping out the mortgage by degrees, whereas now I know of cases myself where, as a trustee, I have advanced money on mortgage in this country, small sums of 1,000*l.* or 1,500*l.*, and so on, at 4 per cent. I know of some that have been running 16, 18, and nearly 20 years. A man only the other day was paying the interest, and was making the very remark; he said, "If I was in Ireland I "should have wiped out half my debt."

49,283. According to that, under the present system a man at the end of 49 years, paying 4 per cent., is not the owner of his holding. Under the new system of Government loan at the end of 49 years he would be an absolutely free man?—Yes, at the end of 49 years he would be an absolutely free man.

49,284. Do you think reasonably, looking forward, that a man can continue to pay 4 per cent. upon the purchase price of the farms?—I think he could, because you would not lend him the whole money; you would only advance a certain proportion of it.

Mr. Grove.

49,285. What do you think would be a fair proportion of the value of the purchase; four-fifths?—I think three-fourths would be sufficient.

49,286. You speak of the position the farmers are in now who have bought their holdings some time ago, some years ago?—Yes.

49,287 There is still a very great desire on the part of other farmers to buy their holdings, is there not?—A very great desire. It is a thing that they long for.

49,288. So that your suggestion would be that the Government should lend money to owners—present landlords, to carry out the improvements; to those farmers who have bought their own holdings, and are heavily mortgaged; and also to other farmers who are wishful to buy?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,289. So that there are three classes to which you think that scheme could be applied?—Yes. That point of lending to owners for improvements is of special importance to this county, for this very reason, that there are a large number of occupiers here who are quite equal to managing and making the best of smallish farms. At the present time the majority of them have holdings larger than their capital can work, and larger than they can really do justice to. The great objection to dividing those holdings, or to making them smaller is of course the increased expense of buildings, and that has been before the landowners very much indeed. Of course, if you make two farms into three, you want an extra set of buildings. I believe that that difficulty could be very largely met by enabling landowners to borrow, and borrow direct from the State instead of through the intervention of the land companies. At the present time you have to pay about 6½ per cent. to repay a loan within 25 years. I have had numerous applications myself to ask how this is done, and about the per-centage, and directly landowners hear that it runs up to 6½ per cent. they drop the thing and say, "that will not suit us."

49,290. I think you said that in your opinion, from your own actual experience, land produces less now than it did 12 or 15 years ago?—Yes, I think that is quite certain.

49,291. To make the land as productive as possible, I take it?—Yes, that is the whole point.

49,292. As Commissioners considering the whole matter, we want to make the land as productive as possible?—Yes.

49,293. Would you be in favour of smaller holdings, as compared with consolidated or larger holdings?—Certainly in this country. One point here is that a great number of farmers work their lands very much by their own families. I am quite astonished to find from the last census how very small the proportion of agricultural labourers is in proportion to the farms and the farmers. I see in the particulars of the census, which have only just come out, that the farmers and graziers in this county of Cardigan for 1891, numbered 4,354 males and 1,102 females. Those are farmers, graziers, and others managing farms. The agricultural labourers numbered only 4,261 males and 869 females, so that the farmers themselves numbered more than the agricultural labourers employed upon these farms. The agricultural labourers have diminished a good deal in the last 10 years, in fact, that is a thing we are suffering from in this country, the diminished population. Our population has gone down nearly one-seventh in the last 20 years, just because there has been no employment for the people.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,294. Is it your opinion that tenants have been restricted very much in purchasing manures owing to these depressed times?—They have been restricted, no doubt, by the actual want of money. There is nothing that does more good in this country than lime, and you will find, I believe, that the statistics of the railway stations here will show that there is not one truck of lime now bought where there were 50, 12 or 15 years ago, and other things in the same degree.

49,295. But is it not the fact that there is more labour required for lime than there is for artificial manure generally?— Yes, there is a little more. But here, near the sea, upon a great deal of the wet land that we have, lime is immensely important.

49,296. Then you are of opinion that very much more could be produced from the land under different conditions?—No doubt a great deal more could be produced from the land with better cultivation and more manure. There is one matter that I did not mention; I thought that probably others would have brought it before you; and that is the question of manorial rights in this county, which I think operate a good deal, particularly in the highest land, against the improvement of land. We have large sheep walks in this country, all of which are the subject of manorial rights. The owner of the surface can do nothing with that surface; he cannot even put up a fence without leave and license from the lord of the manor. I regret to say that the Crown, who are the largest owners of manors in this country, have thrown every obstacle in the way of anything like improvement of that sort. You cannot improve a sheep walk without enclosing it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,297. Then you think that the Crown is not a good landlord?—It is the worst landlord in this country in that way. There is no doubt of it. I have had a great deal of experience in that matter, I assure you, and if you asked any of the miners in the neighbourhood of the Crown manors, you would find their opinions very much stronger upon the matter than mine. It has operated, really, to prevent all improvements in that way. No miner, or at least very few miners, would ever take a take-note upon a Crown manor, because of the onerous demands made upon them. But I am speaking now upon the question of the surface. I have known a case where people, owners of two sheep walks, have put up a fence enclosing nothing—running from one point to another—and demands were immediately made upon them by the Crown for a yearly rent of 5*l.* as acknowledgment for the putting up of that fence, or else a demand for the removal of the fence. Other lords of the manors have agreements in such cases by which, if the owners of the surface undertake to secure to the landlord all his manorial rights, such as minerals and sporting, they can fence or improve in any way whatever that they like. The contention of the Crown apparently is, as a gentleman at the office once told me, that any little improvement made by the owner of the surface, the Crown ought to have a share of. There are parts of sheep walks, the lower parts, that might be capable of planting, and there is nothing whatever that will improve the land so much, or bring so great a produce from the land as planting, particularly larch trees, up to the present time, or before the larch disease set in, at all events. The Crown virtually prohibited anything of the kind, because they had the right to the soil.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,298. With regard to the sheep walks, to make those as productive as possible, do you think they ought to be fenced?—A man cannot do the best with his sheep walk unless it is fenced. There is a very peculiar condition of things in this country. The surface is in the exclusive ownership of the person to whom it belongs, only the soil does not belong to him. There are well-known boundaries, that are pretty well kept to, but there are a good many disputes about them, and occasionally the putting up of a fence will obviate that. But if any owner of a sheep walk wishes to improve his sheep, which he can do best by keeping a smaller number on the ground, he is immediately trespassed upon by his neighbours, and then comes in the very argument that many people have used to me. I say to them, "Why do you "not keep less sheep, and keep them better?" "Oh," they say, "if we kept less sheep our "neighbours would send their sheep and eat up "our grazing."

49,299. Then the Government charge of 5*l.* to put up a fence would be an acknowledgment. Do they demand the payment of any particular sum, or do they object to the payment of any small sum, simply as an acknowledgment?—They demand payment of 5*l.*, but owners would not object to a small sum.

49,300. Supposing the Government charged 5*s.*, that would be an acknowledgment just as much as the 5*l.*?—Yes, owners would not object to that, but where the land is only worth about 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre you know that 5*l.* would mean a very large rental.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,301. Is it not because Government are not likely to get interest for this capital so expended upon this copyhold land in fencing that they are not so willing to allow it?—The Crown would not be asked to do it. Of course it would be the owners who would fence it. The owners would do the fencing themselves, and the Crown would be at no expense at all.

49,302. Then you did not ask the Crown to fence, only those that occupy the land?—Only the occupier of the land. The Crown would not be put to a shilling of expense.

49,303. Do you know of any who have purchased their farms who have been obliged to sell again?—I do not know any.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,304. Or who have purchased at too high a price?—I do not know of any in this neighbourhood, but I have been told that there are some in the lower part of the county, not far from Newcastle Emlyn, and elsewhere, where some large estates were sold some years ago when prices were very high, and I believe a good many have had to sell them.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,305. You know it is a fact that they often buy at too high a price?—You would be surprised to see the prices that occupiers will give rather than be turned out of a farm which they themselves have been born upon, and which their father's have occupied before them. It is not business-like perhaps, but it is a sentiment that is very very strong here indeed.

The witness withdrew.

Major John George Parry Hughes called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,306. Will you state what evidence you wish to give?—I own the estate called the Alltlwyd estate, in the parishes of Llansaintffraid and Llanrhystyd, in the county of Cardigan, comprising 30 holdings, about 1,100 acres in extent, and yielding a rental of 1,100*l.* and upwards. I have also an estate in the county of Pembroke consisting of about 600 acres. My Cardiganshire estate consists of nine farms mostly, the other part of the estate being small holdings, with rents varying from 2*l.* to 19*l.* I inherited the estate on the death of my father, in the year 1858. My father had in the year 1846 fixed the rents of the whole estate, and the rents as fixed by him were continued until the year 1886, when the depression in agriculture was keenly felt in Cardiganshire. As my farm tenants were complaining that the rents were high, I employed Mr. John M. Davies, of Froodvale, in the county of Carmarthen, land valuer, and a gentleman of the largest experience, to value my Cardiganshire property, and according to his valuation the rents then paid by the tenants were in some instances too high. The following table will show the difference between the rents paid up to 1886 and Mr. Davies' valuation. I then endeavoured to let the farms at the rents fixed by Mr. Davies, but failed to do so, and the following table also shows the present rental. The tenants now complain that these rents are too high, and I have great difficulty in collecting them.

The farms have always been farmed for corn-growing. It is quite a corn growing country down there. Mr. Davies in his valuation and report, which I produce, states, as is the fact, that the farms contained some of the best corn land in the county of Cardigan, but were farmed on a most antiquated system, five or six crops of corn being taken out of the land with only one manuring, and the wonder was that the land was able to produce such good crops as he saw in June 1886, when he inspected the farms. He also reported that very little artificial manure was applied, and the use of lime had been discarded for some time. The agreements with my tenants provided that they should not take more than two white crops in succession without manuring, &c., but this provision, as well as other provisions in the agreements for regulating the course of farming, are not carried out, although I have repeatedly urged my tenants to adopt a better course of farming and to lay by a certain part of the farms for pasture. I believe if this course had been adopted years ago, and the tenants had reared cattle, instead of for years in succession growing corn, that my tenants, having regard to the quality of the land and the situation of the farms, would have managed their farms at considerable profit. In my opinion there is no necessity for a land court to determine questions between landlords and tenants, so far as my experience goes. There has been no difficulty in arranging all questions between me and my tenants, and I have fairly met them whenever they apply to me for assistance. I have made allowance for several years of 10 per cent. on account of the agricultural depression. With regard to allotments, or small holdings, my Cardiganshire property adjoins two villages, namely, the villages of Llanon and Llanrhystyd, and there are plenty of facilities already offered to all who wish to have plots of land. The tenants are all yearly, and I do not remember a single application made for a lease. I should always be ready to grant a lease, but the tenants prefer holding as yearly tenants, and will not accept leases. I have never had any trouble about the game, and I am not a game preserver. My experience of Welsh landlords is that they do not turn tenants out unless there are exceptional circumstances, and as a rule tenancies descend from father to son for many generations. Most landlords would willingly grant leases. Farmers in this district suffer from want of capital when they commence farming, which places them at a disadvantage, and men of capital cannot be got to take farms. I am also connected with another estate which lies up higher in the hills.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,307. You have not adopted the valuation made by Mr. Davies?—No. Not in all instances; I have in one or two instances, but they are considerably lower.

49,308. In most instances you have reduced them?—They are all lower, except one.

49,309. Have you not many applications for farms?—No, not many, but there are none unlet at present.

49,310. You do not wish to turn an old tenant off; you would rather try to meet him?—I never do turn one off by any chance. All those old tenants have been there from time immemorial, I think.

49,311. We all know that corn has been reduced very much in price?—Oh dear, yes.

49,312. But have not cattle been reduced, and sheep?—Yes, but still I think they would have been better if they could have reared cattle upon that land.

49,313. In our part of the country we find that many have laid down their land to grass, and to their sorrow now they are obliged to plough it up again, and obliged to go back to corn growing since the cattle and sheep have gone down so low?—Yes.

49,314. Do you find any difficulty in arranging with the tenants?—No, none at all.

49,315. Have you copies of the agreements in use on your estate?—I have not. I did not bring one with me. I could get one.

49,316. We generally have copies put in. We shall be very pleased if you could send one in?—Yes, but most of my farms are without any agreement at all.

49,317. Do the tenants never apply for agreements?—Sometimes they have refused to sign them. I have had instances of that sort. They would rather not.

49,318. What we have generally found is that they seemed to care nothing about it; they did not understand the agreement, and they did not care about having it?—Sometimes they have objected, and I have never pressed it. I think I have two farms out of that list with agreements, and only two; all the rest are without.

49,319. I can see that you have adopted rather a new system from that which we have been in the habit of noticing, namely, growing three or four white crops?—Yes.

49,320. I suppose those two tenants that have agreements with you have copies of them?—Yes, certainly.

Mr. Grove.

49,321. You do not have the agreements printed also in Welsh, do you?—No, these two tenants thoroughly understand and can talk English and Welsh.

49,322. When you give abatements, do you give notice that you are going to make abatements or is it a regular thing?—I am always in touch with my tenants, and always see them, and we talk it over at the different times as necessity arises.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,323. Do you think they are able to get their rateable value reduced, and that they pay less rates because of the abatement you have given?—I always tell them to do that, but in some instances they have not done it soon enough, and they complain, and I have told them to go down to the union about it.

49,324. Do we gather from you that there has been much land laid down to pasture?—Very little.

49,325. When that is so do you give them any help at all by paying for the seed, or anything of that kind?—In some cases where a tenant has left we have given the seeds, and we do not charge the incoming tenant.

49,326. Then you seem to object to a land court?—Yes, I do.

49,327. If a land court were arranged so that it would only be made available in case of difference, would you object to it. Suppose, now, for instance, in the case of yourself; you seem to be thoroughly in sympathy with your tenants, and if you and your tenants could agree upon the conditions of holding and upon the rent there would be no need for you to go to a land court?—No.

49,328. Supposing that that were to take place, do you not think that part of the objection to a land court is taken away?—I do not think that a land court would affect a good landlord at all.

49,329. Then, as a good landlord, you would not object to it?—No, not in that way. It is to the general principle that I would object.

49,330. Do you think it would interfere with the pleasant relationship between landlord and tenant?—I do.

49,331. Is there any other point of objection that occurs to you?—I think it would make it a mere mercantile transaction, that we should then demand our rents to the day, and not be waiting six months or rather more—about nine months in some cases.

49,332. There are very few changes of tenancy with you, I suppose?—I have had very few indeed. Three or four of them have been there from their great grandfather's time.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,333. Have you any penalising clauses in your agreements?—No, not beyond the white crops clause.

49,334. You have nothing with regard to ploughing up meadow and pasture land?—Yes, any old pasture is not to be ploughed up.

49,335. Are those clauses ever carried out?—No; there was one instance in which the last tenant ploughed up an old pasture; nothing was said to him; or rather he was remonstrated with, but he carried it out and nothing was done.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Owen called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,336. Is this your evidence, and is it correct?—So far as I recollect the summary of evidence which is written in English is correct.

49,337. Where do you live?—At Talybont, seven miles to the north of Aberystwyth.

(The following statement of the witness was then read.)

Evidence of David Owen of Berthlwyd, Talybont. I am a farmer, now living on my own farm.

See 48,450–48,508.

From the year 1872 to the year 1887 I was tenant of Maenelin on the Carrog estate. I was brought up and always remained a Calvinistic Methodist until I went to Maenelin. I went there because I had married Mrs. Owen, who was at the time tenant of the farm. When I asked Mr. Sinnett if he would take me on as tenant with my wife, he said he would if I went to church. I asked him if he would not let me the farm and allow me to go to chapel as I had been used to, but he said "No, not on any account, if you do not go to church." As my wife was in the farm already, I went to church. I now go to the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel.

49,338. Have you been doing that in consequence?—No, I went there of my own accord, because I had had enough of the church.

Mr. Grove.

49,339. When was it that Mr. Sinnett said that to you?—At the time that I married.

49,340. How long ago, in what year?—I was married in 1872, and in the same year, after my marriage, I went to Mr. Sinnett and asked him if I might be a tenant of his.

49,341. Then it was that he refused to allow you to be a tenant unless you went to church was it?—Yes.

49,342. Is Mr. Sinnett still the agent of this estate?—No, he was the trustee at that time. The son was the agent.

49,343. But you go now to the Calvinistic Methodist Chapel?—Yes.

49,344. Have they ever grumbled at you for doing so?—Who?

49,345. The same parties that told you, you must go to church?—They had not the right to. The tenants have always been obliged to go, and those tenants have been in the custom of going to chapel.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,346. Are there many tenants on this estate?—Yes, from 12 to 15 tenants.

49,347. They generally go to church do they?—Everyone of them while on the estate?

49,348. How is it that you are allowed more freedom than the rest?—Because I am no longer their tenant.

49,349. You have left the estate then?—Yes. I was obliged to attend church until I left.

49,350. Did you consider it rather oppressive to compel you to go to church?—Yes, and I hope that the Government may come to the rescue, so as to avoid such an oppression.

49,351. Is it your opinion, then, that every man should worship in the manner that he considers best, and not be compelled by anybody?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

49,352. You did go to church for some time, did you not?—I was obliged to go to church while on the estate.

49,353. Then when your body was in the church, your heart was in the chapel?—Yes, certainly.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,354. The following question is put in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Was any tenant ever turned "out of his farm because he went to chapel"?—Yes, two were.

49,355. "Name them?"—Jenkin James, Brynhir, and Catherine Edwards of Pencwmmawr, was the other.

49,356. You yourself bought your own farm, did you not?—Yes.

49,357. What is the name of the farm that you were in?—Maenelin Uchaf was the name of the farm I was in.

49,358. Who is the owner of that?—Mr. Sinnett.

49,359. The following question is by Mr. John Evans: "What about John Lloyd, Palmon"?—I had not come to live in that neighbourhood then. I am not sure about him.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,360. Then you do not wish to speak about a thing you do not know of?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Henry William Morgan called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,361. You live at Bronllangwrda, Capel Bangor, Aberystwyth?—Yes. I now live on the farm where I was bred and born. When a lad, following the team, my father used to meet his payments chiefly from the sale of corn, wheat more particularly, it being corn-growing land. Now there is no demand for wheat, and the price is so reduced in consequence that, with the present high rent and high wages, corn growing has ceased to be at all profitable. We depend entirely on the rearing of stock and dairy produce, and when the price of stock becomes very low, as it has been for the last two or three years, it is a matter of impossibility to make both ends meet. Wages are quite double what they were; the same almost may be said of the rates. I am rated at 2*s.* in the £ on the half year. The rates are made up as follows: poor rate, 10¾*d.*; highway, 2¾*d.*; sanitary, ¾*d.*; school board, 7¾*d.*; other charges, 2*d.* Now these latter rates were not in my father's time. The school board, for instance, which is 1*s.* 3*d.* in the £; highway, 5½*d.* Before abolishing the turnpike gates those who used the roads had to maintain them, but now they become a very heavy burden on the rates. I think it was a mistake to drop the wheel tax. In this county a timber merchant from Radnorshire, by carting heavy loads of timber over the roads, has put the county to 70*l.* extra expense in repairing the roads, and yet he will not contribute a penny. I am also of opinion that we have not a fair market. Foreign goods have an advantage over home produce; for instance, in the butcher's shop we find two carcases, one foreign meat, the other of home production, side by side. The foreigner's has not contributed a single penny towards either local or imperial taxation, while the other has been heavily rated. It is argued that for the good of the public, provisions should be cheap. But in my opinion the general public who are not otherwise heavily rated, ought, and should by all justice, pay their quota towards local and Imperial taxation, as the whole community reap the benefit. The working man's vote is as good as the squire's. The moneyed classes, again, do not pay their share of the local rates. They only contribute according to the rateable value of their mansions. If the rates were levied on the same principle as the income tax, then the wealthy classes would have to pay their due share. A farmer with 1,000*l.* invested in land has to pay every rate in existence, while the merchant or stockholder may turn over his thousands yearly, and yet only pay according to the rateable value of his premises. There is a section of the House of Commons whose whole aim is to throw all the burden of taxation on land. For instance, on the 12th January last a manifesto was presented to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, signed by upwards of 90 members, asking him to abolish the school fee and other grants towards relieving local taxation, which means to add about eight millions to the local rates on land and house property, which would be equal to about 1*s.* in the £. It may be not the original intention of these honourable members to ruin the poor farmer, but any Bill of the kind passing the "Commons" after the amendments of the "Lords" would have that effect. The land tax and the chief rent are a disgrace to his enlightened generation, and are only relics of the old feudal system. The chief rent of one farm may be 4*d.*, or a meal of flumery, while the other, much smaller, may be 8*s.* or 10*s.* In my opinion there is but one alternative, either we must have fair trade or the rents reduced to the level of the American land, or the British farmer is doomed. It is quite immaterial to me whether meat is sold at 4*d.* or 7*d.* a pound as long as the land is rented accordingly. The competition for land in Wales is very keen, and consequently it is not an easy matter to get rents reduced. I know many instances where farms were given up and reduction of rent asked for, but were soon taken up again. The farmers are more to be blamed than the landlord in this respect, for want of combination. The working classes have their trade unions; why should not the farmers form their society. I think religion and politics have something to do with the matter It is alleged that the landlord has a right to freedom of contract, which means that he has as much right to let his land as the farmer to sell his horse to the highest bidder. Logically he has in a certain sense, but practically there is a vast difference. The dealer has no interest in the horse until he buys it, while most tenant farmers have an attachment to the holding as their home, and in many cases the home of their parents. And besides they have a pecuniary interest in their farms, having made considerable improvements at great expense, and labour for which, if they have to leave at six or twelve months notice they can never get adequate compensation. Freedom of contract is a splendid principle when the contracting parties are on equal ground. When the existing tenant cannot come to an agreement with his landlord, an official referee should be appointed to settle a fair rent. Most of the landlords about here have the welfare of their tenants very much at heart, but the rents having been raised during prosperous times, they are not very willing to reduce them now.

Mr. Grove.

49,362. You speak about the damage to the roads by timber haulage?—Yes.

49,363. Is not that extraordinary traffic that they could make them pay for?—There is an action at law on the matter now.

49,364. They are trying that question now?—Yes.

49,365. Do you consider that the land bears too many burthens?—Yes.

49,366. And you are afraid that modern legislation is going to put more on?—Yes, that is what I can see it drifting to.

49,367. Seeing that, why should there be such land hunger as there is now? They say that if there is a vacant farm there are 10 or 12 people ready to take it?—It is the scarcity of land. People must live. I have been brought up as a farmer, and if I leave this farm I must go down to the coal works or must get another farm.

49,368. Then it is difficult for a farmer to turn his hand to anything else when he is once brought up to farming?—Yes.

49,369. Do you think that education will make them branch out more, so as to have less farmers in the future?—No, I do not.

49,370. Because one is rather puzzled as to why, if there are such bad times in farming, so many men are anxious to take farms?—They must live. If farmers brought up their sons as parsons and schoolmasters, &c. there would soon be too many in the market, so that we cannot send our sons to that. Besides, farming is very healthy. I should like farming very much if one could get the land for what it is worth, and what we could pay for it.

49,371. It is an independent and manly occupation?—Yes, it is a splendid pursuit.

49,372. You speak now of co-operation amongst farmers. Are there any farmers' clubs or agricultural societies?—Nothing.

49,373. Why do not the farmers combine?—I will tell you one thing. A few years ago there was a meeting called in Aberystwyth, in the Market Hall here. There were handbills about, and a great many farmers attended; I for one attended. The first speaker there was the honourable member for Merioneth. I expected to hear something with regard to the farmers forming a society, but instead of that I heard a very eloquent speech on the disestablishment of the church. I being a Churchman myself, and also a great many of the farmers present—most of the farmers, in fact, between here and Llanrhystyd are Churchmen—we walked out and would not listen, and said it was a political meeting, and I never heard anything of it since.

49,374. The first trial was a little unfortunate, was it not?—Yes, very.

49,375. There is no reason why you should not try again?—If they will drop politics and religion I will join in a minute.

49,376. What we found was that in some places they tried to get a meeting, but they generally had their dinner first, and we suggested that perhaps they had better get the business over before they had the dinner?—I cannot say about that.

49,377. But seriously, could not the farmers do a great deal by co-operation to help themselves?—Yes, certainly.

49,378. You do not agree with that?—Certainly I do not agree with farmers going and trying to cut one another's throats. When a farmer says that one farm is too dear according to the present time, I would like to get it reduced, and not to see another man going behind him, so to speak, and cutting his throat. I do not believe in that sort of thing at all.

49,379. Do you think there ought to be a longer notice now than there is?—That would ruin farms certainly, I think there should be some protection for the landlord. I should not like to see a farm ruined, but the outgoing tenant ought to be compensated for what he has spent on the land.

49,380. You think he ought to be compensated for improvements that he makes?—Yes.

49,381. And you think there ought to be security of tenure?—Yes, of some sort.

49,382. You think that if those things could be brought about, a farmer would throw more labour and more heart into the land, and make it produce a good deal more, do you not?—Yes, certainly; if they had a little more heart they would be more independent.

49,383. Is it your opinion that the land does not produce what it ought to produce?—In my neighbourhood they are good farmers, all of them, so that I cannot speak.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,384. Capel Bangor is a little to the east, is it not?—About 5 miles.

49,385. Is it between this and Llanrhystyd?—No, it is up the Vale of Rheidol.

49,386. Inland?—Yes.

49,387. I cannot see it upon the map, but what is the name of the parish?—It is a township. It is Bronllangwrda, in the parish of Llanbadarn Fawr.

49,388. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act, Mr. Morgan?—No.

49,389. It would be very wise to look it up amongst the farmers, because it was an effort, at all events, made by Parliament to meet some of the wants of the farmers?—The first Act that was passed most of the farmers had notice to contract out of, and I never knew of this last Act until I saw it in "Everyman's own Lawyer" last week.

49,390. There is a section in the Act out of which you cannot contract?—Yes, it seems so.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,391. You say, at the commencement of your evidence, that you commenced farming upon rather a different system to what you farm upon at present?—Yes, much.

49,392. Corn farming was the rule of the day then?—Yes.

49,393. Were you able to pay one half-year's rent from your corn?—Then?

49,394. Yes?—Yes.

49,395. But you are not able to do so now, I suppose?—No.

49,396. What might you be getting for your wheat at that time?—7*s.* 6*d.* a bushel, 3*l.* a quarter.

49,397. What are you able to get now?—About 4*s.* 9*d.* a bushel now.

49,398. You get that much?—Yes.

49,399. We cannot get anything like it?—Barley and oats are the only things that are profitable now; if you can grow good barley for the maltster, and oats for the cropping time it is all you can do.

49,400. Do they sell the barley to the maltsters here?—I sell barley to the maltsters myself.

49,401. That is very good, because they get most of the barley from England in our part of the country. You turn most of your attention to rearing of stock, do you not?—Yes.

49,402. That has not paid well, has it?—No, especially on one side of my farm, which is very dry, and as it has not been a good summer last year it did not pay. In a dry summer like the last it is very ruinous to me.

49,403. Did you lay most of the land down to pasture?—It is almost all laid down to pasture.

49,404. Did the landlord assist in giving you seeds?—No.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,405. No assistance whatever?—No.

49,406. Have you any terms in your agreement?—I have no agreement at all. I have a very good landlord, and I do as I just like.

49,407. Then you can plough up this land again?—Yes, when I like. I can plough it up every inch, except the meadow underneath the house.

49,408. If you wished to grow corn it would answer. We found in some agreements, although the tenants have laid down the land to grass, they are not permitted by their agreement to plough up that land again, although the landlord has not paid a penny towards it; they have a new agreement, and they are not allowed to plough up the land that they have laid down to grass themselves. Does your land come quickly to grass? In some places it is very slow?—Yes, but it does not last long. We must plough it up in three years.

49,409. Is some of it damp?—No, it is a rocky sub-soil, and the other part of it is white clay. It does not last very long.

49,410. Then you do not lay any of it down to permanent pasture?—It comes in rotation. We plough one field from pasture, and lay it down to wheat every year, and then have a second crop, and then take it back to potatoes and seeds again. That is the custom of rotation in the neighbourhood. After they put the potatoes into it, they put it back to barley and seeds.

49,411. Did you have turnpikes in this country?—Yes.

49,412. They have been done away with. Do you think it was beneficial to the farmers to have the turnpike gates, or not?—I did not pay so much gate money as I pay highway rate now.

49,413. And I suppose the brewer and maltster and so on pay nothing?—No, and the hackney carriages that go up from town pay nothing. They go up to the Devil's Bridge every day in the summer time. We have to keep the road in very good repair, or we shall know it, and they do not pay anything. Even the bicyclists give a good swear if there is a stone in the road and is not in very good repair.

49,414. Would you like to see them taxed?—Yes, certainly; everybody who uses the road, I think, ought to pay for the maintenance of it.

49,415. What is your opinion with regard to the roads. Do you think that the landlord should pay a portion of the rates?—I think that the Chancellor of the Exchequer ought to try and help us.

49,416. Imperial taxation, of course?—Yes.

49,417. You are of opinion, then, that farmers cannot go on at the present rate of things for long?—No, they really cannot; comparing the good and bad years together, I do not think they can.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,418. With regard to the labour, do you find that the price of labour has gone up?—Yes, double.

49,419. Corn has gone down, and labour gone up double?—Yes.

49,420. Is the labour as efficient now as it was; are the workmen as capable?—We have to do with less on account of it; we cannot get them.

49,421. Have you to do with inferior labourers?—No, we have not, but with fewer men.

49,422. Do the best workmen leave for any other locality?—No, I cannot say that.

49,423. Are you obliged to use farm boys instead of labourers?—No, they do not pay; I would rather have a good man.

49,424. We find it quite the reverse in other places, and we find that people employ boys, and that they have brought some boys from homes in England into Carmarthenshire. It is very inferior labour?—Yes, but we had plenty of labour. Personally, I would rather have the men labourers. See 38,652 38,673.

49,425. I quite agree with you myself. How are the cottages; have you sufficient cottages on your farm?—There are plenty of cottages in the neighbourhood, but they are empty, and the people have all gone south. I am in a mining district, and scores have gone to South Wales on account of the mining depression.

49,426. Are they good cottages?—Yes, splendid.

49,427. With all that they leave?—Yes.

49,428. Have you many instances of labourers keeping a cow or two?—No, not very many.

49,429. Do you not think that would induce the labourers to stop on the farm if they had a cow to keep on the land?—Yes, it is a great help to a poor man for his family to have a little milk.

49,430. And is he not more likely to settle down in a place than a man who can pack up his box and be off?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

Your evidence is very interesting, and I am sorry we have not more time to deal with it.

Mr. Grove.

49,431. One point with regard to the carriages going with the visitors to Devils Bridge, Plinlimmon, and so on; do you not think that farming is very much better because so much money is brought into Aberystwyth, and so many things are sold there at very fair prices?—Of course, it improves the market.

49,432. I just wanted to show that there are two sides to it, because I am accustomed to come myself to Aberystwyth, and I always enjoy it very much?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morgan called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,433. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to state?—My name is John Morgan, of the "Observer" Office, Aberystwyth. I have endeavoured for some time past to consult as many farmers as possible, especially with regard to the question of this Land Commission, and I especially consulted the Nonconformist farmers and a good number of Nonconformist ministers. I have also seen land agents, and landlords, but I believe that none knew I was going to say a word here to-day until now. I have not spoken to anyone. I find there is comparative little interest taken in your Land Commission. The interest is promoted, I think, to a great extent by people who are not actually connected with land. For instance, in Carmarthenshire, you had Mr. Gwilym Evans, who may, for all I know, be a farmer; you have Mr. Vaughan Davies, in this county, and Dr. Enoch Davies. I think all these people are aspirants for public honours, and aspirants for the votes of the farmers in different ways. They are aspirants for public honours, either parliamentary or county councillary. Perhaps it is best not to say anything about that. I think myself, the landlords ought to give evidence much oftener than they have given evidence. To-day we have heard of two or three landlords who have been spoken of as good landlords; in fact, I think, all the witnesses to-day have spoken of the landlords as good landlords, and I venture to say there is not in North Cardiganshire a landlord who is not a good landlord. There are individual cases of hardship that I know of. I know of one farmer who took a holding which had been unsuccessful with a large number of tenants. After a while he was able to make it pay by means of capital and shrewdness, and then his rent was put up. Later on, another attempt was made to put his rent up. I am not sure whether he resisted that demand or not, but certainly the demand was made. I think he has improved his holding by drainage. I spoke to him this morning with regard to the drainage. He said that the Agricultural Holdings Act does not protect him, unless he has a written permission from the landlord.

49,434. That is wrong; drainage comes under the second schedule, as to which it is only necessary he should give written notice to his landlord, and it does not require the landlord's sanction?—I heard that said the other day in Tregaron, but I spoke to him, and he said it was the contrary. He did not know.

49,435. What you mean is that the Agricultural Holdings Act is very little understood?—Yes, very few people seem to know anything at all about it. The greatest grievance of the farmer is undoubtedly the possibility of having rents raised upon his own improvement. I do not think it is often done, but there is the possibility of it, and it has occasionally happened. I know of an instance where a farmer on the Nanteos estate improved his land. A neighbour wrote offering 20*l.* a year more for the farm, and it was refused, Mr. Powell saying that he preferred to keep good tenants when he got them. But, unfortunately, very few farmers do improve their holdings. Most men are contented to jog along and simply exist. If they had some security it is possible that many of them would improve holdings, but not all. It is not our experience that freeholders do always cultivate their land better than tenants, in fact, I may say it is almost the other way. I think the fact that a man owns a property does not make him a better farmer. A man who is a good farmer will farm well in any case, I think, the same as a good workman will work well under any conditions. It is our experience that good tenants are perfectly safe on the large estates in this part of the country. I remember hearing one gentleman, the late Alderman John James, often say that his people had been on the Nanteos estate for 200 or 300 years, and they are there still. I have made a note with regard to game. There is some feeling with regard to game. I heard that people had been turned out from their holdings on one of the estates (I have only heard of one or two instances) in consequence of some little act in connexion with game, but I think there are not many cases of that kind. Then I have a note with regard to farming. I am told by middle-aged people, and by people who sell lime and manure, that farmers do not now cultivate nearly as well as they did a generation ago. As to the present depression, I think we have been informed by Sir William Harcourt, and at least by one other member of the Government, that it is only temporary, and that it will pass away. It is said that the rents are too high. From inquiries I have made I find that the general return is about 3 per cent. upon the value, and I do not think that is too high. A man may invest his capital in very good security at 3 per cent.

49,436. Then the original amount given for the land is perhaps too high?—That again is met by the fact that there are plenty of buyers if you put property on the market.

49,437. I did not quite understand your point before, but now I follow it?—If you put property on the market, and the highest bidder gets it, he has bid only a few pounds, perhaps 5*l.* or 10*l.*, more than the man next to him. There is always competition for land. I certainly do not think that 3 per cent. is too high. I am told that if deductions are made for houses, land frequently will not pay more than 1 or 2 per cent. at the outside upon the original capital.

49,438. I think, if I clearly understand your point, it is this: assuming the land to have been sold in the open market, the rents are about 3 per cent. upon the purchase money?—That, I think, is about the average.

49,439. Therefore, upon that showing, the rents would have to be high?—Yes.

49,440. That is your point?—Yes. My suggestion for a remedy, or rather it is a remedy suggested by good farmers, is better cultivation. Of course the tenant will say, "I am not going "to improve my farm unless I have some secu- "rity," and therefore it becomes necessary that there should be security. Some people have gone as far as to say that the tenants should in this country almost share in a sort of freehold, a permanent fixity of tenure, but I do not think that has any great hold upon the farmers in the north part of Cardiganshire.

As to a land court I have no great liking for it, but, as one of the most promising of the younger Nonconformist men in this county put it to me the other day, landlords require protection from a good number of bad tenants, and therefore the land court would tell both ways, but I do not think many people would come to a land court.

With regard to competition, it is keen, but I am not sure that it is keener amongst farmers than it is amongst tradespeople. I can speak as to the competition amongst printers as being ridiculously keen, and it is going on at a fine pace We have heard about the land hunger; it has been said there is competition amongst tradesmen; there is hunger for everything; there is a hunger for trade; there is a hunger for houses in towns; there is not a house to be let in this town now, and there is a great danger that people will very soon do what they did 20 years ago, run up rents, and then there will be a relapse, as we had some 15 years ago.

Farm labourers' wages I suppose have quite doubled in a generation, and rates have increased, but seemingly the landlord is the only person who is to be sacrificed. Then the law expenses in connexion with the transfer of land are very high, unreasonably so. With regard to the religious differences, no doubt there are differences on religious matters as in respect of all other matters, but I do not think there is any real oppression, except possibly in a rare instance there may be something like oppression. I doubt, for instance, whether many Liberal Nonconformist landlords have Church tenants. A couple of days ago I had a conversation with a gentleman holding a high position in this county who is a Churchman, and he told me that on his estate there are three Nonconformists for every Churchman. I wish myself that the landlords would get more into touch with the Nonconformists. When Nonconformists have meetings in chapels, I mean social meetings, or literary meetings, or anything of that kind, you do not often find the squire there, either sitting down in the crowd, or taking the chair. I think it is a great mistake on their part to hold themselves aloof. They are in touch with the clergyman of the parish, but they are not, as I think they ought to be, in touch with the Nonconformist minister, who is quite an influential man in every district. It is my fortune to know many Nonconformist ministers, and my experience of them is that they are very good fellows.

I find, speaking from a personal point of view, that farmers do not read much Personally, of course, I wish they would read more. If they did read a good deal more they would certainly be able to hold their own in the outside world better. There is plenty of all kinds of literature for them. In connexion with this point I have a note with reference to that very excellent report issued by Mr. Lleufer Thomas on the condition of the agricultural labourers. I have only been able to dip into it a little now and then, but I think it is most interesting and most instructive. Unfortunately he has been too fair in preparing that report, and consequently it is not taken up by either landlord or tenant. Had he slashed at the landlord, he would have been hailed as the saviour of this country; had he, on the other hand, declared that the farm labourer was a worthless being and would not work, and all that sort of thing, he would have been set up as a county magistrate very soon, or something like that.

I feel rather strongly in favour of light railways, especially in Cardiganshire. I think a railway up to Devil's Bridge would possibly pay, and it would certainly be a great convenience. It would undoubtedly carry thousands of people in the summer time, while another railway along the coast to Cardigan from here would be most useful, and possibly one from Aberayron to Lampeter, and, if you like, another further down towards Llandyssul. In considering the question of light railways in their application to Cardiganshire, it is well to bear in mind that a very large number of visitors come here in the summer time, and they would naturally patronise the railways—a thing which would not occur in inland counties. I believe that the little railway from Machynlleth to Corris issues (I am speaking now from memory) something like 30,000 tourist tickets in the summer season, and, of course, Machynlleth is not a watering place. People have to go to Machynlleth either from Barmouth or Aberystwyth or some other place inland before they get to the railway at all.

Mr. Grove.

49,441. Are you a landowner?—No, I am not.

49,442. Do you farm any land?—No.

49,443. Then may we ask what you are?—I am a newspaper proprietor and printer. I am in general business in that way.

49,444. Of what political colour is your newspaper?—Conservative.

49,445. Do you object to the evidence of Mr Vaughan Davies?—No.

49,446. On what ground do you object?—I do not object at all to it.

49,447. But you mentioned his name?—Yes, what I do say is this, that these are the people who are agitating. I do not object to the evidence he gave. I had prepared my notes for the evidence before Mr. Vaughan Davies had given his evidence.

49,448. You mentioned his name, did you not?—Yes, I did.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,449. As being an aspirant for public honours?—Yes.

49,450. That did not come out in the evidence before us?—I am not speaking about what he said. I heard his evidence by chance, but I had made my notes before. What I say is that it is not the farmer pure and simple who is promoting the meetings. I may go further. I believe that the county council of Cardiganshire endeavoured, and did convene certain meetings, or try to hold meetings, but I believe they have almost all failed.

49,451. Then you say that the tenants in this country are fairly safe?—On the large estates they are, certainly.

49,452. But the landlords may die, and also there have been very large sales of property, which must be considered. You do not deny, I suppose, that a great deal of property in the county generally has changed hands by sale?—I do not know whether you will have evidence before you to-day, but I have heard of one case of the kind; two farms were sold, and I am told that one fetched a much higher figure than the other, simply because it was better farmed.

49,453. But that does not touch the point. You are speaking about the safety of tenant farmers' security of tenure?—Yes.

49,454. That may be interfered with by the death of a landlord, may it not?—Yes.

49,455. It may be interfered with by the landlord selling his property?—Yes.

49,456. And getting into the hands of a new owner?—Yes.

49,457. Then do you not consider that security of tenure is desirable?—Yes, I have said so.

49,458. Do you think that a tenant ought to be paid for the improvements he has effected?—Certainly. I have a note of that here, but I do not know whether I mentioned it.

49,459. And you also think that a land court may be beneficial in some respects; that is, you would allow the good landlord and the tenant to settle matters together, and not go before the land court, and you would also have the land court in case of need, where there was a dispute?—I see no more objections to a land court than I do to a county court.

49,460. A county court is very objectionable, I think?—Only to people who are obliged to go there.

49,461. That is it exactly; only for people who are obliged to go there?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,462. Is it not a fact that the tenant farmers are rather afraid to come forward to give evidence. You say you have had a good deal of experience with them?—I doubt it. I thought of saying something about that. I doubt whether they are really afraid, and yet I will not say they are not. You can realise what you cannot explain.

49,463. Are you aware of the number of farmers that came yesterday before us at Aberayron?—No, I was not down there. Was it a large number?

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,464. We had 48 before us; or I should say 40 of them came forward?—That would prove that they were not afraid, and that would be proving my case.

49,465. They were freeholders chiefly, I believe?—I know this, that some of the landlords have told me that they wish some really good farmers—men in the confidence of their neighbours—would give evidence.

49,466. Quite so, but the distress those people were in made them come before us?—Yes.

49,467. You named one case yourself, I think?—Yes, there are cases, but there are comparatively few.

49,468. Why did not that farmer come here himself with regard to the question of this drainge. Did you not ask him to come forward?—No, I did not.

49,469. Have you any reason that you can mention why he did not come forward?—No, I do not know why.

49,470. You say that the rent has been raised. Do you know of cases where the rents have been raised on the tenants' own improvements?—There is that one case; I know that; I mean to say I have confidence in the man.

49,471. Do farmers often have notice to quit?—I should say not. I believe not. In connexion with that I may say that I have reason for believing that on the Nanteos estate, which is one of the large estates, since Mr. Lewis, the present agent, has had the management, there has not been one change in consequence of a dispute. On the Crosswood, which is an estate that is larger still, during the time that Mr. Gardiner——

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,472. Do you know these matters of your own knowledge?—How could I know them of my own knowledge? I challenge anyone to contradict them.

49,473. Yes, very likely, but we would much rather you would confine yourself to things that you can speak to of your own knowledge. You see people might be forthcoming to speak to things themselves, and it would be far better that we should have it from them?—I admit that is quite so.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,474. You said just now, I think, that tenant farmers and owners farmed both alike, and that if anything the tenant farmer farms best?—Well, I will not say that; I think they farm much alike. What I say is, that a good farmer will cultivate his land well whether he is a tenant or an owner. A good man will work well anyhow.

49,475. But do you think that the tenant farmer who has no security can farm as well as a man that has his own holding?—He can, but——

49,476. Provided he has the means of doing it. We had a case to-day where they had no means to do it?—I believe the farmers are comparatively poor, but still they can improve their cultivation a good deal.

49,477. Yes; but where a man has got the capital, do you not think he would be farming better on his own farm than on another person's?—Certainly, if he is a good farmer he will. I meant to have mentioned that I am strongly in favour of loans for purchase. I have a notion, too, that leases would be good—giving a man 15 years. If he could not arrange with his landlord for a renewal, he could run out his farm; but that is bad again, is it not?

Mr. Grove.

49,478. Yes, rather bad?—I do not find leases are much in favour

Mr. Griffiths.

49,479. As a printer, I suppose you can tell us with regard to the number of cases of prosecutions for game in the district?—No, I could not.

49,480. I should have thought you would have attended the courts, and would know?—Personally I do not attend them. I hope I am not out of order now in stating that I think continuous abatements have a very bad effect, because it makes a farmer almost look forward to the abatement rather than to good cultivation. It would be far better for a landlord, if he thinks it reasonable, to make a reduction.

49,481. A permanent reduction?—I think so, indeed. You see it is tempting a man to do badly almost, in order that he may get an abatement; you know the feeling a man has. I am told also that farming pays even now. I am told of people who can make both ends meet. I am not going to press that matter, of course.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,482. We will take your opinion for what it is worth, but opinions of experienced farmers differ very much from you, I am sorry to say?—What they say is that they do not make the profits that they used to, that they think they are entitled to make.

49,483. No, that they cannot go on under present circumstances; that is the story we have heard?—But they do not fail. How is that?

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,484. It is best not to argue, but answer the questions that Mr. Griffiths puts.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,485. Is not the county council composed of men of various opinions?—Politically, yes.

49,486. You said the county council had taken up this question, I think?—Politically, our county council is predominated by the Radical party.

49,487. So that the rest have no voice at all?—Not much. They may have some little influence, but not much voting power.

49,488. You have spoken with regard to the landlord, and said that he wanted protection; in which way?—There are plenty of cases, I think, where tenants simply run out their land.

49,489. But what we have seen are very restrictive agreements?—They are never enforced, are they? Pardon me for asking the question.

49,490. As a rule we find them enforced?—As a printer I have printed a good many.

49,491. As a printer do you find sales more frequent than usual?—No; but I have seen clauses in the agreements to the effect that a man must give a goose, or something like that, at Christmas, and he must keep a dog for the landlord. Well, there is no harm in it surely?

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,492. It is taken into consideration with his rent, I should think?—Yes, that is so.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,493. Do you consider it a hardship for the tenant to have to go to church?—I have very strong views with regard to church matters. I go in for disestablishment, although I am a Churchman. I think it is a cruel thing to compel any man to go to a place of worship that he does not wish to go to. I do not think landlords care very much whether a man goes to church or chapel.

49,494. We have had many cases on different estates?—Yes, but you get probably one out of 50.

49,495. Do you consider education is well carried on in a place like Aberystwyth?—We are specially well favoured with regard to education.

49,496. I understand that you say that cultivation is somewhat neglected?—Yes.

49,497. You mentioned some of the witnesses we have had before us, such as Mr. Gwilym Evans, Mr. Vaughan Davies, and others?—Yes.

49,498. Did you read their evidence?—I have seen the outlines in the newspapers.

49,499. Did they not state in their evidence that they came forward on behalf of tenant farmers, who are afraid to come forward?—Yes, and I think that they have been working up these cases themselves, have they not? It is not the case of farmers coming forward spontaneously without it being worked up.

49,500. Do you deny that statement which they made to us; do you say that it was false?—That they appeared for farmers?

49,501. Yes?—No, I certainly do not. What I say is, that you can easily work up a thing, and then get people to say that you represent them.

Mr. Grove.

49,502. Have you not been working up this yourself?—No one knew that I was coming to give evidence until now, not a living soul, except the officials of the Commission; so that no one should know of it I have done all my own copying, and kept the thing strictly private. I myself am descended from some peasants and farmers, and my sympathies are with the farmers and with the workmen.

Mr. Grove—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,503. The following questions are handed in by Mr. John Evans: "Do not freeholders "with capital farm better than tenant farmers?" That question has been asked already?—Yes, some of them do, and some make money, and some only keep on as long as the money lasts. We have known freeholders go to the dogs.

49,504. "Is not the fact that most freeholders "do not farm better due to heavy mortgages "and want of capital?"—I have no doubt it is, and that would support my contention in favour of a loan.

49,505. "Do you not know of an estate in "this neighbourhood where every tenant but "two has been evicted since the present owner "came into possession about 12 years ago?"—I have not heard of any case of the kind. It is a strange thing if it is so.

49,506. "As to farmers reading, could you "give approximately the circulation of the "'Baner' in this county?"—No, I cannot; but it is a well circulated paper. I think the "Baner Fach" has a very wide circulation here, but I do not think that it is the agricultural news and intelligence of that kind that people read mostly.

49,507. I suppose your paper is English, is it not?—Yes.

49,508. And probably the Welsh circulation is larger than the English?—The "Baner" has a wide circulation. I think it goes everywhere.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Richard Theophilus Evans called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,509. Does this statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—This is a translation of my Welsh evidence, and, so far as I know, it is correct.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of Richard Theophilus Evans, of Abertrinant, Llanfihangel y Creuddyn.

Many think that the present cry for improvement in the land laws in Wales is the cry of Liberals and Nonconformists only, but I can assure you that Conservatives and Churchmen call for it as loudly as the Liberals.

There has been a prosperous age for the Welsh farmer, but by to-day the cloud of adversity hangs over his head. Rents and taxes have increased and business has decreased. About 20 years ago wheat, barley, and oats, were nearly double the price they are now; cattle also have gone down to nearly one-half. Butter, wool, and everything that brings gain to the farmer have gone down, so that his receipts do not amount to one-half what they did years ago. But rents are to-day as high as ever with a few exceptions.

The first complaint I call attention to is the impossibility for labourers to obtain a little land to keep a cow. Labourers in our neighbourhood have tried every means. I failed to secure a little land to keep a cow, so that they could have milk for their maintenance, while there is plenty of land close by, were it not that the lust of the owners prevents them giving it.

In the second place, I call attention to the way in which land is added to land, or farms are added to each other. About 25 of these have fallen into ruins within the last 50 years. Earl Lisburne added eight of them to the Lodge farm, and there are not as many labourers on the whole of the land now as were kept on Lodge farm about 50 years ago. There were 20 teams of horses on these farms at that time, but now there are only five. As a rule, it is the smaller farms that have fallen into ruins and been added to the larger farms, and those smaller farms stand, as a rule, on higher ground. For the first years, these places having been well cultivated, paid splendidly by fattening sheep on them. By to-day, however, they have completely changed, the cultivation has worked out, the land has become wild, and thorn and gorse now flourish where abundant crops of corn once grew. As the farms go down in this way the population decreases, the people having to remove to the works to earn their living, and the landowners have been obliged to lower the rents of some of them, as the tenants were unable to pay for them.

The farmers are also in need of more and better buildings on their farms. If they had convenient buildings the farmers could fatten their cattle instead of selling them off as store cattle for English farmers to profit by their labour. Farmers in our parish are obliged to leave some of their cattle out through the winter for want of suitable buildings.

In the fourth place, I call attention to the land which the Earl of Lisburne keeps for breeding rabbits. The Earl of Lisburne keeps over 300 acres of land in this parish, about 1,000 acres between the parishes of Llanafan and Gwnnws, almost entirely for rabbits, while workmen close by fail to get 3 acres to keep a cow. And great is the destruction wrought on farmers' sheep dogs on the borders of this land through being poisoned and shot, and I remember seeing a pig belonging to one farmer poisoned, when no doubt the poison had been placed there for the purpose of killing the farmer's dogs. Most of the farmers desire the absolute repeal of the Game Act.

Sir John Llewelyn.

After asking all the farmers in our district for their opinion as to a Land Bill, they one and all expect a Land Bill from the Government, which will give them enouragement to farm and improve the land better than they do at present. It is now useless for them to farm the land as they ought, as a notice to quit or an increase of rent would perhaps be the consequence. Farms in our parish have been sold for high prices because the tenants had improved their condition, and so the landowners have reaped the benefit of the tenants' cost and labour, and the tenants have been left without a penny of compensation in the end. Others, again, without receiving any repayment for their cost and trouble, have had to quit for no reason except that they farmed well.

The agreements of some of the landowners are a shame to gentlemen. The Nanteos tenants are under obligations to keep dogs for their landlord and to place their horses at his service when required. The Fronfraith tenants also are obliged to rear dogs and hens for their landlord when required, to lime some portion of the land every year, and to quit on six months' notice; no compensation is given to them, and they are not allowed to plough the same quantity as usual to get back some of the expense they have gone into.

Many a farmer has had to leave his farm lately because the farm was too dear. Nearly all the farms that have become vacant during these later years have been taken by artisans or tradesmen, who keep servants to work on the farms while they follow their own calling.

The farmers want a Land Act that will provide security of tenure, or, if a tenant is obliged to leave, that he will be repaid for his cost and labour. Most of the farmers are desirous that the rents should be made to vary according to the state of trade for the time being, so that the landowners should suffer the hardship as well as themselves. I believe that the landowner, any more than the tenant, ought not to be allowed to value the farm, but that a land court ought to be established by the Government, and then that men well versed in the value of land should be appointed to fix the rent.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,510. Then you consider that politics have nothing to do with this depression; it does not matter whether they are Conservatives or Liberals, they all suffer alike, do they not?—It is the same.

49,511. The first complaint you mention is that labourers cannot get land to keep cows. Have they tried on any estates to do that?—Yes.

49,512 And have they failed?—Yes.

49,513. Could you mention the name of the estate?—Lord Lisburne's estate and Mr. Bonsall, of Fronfraith.

49,514. Do you keep any labourers yourself?—I keep two at present.

49,515. Do they keep a cow?—One of them keeps a cow and the other does not.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,516. Which of the two does best?—The one who keeps a cow.

49,517. Do you think the other would like to keep a cow as well?—No, I do not think so.

49,518. The circumstances may be different, his wife may not have been brought up to it?—No; circumstances do not allow of it.

49,519. Would you be willing to part with two or three more acres of land out of your farm to settle him down too?—Yes, I would at any time.

49,520. The reason why I ask that question is, it has been brought before us that the farmers are not willing for the labourers to have land?—We on our farm let land to three so that they may keep cows. Three different people keep cows.

49,521. Do you get any hired boys for the year?—Yes.

49,522. Which do you think is the most attached to the land—the workman or the hired labourer?—The two are of quite different worth; the labourer only labours, that is, at making hedges, working in harvest time, and so on, and the servant man goes with the horses—follows the horses or serves the horses.

49,523. But is it not a fact that the hired servant can pack up at a few hours' notice and be off while the labourer is tied down to the land?—The hired servant must give a month's notice first.

49,524. What are the terms with your tenant?—I have no conditions—only that they have to pay the rent.

49,525. Can they leave at a month's notice, too?—No; they can leave either at Michaelmas or at May.

49,526. Then they are more settled upon the farm than the boys are; that is what I wish to make clear?—Yes.

49,527. You think by the consolidating of farms there is less labour required and there are less horses required—less teams employed?—Yes, a great deal less.

49,528. Does that tend to the depopulation of the neighbourhood?—Yes.

49,529. Are you troubled much with rabbits?—No, not now, but many years ago they gave us very great trouble.

49,530. Why do you not kill them?—We do kill them now.

49,531. Does any other game trouble you besides the rabbits?—Not at present, but they have been troubling us a great deal, and, with regard to the adjoining farmers, they give them much trouble now.

49,532. If they do not, why do you wish to abolish the Game Laws?—Because they do so much harm to the district and to the country generally.

49,533. Then you speak for your neighbours as well as yourself?—Yes.

49,534. Do they not kill the rabbits the same as you do?—Some of them do.

49,535. Why do not they all?—Perhaps they are too much afraid of Lord Lisburne.

49,536. Does not the law protect them?—Yes, but they are too much afraid of the lord; he might give another excuse at the end for turning them out of the farm.

49,537. Then they are more afraid of offending him than they are of breaking the law?—Yes.

49,538. Do you consider that every farmer should be paid for all the permanent improvements he makes?—Yes.

49,539. Are not the farmers in your neighbourhood at present in a position to farm well?—No, they are not.

49,540. Why?—Because, after they improve their farm perhaps it will be sold or the rent will be raised.

49,541. Does the fact of so many farms being sold in the neighbourhood prevent more produce being raised on the farms?—Yes, I believe so, and I think that the constant oppression of the landlords has killed the ambition of farmers.

49,542. Do you know of any instances where farmers have had to leave without compensation for these improvements?—Yes.

49,543. Can you name any?—Yes. Evan Evans, Glennydd, left about 20 years ago, and John Morgan Jones, Cwmnewidion Mill, left in the autumn of 1892.

49,544. Do you know of any that have had to quit their farms altogether?—Those two had to quit their farms altogether.

49,545. What was the reason given?—Although both of them had asked several times, they failed to get any reason.

49,546. But yet they had to leave?—Yes.

49,547. Were they considered good farmers in the neighbourhood?—Yes, Evan Evans was.

Mr. Grove.

49,548. What is the acreage of your farm?—300 acres, nearly.

49,549. What rent do you pay?—From 125*l.* to 130*l.*, I think. I am the tenant's nephew.

49,550. Then there is a good deal of rough land in that, is there?—Yes.

49,551. Do they get any abatement?—Not to my knowledge; we have never received a halfpenny, and I feel quite sure that it is so.

49,552. In speaking of the low price of produce you mentioned butter: has butter gone down in price as much as other things?—No, butter has not gone down so much as the other articles mentioned.

49,553. Do they not get a fair price for their butter now?—I consider that we get a very good price for butter if only the rent corresponded to the price.

49,554. Has there been any county council butter school started in this part?—I am not sure about the county council, but something has been done in connexion with the Aberystwyth college.

49,555. Do you think that the land would be better cultivated if there were smaller holdings?—Yes.

49,556. And you think there ought to be security of tenure?—Yes.

49,557. Do you think there ought to be longer notice than there is now when the tenant farmer wants to leave?—No, I only believe that he ought to be paid for his improvements.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,558. There are some questions handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen. The first is: "Do you "know why seven farms were consolidated to "Lodge farm"?—For the simple reason that it was good land; a convenient lowland, and very convenient land to cultivate.

49,559. "In whose occupation is Lodge farm?"—Lord Lisburne has had it for the last 60 years.

49,560. In his own hands?—Yes, the Lodge farm.

49,561. "Are the 300 acres given over to "rabbits on Lord Lisburne's estate capable of "cultivation"?—No, not all of the 300 acres, but a good part of it has been very good land, and they have had very good crops on it.

49,562. I suppose Lord Lisburne thought he would make more money by the rabbits, did he?—Perhaps he did so, but I do not think he does do so by the time he pays his keepers.

49,563. "Do you know of any tenants on the "Nanteos estate being compelled to keep dogs "who were not willing to do so?".—No, I have not heard of anyone, but everyone is prepared to do so for fear of them.

49,564. I suppose it is part of the old custom of the estate, is it?—Yes, I suppose so, from the time that oppression has been rife in Wales.

49,565. Do you not think that that kind of thing is taken into consideration in fixing the rent?—No, I do not think so. I think they have regarded it as a very small thing.

49,566. Are there many farms on this estate?—The Nanteos estate?

49,567. No, the other estate I am talking of now—in this neighbourhood. Are there many farms in this neighbourhood on the estate of Lord Lisburne?—Yes, there are very many.

49,568. Has there been any improvement in the butter in this neighbourhood since these schools were established?—No, I do not think so.

49,569. Has this rabbit warren you speak of been fenced off from the other land so that the rabbits cannot get through?—In some parts it has been so enclosed, but not in other parts.

49,570. Do they do any damage to the farmers' crops where they get through?—I hear the tenants complaining greatly.

49,571. Are they not allowed to catch them if they come in there?—Yes, but their dogs are poisoned if they happen to have a dog which is good at catching rabbits.

49,572. Can they not trap them?—The law does not permit trapping on the boundary. They would have to go before the law if they set the traps on the boundary wall, at any rate.

49,573. I suppose the keepers are very well respected in the neighbourhood?—There is no respect, but they are afraid of them.

49,574. You speak with regard to the dogs being poisoned. Do not those dogs that you are obliged to keep sometimes pick up the poison?—They pick up the poison, so far as I know; that is what they do.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,575. I do not mean the farmers' dogs; I mean the dogs that are sent by the landlord for them to keep?—I have never heard that such is the case on the Nanteos estate—that the dogs are ever poisoned.

Mr. Grove.

49,576. One question with regard to the Ground Game Act. By section 6 you can employ spring traps in rabbit holes. The words are these: "And no such person shall, for the "purpose of killing ground game, employ spring "traps, except in rabbit holes." Do you know the Act?—I have never read it through, but I have heard parts of it from this man and the other.

49,577. It is not much to read; it is very short?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. David Owen Edwards called and examined through an interpreter.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,578. What is it you wish to say?—I will read the little that I have prepared in Welsh, which I have here.

49,579. If you will hand your statement to the interpreter, he will translate it into English.

49,580. Where is Glandovey?—It is between Cardiganshire, Merionethshire, and Montgomeryshire.

The witness's statement, which was written in Welsh, was translated and read by the interpreter as follows:—

See 73,663 —73,702.

"The evidence of David Owen Edwards, Talybont, Glandovey. I wish to give evidence with regard to: (1.) Unfair rents. (2.) Raising the rents on tenant's improvements. (3.) Overvaluing lands in sales. (4.) Common lands. (5.) Tithe Act, 1891, injurious to farmers. (6.) Landowners and liberty of conscience.

First, unfair rents.—Small farms are much dearer than large farms. When tenant of Sir Pryse Pryse, Bart., of Gogerddan, I paid a rent of 10*s.* an acre for 31 acres, whilst a large farm of over 300 acres paid only 5*s.* an acre, and was much better land. Also farms are consolidated to form a large farm, which is a great mischief to agricultural trade. Many of the large farms are left to get wild and unproductive, because there is too much land in the hands of one person, and it does not produce one quarter of the produce which it would were it cultivated as well as the small farms.

For 11 acres of land, 22*l.* is paid by Mr. D. Davies, Talybont, whilst the farm of Pen'pontbren, the other side of the road, is only 1*l.* an acre. For land taken on lease the value of 1*s.* a year, Capt. J. Hughes, Talybont, was obliged to pay Sir Pryse Pryse 1*l.* 10*s.* a year, and in 60 years he had paid 90*l.*, and the house and land had become the property of Sir Pryse Pryse. For the farm of Bwlchglas, John Jones paid a rent of 54*l.*, and he gave 20*l.* the last two years from his capital to assist the produce of the farm to pay the rent. His landlord, Mr. Roberts, received 50*l.* a year from the peat company which is on the farm for the working thereof.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

I wish to call your attention to the harsh treatment of the landlords in charging excessive rents for mining properties in the north of Cardigan, which has produced a great loss to farmers, as the inhabitants are obliged to leave the district in consequence of want of work, and Sir Pryse Pryse makes J. Fell, Esq., pay 50*l.* a year for Esgairhir, and no one has been working there for years——

49,581. I suppose that land is let for cutting peat, is it?—No, it is hilly land; it is a sheep walk.

49,582. I did not quite understand the last sentence. What I should gather from that is that he lets it for cutting peat, and therefore it is no longer agricultural or sheep pasture, but I do not know quite what it means. It is something other than agricultural land?—They have raised peat there, but they do not do so now; they have not done so for years.

And many of the other works have been destroyed. In 1876 the rent of Llechweddmawr was raised from 45*l* to 97*l.*, it being a sheep walk of Sir Pryse Pryse's; Dolrhyddan from 70*l.* to 100*l.*; Camdwrmawr from 52*l.* to 96*l.* The price of a wether at that time was 25*s.*, the price of a ewe 18*s.*, and of wool 1*s.* a pound. Last year the price of a wether was 16*s.*, of a ewe 9*s.*, and of wool 7*d.* per pound.

The rent is raised on the improvements of the farmers. In 1849 Thomas Davies, of Braichgarw, paid 5*s.* rent, the alleged property of Sir Pryse Pryse, which was afterwards increased to 1*l.*, and afterwards, in 1854, to 4*l.*, and in 1876 to 8*l.*, by Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale, Sir Pryse's valuer, and in 1892 to 10 guineas.

In 1820 my grandfather, R. Morgan, became Sir Pryse's tenant, and he took Felinfach; the rent was 8*l.*; in 1824, 50 per cent. was added, and in 1876 28 per cent. again was added. My grandfather built the barn, and my father again built the outbuildings, and he did the wood work in connexion with the dwelling-house, without receiving payment or acknowledgment, only the acknowledgment of the valuer in 1876, namely, raising his rent 28 per cent.

In 1879 Mr. D. Edwards took Llettyllwyd at the rent of 75*l.*, when the old tenant, Thomas Delahoyde, was turned out, after he had spent hundreds of pounds on the farm, without only 100*l.* compensation. The same treatment fell to Edwards, after he had been farming the place well: he received six months' notice to quit, or to have an increase in the rent of 15*l.*, without having received any compensation for his labour.

In 1876, when Mr. Davies, of Frood Vale was valuing the estate of Sir Pryse, when valuing a particular field the farmer told him that he paid 2*s.* 6*d.* an acre for that land, and that it was his labour which had brought it into such a condition. The valuer said, 'I do not "take that into consideration; I have been "sent by Sir Pryse to value his land as I find "it to day."

I would ask you, gentlemen, to allow me to suggest that the complaints of the oppressed and the unprotected farmers should appeal seriously to you as Commissioners, to see that justice is administered between farmers and the landlords, and if the Government does not stretch forward a proper salvation soon to the farmers, their circumstances will oblige them to take an independent course in order to get their rights. There is wanted a land court to administer justice; security of tenure; compensation for improvements; and that all the game should become the property of the tenant as well, because he has to feed them, and he ought to have the creeping animals and birds; also an agreement of 12 months on the part of the tenant and on the part of the landlord as the law stands, and what is the good of a law unless it can be put in force.

Then there is over-valuing at time of sale. The number of those who have bought farms as freeholds is very great in Cardiganshire, and it is necessary for the Government to make some reasonable preparation to meet the wants of those when the landlords have sold these farms higher than their value, and as the value of land is sure to come down the burthens of this class will be increased.

Captain J. Hughes bought a house which was built on a lease of 60 years. A reasonable price for the land on which the house was built was 1*s.* a year, but he was bound to pay 1*l.* 10*s.* a year. After 33 years of the lease had expired it was put up for sale and sold for 55*l.* So 104*l.* 10*s.* was paid for a piece of land of the value of 1*s.* a year. There was a farm which was held by my family in 1820, the rent of which was 8*l.* then; in 1824 the rent was increased 50 per cent., and in 1876, 28 per cent.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. This is hearsay, Sir John, and it is anonymous. I do not think it is relevant.

When those tenants had made improvements in cultivating the land and putting up buildings the place was sold for 500*l.*, to the advantage of the landowner by at least the sum of 250*l.* on the labour of the tenants. After examples of this kind it is necessary that the Government should make an adequate preparation to meet the wants of this numerous class.

Common land. In the parish of Llanfihangel Geneu'r Glyn, there are about 100 acres of common land, which is called Braich Garw. It is said from time to time that Sir Pryse Pryse, Gogerddan, was going to divide it, but the inhabitants did not believe it was possible that such a thing could be done. Still, in the year 1893, he made a bold attempt to divide and enclose it, as if he was the owner, but the people awoke to defend their rights, and wood and wire were carried to do the work, and men were hired to enclose the place, but these men were obliged to go away without enclosing, and the agents threatened to punish. There was many an amusing scene in the place with regard to this matter, and Sir Pryse Pryse and his agents were, to their disappointment, obliged to yield. In 1801 a squatter's cottage, 'Ty unnos,' was built on the land, and in 1852 this house was rebuilt, for which now Sir Pryse Pryse wants a rent. It is said now that hundreds of acres of this land have been stolen from time to time. I should like to call the attention of the Commissioners to this history, that such an effort as this has been made to take possession of the land of the people. Is a wrong of this kind less with landlords than with someone else, or is the old piece of poetry true—

"Ni chaniateir pe bae
I ddwyn yr wydd oddiar y cae,
Ond caniateir yr rhwydd
I ddwyn y cae oddiar yr wydd."

The fact of the Tithe Act, 1891, being injurious to farmers. Before this Act was passed farmers had 10 per cent. reduction in tithe, but they do not receive it now that the tithe has been put on the landowners. This is a law which has a very oppressive effect upon farmers because they are too much afraid of the landowners to ask for their rights. It was easier for the farmers to carry their burthen at that time than it is now. With regard to landlords and liberty of conscience ——

The Witness.

I have two examples of that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,583. Are they cases which you know of your own knowledge?—Yes, John Davies of Braichgarw, to whom I have referred, had received notice to quit Braichgarw from Sir Pryse Pryse's agent, and he asked the agent what was the reason of this, and he said it was because he had been assisting the people to pull down the enclosure of the common. Then Evan

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Jones, of Bwlchyddwyallt also received notice to quit the farm, and it was presumed, and there was every ground for so believing——

Mr. H. L. Stephen. This is hardly evidence, it is only what was presumed.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He says there is every ground for believing.

Mr. H. L. Stephen. What there is ground for believing and what was presumed is not evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

He can speak to the common talk of the neighbourhood, if he knows that it was so of his own knowledge.

The Witness.

Yes, I do.

49,584. What was the common talk of the neighbourhood?—This is how it started with regard to Evan Jones. The Talybont people combined to prevent Sir Pryse from enclosing, and they went to collect subscriptions in order to have a drink after returning home to Talybont, and one of those who collected subscriptions put down that Evan Jones, at the head of the list, had promised 10*s.*, and some of his neighbours, who were in favour of Sir Pryse, went to tell that about Evan Jones. That is the reason I have heard from his brother; his brother told me.

49,585. Do you suggest that Evan Jones took out his 10*s.* worth in drink?—No, he did not take anything; but that was merely a form of appearance in order to get money.

49,586. In what way is that suggested as the common talk of the neighbourhood, as to why he was turned out of his farm?—Evan Jones told Sir Pryse that he should give half a crown to the people so that they should not break down this enclosure. Sir Pryse with regard to Evan Jones was misled by the people, and after Evan Jones had quite made every explanation of how things had arisen between him and the people, the place was restored to him.

49,587. Then Evan Jones was not turned out?—No, he was not turned out. He received notice to quit.

49,588. But he explained matters, and was allowed to remain?—Yes.

49,589. Those are the two instances?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

49,590. You speak of 1*s.* a year being paid for a house?—For land where the house was built.

49,591. Then you said they paid 30*s.* for that which was only worth 1*s.*?—Yes.

49,592. How much land do you take to be worth 1*s.* a year?—One must have a good deal of land of this description. It was river soil and wilderness—gravel soil.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,593. You made another remark; you said that unless the Government gave some assistance the people would have to take an independent course in order to get their rights. What do you mean by that?—The miners, colliers, and quarrymen combine in order to get their rights, and if the Government does not take a merciful view to protect the unprotected farmers the farmers must form societies just as other workmen do.

49,594. Why have not the farmers got a farmers' club? Is there any farmers' club in your neighbourhood?—No.

49,595. Is there any co-operation amongst farmers at all?—Yes; but nothing of a very decided character.

49,596. Would you be in favour of a farmers' club, so that they might talk things over?—Yes, I would, because I feel very much that farmers are the most servile class in the country. I do not say this from any disrespect or disregard but as a worthy opinion of mine from my knowledge of them.

49,597. Do you think that co-operation amongst the colliers and the iron-workers has been beneficial to them?—Yes.

49,598. Then do you suppose that co-operation amongst the farmers might be beneficial also?—Yes.

49,599. You can speak very good English, I think, can you not?—No, I am not an Englishman at all; I do not pretend to be one; I am more loyal to my language and to my country.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,600. Do you not think that landlords should have a little more rent for small holdings where they lay out so much money in buildings? Do you not think that they should have more per acre than upon larger holdings?—Perhaps there may be something in that, taking into consideration the buildings, but small holdings are very much better cultivated than larger ones. With regard to the large holdings, the same person has too much land under his care to cultivate it properly.

49,601. Can you plough a small field as quickly as you can a big one?—Yes, if you can get a cheaper team of horses to go at the same rate, according to its size.

49,602. According to your opinion, then, a team loses nothing by turning, because they are turning all day in a small field?—There is a difference, of course, between short land and long land with regard to turning.

49,603. Can implements be employed as easily upon a small holding?—Yes, if they are serviceable to many they are sure to be serviceable to few.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,604. With regard to the valuation of land, you say that rents are raised upon the improvements of the tenants?—Yes.

49,605. What was that land valued at which you suggest had formerly been worth half a crown per acre? Can you say what Mr. Davies valued it at?—27*s.* per acre.

49,606. He valued this land, which was formerly let at half-a-crown at 27*s.* an acre?—Yes, that was so. Half-a-crown was its value at one time, but after the tenant had drained it, and made certain other improvements, it was worth 27*s.*

49,607. Did the landlord do anything towards those improvements?—No.

49,608. The tenant did the whole, did he?—Yes.

49,609. And the consequence was that he had to pay the extra rent?—Yes.

49,610. Then you consider it unfair that the tenant was not paid for his improvements?—Yes.

49,611. It was rather worse than that?—It is a proceeding which destroys the farming. Farmers are not able to farm as they should in consequence.

49,612. Then you say, that unless the Government do something the tenants must combine. How do you propose that they should combine; what system have you in your mind? It is very easy for miners and quarrymen to combine, but what system do you propose for farmers?—It is quite as easy for the farmers to combine as well. If a tenant were to give up a farm because he cannot pay the higher rent, and he wants a reduction, and if all farmers were to do the same, and to have an understanding upon that, then the landlord would have no tenants.

49,613. But supposing they did that in this county, would they not come in from the next county?—Yes, but my idea is to extend it over Wales and over the whole world.

49,614. Then you consider that all the tenants should combine, that tenants of all kinds should be united?—Yes. Mr. David Edwards, of Llettyllwyd, had perfect means of taking an independent course on this farm, and if every one followed his example he would have been undoubtedly at Llettyllwyd, and he and others who sacrifice themselves for the rights of others suffer owing to the infidelity or unfaithfulness of others.

49,615. Then is this the position: if you wanted to have your rent reduced to-day, would your neighbours go in and try to take that farm before you could treat with your landlord?—Yes. It is a pity to say so, but there are several examples of that kind.

49,616. That is owing to this land hunger that we hear so much of. Is it an advantage for the landlord to reside in the locality?—Yes, it is a great advantage, inasmuch as the landowners are far more humane than their agents.

49,617. Then how would you keep them in the country if you take the game away from them altogether?—I consider that game is there to please some corrupt inclinations that exist in man.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,618. Do you consider it was wrong in the Creator to bring the game into the world?—The great Creator has done everything in the best way, but men must apply and turn them from the high objects which he intended.

49,619. We are getting far from the question now. Supposing that you had the game upon your farm, would you try to keep some game there; supposing there were no keepers employed, would you try to keep some game still for your landlord?—No, I would not at all.

49,620. Would you like to see the game all destroyed, then. I should like to know your view?—Yes, as things are carried on now.

49,621. No; I want to know what you would suggest, according to the state of things which you propose?—I have destroyed all the rabbits on my farm, because I find that poachers come there at night and kill the sheep. That is an instance. I consider it a great blessing to get rid of all kinds of game.

49,622. Then what are they for?—I could mention a number of creatures who depend on them.

49,623. Is it the custom to revalue the land before it is sold, as a rule, and advance the rent?—The landowners have always their eyes open, and they take advantage of every opportunity, of course.

49,624. You spoke of some land being stolen just now?—An attempt to steal it.

49,625. By whom?—By Sir Pryse.

49,626. Are you sure that he has not purchased the right from the Government to this land?—From the Crown, do you mean? The Government has nothing to do with the matter.

49,627. Is it not Crown property?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,628. It is up above Glandovey, I suppose?—Talybont.

49,629. Is it in the county of Cardigan?—It is in Cynnullmawr, in the parish of Llanfihangel Geneu'r Glyn.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,630. The tithe is now put into the rent. Do you have any abatement of the tithe?—No, not now. Some get it, but it is not as general as it used to be.

49,631. Is not the abatement made in the tithe when it is added to the rent?—I know of some who pay the tithe themselves, and they receive nothing back.

Mr. Grove.

49,632. With regard to this land that you speak about, which they tried to enclose; how long have you known that land yourself?—I know it from my first recollection.

49,633. Then who had the right to go on the land, and what was done with it?—Everyone in the neighbourhood sent his animal there if he chose to do so.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,634. And so far as you can gather, for a great many years there had been a right of common to the people living there?—Yes, and that is the evidence of the oldest people living in the neighbourhood now.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,635. Do you know whether Sir Pryse Pryse's agent is here to-day?—Yes, I know of two who are here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,636. The following questions are handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Did anybody ask "you to come and make a complaint here for "him." That means do you appear on behalf of anybody besides yourself?—There were two meetings at Talybont to prepare evidence for the Commission.

49,637. Do you come here as the spokesman from those meetings?—No, I was not appointed by either of them, but I called the first meeting.

49,638. Then the answer to the question is no, I suppose. The question is this "Did any-"body ask you to come and make a complaint "here for him"?—The people in the neighbourhood regarded me as a proper witness to come before you.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,639. That is not an answer to the question, did anybody ask you to come. It is not my question at all, but it is a proper question, I think. It is "did anybody ask you to come "and make a complaint here for him"?—No.

49,640. "Did Captain Hughes ask you to "come here?"—No.

49,641. "Did Captain Hughes give you any "information about the terms of his lease?"—Yes, he gave me every information which I have now explained.

49,642. "Can you give us no figures as to the "improvements done on the farm taken by "D. Edwards in 1879?"—I can say nothing beyond what the person himself told me that building the dwelling-house only, cost him at least 100*l.*

49,643. "In the last case you referred to as "an example of high rent, what were the names "of the tenant and the landlord?"—Mr. Roberts for Bwlchglas, and Sir Pryse Pryse for Llechweddmawr, Dolrhyddlan, and Camdwrmawr.

49,644. "When was the rent raised, and how "much was it raised?"—I have stated it in my evidence.

49,645. "Have you ever taken any trouble to "find out what Sir Pryse's title is to the land "you say he tried to steal?"—I had a reply from the office of the Woods and Forests, which was to the effect that the Government had nothing to do with it.

Adjourned for a short time.

Re-examined 73,691.

Professor Rhŷs here took the Chair.

Mr. John Edward called and examined through an interpreter.

Professor Rhŷs.

See evidence of next witness.

49,646. Where do you live?—Tyngwndwn, near Cwmerfin.

49,647. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

49,648. Who is your landlord?—John Jones, formerly of Glanleri, now Rhoscellanfawr.

49,649. Does this statement represent what you wish to say?—Yes.

49,650. Do you understand enough English to stop the interpreter if it is incorrect?—I will try.

(The following statement of the witness was then read.)

Evidence of John Edward, Tyngwndwn, near Cwmerfin.

How Mr. Hughes-Bonsall treats his tenants: He became owner of the estate about 12 years ago, but has changed all his tenants but three.

No. 1 Farm, Pwllglas.—Four left, namely, Richard James, David Thomas, Lewis Jones, David Jones. Most of them were served with writs for rent.

No. 2, Rhiwarthen Uchaf.—Four left, namely, John Edward, ruined, lost 1,500*l.*; David Evans, left in two years, wanted reduction of rent; Frederick Hughes, left in two years, wanted reduction of rent; Owen Owens, left in two years, ruined at last. The farm was let by auction in small lots.

No. 3, Troedrhiwlwba.—James Evans, one of the best farmers in the county, left, wanted reduction of rent.

No. 4, Glanrhydtynoeth.—David Evans, a good farmer, left, wanted buildings and reduction of rent; Morgan Jones, died; Mrs. Jones, married; David Samuel, left, wanted reduction.

No. 5, Banc Goginan Fawr.—Isaac Davies is leaving next autumn. The place is worth a visit from the Commissioners, not a building on the place.

No. 6, Nantymeirch.—William Morgan, sold up by Bonsall for tithes last autumn.

49,651. Is that all your statement?—Yes; it should be four years instead of two. David Evans of Rhiwarthen Uchaf left in four years instead of two.

49,652. Which was the other mistake?—Frederick Hughes.

49,653. What about him?—Four years instead of two.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,654. How many tenants are there on this estate now?—I do not know.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,655. Most of them left because they could not have the rents reduced?—That is what they said.

49,656. Are you of opinion that some other system should be adopted so that a tenant should have fair rents?—Yes, I think they ought to attempt some system besides the present one.

49,657. What system would you wish?—I have not thought much about that, but the tenant at least wants some protection.

49,658. Are you of opinion that the tenants should be paid for all improvements that they make?—Yes.

49,659. Did any of these leave without having compensation to which they thought themselves entitled?—Yes, I did for one.

49,660. What money do you think you ought to have been paid when you left? What was the amount of the unexhausted improvements to which you were entitled? Supposing you spent 30*l.* on the farm the next year you may have some return for that, and the year after that some more, and in so many years you would say you would have had a return for all the 30*l.* How much would be left unexhausted that you had not had from the money you had spent when you left?—I left a good deal.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,661. Did you make any claim?—It is no good my sending in a claim. The landlord had nothing to do with it. It was not under Mr. Hughes-Bonsall I took the farm, but under his father, who preceded him.

49,662. The claim would be legal against the executors or the heirs of the former landlord, would it not?—Mr. Frederick Roberts told him that he did not step into his father's boots at all.

49,663. Who is Mr. Frederick Roberts?—He is a solicitor in Aberystwyth.

49,664. Did you consult him on this case?—Yes, he was the landlord's solicitor, and I went there several times with him with regard to this matter.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

49,665. Did the landlord lay out much money on these farms?—Yes, he did a little, but I spent far more, taking into account that I had to haul the materials towards them.

49,666. Did the rest of the tenants do much hauling as well?—No, not at all.

49,667. I mean to their own farms?—No; one of them left because he refused to haul.

49,668. Were there new buildings put up generally on all these tenancies?—No.

Mr. Grove.

49,669. Did you hold it under an agreement?—Yes.

49,670. Have you that agreement?—No, I have not.

49,671. Then you were a yearly tenant with an agreement?—Yes, but they told me that the agreement was not of any value.

49,672. Did you sign any agreement?—Yes, and the agent as well, and I was obliged to buy going in the manure and straw, and seed and hay, but the landlord said that the agreement was of no value, and when I left I had to have an auction.

49,673. When you signed the agreement was a copy given to you?—Yes.

49,674. Did you spend any money in drainage?—No.

49,675. Did you consider the rents too high on that estate?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,676. What was your rent?—122*l.*

49,677. What was the size of your farm?—122 acres.

49,678. Just 1*l.* an acre?—Yes; only that the gravel of the river and the roads were about 14 acres out of it.

49,679. You would have 14 acres to deduct?—Yes.

49,680. Have you anything else to say?—No, I have nothing further to say.

The witness withdrew.

Re-examined 49,733.

Mr. George Hughes-Bonsall called and examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,681. You are Mr. George Hughes-Bonsall, of Glanrheidiol?—I am; I am the landlord who has just been referred to.

49,682. You are the landlord of the tenant John Edward, who has just given evidence?—Yes.

49,683. You have heard what he has said?—Yes. I succeeded to my father's property after my father died in 1872, and the agreement between him and the farmer of Rhiwarthen, who has just given evidence, was signed, I believe, by him (I never saw it myself, although the tenant had a copy) and by the agent. My father did not live in this country. I never had a copy of that agreement. When I succeeded, in 1872, I had no agreements with that tenant except verbal ones for the amount of the annual rent. The farm which has been mentioned by him, Rhiwarthen, I have been very unfortunate in; it has changed tenants four or five times, and then I let it by auction in small pieces. I find that small holdings are better than large ones, and I let the fields as accommodation land, and I have got the same rent as I had before.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

49,684. Then you do not rebut what he said about Rhiwarthen Uchaf?—Yes, I do. He got his claim, whatever it was, and he did not make any further claim. Mr. Robert Evans settled it between him and me, whatever it was, in going out. I say that the rent of the farm has been the same for 25 years, I think, I cannot say exactly how long, but something like that, as it is now. The other farm that the last witness, John Edward referred to, Dolfawr, his father was at before.

49,685. He did not mention that farm, I think. He mentioned Pwllglas, did he not?—Yes, Pwllglas. Unfortunately the man had a lease (I have had two tenants who have had leases) and the man failed and he went to America without paying his rent.

49,686. That is about what the last witness said, is it not?—Yes. He went to America. He had a lease at his own wish.

49,687. Then there is Troedrhiwlwba?—I bought the life estate of that property from a gentleman in 1882; I purchased a life interest in the property, and this property was called Glanrhydw. There were agreements on the principal farms; as there was a new landlord they wanted new agreements. The rent was exactly the same after that as it used to be, with the exception that there is 5*l.* a year rise, because there was a field put in, which was considered as of the value of 5*l.* The rent is the same as when I bought the property, only there is an increase of 5*l.* a year, that is, 175*l.* to 180*l.* on account of this field.

49,688. Yes, but what he said was that there had been a change of tenancy or that there was a failure?—Yes, there was a change. The tenant was raised 5*l.* in his rent on account of this field, and he objected to that; he said that was the reason he left. There has been a good tenant there for seven or eight years, who found it was cheap.

49,689. There has been no failure there?—There has been no failure at all. The man, I should say, was one of the most prosperous farmers in our valley.

49,690. Then Glanrhydtynoeth?—I bought this life interest in 1882. That farm was 94*l.* a year rent, and it is reduced to 86*l.*, but for that 86*l.* there is a good deal of land which was not let with the farm in former years. When I bought the life interest it was 94*l.* a year; now it has got a great deal of land on the bank, what they call "Ffynnon wen Bank," which is included in the rent of 86*l.* a year.

49,691. So that the rent of both has come down and the farm has been added to?—Yes, the farm has been added to. Since I bought the property in 1882 the rent has come down from 94*l.* to 86*l.*, and I have put in about 22 acres of land now.

49,692. What he said about Glanrhydtynoeth is that a good farmer left because he wanted buildings and a reduction of rent. Is that true? Yes, he wanted a reduction of rent.

49,693. Morgan Jones died?—Yes.

49,694. And Mrs. Jones married. There were several changes there?—There had been several changes there, and a reduction of rent was made there when the farm first belonged to me, and with an increase of land upon it.

49,695. You maintain that you made reductions of rent, but you admit there have been changes of tenancy. There have been changes of tenants there. One died and another married.

49,696. Then with regard to Goginan Fawr?—The tenant of that farm had been a tenant with me for 25 years, and for eight years he was with my father before. Unfortunately, he came to me in March, and asked me to give him notice in March. With him, as with most of my tenants, I have no written agreement. I said that what he suggested would not hold; he must give me a year's notice, and then we had a mutual agreement that he should give up in September. He has been dependent upon the mines a good deal.

49,697. Does he wish to leave because there is no building upon the place?—The buildings are in particularly good repair there, more so, than on almost any farm I possess.

49,698. You heard what the last witness said, that there was not a building on the place?—Yes, I heard what he said. The poor man has been so dependent on the mines that directly it was known he was going his sister came to me, amongst others, and as one of the family I let it to her, and they were glad to take it at the same rent from next September. In fact, I am not sure that they are not in possession of it now.

49,699. Then as to Nantymeirch, a sheep farm in the Dyffryn Castell Valley, he said that the farm had been sold up frequently. Is that true?—Nantymeirch is a sheep walk only. The tenant has given me notice nearly every year for some years. According to him he wants the price of the farm reduced; he never wants it raised. It has been put down a pound or two, but he very seldom pays his rent, in fact he has an agreement that he should only pay it once a year, and if he did pay it once a year I should be very glad.

49,700. He has been sold up for rent and tithes I understand?—Yes, he has been sold up for rentand tithes. He was sold up for a year's rent and tithes. Last year there was a distress put in. He gives notice every 12 months, and asks for a reduction, according to the price of sheep.

49,701. He wants a sliding scale?—He pays his rent only on compulsion.

Mr. Grove.

49,702. What acreage is this sheep walk you speak of?—I think it is 315 acres, I cannot quite remember; I did not know this question was going to be brought forward. The rent is 25*l.* a year.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,703. It is all mountain land?—Yes it is; it is opposite Dyffryn Castell. There is a little pasture at the bottom, but not much.

Mr. Grove.

49,704. In the case of that farm of Goginan Fawr, did the tenant who was a carrier to and from the mines, ask you to give notice to him?

—He asked me to give notice because he said the mines had failed, and I told him it was no good his giving me notice, or my giving him notice, but we would draw up a written agreement on the subject, and that he should go, but I was very sorry for him, after he had been with my father so long and with me. The matter got about and afterwards his sister came to me and I agreed to let her have it, and she was much obliged to me for letting her have it.

49,705. It was brought about by a very bad state of things, I suppose?—He did not depend only upon his mine, but he got 15*s.* a week for carrying things and so on. He did not depend upon his farm, and did not pay much attention to it.

49,706. I suppose you consider there is great depression now in farming and agriculture?—Yes, I do.

49,707. We have been told in many centres that there is great sympathy between the landlords and tenants?—I think so. I may say, in the case of my own tenants, that I have got 9 now out of 13 that I had 25 years ago, either the same tenants or sons of tenants.

49,708. Generally speaking, you say there is a considerable amount of sympathy between landlord and tenant?—I think so. I am not, unfortunately, able to speak Welsh myself, but I am resident in the country, and I formerly employed an agent, but I do not now.

49,709. I suppose no difference in language or religion would operate on your estate at all?—No, not with me, most certainly. I have found that the best tenants I have had have been Nonconformists, and any preference I should have would be for them.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,710. Can your agent talk Welsh?—Yes, he could, but I have been down here 15 years, and I have not had an agent since I came here to live myself. He was a man who could speak Welsh.

49,711. You have not got an agent now?—No.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,712. Could you tell us whether the rents on these places which you purchased were raised before you purchased them?—I cannot tell you that. It was a property that many had a life interest in, and I should say that they were not raised before.

49,713. In almost every instance that we have had before us the rents have been raised, and that would account, I should think, for the rate being high?—Yes.

49,714. Was your estate valued?—It would have been mine when I paid the life interest of the tenant who is alive now—the tenant for life.

49,715. I mean the land you came into after your father; was that valued at all?—No, not since I have had it.

49,716. Nor before you came into it?—Yes, about 40 years ago. I have got the valuations now. I did not know that it would be necessary to bring them here to-day. Perhaps I shall appear again before you, and I will then go into the matter. Several of the farms are at exactly the same rent now as they were early in the century when they were purchased—in the thirties and forties.

49,717. Still, times were good in those days?—Yes, and now the railways have come, and so on.

49,718. And the price of labour has gone up very much, and it makes a considerable difference, especially on these high lands?—Yes.

49,719. How can you account for so many changes on your property?—I think that one or two of these farms have been particularly unfortunate in the tenant, and the land has been worked out. Out of 11 farms, in 8 of them there are the same tenants, and 3 there have been constant changes upon, and the farms have been worked out, nobody putting anything in. I have been letting this farm, Rhiwarthen, that the last witness gave evidence with regard to, as small tenements, and I find it is easier to let it as small tenements, and easier to get the rent than by letting it as one big one. I have let it as a farm in part, and as to part, for accommodation fields.

49,720. Would you kindly point out to us what statements the witness made that are incorrect?—Well, the general idea that I was being brought forward as a specimen of an exacting landlord.

Professor Rhŷs.

It is the suggestion with which he opens his case.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,721. The witness stated this: "He became "owner of the estate about 12 years ago, and "has changed all his tenants but three"?—It was 25 years ago.

49,722. It does not matter about that. He says: "He has changed all his tenants but three." Do you deny that?—Most certainly.

49,723. He says that four left Pwllglas?—As to Pwllglas there has been a lease. That is 25 years ago.

49,724. Do you deny that four tenants left there? He gave the names?—No, I do not think I deny that.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,725. Can you name some that you have not changed the tenants of? He says you have changed them all but three?—Yes, I can name some, for instance, Dolfawr. That is only out of 11 farms. In Dolfawr there is the same tenant; he has succeeded his father, who was there before him.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,726. I do not think that farm was mentioned by the last witness?—No, because he has only mentioned the three.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,727. We are not going into what he has not brought before us, but we are dealing with the cases which he mentions. Do you rebut that?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,728. Dolfawr is one which you say there has been no change in?—Yes; then Dolgamlin Park y Bedw, Tanrallt, Goginan Banc, and Rhiwarthen Mill. That is all out of those.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,729. You say they have not been changed?—They have not been changed at all. There are six altogether, which I have mentioned, that have not been changed.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,730. The difference between your statement and his is that there are six farms of which the tenants have been changed. You differ as to the number of changes?—There are six farms that have not changed at all in a quarter of a century—25 years.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,731. Have you anything else to say?—No, I have nothing further particular to say.

Mr. Grove.

49,732. Are those that have not changed generally small holdings or are they largish farms?—They are small holdings those that are not changed.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Edward recalled.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,733. What is it you wish to state with regard to these farms?—I mentioned three farms, but with regard to the small places of from 4 to 6 acres I was wrong.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,734. You mentioned the large farms, did you not?—Yes, from 20 acres upwards.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,735. You say you overlooked the small ones?—I did not know whether they were sub-let by other people or not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Evan Williams called and examined through an interpreter.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,736. I see from your statement which has been handed in that you say that the tithe is too high at Rhos Fawr?—It is higher there than the other places all round about.

49,737. What is the acreage of your farm?—3¾ acres—one field.

49,738. What is the rent?—9*l.*

49,739. What is the amount of tithe now?—About 14*s.*

49,740. We are not in the habit of going into tithe questions, but it is well known that the tithes are not always the same in proportion in the same neighbourhood.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,741. Was this land that used to be ploughed?—Part of it.

49,742. It was corn land?—Yes.

49,743. Is the tithe more now than it used to be?—No, not more now.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,744. It has always had that proportion?—Yes, and more; it has been 18*s.*

49,745. What sort of land is it near to, that pays less tithes now?—The same as my field.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

49,746. But was yours corn land when the land near it was not corn land long ago, do you know. They put the tithe chiefly on the corn land, you know, the arable land?—Oh no, it was corn land, but much less. The tithe there was only 1*s.* an acre, and mine is 5*s.* an acre.

49,747. Do you now pay the tithe to the landlord?—Yes, I pay the tithe to the landlord now.

Mr. Grove.

49,748. Is it possible that you pay the tithe on this land that might be chargeable to land which is close by it, and which is not in your possession?—That is what they say, that is the rumour.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,749. I am afraid it does not follow. I think at one time that it was possible to put the tithes in respect of a whole farm upon one field, if you liked, in order to leave the rest free. I suppose it was possible at the time of the Commutation Act, but I would not be quite sure of that.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,750. How long have you paid the tithe on this plot of land?—44 years.

Mr. Grove.

49,751. Have you got a cottage on the land as well as the land itself?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,752. Was it ever part of the adjoining farm?—No, it was occupied by a farmer that was living afar off.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,753. Then the mistake has been in apportioning your part out of it?—That is where the mistake has been made?—No, it was liable to this tithe before that time. The farmer paid rent for it then. It was far from the farm.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,754. I am afraid we cannot do much in the way of considering such questions of the tithes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. John Morris called and examined through an interpreter.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,755. Does this statement contain your evidence, and is it correct?—Yes.

(The following statement of the witness was read.)

Evidence of John Morris, Glancarrog, Llanrhystyd.

I am a farmer living on my own farm, which I bought at a time when land was very dear. One of the heaviest burdens on farming in Llanrhystyd Myfenydd are the tithes, especially to Nonconformists. My neighbourhood is now, and always has been, a corn-growing district, and therefore now pays tithes which ought in these years to be divided over a much wider area. Corn land has for the last 10 years been paying worse than any other kind of land. Glancarrog has 76 acres in Llanrhystyd Myfenydd, and 7 acres in Llanddeinol. My tithe standard in Llanrhystyd Myfenydd is 7*l.* 14*s.*, and in Llanddeinol, 1*l.* I can give several other instances.

49,756. What is the acreage of your holding altogether?—83 acres.

49,757. What is your rent?—56*l.*

49,758. Then you complain of the tithes?—I do, and several other farmers complain besides.

49,759. How much tithe do you pay?—The standard, 8*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*

49,760. If the tithes were the tenth, as the name indicates, that would suggest a very good rent, would it not?—It would be double the value of the land. There are other farms which have been bought by auction; for instance, Moelifor farm and Tregynan Uchaf farm.

49,761. But the names are of no use unless we have the figures?—The rent of Moelifor farm is 152*l.* 10*s.*, and the original tithe standard 22*l.* 14*s.* I have no information as to the acreage to give. Upon the other farm I have mentioned of Tregynan Uchaf, the rent is 60*l.*, and the tithe standard 11*l.* 10*s.*

49,762. That is still higher than yours?—Yes, it is. The third example is Tregynan Issaf farm, rent 78*l* 10*s.*, tithe standard 16*l* 10*s.*; and in the fourth instance, namely, Glancarrog farm, the rent is 56*l.*, and the tithe standard 8*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* Those four instances are in the parish of Llanrhystyd Myfenydd. Then there are two other instances taken from the parish of Llandeinol.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

One farm of Cilfachau is let at the rent of 140*l.*, and the tithe standard is 11*l.* 5*s.* The other farm of Popty is let at the rent of 23*l.*, and the tithe standard is two guineas.

49,763. I know there is a great inequality in these things, and if the tithes were one-tenth of the rent, you would have very nice incomes from the land, would you not?—Yes. That is the great disadvantage in the district where I live. It is mostly arable land.

49,764. So this is really a great burthen in your district. You have to pay tithes according to the rate of things when your land paid well as corn-growing land, and now the corn does not pay, and you still have to pay the tithes according to the old standard?—Yes. Farmers complain bitterly under their burden.

49,765. It is a general complaint in that neighbourhood, is it?—Yes, at the part nearest to the sea.

49,766. It is what used to be formerly corn-growing land, is it not?—Yes, it is wet land. It is not good pasture land.

Professor Rhŷs.

I think it is a very serious complaint, but I do not see what we can do. Your evidence will go down on our notes.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,767. Where have you taken the information as to the tithes from which you have given us?—The rents I got from the map of the auction sale books.

49,768. Where did you obtain the figures of the tithe?—From those who receive the tithe.

49,769. Then you think it is a correct copy?—It is quite correct.

49,770. Has much of this land been laid down to pasture?—There is not so much corn growing as there used to be.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,771. Let me ask you one question. If the tithes were reduced to a real tenth of what the present rent is, or something of that sort, would you be better off? Would not the landlord raise the rent accordingly?—These places have been bought. They have no landlords.

49,772. They are freeholders?—They are freeholders.

Mr. Grove.

49,773. Do you know the way in which the amount of the tithe is arrived at?—It is this. They have become high in two ways. First, because it is good corn-growing land, and another reason being that the place was revalued in order that the clergyman's stipend should be increased.

49,774. Then you consider that now that they do not grow corn, the tithe should be altered accordingly, do you not?—Yes, undoubtedly.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,775. What is the difference in the price of wheat now to what it was then?—It is not half the price now.

49,776. Then you consider that the tithe should be the same?—Yes.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,777. I have a question handed in by Mr. H. L. Stephen: "Does not a farm on which "a high tithe is paid fetch, acre for acre, a "lower rent than a farm on which there is no "tithe"?—I have never heard of that in any taking.

Adjourned.

FIFTY-EIGHTH DAY.

The Clarence Hall, Crickhowell, Breconshire, 7th May 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, BART. (IN THE CHAIR).

Professor RHYS, M.A., LL.D.
Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Sir John Llewelyn.

Gentlemen, I am very sorry that Lord Carrington is unable to be present as Chairman to-day; he is obliged to be in London on official duties, and Lord Kenyon has been at the last moment prevented from coming, as he had previously intended to do. My brother Commissioners desire me to recapitulate a few observations which fell from the noble Chairman at the opening of the Commission when we first began sitting in the county of Glamorgan. We have felt it desirable to read those opinions given on the first occasion of sitting in each of the counties which we have hitherto visited. I will therefore state the opinion that was expressed by Lord Carrington on the 22nd of May 1893, when we first held our sittings in Glamorganshire. He said: "We do not anticipate that "the Commission can be made the means of an "unfair attack on the character or conduct of "any individual, but in case any individual "should feel himself aggrieved by any state- "ments which he believes to be unfounded, we "provide the following checks, which we believe "will be adequate for the prevention of pain or "injury. In the first place, permission will be "given to any person present at any sitting "to put questions in writing to any witness, "through me, the Chairman, the Commissioners "reserving to themselves the right of deciding "whether such questions be permissible or not. "Secondly, the Secretary has been instructed "to send notice forthwith to every person whose "character or conduct is impugned by the state- "ment of any witness, thus giving such person "an opportunity of explanation or of rebutting "the charge either personally or by letter." Personally, we have since decided, and at the earliest possible opportunity. Lord Carrington then went on to quote a few words from a letter which Mr. Vincent had sent in on behalf of the Landowners' Association of South Wales and Monmouthshire, and amongst other observations of Mr. Vincent's he said this: "An idea appears "to prevail in some quarters that this Commis- "sion exists for the purpose of bringing con- "tentious issues either between political parties "or between landlords and tenants as opposed "to one another. The corollary to this wrong "idea is the suggestion that, in some form or "another, the tenants who offer evidence may "suffer resentment from their landlords. On "the part of my Association I am instructed to "repudiate this idea absolutely, and to say that, "apart from the fact that witnesses before Royal "Commissions have abundant protection, it is "the desire of the owners composing this Asso- "ciation that every witness should give evidence "with a feeling of absolute security that he will "not suffer in any way." And commenting on those words, Lord Carrington went on to say: "Experience has shown that unless witnesses "speak out boldly and without fear, inquiries "like the one we are engaged in are futile. We "have no reason to believe that undue pressure "will be brought upon any class of witnesses or "any individual witness; nor have we reason

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

" to think that the giving of evidence by any " person in this county will lead to his being in " any way injured. But it is, of course, possible " —we cannot shut our eyes to what has before " now taken place in regard to affairs of this " kind—that some men are less scrupulous than " others, and that it is possible that witnesses " who speak here what is in their minds may " be subjected to loss and annoyance. We de-

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

" sire, therefore (and it is our duty to do so), to " point out that the recent Act, the Witnesses' " Protection Act, 1892, affords a remedy ade- " quate to meet any ordinary case." The duty of this Commission is to ascertain the truth, and we hope that everybody in this room who has taken the trouble to come here will do all that he can to elicit the truth, which is the only object of this Commission.

Sir Joseph Russell Bailey, Bart., called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,778. You reside at Glanusk Park, Crickhowell?—Yes.

49,779. You are Lord Lieutenant for the county of Brecknock, Chairman of Quarter Sessions, a County Councillor, Chairman of the County Finance Committee, &c., Chairman of the Crickhowell Board of Guardians, and of the Assessment Committee?—Yes.

49,780. Are you the owner of the Glanusk estates?—Yes.

49,781. Will you from the précis, which you have, give us your evidence in your own way?—My evidence follows exactly the syllabus and it is prepared in answer to the various questions; and I think I had better, perhaps, give my evidence in answer to the questions in their order. I desire to give evidence as to county statistics and as to the Glanusk Park Estates so far as they are situated in Brecon and Radnor. The acreage of the estates, exclusive of mountain, is as follows:—In lands, woods, parks and so on, 2,516 acres 1 rood 28 perches; holdings other than farms of 3 acres or more, 417 acres 3 roods 21 perches; farms and cottages, 25,060 acres 1 rood 5 perches; the total being 27,994 acres 2 roods 24 perches. They are chiefly situated in the manor of Upper Elvel (Radnor) and in Breconshire, in the manors of Builth, Gwenddwr, Hay, and Dinas (besides smaller manors), of all of which I am the lord; also in the manor of Crickhowell, where the Duke of Beaufort is lord. In those manors there are courts leet held occasionally, and the boundaries are occasionally walked. The larger manors are under stewards. That completes that portion of my evidence.

49,782. Are there any fines and charges in these manors?—I shall deal with that presently, but first as to ownership: there is no mortgage or encumbrance (except family charges) on the property in question. As to the property of the Crown within the county of Brecon, I may, perhaps, be permitted to say I was a member of the Parliamentary Committee that sat upon the management of Crown lands, and from our report I find there are no Crown lands in the county of Brecon. There was a matter of an acre or two which was sold some time ago. I believe the minerals under it were reserved, but they can be of no value here.

49,783. The only question I was coming to upon it was this: whether in recent times there have been any Crown rights in the county?—I think not; very small, if any. You will at once see that that is a question I should require to refer to the Parliamentary Blue Book to answer exactly.

49,784. You are the Parliamentary Blue Book to a certain extent?—Then you asked me as to fines and charges in the manor of Crickhowell. In the manor of Crickhowell specified farms are liable to chief rents payable to the Duke of Beaufort. Owing to alterations in the farms the places on the Glanusk Estate so chargeable had become mere names and could not be identified. Feeling that this might lead to future confusion, the Duke agreed to sell these chief rents and the Glanusk Trustees bought them. Subsequently, I believe, the Duke offered his chief rents all through the manor to each freeholder from whom they were due. I do not know how many purchased. In the hundred of Builth chief rents are paid to the lord of the manor; they have been from time immemorial collected by parishes. In the manor of Dinas small chief rents are paid to the lord on specified farms. In the manor of Gwenddwr the farms are held on old lease rents. In the manors of Cantreselif, Gellifainog, Cilcarne, Llyswen and Upper Elvel, there are chief rents. There are on some of the manors alienation fines and heriots payable. There are none in Builth or Hay. Then the question in the syllabus goes on to ask if those charges are considered oppressive. These small manorial fines are no more oppressive than any ordinary rentcharge. Some people seem to find them irritating, and they are troublesome to collect. In my judgment every facility should be given to the payers of these small charges to enfranchise their property at a proper price.

Then I am asked, as to recent enclosures whether by Act of Parliament or otherwise, and their effect on the labouring population. I have extracted a complete list of the commons enclosed in the county of Brecon from the Parliamentary paper 455 of the 4th December 1893. It is no use my reading it. I think, perhaps, I had better put it in if you wish to have it (handing in a list of enclosures).

No effect of moment is produced by enclosure on the labouring population. The unenclosed common is seldom, if ever, in the nature of a village green or recreation ground; it is all in this county high mountain land.

Then, as regards recreation grounds and allotments for the use of the labouring poor, allotments for recreation ground for the poor, I am told, have been reserved in Radnorshire, and I understand they are lying waste and useless, but I cannot speak to that of my own knowledge.

49,785. Do you know anyone when we get into Radnorshire who would be likely to speak upon that point?—I should think the county surveyor, but I am not able to tell you exactly. The unenclosed hill land is best used as at present for sheep walks. It is very doubtful whether any of it would pay for enclosure; certainly very little of it would pay for cultivation. Rights of pasture exist in the lord and the commoners, the commoners being the owners of certain farms within the manor, and generally in the vicinity of the commons. The commoner's right usually is to pasture as many sheep on the commons in summer as the farm on behalf of which he holds the right will support in the winter. I believe the legal term is levant and couchant. It is not very carefully attended to; in fact, it is so loosely attended to that some people think that the common right is without stint. The general public, apart from the lords and commoners, have so far as I know no rights whatever on the mountain land. No objection is ever raised to the public wandering over the mountains at will. I do not think we have enough persons who do so to constitute a nuisance to anybody, although I think some farmers object to people trespassing to collect mushrooms, which they find a nuisance, but it cannot be a very great nuisance.

Then as to the effect of commons upon adjacent farms. Farms having common rights (not necessarily adjacent to the common) are of course more valuable than farms which have none. As to the general condition of sheep farms, the power of keeping sheep on the mountain is an essential feature in the agriculture of Brecon; about one quarter of the whole county is unenclosed mountain land. The acreage enclosed is 301,988 acres, and unenclosed 115,106, the total acreage being 417,094 acres. That is taken from a Parliamentary return.

49,786. May I ask upon that, with regard to the enclosed acreage, does it include what is called the coedcaes?—Yes, I should think so. I take the figures from a Parliamentary return called "Owners of Land, 1875"; it is a well-known book called "The Modern Doomsday Book." Of course I am not responsible for that return.

Then as to estate management generally, I wish very largely to avail myself of the evidence of Mr. O. S. Wynne at Question 8183 of the printed evidence. I consider it admirably put together, and it very nearly describes the management of such estates as mine.

I believe tenants generally prefer holding on large estates. I may say I am a tenant farmer under a landlord of what you know as Class B, and I quite endorse their opinion. The gentry permanently resident are an undoubted advantage to a neighbourhood. If there is a good agent, an estate may be perfectly well managed though a landlord is non-resident. I think it very desirable he should be resident. Consolidated estates are more easily managed than those which are scattered. On the Glanusk estates, which are scattered, it is necessary to keep a separate staff of workmen in each district.

Then the next question is, what is the effect where there is a difference of either language, politics, or religion between the landlord or agent and the tenant or proposed tenant? I say all or nearly all the tenants speak English. Many of them, though Welsh by birth and descent, do not speak the Welsh language. I might perhaps say that, out of 52,000 odd in Brecon, 31,000 speak English exclusively, 5,000 speak Welsh exclusively, and 13,000 odd are persons who speak both languages. Politics and religion have never been taken into consideration in the selection of tenants at all; in fact I should like to say I have had many opportunities of doing acts of kindness by the various Nonconformist bodies, of which I could give details if the Commission required it. My relations with them have always been of a friendly and, I hope, neighbourly and kindly character. I should like to remark here that should the Commission recommend that all agreements should be in Welsh, which is a suggestion to be found at Questions 20,329 and 20,332 of the evidence, I trust it will be confined to the Welsh-speaking districts. It would be useless here. It has also been suggested that Acts of Parliament should be translated into Welsh. My opinion of that is that it would be difficult and dangerous, because there would be two languages, and the meaning might not be the same as the translator absolutely intended. What I would venture to suggest would be that there should be published in Welsh a short epitome of such parts of Acts of Parliament as concerned Welsh interests, cutting out what are called words of skill, and making the Acts of Parliament a resumé so simple that in fact persons not well educated could understand them.

49,787. Food for the tenant and not for the lawyer?—That exactly expresses my meaning. Then as to the qualifications of agents: the first agent in my time was Mr. Pratt, originally a builder; he was succeeded by Messrs. Wood and Merrick, who had been clerks in his office. The present agent is Mr. Samuel Hood Cowper Coles, son of the late Captain Cowper

Coles, R.N., C.B., the inventor of the first turret ship. Mr. Coles served his time in the office of the county surveyor of Radnor. He is a Fellow of the Institute of Surveyors. He created for himself a land agency business at Builth; and it was observation of his work there which induced me to offer him my agency when a vacancy occurred. I perhaps should add that since that he has married one of my daughters.

The usual date of entry used to be, at Crickhowell and Talgarth, Candlemas (Jones' History of Brecknock, Vol. I., page 312) and some farms, once held under old leases, are still held at those dates though the leases have long expired. At Builth the time of entry is March 25th. On the Glanusk estate the date of entry has been brought to Michaelmas in most cases by agreement. The tenant holds the house till May 1st under the old custom and what is called a boosy pasture, the obvious reason being that May is the first good month for moving. I think at this moment I had better hand in an agreement, and as I go on, if you will kindly tick off these various clauses of the agreement, you will see that I have referred to them all in the course of my evidence. The off-going clause is clause 8 of the agreement. I think all farms are let on a yearly taking. It may be worth mentioning that at the beginning of the century nearly all farms were let on lease. There is now no demand for leases. Tenants, I believe, consider that rents are less frequently altered on a yearly taking, while if they desire to quit they are not tied down to a farm which they wish to get rid of.

There are very few changes of tenancy. During Mr. Coles's agency there had been up to December 18, 1893, which was the date on which I prepared this statement, 24 alterations.

Mr. Grove.

49,788. In what period, Sir Joseph—in four or five years?—In four years. I should say that is upon an estate of about 300 farms, but I have the particulars more accurately to give by-and-bye. All these changes have been from relative to relative. They have all been at the same rent, and none of them asked for agreements. We prefer written agreements, and we only let by verbal taking to fall in with the wishes of tenants. On the Peterstone estate, which is a small one, and which I can deal with more readily than with the larger estates, only one farm seems to have been let to a person not of the previous tenant's family, since the date of the purchase of the estate in 1854.

Then the next question is, "Have any cases "of hardship arisen?" It is not for me to say whether they have or not. I do not know of any. In resuming ground for planting or for any other purpose the land is taken by agreement and a proper allowance made. In the agreement of 1876, of which a copy has been put in before the Commission, I believe, there was a clause fixing the compensation. It has been omitted in this recent agreement probably with a view of making the agreement as simple as possible.

If damage is done by timber hauling, an allowis made by the timber merchant. This is found to be more convenient than the landlord making an allowance, because the timber merchant has the chance of assisting the farmer with odds and ends of timber. In cases where the timber is scattered about the farm, the allowance is made by the landlord. If you will kindly look at clause 3 of my agreement you will see, "The "mines, minerals, limestone, quarries, timber "trees, saplings, young trees, and underwood "are reserved for the landlord, but with regard "to hauling and so on compensation is made "for any damage occasioned thereby." Then in answer to the question as to mining, brick-fields, quarries, and so on, I should say the rent of course is readjusted under clause 3 if the land is taken for any purpose. As to what are the usual conditions of tenancy, I put in agreements of different dates. Here I should state that the number of farms on the estate is 282, of which only sixty-two have written agreements, that is, two to every nine tenants, and many of those are incomplete. Those agreements have been handed in, but I should mention that they have never been signed. I suppose they would be valid, but it is rather an irregular way of doing it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,789. Do I understand the inference to be that the other 220 would be merely verbal agreements?—The other 220 would be on merely verbal agreement, but according to the custom of the country, which is very well understood. Then, so far as I know, no clauses in my agreement are objected to; but with regard to penal clauses I should like to say that they are absolutely necessary in letting a farm, to protect the lessor from the misuse of his property. In the present agreement which has been handed in to you, clause 7 is what is called the penalising clause. I think it is the only one of that nature in the agreement. You will observe that there is a penalty of 20*l.* rent an acre for meadow land broken up. It is to prevent, by a heavy penalty, ploughing up an old meadow. In the valuation of a farm which I find in the margin of one of my old rent books there are old meadows valued at a rent of approximately 50*s.* an acre, and there is arable on the same farm at approximately 20*s.* an acre. To plough it up, therefore, would involve a loss of 30*s.* rent an acre to the landlord. Capitalising that, it represents a capital of 45*l.*, and it is quite clear that in some way or another a man must protect himself against that being done either viciously or by an outgoing tenant intending to take two or three white crops off the farm and then leave the farm. Only one case has occurred in my recollection of a field being ploughed up. In that case I was perfectly certain that the tenant had no intention of doing me an injury and no penalty was enforced, but he undertook to lay down the field afresh in grass. I should like to say that this class of clause is, in my judgment, absolutely necessary. In that well-known book, Jones' History, he says at the commencement of the century: "Tenants at will, without a special "agreement to the contrary, assume a right of "carrying off or selling all hay, straw and "manure from the premises . . . the "custom has been frequently exercised and "allowed, though some doubts are entertained "whether it be legal." Under those circumstances of course it is necessary to have proper protection in the agreement. I do not remember a single case where I have had to enforce a penal clause.

Those tenants who are under a written agreement have a duplicate copy in English. The rent is fixed at a gross sum, though we have had revaluations of a few farms acre by acre. On large estates there is a fair uniformity as to rents, but I believe that small owners obtain a higher rent from their tenants. Then with regard to the rent of smaller tenants, and as to whether it is higher per acre than on larger farms, the rent of small farms must be higher in proportion to acreage than the rents of large farms, because the buildings bear a large proportion to the land. Buildings on a farm of the rent of 40*l.* will approximate to 325*l.* in value without local haulage; that is, if you assume 1*l.* an acre it comes to 9*l.* an acre, and that represents a rent of about 9*s.* an acre, putting the buildings at the ordinary price of 20 years' purchase. Buildings on a farm of 500*l.* rent would approximate to 1,600*l.*, that is 3*l.* an acre, which represents a rent of 3*s.* an acre. If, therefore, land without buildings is worth 1*l.* an acre, a large farm rented at 23*s.* an acre and a small farm rented at 29*s.* an acre yield to the landlord the same profit. I should like to add here that not only in rent but in everything else, the cost of cultivating a small farm is higher per acre than the cost of cultivating a large one. The cost of fencing a field of one acre is double per acre that of fencing a field of 4 acres, four times that of a field of 16 acres. There is more waste in headlands, more frequent putting in and out of the plough, less regular employment for the farmer and his horses, &c.

Then I come to a rather difficult question. I am asked, "What is the usual rent of average "land of different qualities in your district, "e.g., on upland and lowland farms?" If you will allow me I should like to answer that question at some little length. In the first place, the agricultural acreage of Glanusk is, as I have said, 25,060*l.* acres. The agricultural rent, that is to say, excluding town property, buildings, leases, and gentlemen's houses is 18,521. That is an average of 14*s.* 8*d.* per acre. But the value of farms varies very much in different parts of the county. Hill farms vary according to the amount of sheep walk, which is not measured in the acreage. Mere mountain enclosed with no house commences at 2*s.* per acre. Upland farm will fetch from 5*s.* to 15*s.* and 20*s.* For the reason stated above, that is to say, the difference of the amount of sheep walk, the rent, of course, under those circumstances, is no criterion of the value of land per acre. The lowland farms depend on situation and the quality of the land. Now, if you will permit me, I should like to hand in a little geological sketch that I have made of the county. (The witness handed in a sketch.) If you will look at the larger map or at the small map which you hold in your hand, you will see that Breconshire is divided into three portions by two ranges of mountains. There is the Beacon range at the south running from east to west, and there is there the Eppyut range. I think, Sir John, you are well acquainted with those mountains, and you can point them out to your colleagues. The Eppynt range runs from east to west of the county, north of the great central valley of the Usk, and south of the Wye. The main valleys of the county lying between those two ranges are old red sandstone. I have coloured that a light red in my little sketch. There are in those places very valuable farms and they will fetch 25*s.* an acre, some of the land on each being worth much more. I think that you should receive my statement with regard to this with some caution, because I have already endeavoured to explain that the land varies considerably. There is one farm, for example, one of the best farms which I have got, that is valued from 1*l.* to 50*s.* per acre according to its old pasture, and if my next neighbour happened to have a farm which was all of that old pasture he would think I was doing him an injury, and if on the other side a man had a mountain farm he would think I was putting it too high. The average of my farms—valley farms—in the centre of Breconshire runs from 1*l.* to 25*s.* an acre. South of the Beacon range is the coal basin. The value of farms there is governed by the propinquity to the mining district. Upon the sketch I have handed in I have coloured the mountain ranges green, except on the extreme east of the southern range where there is a part that is coloured black, which, I think, I should have coloured green on the western side, where the mountain is old red sandstone, and where the limestone is cropping out on the south side of the mountain it is indicated by a blue streak. The limestone crosses the mountain and forms the north escarpment on mountains that you can see from the windows of this Hall, and which we call Llangattock. The land south of them is governed by the propinquity to the mineral district. The land in the centre I have described as being the best land in the county. On the north of the Eppynt range is the hundred of Builth; that is on the Cambrian formation. It is shale, tile stones and a sort of bastard slate—half baked slate—which is very poor stuff. It is very poor land, but it is improved in value by the market afforded by a series of watering places with mineral waters, and I have put some little red streaks on the map where the mineral waters crop out. The best farms there, speaking only from my own knowledge, of course, fetch 18*s.* an acre; intermediate farms fetch 10*s.* and 12*s.* an acre in addition to tithes. All my figures are on the assumption that the tenant pays the tithes, although, of course, under the new arrangement that would be altered. The Builth Hundred has been opened by railway. Before that, coal had to be hauled 20 miles, and the price of comfort was very great.

49,790. That is the Cambrian line—the Mid-Wales line?—Yes. I do not know whether you care to know the value of that land at the commencement of the century. Perhaps it is of use for comparison. Jones, in his History, states that Builth land was then, in 1807, worth from 6*s.* to 7*s.* per acre, and the poorest from 3*s.* to 4*s.* per acre. In those days the inhabitants could not raise corn enough for their own consumption. The yield of wheat per acre was five bushels. Land in the county generally was then from 15*s.* to 21*s.*, very much as it is now, and in the neighbourhood of Glasbury and Hay, that is, in the centre of the county, some farms in those days fetched 40*s.*, and in the neighbourhood of towns, which, I presume, was accommodation land, they fetched even then from 3*l.* to 4*l.* I assume that the Commission are aware that the general produce of this county is sheep and not corn. Our custom is to take the corn, and have it ground for our own use, if we grow it.

The right of pasturage on waste lands is valuable, and of course it is an element in fixing the value of a farm that has it. No services other than rent are rendered by tenants in respect of their holdings. The rent is fixed by private treaty, though valuation field by field probably formed the original basis of calculation.

On my estate no land is let to any man because he is the highest bidder, and there is no opportunity for outbidding given to an intending tenant. We endeavour to get tenants with sufficient capital. We have no occasion to resort to arbitration as a means of settling rent. We seldom readjust except in the case of a new tenancy, and there is no difficulty in letting when a vacancy occurs. I should like to say that in the height of the depression a tenant of mine came to me and desired to take a second large farm in addition to the one that he held then, and that he holds now. We declined, thinking that he had as much as he could manage. The next time he met me he told me that he considered that I had done a most unkind thing by him. When I expressed my surprise at his wanting more land at such a time, at the very height of the depression, he told me that it was very much in his favour, as the depression would not last for ever, and at that moment he could stock it very cheaply.

Another large farm was expected to fall vacant a year ago owing to the death of the tenant, and we had over 20 applications from first class farmers in the neighbourhood for it.

Farms have been differently rented as land has been added to or taken from them, or when considerable improvements have been made. Rents have not been raised generally; of course in individual cases farms vary in rent as the Commissioners know, from time to time, and I am asked if I can give particulars, but I should like to say that all through my evidence, while I should be very glad to hand the Commissioners anything that they wish to know, I do not feel justified in giving the names of farms or the exact rent that the farmers pay. I do not think it would be a fair thing by them to do it.

Then, Sir, as to permanent reductions of rent and temporary abatements, there have been permanent reductions, but only in particular instances, and those have been on farms taken in times of exceptional prosperity—returning to their old rents again. As to temporary abatements, there have been temporary abatements, sometimes general and sometimes to particular tenants who have met with misfortune, and who have been tenants of mine for a long time; they have had an abatement. The general abatements have been, 10 per cent. in Michaelmas 1880, and during the whole of the year 1881, and the cause of that was sheep disease. Then there was 10 per cent. abatement at Michaelmas 1885, and during the whole of the years 1886, 1887, and 1888; 1889 was a prosperous year, but we did allow 5 per cent. at Lady Day; we did not think anything was necessary, but we did allow the 5 per cent. The reason at that time was bad seasons. In 1892 and 1893 we also allowed 10 per cent., the reason of the allowance during those two years being simply and solely prices. We had a good season in 1892, and we had quite a good season in 1893, but we do not sell fat stock in this county, it is generally passed on to Lowland farms to fatten, and as the English farmers were very short of keep, of course they did not want animals to eat their provender or their grass.

Then I am asked: "Is any notice previously "given to the tenants of such intended abate-"ments." The intended abatement is not put on the notices, but it is generally known. It would not do to put it on the notices because particular farmers may have done very well, and would have no title to claim reduction; for example, last year the hop-growers in Hereford had a particularly successful year, and it would have been ridiculous to allow them reduction under those circumstances; in fact I made them no allowance because they had no trouble.

Alterations in rent have depended on, first, fluctuations in prices; secondly, on large improvements made by the landlord; thirdly, on re arrangement of farms, that is adding or taking land; and fourthly, upon the growing prosperity of the county up to the year 1870. But I have looked over my rent roll, and I find that the rents, taken altogether, have undergone very little alteration indeed. Brecknock before the days of railways was far removed from markets. Up to 1756 there were no coach roads at all, only lanes. The first coach seems to have run to Brecon in 1757. In 1803 the Brecon and Newport Canal was made. In 1845 the English railways were constructed, and the prosperity of Brecknock possessing coal and iron marvellously increased. The population in 1811 was 37,735, in 1841 55,603, and in 1861, which was the culminating point, it was 61,627. You see it had nearly doubled in the first half of the century. The inhabited houses had risen from 7,500 in 1811, to 12,913 in 1861, but since that time I am sorry to say both the population and the inhabited houses have gone down slightly. In this neighbourhood, which is the iron neighbourhood, the increase of population is very extraordinary; in the neighbouring parish of Llanelly in 1801 the population was 937, in 1861 it was 9,600, it being multiplied between those years by 10. In the parish in which I live, Llangattock, it had risen from 1,000 in 1801 to 4,731 in 1861, and in Llangynidr, another parish in this immediate neighbourhood, it had risen from 775 in 1801, the beginning of the century, to 3,625 in 1861. The towns have increased, and the residential parishes near them have increased. Strictly agricultural parishes in remote places have steadily decreased, but not to any very great extent.

I am not able to give the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent in the last 50 years, but I have two statements, one compiled from a manuscript of the late Archdeacon Payne, which was never published, and which gives the prices in the last half of the last century, viz., from 1757 to 1807. Then I have the prices again to compare with them (my own farm prices) from 1864, which is the earliest I have got, to the present time.

49,791. That is during the last 30 years?—Yes. Perhaps I might say that as appears at the commencement of this list in 1757 beef in this neighbourhood was 1½*d.* per lb. and mutton 1½*d.* per lb., wheat was 5*s.* per bushel and barley 2*s.* 6*d.*, wool, which is the most important item, or a very important item in this county, has varied. It was very high, of course, in the time of the cotton famine, it was 1*s.* in 1882, and it has been 1*s.* two or three times since, but in 1893 it sunk to 9*d.* and an inferior quality of lamb wool, 6*d.* This is the table in a tabular form.

(The witness handed in the following table:)

Produce.	1757.	1767.	1777.	1787.	1797.	1807.	1864.	1882.	1891.

Wool is an important item, prices as follows:—1882, 1*s.*; 1883, 10*d.*; 1884, 9½*d.*; 1885, 9*d.*; 1886, 8½*d.*; 1887, 1*s.*; 1889, 10*d.*; 1890, 10½*d.*; 1891, 10*d.*; 1892, 9*d.*–7*d.*; 1893, 9*d.*–6*d.* (lamb).

Then as to payment of rent, it is due at the close of each half-year on the 25th of March and the 29th of September. Rents due in March are on my estates paid in July and August, and rents due in September are paid in the following January. That, you see, is practically nine months' credit. By the ordinary custom of the country the landlord gives his tenant six months' credit, rent being seldom considered due until the tenant has been in possession of his holding for six months, and a further period is usual before the rent day, in my case, three months. A preferential claim for rent seems therefore necessary. If it were done away with, some less convenient security would have to be given. Where a landlord chooses to give further credit beyond one year, he cannot avail himself of a preferential claim, but he must come in as an ordinary creditor. I think I am right in my law upon that point, and that I take from the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1880, section 44.

49,792. You mean he can take a year altogether?—A year altogether; but then as it is collected six months at a time, and as under the ordinary custom of this country there is first the six months' run, and then three months of what in Ireland would be called the "hanging gale," between the rent then due and the rent day, it is necessary.

49,793. I take it he would have the 12 months backward counting from the customary time of paying?—That is so. That just covers the nine months, you observe.

49,794. Yes?—Six months would not cover the rent that is due, assuming that the landlord does not allow any arrears.

I am asked as to tithes, land tax, chief rent, and local rates, whether they are paid by the owner or occupier. The tithe, as you are aware under the recent Act is now paid by the landowners, and it is to be recovered in cases only of tenancies under agreements before the passing of the Act from the tenant. The local rates are paid by the tenant. Income tax, Schedule A., is of course paid by the landlord and Schedule B. by the tenant. As to local rates, I should like to put in a report of the local taxation of this county which was prepared for the county council, but for which I was responsible. It shows on pages 6 and 7 in a striking manner the inequality of the incidence of local rates. They vary from 8*s*. in the £ in parts of Brynmawr to 1*s*. 9*d*. in some of the country parishes. The school board rate is considered a great hardship in the rural portions of the parishes of Llangattock and Llangynidr, owing to the ecclesiastical parishes being undivided at the passing of the Education Act of 1870 the rural portions of these parishes are taxed to the amount of 1*s*. 6*d*. in the £ for the schools of Brynmawr and Beaufort, towns at a distance of over 7 miles and with a difference of level of 1,100 ft. separated by miles of uninhabited mountain. To these schools not a single child from the rural district can go, and the rural districts have voluntary schools sufficient for their purpose. The parishes have now been divided for all other purposes. Brynmawr is an urban district. It is a separate petty sessional division, it forms four separate electorial divisions. It has been separated for ecclesiastical purposes, and only exists as one parish for the purpose of forcing the inhabitants of the valley district to pay for schools they cannot use, but now that we have got the recent Parish Holdings Act we think we see our way out of the trouble. Then, Sir, as to the average size of farms.

49,795. They vary upon your estate very much, of course?—I have 67 under 10 acres; of from 10 to 20 acres I have 26; 20 to 50 acres, 47; of 50 to 100 acres I have 53; of 100 acres to 200 acres, 55; I have 14 of from 200 to 300 acres; from 300 to 400 acres, I have 7; from 400 to 500 acres, 4; and I have 2 over 500 acres—between 500 and 600 acres. I should say the average size was from 50 to 100 acres.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,796. I suppose the sheep walks are not included?—The sheep walks are not included in any of these. The sheep walks have never been measured. The small holdings are insufficient for a family to live upon entirely by farming; they either carry with them a sheep walk not measured in the acreage, or they are held by persons having some employment other than farming. Sometimes they are connected with a public-house or a blacksmith's shop, or are held by a shepherd, or a haulier, and so on.

Then with regard to the consolidation of holdings; from some of my farms having a double name, I presume they have been consolidated. It seems to have come about by natural process—a farmer taking a second farm when vacant. Places sometimes come together by one of a family managing more than one farm, and taking to the two when his relative dies. Small holdings, as I have said, do not enable a man to live entirely by agriculture, and the attempt to re-introduce them by the Small Holdings Act is in my judgment a very doubtful issue. A few are useful as steps in the ladder to enable an industrious labourer to rise. Farmers often hold a second farm for a second son or a mountain farm as a bye-take for the sake of the sheep walk.

During the last 33 years—that is to say, during my life time upon the estate—there has been very little consolidation. When the side of a dingle is in two farms, it is often very desirable to consolidate, because the tenant then has the moorland above to himself, and his sheep have quiet. I have recently bought the farm which a tenant of mine rented adjoining his own, expressly for this purpose, because I thought it added to the value of the two farms. With regard to the sheep "having quiet," there is what has been called by one witness the "arosfa." I never heard of such a word, and I doubt its existence in the Welsh language, but I suggest that it might be possibly the word "rhosdir," which means moorland, which would be a very reasonable name to give to the mountain above a farm. I might tell you, by way of showing how these words get corrupted, that in my own terrier—the statement of my own estate—I have a house called "Cock-a-roosting." I was very much puzzled as to what this was, but I take it that it is "Coch-y-rhosdir"—"the red farm of the moorland."

Then, Sir, sub-division has taken place where at the date of the purchase several farms were let to one tenant and sub-let. I have found that to be the custom in the cases of some places that have been bought. Sub-letting is forbidden by Clause 7 of the agreement which you hold in your hand. Sometimes a detached field is sub-let, but we object to the practice, and we stop it as soon as we can.

Then as to the relative effects of small and large holdings respectively on their occupiers as to their practical skill in farming, the tenants of large lowland farms in Brecknock are as substantial yeomen as can be found in any county in England. They are the very type of what a British farmer ought to be.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

There is little doubt that they are as skilful as others of their class. The hill farmers approximate more nearly to the labourer. They are hard-working and frugal. Their wives are industrious and shrewd, the best helpmates that the class could have. As to their condition in time of trade depression, the reasons why agricultural depression is not so severely felt in this county as in England are—(1.) Farmers do so much themselves with the assistance of their families that the labour question has not affected them to any great extent. (2.) They depend largely on sheep, and the price of mutton has been fairly well maintained. (3.) Some at least of the smaller farmers have lately added a small butchering business, slaughtering sheep and selling them about by the joint.

Then as to the supply of labourers, there has always been a tendency amongst young labourers to go to the mineral districts where higher wages can be obtained. There is therefore a scarcity of labour. The farmers employ but few labourers except young men who live in the farm-houses. This has always been the system in this county, and it is mentioned in the South Wales Commission, 1844, page 339. Then I am asked, "Is there any land "going out of cultivation?" Land in Brecknock has not gone out of cultivation. In 1868, the first agricultural return, the acreage of cultivated land was 183,853 acres. In 1871 it was 186,808 acres. In 1881 it was 201,194 acres. In 1892 (the last return) it was 201,675 acres. The prosperous years 1871–2 probably brought land into cultivation. At the date of the last return, 1892, there were only three unoccupied farms with a total acreage of only 274 acres in the whole of the county of Brecknock.

49,797. How did you arrive at that fact—that there were only three unoccupied farms in the whole county?—It is taken from the agricultural returns—the parliamentary returns. I should say that my figures are carefully put together, and I am quite prepared to justify any that the Commission wish to ask me upon. Those are taken from the agricultural returns. Then as to waste land, I do not think that there is much waste land which would repay cultivation. As to embanking rivers, land within reach of river floods is generally left in grass, to which floods do no harm unless they take place during or immediately before hay harvest. Then I am asked, "Has there been any considerable change "in the nature of the agriculture pursued in "your district within the last 50 years?" When I first came down here I used to hear of, but I never saw, a system that was, I believe, called betting, which was flaying the mountain—taking a skim of turf off the mountain with what was called a breast plough, which I fancy was a thing almost like a turf cutter which the man drove in front of him, and they then took off the land two or three white crops and then let it go back to mountain again. We have nothing of the kind now. I have prepared tables from the parliamentary statistics showing the change in the system of agriculture pursued. The land in permanent pasture in 1868 was 115,184 acres; in 1881, 140,054 acres; in 1892, 150,418 acres. The grasses under rotation were in 1868, 19,258 acres; in 1881, 20,213 acres; in 1892, 19,083 acres. If the tenants lay down the land in grass, the landlords practically keep it in grass, compensating the tenant either by a manure allowance or money compensation. With regard to turnips, potatoes, and green crops, in 1868 there were 8,240 acres; in 1881, 6,678 acres; in 1892, 7,091 acres; there being practically no change. With regard to wheat, in 1868 there were 11,366 acres; in 1871, 10,134 acres; in 1881, 7,504 acres; in 1892, 4,122 acres; wheat having thus sunk to one-third of what it was 25 years ago. As regards other corn crops in 1868, there were 24,908 acres; in 1871, 25,825 acres; in 1881, 23,018 acres; in 1892, 19,569 acres; corn crops other than wheat having decreased 20 per cent. The cause is no doubt the unremunerative price of corn. It is satisfactory to notice the increase of stock during the same period. There was no return as to the number of agricultural horses in 1868; but in 1871 the number was 10,081; in 1881, 11,456; in 1892, 12,534; being an increase of 20 per cent. The number of cattle in 1868 was 34,197; in 1871, 34,143; in 1881, 35,022; in 1892, 41,725; being an increase of about 20 per cent. The number of sheep in 1868 was 390,871; in 1871, 402,654; in 1881, 329,628; in 1892, 460,888. You should note that 1881 is the date I gave you of the sheep disease, when we lost nearly a quarter of the sheep of the county, and the agricultural statistics give 329,628 as the number of sheep. That shows a loss of 60,000 sheep. I have no reason to suppose that that was the bottom of the trouble, because I only give the statistics of the year. I only took the census years in these figures, and I am not sure that this was the bottom of the trouble. However, as against the 329,628 sheep in 1881, in 1892, only 11 years later, the stock of sheep in the county had increased to 460,888; that is to say, there was an increase in those 10 years in the stock of sheep in the county of 130,000 sheep. That is very remarkable.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,798. They more than recovered?—More than recovered: you have 390,000 in 1868 and 460,000, in spite of the sheep disease, in 1893; in the 11 years we have an increase in our sheep of 40 per cent. Of course that is beside sales. I hope I am not giving you these details at too great length.

49,799. Oh, no, not at all?—Permanent improvements are made almost entirely by landlords. The roads of the county have been largely made at their expense. The surplus charge (over tolls) for defraying the debt incurred for making and maintaining main and other roads was thrown upon owners of property by the South Wales Turnpike Roads Act. The reason for throwing it on the landlords was that what was called statutory labour, that is, the haulage was thrown upon the tenants. In the neighbourhood of Crickhowell, the Cwmdu road to Talgarth, 11 miles in length, was made by private persons and purchased for the county. On all the main roads the total debt was 48,341*l.* The road from Porthmawr to Crickhowell Bridge, and from Llangynidr to Deryn-y-groes, was thrown on this fund. The surplus expenses—beyond what the tolls provided—were discharged by a rate levied in the ordinary way, but recoverable by the tenant from the landlord, the reason of this arrangement being, as I have said, that statute labour was left on the occupier. Besides the main roads in the Crickhowell district, the road from Llanbedr up the Grwyne-fechan Valley was (I have always heard) made by my predecessor in title, Mr. Macnamara. The road from Llanbedr to Llangenny was made by the late Sir Joseph Bailey, as was a road opening up the district on the north side of the Crickhowell Valley, still known as "Sir Joseph's new road." All building repairs and improvements are done by the landlord, the tenants usually doing the hauling. Then I have a separate note here as to the tenants doing the haulage because it has been said that an injury might be done to a tenant by his being turned out of his farm shortly after he had done hauling. No doubt that is the case. Buildings being perishable and requiring repair are usually taken at 20 years' purchase, i.e., 100*l.* spent on buildings should produce a rental of 5 per cent., which may perhaps be taken as representing 3*l.* interest and 2*l.* for depreciation and repair. By the first Agricultural Holdings Act a tenant was entitled to compensation for permanent buildings (erected with his landlord's consent); the claim to be gradually exhausted by prolonged occupation of 20 years. I believe it is now valued at "the value to the incoming tenant," under the latter Act. If 100*l.* expenditure produce a rental of 5*l.*, the 5*l.* annuity repays capital and about 3*l.* per cent. interest in 30 years. It seems to me not unreasonable to consider haulage as in the nature of the same class of improvements as that to which it contributes, that is to say, if a man hauls drain pipes he should have his haulage considered as a drainage improvement; if he hauls to buildings, as a building improvement. The improvement being made in conjunction with the landlord, a written consent seems scarcely necessary as the consent is obviously given by participating in the agreement. If the landlord charges 5 per cent. for his part of the improvement the tenant would be entitled to the full remaining value of his hauling on leaving. But if the landlord charges no extra rent for his expenditure, then for every 100*l.* expended on buildings the tenant stands to the good annually 5*l.*, less the sum required to replace the tenants expenditure, whatever it is, and say 3½ per cent. interest. Therefore, on an expenditure of 100*l.*, the tenant spending 10*l.*, an annuity of 5*l.* replaces the 10*l.* and 3 per cent. interest in a little over two years. If the tenant expends 20*l.* for hauling he would be repaid in between four and five years; if he paid 40*l.* out of the 100*l.* for hauling (which I do not think is a case that ever occurred, but it has been put to the Commission), he would then receive his money back if the landlord charged no interest in about 10 years. I do not know whether I make myself clear.

49,800. Yes, indeed, and we are very much obliged to you. That is a very interesting point. It is the first time, I think, that we have had it worked out in figures?—Then, continuing, drainage is done generally by the landlord; the tenant does the haulage. Buildings are erected by the landlord. Then I am asked as to tanks for preserving liquid manure; they are not used. Fences, the tenant keeps in repair. Gates and posts are generally provided by the landlord. In some parts of the county the holes are dug by the tenants. Then as to co-operation, the only cases of co-operation are those that I have mentioned. The repairs are executed at the request of the tenant and he gets all the advantage. If he were given notice to quit so soon afterwards that he had not had his money's worth (a thing which has not happened in my experience), I assume he would get compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act. If not, no one would think for a moment of not making him the proper allowance. At Glanusk there is a bull and a boar kept for the gratuitous use of the tenants, and a small charge is made to other people. In case of improvements, I am asked, is there any compensation obtainable in your district? My agreement does not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Compensation is obtainable on the ordinary scale. After the passing of the Act of 1875, I considered that some of its provisions were unsuitable for this country—notably, the 12 months' notice to quit, and also I thought that the value of an improvement ought to be settled at the time of making it. I accordingly had an agreement drawn embodying the bulk of the Act (with these exceptions), also embodying the custom of the estate. The tenants objected to sign it, saying, they wished no change and would stay as they were. It was explained to them that that could only be done by signing an agreement, but as they still objected the matter was not pressed, and so the estate came under the Act. Farmers do not apply for the landlord's written consent for specific improvements, for the very good reason that they never make improvements of the class for which the landlord's consent is necessary. If my consent were asked for any useful improvement, it would be most readily given. Then I am asked, "Do you know "of any instances where compensation has been "given for the general improved condition of a

"holding, and not simply for specific improve"ments?" Nor do I see how it could be valued. It is the clear duty of the tenant to farm well. There is no right recognised as belonging to the tenants to dispose of their interest in their holding to any solvent tenant or to any other person. Then as to game: Rabbits can only be preserved by the landlord on land in the occupation of the owner, i.e., they cannot be preserved as against the tenant. Hares, again, cannot be preserved as against the occupier. There are not many hares in this country. Shooting over a very large extent of country we killed 52 hares in 1892, an exceptionally good year. Most of these were given to the farmers. In 1891 we killed 11; 1890, 19; 1889, 9; so it is a very small affair. Nine hares on 28,000 acres of land is not very much harm. We seldom have complaints as to damage done by game. When there are, a valuation is arrived at between the agent and tenant. Tenants are not expected to beat. They sometimes come out for sport and good fellowship. We are always glad to see them. Game here does not in any way affect cultivation. I hope that it improves the relation between landlord and tenant. It gives opportunities of meeting. The tenants are generally most anxious that you should come and have sport. On the other hand, there is lunch and presents of game and so on, which they like, and the day's spo t. As to the labourers, I believe the game is of great advantage to the labourers. It gives a great deal of employment, and enjoyable employment, in the slack time of the year, and they have a great many rabbits given them. As to the public generally, the labourers, tenants and neighbours all have presents of game. Every one who has done the landlord any little kindness, or who from old association, we know would like to have it, generally have some. I believe that the neighbourhood consider it a great advantage. Besides which, of course, there is some surplus game which is sold and goes to supply the public demand. Then as to the proportion of offences against the game laws as compared with other offences in this petty sessional district, I obtained a return on the 22nd December last from the Superintendent of Police at Crickhowell. During the last year up to that time there were two convictions for game offences and 14 against property, and 10 against the person and 71 other offences. That is to say, there were two game cases out of a total of 97, and there were two or three that came in afterwards before the close of the year. Taking the last five years there were 43 game cases out of a total of 599, that is to say, 7 per cent. of the total cases. Then I am asked, "Is the law "of trespass satisfactory in other respects?" There are so few tourists that no one objects to their wandering at will. If they wish to come into our private grounds we rather think that they ought to ask permission beforehand, but they do not always do so. Tenants near the towns and villages complain of women and boys carrying away fences for firewood and trespassing in search of mushrooms. As to sporting rights over Crown lands and commons. Sporting rights over common lands belong to the lord of the manor: he is technically the occupier of common lands. Then as to fruit culture, the acreage under orchard in Brecknock is 1,154; that is a great deal more than in all the rest of Wales put together, the amount being given for the other 11 counties at 779 acres.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,801. I suppose in regard to fruit culture you do not include Monmouthshire?—Breconshire alone. I am not concerned with any other.

49,802. But in that comparison you have not considered Monmouthshire?—I am unable to answer you. I took the 12 counties of Wales: I certainly should not include Monmouthshire, which is an English county. Then as to horticulture, gardening is much neglected. There are only 10 acres of market garden in the county. Forestry is fairly well attended to. There are 13,955 acres of woods and plantations. As to poultry farming there is a ready sale for poultry, hucksters from the mineral districts meet the trains on market days at the town stations and buy up the lot before the sellers enter the market at all. All the farmers keep poultry; but there is no regular poultry farming. Bee-keeping is very little attended to. Then I am asked how these sources of profit affect farmers. Forestry cannot affect farmers. No one would let land to plant, as it cannot be taken into cultivation again. Orchards are a distinct improvement, and are made for any tenant wishing it. Poultry are a source of profit on every well-managed farm. Then as to instruction in butter and cheese-making, the county council have given instruction in butter-making. (There is great room for improvement, some of the resident gentry getting their butter from a distance to the obvious disadvantage of the neighbourhood.) The number of pupils was at once filled up, and I am told that from 1*d.* to 2*d.* per lb. increase is readily obtained for the improved article. We have only one high class cheese-maker in the county, Mr. Miller, near Brecon. His cheeses when thoroughly ripe will compete with Stilton, which shows what can be done, though it is not generally done in the county. As to instruction in other agricultural subjects there have been some agricultural lectures. They were listened to with interest, but I doubt very much good coming from them. As to railway rates, railways have no doubt been an enormous boon to this county. Builth and Hay districts have been brought within reach of the mineral markets, and the watering places in the north of the county have been opened up. Complaints were made in 1892 of railway rates, but I understand they have been modified. I was myself a member of the Joint Committee of Lords and Commons that sat for two sessions on that work which has been so severely criticised. Then as to co-operation and combination. On some estates arrangements are made as to sheep, but I have no personal knowledge of them and you will hear more of it in the north of the county. In farming operations generally, sometimes the same shepherd tends the flocks of several farmers. As to insurance, the buildings, if burned, are restored by the landlord. In one or two cases where buildings of mine were burned, the stock of the tenant was said to be insured. Then as to combinations in the nature of a trade union amongst landlords, farmers, or labourers, there is no combination of landlords to accept or decline any class of tenants, nor have I heard of any such combination between farmers or labourers. There was an organised strike amongst my farm labourers two years ago. They gave notice to leave in a body. I left the matter till the last moment hoping that they would reconsider the matter, but they made no sign, and I was obliged to fill their places. I obtained men without difficulty; after which the original staff wanted to remain on, but in justice to the men recently engaged I was very sorry, but I was unable to comply with their request. We make a rule of not taking a labourer unless he belongs to a friendly society. Then if he is ill we supplement what he gets from the club, making up his full wages for a limited period. In fact labourers commonly subscribe to some club, of which the smaller ones are apt to break down. The Foresters and Oddfellows, &c., grow stronger. A large number of people in this neighbourhood lost their savings in the Liberator disaster last year, but I cannot say how far the agricultural classes were involved. As to other provident institutions there are small clothing clubs managed by ladies to encourage the women to save. The labourers' wives seemed almost universally to subscribe to them. They are excellent institutions and a strong bond of sympathy between women. They are not, however, conducted on sound commercial principles, the interest given being very much larger than is really due to the people. Then as to the general condition of the farming population. As to farmer proprietors there are some farmer proprietors generally of a higher grade than peasants, but there are not many. I am a tenant farmer under one of them. The number of peasant and yeoman proprietors has no doubt decreased. A farm can be hired more cheaply than it can be bought. The liability to repairs is got rid of. And in any case a large family and the necessity for division of property at death makes it difficult to retain a small property for generations. There are some tenant farmers who have bought their own or other holdings for their own occupation in the district. The land has been bought sometimes as an investment. Sometimes it consists of fields convenient to their own homestead. Sometimes a residence for themselves or for some member of their family. I call to mind four cases. One was 10 years ago. The other three were last year. As to whether the purchase money was excessive—in each of these cases I am only cognisant of the purchase because I should have liked to have bought the land which adjoined my own. I will not say that the purchase money was excessive, but it was more than it would have paid me to give to let to a farming tenant from my point of view. It was more than I cared to give. Tenant farmers, their wives and families, generally do much of the work of the farm. Some children stay at home and help their parents. If there are more than are required some go to work as labourers or artisans. Some farmers on a large scale have worked as labourers in this way. I have met some as shopmen in London houses. I understand that children working at home are not paid labourers' wages, but after they have been clothed, fed, and given some pocket money there cannot be much saving in the matter. As to the provision made for them by their parents on marriage or independent settlement in life, it is common, if there are two sons, for a farmer to take a second farm for a son who is marrying—splitting the stock. This is a drain upon the necessary capital, and the few cases of serious difficulty amongst my tenants seem to have arisen from this cause. If a family is large, the farmer's children, like those of all other men, must make their own way. "Could present "rents be maintained if wages were paid in "respect of the children's labour"? Yes, in my judgment. Farm rents are the same whether the farmer has children or not. As to hired labourers, the bulk of them live at the farm; the cottage dwellers being either mechanics employed on roads, or railways, or by the gentry, or by traders other than farmers. Then as to cash wages: I have got the wages of my own farm. The bailiff in 1853 received 21*s.*, and of course a house. He now receives 30*s.* Horsekeeper, cowman, and shepherd—those are what we call seven-day men—received in 1853 14*s.*, 13*s.*, and 12*s.*; they now receive 17*s.* 6*d.* The labourer received 12*s.* in 1853, 12*s.* in 1865, and 15*s.* from 1880 to the present time, 1890. The dairymaid received 6*s.* 8*d.* in 1853; the women received 5*s.* up to 1865 and 6*s.* from that time on. Then, by way of perquisites, the shepherd has his house with rent free. He has 4*l.* in cash in the lambing season; that would make about 3*s.* 6*d.* a week extra on his wages during the year. The cowman has his house free and 1*s.* on each occasion for the services of the bull and boar. The waggoners receive 1*s.* when they go to the town to enable them to get their dinner. They have 4*l.* harvest money in harvest time, no drink being given. The general increase in labourers' wages during the last 50 years I have already shown, but if you like to go further back I may say that in 1712 a labourer received 3*s.* a week. Of course money was then very different in value to what it is now. In the Parliamentary return, "Wages," published in 1877 the wages in this neighbourhood in 1861 and in 1869 were given at 12*s.* for men and 6*s.* for women. Then, with reference to cottage accommodation, all modern cottages are of much better quality than old ones. The old ones are very indifferent owing to the habit of building the back wall against the bank, which makes the cottage damp and unsanitary. A great deal has been said about the morality of the people in North Wales. I should like it also to appear on the notes that the morality of the people in South Wales is very different, the average of illegitimate births being during the ten years 1881 to 1890, as follows: average for all England, 47 per 1,000 births; for South Wales, 44, Monmouth, 40. In the last year the average for the whole Kingdom was 42 per 1,000. In South Wales it was only 36 per 1,000, and in Monmouth it was only 33 per 1,000. There are only three counties in England which show an apparently better record than South Wales, and they are Somerset, which includes the enormous city of Bristol, Essex, which includes part of London, and Middlesex, which includes part of London. It will be obvious to the Commission that the reason for those three counties having a smaller return of illegitimate births is not because they are more moral than South Wales, but because immorality takes a different form. I should like to add that in my judgment the reason why South Wales shows so good a return is first because our house accommodation is better than in North Wales; secondly, because we have not those barbarous customs of courting of which you have heard in North Wales, and which must produce immorality; and thirdly, I think I am right in saying that the South Welsh people would tell you themselves that they are a God-fearing people; they are very much under the influence of clergymen and ministers of other denominations, and I think that that influence is one for good, and does good in this particular matter.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,803. Can you give the statistics for Breconshire? It would be interesting if you could?—No, I cannot give them, but I am bound to say that in the north of Breconshire they do not come out so well. The north of Breconshire is the nearest approach to North Wales, and possibly their customs may approximate a little to the North Welsh customs. I think I remember that it was 55 per cent. there, in fact, I did not put it into my proof because I did not like to. It is better than North Wales, but not quite so good as England.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,804. You were speaking of one part of the county as distinguished from another part of the county?—I am only speaking of the Builth district. With regard to the morality of this district I am far from saying that it is what it ought to be, but as compared with other country neighbourhoods it would show about the same. Then as to the situation of cottages. The tendency is for cottages to become concentrated in villages. The women find it more comfortable and convenient, and it is altogether more safe for them. They can get the assistance of neighbours in all the work of life. The children have less distance to go to school. They can go in company, &c. On the other hand, it is of course desirable for a labourer to be near his work. A carpenter of ours built himself a cottage (with money lent him by the late Sir Joseph Bailey) about a mile and a half from his work. He was in our employment 50 years, walking three miles a day for 300 days in the year; 900 miles a year amount to 45,000 miles, nearly twice round the earth. His time being worth 4*s.* a day, or 4*d.* an hour, the value of his time taken up in walking was 250*l.*, which would have built two cottages. As to garden allotments, on the Glanusk Estate there are cottages without gardens chiefly in the town, 22; gardens without cottages chiefly in the town, 46; cottages with gardens or land, 98. There has been no demand for cow pasture allotments until lately. Colonel T. Wood of Gwernyfed has introduced allotments under the system of his father-in-law, the late Lord Tollemache. He is sanguine of success. Last year the people of Bwlch petitioned the county council for allotments. The council did not think it well to adopt the Act, but I have a farm lying convenient which it is in contemplation to cut up for this purpose as an experiment. Whether it will succeed or not I am not sure. It would in a dairy country, but I am not sure that it would here, but we are going to try it.

49,805. That is at Bwlch?—At Bwlch. You pass it on your way to Brecon. Then as to the relative standard of comfort and as to self-improvement, we have village reading rooms at Llangattock and Tretower, and a free library and large public hall at Crickhowell. A constant series of concerts are all through the winter got up for all sorts of objects. There is a philharmonic society at Crickhowell for the performance of high class music. There are frequent musical contests, called Eisteddfodau, which are very popular. In a small village such as Tretower, a reading room is very difficult to keep going. The best way in my judgment would be to use a room in a cottage or to take a cottage for the purpose. I am told that Mr. Gwynne Holford has done this at Bwlch. A large room is cold, and requires a large fire and many lights to make it anything like snug. I built an expensive room at Tretower and do not think it a success. The rent is nominal, amply covered by my subscription. I also give a daily paper and other one-day-old newspapers from my house when we have done with them. The want of power amongst the labouring class to amuse themselves is very striking. If they have a holiday they seem to have no idea beyond working for themselves in their own gardens. Music is their only amusement. I tried a flower show, making no charge for admission and giving small prizes except a few which were contributed by a friend. It only succeeded for two or three years, when they said they did not see the good of showing unless all exhibitors had prizes. We also got up sports and cricket matches. We have agricultural shows at Brecon, Builth, Hay, Crickhowell, &c. Also many matches for hedging, shoeing, ploughing, and trial of sheep dogs. The Crickhowell show last year cost 266*l.*, which was mostly spent in prizes distributed amongst the agricultural classes or local tradesmen. It is extremely popular. As to migration of farmers, there is very little of it. On the contrary, they live as close as they can to where they were born, and marry a woman out of the same parish. The farmers, large and small, are divided into distinct classes; and they intermarry amongst their own class and are thus much related amongst their neighbours. Probably very few farmers keep accounts. As to the different periods of trade depression, in agriculture it began in 1881: the cause was sheep disease. A second period of depression, dependent chiefly on prices began in 1885 and continued till 1888. 1889 was a year of revival, and 1890–91 were prosperous years. In 1892–93 we have again encountered a severe depression in prices, and foreign competition. During the past year this county has been severely affected, because many of our farmers do not fatten stock, but sell their animals "fresh" to lowland and English farmers to finish them. This year the drought made these persons not ready to buy, and prices have been extremely low. Our own crops have been good, though hay was short in the north of the county. In the Vale of Crickhowell (apart from prices) there has been nothing to complain of this year. A local cause of agricultural trouble in the parishes of Llangattock and Llangynidr has been described already. Then I am asked what remedies I suggest for improving the profits from land. I consider that the mode of collecting income-tax, Schedules A. and B., on land is not fair. It is collected on the gross income; while proprietors of railway and other property are allowed to deduct all outgoings and pay only on the net cash paid into bank. An owner of land is charged on the full rental though he seldom receives more than three-quarters of that income. It has happened to me in two succeeding half years that the sum spent on my estates in Breconshire and Radnorshire for repairs, new work, &c. was as much as the entire rental. I had, nevertheless to pay income tax on the full amount, approximating to 20,000. Schedule B.—This taxation is reflected on the tenant farmer, because his income-tax is calculated on the same basis as that of the landowner, though it differs in amount. Local rates press more heavily on the classes who live by agriculture than upon other people. A general rate upon all property is, in my judgment, as one who has had a good deal of political experience, absolutely impracticable, but the Exchequer contribution might be further increased for main roads, highways, and education. The Poor Law requires reconsideration, both in the interests of the ratepayer and of the aged poor, and the police should perhaps be made one body and a national charge. The excessive charge for rates on poor districts with dense population might be alleviated by enlarging the area of taxation, if that could be managed without encouraging extravagance. Foreign competition seems to me the most urgent cause of depression. The time may be now arriving when it will be open to reconsideration whether the foreigner does not receive an undue preference in his goods being admitted absolutely tax free to compete with the very heavily burdened home-grown produce. It may be possible to clear the question from the prejudice arising from the question of big loaf and little loaf. I do not think that under any circumstances any duty should be placed on corn for human food. We are unable to produce wheat enough for home consumption. It is the staple food of the poor. A tax on bread would disturb the rate of wages in every trade. The unpopularity of such an import would be enormous. Any of which considerations place the question beyond the bounds of consideration for practical men. All other articles of foreign produce should, I think, bear their fair share of taxation; as much as falls on English produce, neither more nor less. I have no desire for a protective tariff; what I desire is the foreign and English producer to pay the same amount of taxation on their produce, and I do not think that that amount is impossible to calculate. If it is considered that a farm should produce three rents (as has been stated in evidence), and if taxation, Imperial and local, average about 4*s.* 6*d.* in the £ of rental, that would be equivalent to 1*s.* 6*d.* in each pound's worth of produce. Roughly speaking, a 7½ per cent. ad valorem duty on foreign goods would meet the emergency. The new source of revenue to be employed in the reduction of home taxation. If that suggestion is too sweeping a change of policy for the Commission to consider, I should like to say that an import duty on wool would do much to relieve the farmers of Brecknock, where wool is an important staple produce. As to what money has been spent on repairs and improvements, I have to say that during my time at Glanusk I have spent on repairs and improvements 118,830*l.* I have spent on woods and planting 21,149*l.* I have spent on reclaiming and draining 6,872*l.* And the other outgoing on the estate, rates and taxes (not on my own house and farm, and so on), allowances to tenants, and estate expenses of all kinds, have come to 66,271*l.* The total outgoings on the estate therefore have been 213,122*l.*, besides which there has been a staff of woodmen charged to a different account. This statement does not include any personal expenditure on house, garden, farm, game, or anything of the kind. It consists merely of the deductions paid by the agent before any money is paid into the bank. I would say that what that statement comes to is this, that a large landed estate managed, I hope, with fair, but not with exceptional liberality, has cost the owner in my time 200,000*l.*; it means that that money has been spent beyond what money invested in any first-class security would have involved. Had I had my money invested in the Funds instead of in lands, I should have been able to have laid by a sum of 200,000*l.* for my younger children. Under the present circumstances no landlord would have that sum to leave to his younger children, and they mostly do as I have done, provide for the younger members of their family by life insurance.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,806. In how many years was that money spent?—The first half year was Michaelmas, 1861, and the last half year was Michaelmas, 1893; that is 31 years.

49,807. Can you tell us what relation the expenditure bears to the income?—Yes; I have already given you the rental of the estate in my evidence. I should say that in ordinary years about a third of the rental goes out in expenses before it comes into the landlord's pocket. Perhaps if a man had the advantage of inheriting a first-class estate in magnificent order it would be less, but in this county, where the buildings are mostly old and have been built in times when people did not expect such good houses as they do now, the expenses of a Welsh estate seem never ending; I have never got to the end of them yet.

49,808. Then we may take it it is about 33?—Yes; one-third. Then I should say that that includes the taxation on the estate. It includes income tax, which is paid by the tenant and repaid by the landlord.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,809. Are we to understand that you are in favour of all copyhold lands being enfranchised?—We have no copyhold land in Brecknockshire, and I have no experience of it.

49,810. But I thought you mentioned that speaking of commons?—Yes, I spoke with regard to the small chief rents, lease rents and heriots, and small manorial uplands here. I spoke both as a lord of the manor and as a tenant under the lord of the manor. As a lord of the manor I say they are very small; we have to collect them in half-crowns, and some of my lease rents go down to 4*d.* on a farm: they are hardly worth the trouble of collecting, and they are burdensome and troublesome to pay. In my judgment they all of them ought to be enfranchised. I am willing to enfranchise them and I do enfranchise my own property whenever another lord of the manor lets me do so.

49,811. Then I did not quite understand what you said with regard to the verbal taking of farms. You talked of only verbal lettings?—Yes; out of every nine farms I have agreements with two.

49,812. Is there no wish for agreements?—No; they are objected to by farmers. We are most anxious to have written agreements.

49,813. But the tenants will not have them?—The tenants do not like them. They have always had an agreement under what they consider a well-known custom. They know they will be treated fairly and they do not wish for agreements.

49,814. Have you a general custom of the country here—something the same as we have seen in Glamorganshire?—I think you will have a professional agent in Brecon, and I would rather you asked those questions of him.

49,815. When farms are to let, you have plenty of applications at all times?—Always; but we have so few changes of tenancy and they are so generally let to persons of the same family that there are very seldom farms in the market on my estate.

49,816. When you give abatements in your union, are the tenants able to get their rates reduced proportionately?—When the abatement has been given for more than a half-year, I think. I am not quite sure. They produce their receipt and then they get an abatement on the receipt.

49,817. Unions differ very much?—Well, I ought to be able to answer you the question, but I cannot answer offhand.

49,818. How would you account for the increase of population? We have found such a decrease in other places, and yours is not a mineral district?—Yes, it is. The whole of the south of the county is a mineral district, and in this part, although it looks an agricultural neighbourhood, the parishes stretch over the hills, as Mr. Grove will know very well, and include some miles of the town, of Brynmawr, Beaufort, and part of Rumney and Tredegar.

49,819. It is generally in these mineral districts that the increased population is?—All the enormous increases of population that I gave you are due to mineral neighbourhoods.

49,820. Is there scarcity of labour in the agricultural parts?—There is a tendency amongst the young men to go up to the mineral districts, but the agricultural labourer generally comes back again. He does not like the work underground, although he is well paid for it.

49,821. With regard to the increase in the number of sheep, is there any hand feeding of sheep in this district? Do you give them any cake or corn, or anything of that sort?—Yes, I believe there is; I cannot speak from my own knowledge. We fold our sheep upon the turnips, and if the Honourable Commissioner, driving to Brecon, would kindly look at my sheep on the right-hand side of the road, he will see a crop of rye grass, with sheep folded upon it, which I hope will please him.

49,822. We shall see the good effect of it?—Yes, about two miles from here you will see it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,824. It is on the slope of the hill below the road, is it?—It is on the slope of the hill; the road takes a sharp turn, and it is in the angle made by the turn.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,825. What is the name of the farm?—The name of the farm is Llygad-dwr; that means "The eye of the waters."

Mr. Griffiths.

49,826. Has the doing away of the turnpike gates been of any benefit or a loss to the tenant farmer, do you think?—Well, it is difficult to answer you. I should say it has been an advantage. I think that agricultural produce went through free; I am not quite sure.

49,827. To a great extent it did, no doubt?—I should think it is an advantage to everybody.

49,828. You are not troubled much with game in this part of the country?—I have plenty of game on my own land.

49,829. But you occupy the home farm?—I occupy the home farm, and I also occupy a rough mountain farm for the sake of the game. I took that in hand when the Game Act was passed.

49,830. Do the tenants avail themselves of the Ground Game Act?—Oh, yes, to a very large extent.

49,831. You say there is a good deal of butter brought into this part of the country from a distance. Why should that be?—There is some butter brought in from a distance.

49,832. Why?—Because the gentleman who was purchasing it did not like the butter in the neighbourhood. You will hear different accounts of it, but the butter in the neighbourhood is not so good as it should be.

49,833. Have they not adopted a new system in these parts?—They have, and I have told you already that those who have adopted the new system are said to be getting a better price for their butter.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,834. But they are very slow to adopt it?—They are; it is only last year, I think, that we had this instruction. People are very slow to adopt improvements, especially farmers. They stick to their old way of doing things very much.

49,835. Then I find that you keep a bull and a boar for the use of the tenants?—Yes.

49,836. Do they avail themselves of the use of them?—Yes.

49,837. Or do they keep animals of their own?—No, indeed they do not. The stock all through this neighbourhood looks like first class pedigree Hereford stock, and I believe the reason of it is entirely because for the last 50 years they have been bred from my own bulls. I should say I take a great interest in cattle breeding; I practically edited the Hereford Year Book for some years; I was chairman of the committee.

49,838. Then you say you do not employ labourers unless they belong to some benefit society. Is that a general thing in the neighbourhood or only on your estate?—No, it is only since Mr. Coles came to me that we have done that, and we think it very much to the men's advantage. When they are first ill for a certain time, if we think the illness a genuine illness that stops their working, we make up their wages.

49,839. It is a very good system indeed, I think?—I should also say that when a man has worked for me for 20 years I pension him if he retires because he is disabled.

Mr. Grove.

49,840. After 20 years?—If a man has worked 20 or more years I give him generally about 6*s.* a week; it prevents his going on to the parish.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,841. Then I believe you mentioned that labourers receive 4*l.* at harvest time instead of drink?—My labourers do.

49,842. Do you find any difficulty in getting labourers on those terms; do they prefer that?—No, I have had no difficulty. During the last two or three years I have stopped giving them drink.

49,843. I had to do the same thing?—They did not like it. I have given sometimes oatmeal and lemon and tea, and so on. I have found one or two things of that kind—the women like it. I found that with an unlimited supply of drink they got troublesome. Finally, I had considerable trouble. A man who was my foreman labourer, and a very respectable man, got into a row—he kicked a man in the field and so on, and then I stopped giving drink, and it has answered; and though the men sometimes complain of it, I do not mean to start it again, whether they complain or whether they do not.

49,844. Still they go on peaceably?—They go on peaceably.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,845. They bring their own drink, I suppose?—I do not think practically they do. I do not know how that may be. I am told they do bring their own drink.

49,846. Have you no other agricultural cottages on the farm?—Oh, yes, I have cottages on my farm.

49,847. In most cases convenient to the farms?—At the present time the farmers are beginning to ask more for cottages than they have done for some time. I do not know if a change is going to take place in that respect.

49,848. Do many of the labourers keep cows?—One or two of my labourers I think do, but not generally. Now with these cow-keeping allotments I presume they intend to keep cows; that is the object of it.

49,849. Some of us believe that it would be a means of keeping the labourers in the agricultural districts?—Well, you may believe what you like. It is an experiment at the present time. We shall try it on a small scale first, and if it succeeds we will increase it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,850. Do you think that the trespass after mushrooms does not constitute such a grievance as to justify making the law of trespass more stringent?—Oh, no, I think not; I should say not.

49,851. Of course there would be an objection to making it more stringent—it would interfere with inoffensive persons who might stray across fields?—Well, my own opinion is that in a beautiful country you ought to put up with a great many little things like that. People now walk in my park. What harm do they do me?

49,852. I am very glad to hear that that is your view?—Perhaps I should say that for the last year or two I have generally in summer opened my park and my gardens once a week to anybody who likes to walk in them, because I think if people like to see a pretty garden it is a pity that they should not have the pleasure. It is not very largely availed of.

49,853. You say that a good deal of the corn that is raised in this county is consumed on the farms?—Yes. The old custom of this country is to take your corn down to the mill and have it ground, and use it as bread.

49,854. You are not aware whether any complaint is made by the farmers that there is no provision in the third schedule for compensation for corn consumed on the farm?—I do not suppose a single farmer in the place knows anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act unless they go to a solicitor when they are in some difficulty. I never heard anything of the kind. They may talk about it.

49,855. So we may take it that the Agricultural Holdings Act is really inoperative in the county?—I had one large claim for compensation. That, I think, was under the Agricultural Holdings Act. It was a gentleman who had taken a farm from me. I think he had taken it under a former agent—under the Glamorganshire custom. At all events he insisted on going out under the Glamorganshire custom, and I had to pay a large sum to him.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

49,856. Was it in Glamorganshire?—No, it was in Brecknockshire. It was due to some mistake in the taking. I do not quite know what.

49,857. I see that the time varies on your estates as to the termination of a tenancy, some terminate at Candlemas; others at Lady Day?—Those that are not at Michaelmas are generally people who have followed old leases. Old leases in this neighbourhood were ended, I think, at Candlemas. Then when the leases expired and the people remained on as yearly tenants, as they all practically did, we did not alter the terms of their taking, but we have made an attempt to bring all the takings to Michaelmas, and the bulk of them now are Michaelmas takings.

49,858. Do you find any difficulty in bringing that about?—Well, I have looked over my rentals for the whole of the time I have been there for the purpose of getting my evidence ready for this Commission. I find there is an odd half-year paid—a single half-year paid at one time, whether it was an extra half-year or a short half-year I was not able to trace. You must understand that my present agent has only been with me for three or four years, and I had to collect the evidence that I have given to-day from old figures. I am not able to give you the reasons, I can only give you the facts.

49,859. I suppose you would consider a Michaelmas taking the best time of the year?—It seems to have been so considered by those who have managed for me in former years.

49,860. With respect to the farms which are taken by verbal agreement, you have never had any difficulty with those tenants?—No, I think not.

49,861. I suppose they observe a sort of unwritten law that old pasture is not to be broken up?—Yes.

49,862. Of course, for a reason quite obvious?—Oh, yes.

49,863. If they happened to do so they would not succeed in getting a farm under any other landlord if they violated that unwritten law?—Quite so. I have only had one case and then it was done ignorantly. The moment I called the man's attention to it and showed him that he was liable to a penalty, he said: "Well, I will "lay down the field again," and he did so.

49,864. What is the objection which farmers have against written agreements?—Well, I do not know that the objection exists now so much as it did, but some years ago you would be surprised how ignorant many of even our large farmers were. They could not read or write; you must remember it is only since 1870 that children have been taught to read and write so very largely. I think it was a feeling of suspicion.

49,865. They were afraid to put their hands to paper?—I think they preferred their old way of going on. My agreements originally were made expressly with the intention that they should go on in their old way and not come under the Agricultural Holdings Act. They told me they did not wish to come under the Agricultural Holdings Act, but as they objected to sign an agreement I dropped it at once. I had no objection to their going on as they were.

49,866. I see you have the principle of the settlement of any differences that may arise under the Agricultural Holdings Act inserted in your agreements?—Yes, I have an arbitration clause.

49,867. Has any occasion arisen where this has had to be resorted to?—I am told there is one case.

49,868. And that was settled amicably?—Yes, it was so.

49,869. Do you know whether any of the farmers claim to fill their returns under Schedule D.?—No, I have never heard of a case. You mean under the new Act—an Act of three or four years ago.

49,870. Yes?—No, I have never heard of a case. I believe those who have large farms all pay under Schedule B.

49,871. I take it it would be to their interest to do so in times of depression?—It is not for me to say. I do not know.

49,872. I know I have done so, and it has answered my purpose. Has there been much land laid down in permanent pasture?—Yes, I have already given you the figures showing that there is more land under pasture now than there was 20 years ago and showing what there was in an intermediate period.

49,873. With respect to your own estate, are you aware whether farmers have laid down permanent pasture?—I am unable to answer you. It is done in a very rough way when it is done here. It is not done so elaborately as you do it in England.

49,874. You have never been written to to obtain your consent to laying down?—No, I think not. I should not be written to myself; it would come through my agent.

49,875. Was there any advance made in the rents on your estates between the year 1870 and 1876?—No, I have had no general advancement. About the year 1870 if a farm was in the market and taken, it commanded high rents for the moment, but they have all gone back to their original rents again.

49,876. When had you the last general revision of rents?—I have never had one. I should be very glad to show the Honourable Commissioner if he took an interest in it the terrier of the farms with the rents from the moment that I have had them up to the present day.

Mr. Grove.

49,877. You say you think the county council ectures have not been quite as useful as they might be. Are you on the technical instruction committee yourself?—No, I am not; I am on a great many committees, but not upon that. Mr. Doyle, who, I believe, is going to give evidence this afternoon, takes an interest in that.

Mr. Grove—continued.

49,878. I daresay you suppose that as we get a little more experience, the lectures will so develop into more usefulness?—I think the dairy classes are very useful. As to agricultural chemistry, a gentleman gave a lecture on that subject at Crickhowell; it was very interesting for the moment, but I do not think anybody retains anything of it in his mind. It is better learnt from a book, if you want to learn it at all.

49,879. Then as to fruit culture, do you think there might be more fruit culture in this county?—I think an orchard close to a farmhouse with a few good apple trees and some cider fruit is an advantage, and whenever a tenant will take care of it I always make one for him.

49,880. You are prepared to assist them in that respect?—Oh, yes, and I do; I encourage it in every possible way.

49,881. Do you protect the trees as well as give the trees to them?—I do not see how I can protect them.

49,882. I mean by putting some protection round them; you would not pay the cost of that?—No, certainly not; it would be very costly.

49,883. When you make abatements you say notice is given to the tenants?—No, I said it was not put on the notices.

49,884. Do you think it is possible that not having some sort of notice may be a hardship to a farmer?—No, I do not think it is.

49,885. We have had complaints where farmers have had to sell their stock?—No, I think it is generally known. You must remember after all 10 per cent. does not come to much upon each individual farm. In the case of a farm of 100*l.* a year rent, it is only a 10*l.* note. In fact I look upon these per-centages of reduction merely as a mark of sympathy between landlord and tenant. I do not think it is of any great value.

49,886. But after all even 10 per cent. is of great value to a farmer when he is struggling?—Oh, it is to a certain extent, of course.

49,887. As to game have you had many claims for damages done by game?—No, I have not had any claim for damages done by game for a very long time.

49,888. A copy of the agreement is given, I suppose, whenever an agreement is entered into?—Oh, yes, always.

49,889. Have you any general agricultural society for the county?—Yes.

49,890. In Monmouthshire after the passing of the Agricultural Holdings Act, Mr. Stratton and others brought the custom of the country into a regular concrete form, so that that is most valuable. Is there anything of that sort in your county?—No, I have never seen anything of the kind.

49,891. Has there been much change of ownership in lands in this district?—A paper is put into my hands. I understand that tenants under abatement do not get their rates reduced. I answered a question by Mr. Griffiths about that with some hesitation, if you will remember. I take it Mr. Coles has enquired, and he now passes me this paper.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,892. We have found a great diversity of practice in many places. There is some question in the minds of many guardians whether they have power to do it or not?—I am a member of a board of guardians and ought to have known. My impression was that several tenants had brought me a paper showing the actual amount that they paid and that their rates had been reduced, and I was still under that impression.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,893. It would not be a permanent reduction?—Oh, no, not a permanent reduction.

Mr. Grove.

49,894. But you would regard it as rather a hardship on the tenant if his landlord reduced his rent that he should not get his assessment lowered, would you not?—Of course if the rent is reduced permanently he gets his assessment lowered. The assessment is on the rent that the tenant gives.

49,895. When you say permanent what do you mean by a permanent reduction; how many years would you call permanent?—I think there is a misunderstanding. Tenants have produced before me two or three receipts for their rents for two or three years, and a reduction of rates has been allowed upon that. On a mere abatement a reduction probably would not be allowed; I understand it is not allowed. Of course if there was a permanent reduction the rates would be lowered, unless we thought there was something underhand.

49,896. But if the landlord allows an abatement is it not fair, do you think, to the farmer that he should get the benefit of that in his rates?—Well, it is not so large a question as it would seem to you, because the rate is not so many pence, but it is a sum of money that is required, and that sum of money has got to be raised somehow. Therefore in an agricultural district, where the whole of the district is farmed, if you allowed the abatement you would have to make a larger rate. Up to a certain extent I agree with you.

49,897. You said you thought the Small Holdings Act was hardly as useful as it might be?—Yes, I look upon its success as very problematical. I think many a poor man will lose his money by buying a farm and having to part with it again.

49,898. We found in Cardiganshire, the last county we were in, a great desire among the small farmers for buying their own holdings, and that arose from so many changes of ownership in the district, so that there was a feeling of uncertainty as to whether they would not be getting notice to leave and be turned out of their holdings. I suppose you have not had so many changes in these parts?—The changes years ago were changes from holders who were sadly in want of money, to my late grandfather, who at that time was a large ironmaster, making a considerable sum of money, and investing it in land. Since that time there has been no change of ownership.

49,899. You spoke about railway rates, I know you have a large experience in that respect, as we were often meeting each other on that very question; but do you think that the railway companies are charging more than their legal maximum?—Oh, no, but you must remember it was not the business of the committee to make rates. What we made was a maximum rate, and we cut the railway companies down in some things very low, and they retaliated by rising other things to their maximum.

49,900. So that when people grumble at railway rates, you say, so far as your experience goes, the railway companies are within their legal charging power?—Yes, they may be; it is actionable if they are above their charging power.

49,901. They ought to be; are they always?—Yes, I should think so.

49,902. Taking the district generally, do you think there are sufficient cottages for farm labourers?—They are the same as there always have been—Yes, I think so.

49,903. You would not suppose that that accounts in any way for the scarcity of labour on the land?—I do not think there is much scarcity of labour on the land. We have followed the same mode of agriculture which has always been followed.

49,904. There would be a tendency to cut down labour because of the great depression in agriculture just now?—No doubt the farmer meets the hard times as best he can.

49,905. You would consider the present time a time of great depression to the farming interest, I suppose?—The last year, so far as prices are concerned, was one of great depression.

49,906. Do you consider that land has to bear too many burthens in taxation and otherwise?—Yes, I do. Of course, as I am interested in the matter I cannot be a judge of my own cause.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,907. I gather from what you said that you did not consider that people were as eager to make use of the reading rooms and places of that sort which you provided for them, as you could wish?—That is so. I provided a very handsome room; I think I made a mistake, and I should have done better had I hired a cottage at one tenth of the cost.

49,908. You have not tried to enlist their interest in the matter by giving them somewhat more of the management?—Oh, yes, I have. I merely take, I think, a shilling a year rent for a room which cost me 700*l.* to 800*l.*, and I do not manage their affairs at all.

49,909. You let them manage for themselves?—Yes, certainly. I have so far helped them in their management that I send down my own newspapers a day old, to save them expense.

49,910. Even that does not quicken their enthusiasm?—No, in a small village it does not.

49,911. Do you expect that will grow as education becomes more extended?—I doubt it—not in a small village. In a town like this, which you might call a village but I call it a small town, there is a free library and so on, and I believe they do very well, and some young men take an interest in reading.

49,912. Here they do very well?—I believe they do.

49,913. You touched on the question of insurances, and I did not quite gather whether the farm buildings are usually insured on the estates?—No. My farm buildings are not insured. I insure gentlemen's houses on my estate, but not farm buildings; it would not pay on a very large estate; it is better to build them up, if they are burned down.

49,914. With regard to the land tax, did you mention who pays that tax?—The tenants in most cases.

49,915. You alluded to the clause in the agreement to prevent the tenants from breaking up pasture land. Do you encourage them to lay down land in pasture?—Oh, yes, we are very glad if they do. The tendency now-a-days is all to lay down land in pasture.

49,916. By encouraging them, I mean do you bear any part of the expense? Do you give them seeds, or anything of that sort?—We give them manure or a money allowance; I do not think they trouble much about seeds.

49,917. With regard to co-operation; there is not much co-operation amongst the farmers?—Except sometimes the same shepherd looks after several flocks on the hill.

49,918. With regard to the middleman, I have heard it suggested now and then that he, or the butcher, for instance, gets too much profit on the sheep and cattle sold by the farmer. Do you think that is the case, and that by some co-operation amongst themselves they would secure a fairer price?—I do not know. I have had it in my mind once or twice whether such a thing should be done. I think it doubtful whether it would succeed.

49,920. You have said you do not let farms to the highest bidder, but we have had a thing of this sort suggested, that the agent says to the farmer, "I will let you a farm," and so on; "but," he says, "So-and-so has offered so much "for it, and I cannot let it under that price." He does not actually let it to the highest, bidder, but he lets it to someone else at the highest bidder's figure?—That is not the custom on my estate. When a farm falls vacant it is let at what we consider a fair price, about the same price as it was before. I should be only too pleased to show the Commissioners what is practically the life history of all my farms. I have it if you wish it.

49,921. Have you ever had leases for three lives on the estates?—There are a few of them, where people have built a cottage of their own.

49,922. There are a few now?—There are none on my estate. There were one or two, but they have fallen in or died out.

49,923. It has not been the custom on your estate?—No, it has not been the custom on my estate.

Mr. Grove.

49,924. Just one other question. I suppose the parliamentary return does not show the acreage of the enclosures of which you have put in a list?—That is an exact copy of the parliamentary return which I handed in.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,925. You say upon that the general improvement of a holding could not be valued. I think that difficulty might be met in this way, might it not, that every farm should be valued at the commencement of a tenancy—a field valuation?—I do not think my tenants wish it. I should have no objection, but I think my tenants would have a very strong objection.

49,926. It does not prove the thing is impossible. You say such could not be possible?—The general improvement?

49,927. Yes?—I maintain what I said: I do not think it could be valued.

49,928. It could be done approximately, at any rate, could it not? If a practical farmer went over a farm at the commencement of a tenancy and made a field valuation, and when the tenant left the farm the valuation could be made afterwards, and if it was found that the farm was improved in value the tenant would claim compensation for the additional value?—Supposing it proved the other way?

49,929. The landlord would be compensated for deterioration?—I am afraid he would not find himself compensated; he would not get any money.

49,930. I think in justice to both parties such a course should be adopted: that is, where it is possible?—You see on a large estate a farm, when it is let, is let at something like the rent at which it was before. If I had a farm valued it would practically be introducing the system of the highest bidder, because a man would come and say the farm was worth more than you have been letting it for, and I will give you so much for it. I do not think it would be to the interest of the tenant.

49,931. When you fix the rent for a long period it is rather a rough and ready style; it is not in accordance with the prevailing price of stock and produce?—You cannot change the habits of the people. You must be content in Wales to take the ways in which the Welsh people have been taking their farms. I think if I had mine valued a good many would be paying more rent. To judge from the farms I hold myself, the neighbouring farms would be doubled in rent. It would be a very unpopular, and I think a hard, thing to do.

49,932. And possibly in some cases they would be reduced. May we take it in that way?—I cannot say. I do not think so.

49,933. It would be more equitable, would it not?—What would be more equitable?

49,934. The rents would be more uniform?—Under what circumstances?

49,935. If the rent was fixed periodically?—Well, you see the reason that the tenants prefer a year to year tenancy instead of a lease is because their rent is not fixed periodically, but because they have it for a great number of years the same rent.

49,936. Perhaps some of your farms are more adapted for corn growing?—A few of them.

49,937. We will say there are some; corn growing has been more unprofitable than any other branch of farming, and possibly the rent on the corn-growing farms would be higher in proportion to other farms?—That is perfectly true in districts in England. I have some farms near Monmouth, where I have made some large reductions in rent. I have some estates in Buckinghamshire which are absolutely unprofitable, and those are corn-growing counties. The reason we have escaped the agricultural depression here so much is because we are not a corn-growing country. Supposing there was a farm more suitable for corn-growing, you would find that the farmer would have a by-take—a second farm—on the mountain, and he would work the two together.

49,938. That is, provided such a farm was available?—Well, that is the usual mode of conducting business here.

Mr. Griffiths.

49,939. Are the present abatements made satisfactory to the tenants, as a rule, to meet the present depression?—I think so. At the same time I think the last year has been a hard one for the farmers.

49,940. Stock has been selling very low?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

49,941. Are the tenants satisfied that the abatements made are sufficient?—Yes, but they would like more no doubt, they would be glad to have no rent to pay at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

49,942. What was the cause of the strike amongst the labourers?—The lowest of my labourers at that time was receiving 15*s.* a week, and the seven day men 17*s.* 6*d.* I think one gentleman in the county was giving a shilling more, and they thought they ought to have a shilling more, and they foolishly said they would all leave me at the end of the week. I made every representation to them I could, not to do it. I left the thing to the middle of the week before I set to work to get any other labourers. Two men repented, and I let them stay on at once. When the Saturday morning came at the end of the week, I had hoped they would have all said they would stay on, but they did not, and then I had other labourers down, and, of course, I could not make fools of the other men who came into this country to do my work for me, so they had to go. I was very sorry for it. I may say on an occasion of that sort somebody has to be master, and between myself and my own men I intend to be master.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,943. There are some questions handed in. The first is by Mr. William T. Lee: "Is there a "demand for allotments on your estate"?—I think I have answered that question.

49,944. Is it true that they are let at from 12*l.* to 14*l.* an acre?—There is one field or garden allotments in this town—it is not a labourers' allotment at all, but taken almost entirely by tradesmen—let at from 10*s.* to 1*l.* a piece, the allotment. What the size of the allotment is I do not know, but they do let at a high rate per acre no doubt.

49,945. It is accommodation land?—Yes, small gardens.

49,946. Would you be prepared to deny that it is let at from 12*l.* to 14*l.* an acre?—No, I should not. Of course, it is a valuable field; it is a field close to the town; it would be worth 5*l.* an acre for agricultural purposes; it has been cut up into small gardens for the tradesmen.

49,947. There is another question by Mr. W. T. Lee: "The allegation is that the buildings "on the estates are in a bad condition. Is this "a fact?"—I have given you my expenditure on buildings. I have given you the fact that a year ago I absolutely spent more upon the buildings than the estate produced. The estate is not in so high a condition all through as I should like to see it, but the buildings are very much improved.

49,948. Another question by Mr. Lee: "Do "you adhere to your statement that Welsh "agreements are not required by your tenants?" —Certainly. I have the statistics here. I told you that, so far as I knew, none of my tenants are Welsh-speaking only. In this particular neighbourhood, out of 19,515 people, nearly 11,000 speak English and no Welsh; there are 5,700 Welsh and English speakers, and only 1,585 Welsh speakers, and where they are I am sure I do not know; I never find them.

Professor Rhŷs.

49,949. Who cannot speak English?—Who state in the census paper they cannot speak English. It is not exactly the same thing.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,950. You adhere to your statement that Welsh agreements are not required?—Not the slightest. I should not have the least objection to having it done, but such a thing is never asked for.

49,951. There is another question by Mr. Lee: "How often do you visit your tenants?"—Now we are going a long way to leeward, I think. I was round to a great many last year.

49,952. You live in this part?—Yes, I live in the place.

49,953. Another question by Mr. Lee: "Can "you tell us why your men struck in the strike "you mentioned?"—I have just answered that question.

49,954. "What wages were they getting?"—That I have answered.

49,955. "What are their wages now?"—That I have also answered Mr. Lee wants a lot of things told twice over.

49,956. Mr. Richard Jones asked you the questions before, not Mr. Lee?—I have answered them.

49,957. "Can you state the acreage of the "estate when it came into your family?"—The estate has been bought bit by bit. How am I to state it?

49,958. You do not know what it was?—I will say, to answer the question, not an acre. How can I state what the acreage of the estate was when it came into my family? No one in these days can become possessed of an estate except by purchase.

49,959. Then the next question is: "At what "rate has it multiplied? What is its present "acreage?"—I have given you that. It has not multiplied at all; it has been paid for.

49,960. "Does not the large extension of your "estate in such a brief period show that the "investment in land has paid you"?—No. The rental is at about the same as it always was. The money which has been invested in my estate has not been savings from land; it was the money made by a very successful ironmaster.

49,961. There is a question by Mr. Vincent: "Will you give the details of acts of kindness to "Nonconformists to which you referred? I ask "this because there have been suggestions to "the contrary effect in other cases?"—Yes, I can. The only reason why I did not give them was because I did not way to say anything more about them, as I was on good terms with them. In the first place, the firm of J. & C. Bailey, of Nantyglo, lent 900*l.* to a Baptist community to build Sion Church, Brynmawr. On the dissolution of the firm the outstanding debt, 147*l.*, was transferred to myself; and I forgave the debt. In February 1877 the Welsh Baptist Association passed the following resolution:—"That the Conference having learned "with extreme satisfaction that Sir J. R. Bailey "has dealt so bountifully with the Baptist "Church at Brynmawr in releasing them from "the heavy debt under which they were labour-"ing, wishes to present its heartfelt thanks to "the said gentleman." Then there was a chapel at Groyne fechan. In November 1878 a petition was received from the worshippers, stating that it was in an unsound condition. It belonged to the Glanusk estate, and was let for a nominal sum of 2*l.* a year. It was restored by myself at a cost of 113*l.*, and I afterwards re-seated it for them. I may say, by way of showing how little the differences of religion have to do with selecting tenants on this estate, that the memorial to me was signed by the heads of families, nearly all tenants or employed on the estate. The Presbytery for the county of Brecknock passed a vote of thanks for that on June the 29th, 1880. In 1889 the community at Bwlch desired to enlarge their burial ground, and I and my son presented the land as a free gift. In 1890 a similar piece of land was given to the chapel at Llangattock for a like purpose. The original site of this chapel was, I believe, given to them by my grandfather to build the chapel on. There are many others, but those are the larger ones—the considerable sums.

49,962. There is another question by Mr. Lee "Have your gifts to Nonconformists been sub-"ject to any conditions, and if so, what"?—The gift to the Baptist community at Brynmawr was subject to no conditions. The doing of the chapel at Groyne fechan was subject to no condition. The gift of land at Bwlch and at Llangattock was subject to the condition that they should in their vestry put up a board acknowledging the gift. I did that rather to avoid things being said afterwards. It is a very usual thing, and I have done it in Church of England churches also. It is very right it should be known how land is acquired, and how a church is built, and so on.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. John Andrew Doyle called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

49,963. You are, I think, Mr. John Andrew Doyle, of Pendarren, near Crickhowell, and as an Assistant Commissioner you reported, I believe, to the Royal Commission on Agriculture in 1880–82, on the state of farming in Wales?—Yes.

49,964. The evidence you wish to give is partly personal as an owner of land?—As an owner cultivating my own land. I have no land that I let out.

49,965. You farm your own land?—Yes.

49,966. How much is it?—About 220 acres of agricultural land.

49,967. Will you give some evidence for the district of Crickhowell Hundred?—Yes, I am prepared to answer specific questions.

49,968. With regard to sheep runs, what is the condition of the right of pasturage in this country?—So far as I know from my own knowledge, it is this: I have two farms on opposite sides of the valley, both adjoining the mountain, and on each the usage is (I do not know what the legal custom is) that the stint is unlimited.

49,969. What is the effect of that?—I think the effect is undesirable. It would be very much better if there was a limit. It is possible that a limit exists; I only know of the custom in my neighbourhood, and if there is a limit it is certainly not observed, and no attempt is made to enforce it, I believe, on the Sugar Loaf.

49,970. What effect has it upon rent?—It necessarily raises the rent of the farm, and it is an additional advantage. Given two farms of equal productiveness, the farm plus a sheep run must be more valuable than the farm minus a sheep run.

49,971. And that would be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of the rent?—Unquestionably.

49,972. Do you think that is beneficial or otherwise to sheep farming?—Do you mean that the existence of a run is beneficial?

49,973. Yes?—No, I do not think it is so, not at least an unlimited run; it leads to a great many disputes on the mountain. Cases of what is called sheep coursing often come into court which give rise to a great deal of ill feeling.

49,974. You think it would be better if there was a limit to the number of sheep, if there was stint?—I think so. A very small holder close to the mountain is able to keep a very large flock upon it because he can be constantly on the mountain. Whereas the larger holder who has a large farm to attend to cannot get the same advantage out of it.

49,975. Do you consider that language, politics, or religion have any effect upon the relations between landlord and tenant?—Language certainly in this county cannot have.

49,976. English is always spoken?—I should not say that politics or religion to my knowledge have any effect, but, as I told you, I am not a landlord, so that it is a mere matter of opinion.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

49,977. Do you know how rent is fixed; whether it is fixed per acre or on the gross sum?—I do not know, but it does not seem to me to be a question of very great importance, because even if it is nominally a gross sum it must be practically per acre.

49,978. Are good labourers scarce?—Well, "scarce" is a relative term. It is not very easy to get them. I should say, I think, that they are scarcer than when I came into the country and began farming.

49,979. What is the condition of the fences in this neighbourhood upon the farms?—I should say they are not very good.

49,980. Is that a consequence of labour being more or less scarce?—It may be; I should think it is possible that it is so.

49,981. Can you speak to the effect on cultivation of game preserving?—Only from observation. There is no doubt, I should say, that very extensive preservation of ground game is detrimental to cultivation.

49,982. You know the Ground Game Act no doubt?—Yes.

49,983. Is that taken advantage of?—I should be only speaking from hearsay as to that, and I should hardly like to say anything upon that point.

49,984. Can you speak of the offences against the Game Laws?—Yes. I have filled in some details which have been handed in.

49,985. I see in the statement as to the offences against the Game Laws which you have handed in, that in this petty sessional division during the last six months of 1893, which would be a normal period, there were eight game cases, one being a case of fish poaching. Is that correct?—Yes.

49,986. But that was as compared with 18 offences against the person, and 54 miscellaneous. Is that so?—Yes. I went through the charges for that period of time, and took my list from them.

49,987. During the last six months of 1893, that is?—Yes.

49,988. What have you to say about poultry farming?—I think there seems to be a considerable quantity of poultry kept. I think farmers keep, so far as I can observe from going about, a considerable quantity of poultry, and I should think that if they paid better attention to them they might increase the egg supply somewhat, but in a country like this where there are no large towns to be supplied and where communication with main roads is difficult, I do not think poultry can be very much of a resource.

49,989. Do you think that more production in agricultural matters is required?—Yes, in some respects I should say it was.

49,990. What has been done?—100*l.* a year is allotted by the county council to technical education in agriculture. Lectures have been given on manures, and on the subject of feeding, at different centres of the county, and dairy demonstrations and examinations have been held.

49,991. Those dairy demonstrations, and so on, are under the County Council, no doubt?—Yes.

49,992. What benefit societies are there in the neighbourhood?—I could not tell you what there are offhand. I think that both the Foresters and Oddfellows are in existence.

49,993. Are any of the men in your employment in any of these little societies?—They are not all at present, but they all either are or have been at some time with one exception.

49,994. Are the societies in a satisfactory condition?—I think the extant societies are. I know of one man who now belongs to the Foresters, and who told me that he had previously belonged to a society which fell through for want of recruits; they wound up their affairs; they did not become insolvent, and so on, but it was wound up.

49,995. How many men have you in your employment?—Seven.

49,996. And of those seven, six are in societies, or have been?—Yes.

49,997. Are there any proprietor farmers here?—In my parish which I can only speak to?

49,998. Yes?—No, I do not know of one in my parish. I know one very small proprietor, but he lets his farm and lives in a cottage close adjacent, but I do not know of any who till their own ground.

49,999. You know of another who mortgaged his holding, I think?—Yes.

50,000. And the mortgagee sold it?—The mortgagee sold a portion of it to me. I do not know how he has dealt with the other portion—whether he has foreclosed, or whether he occupies it.

50,001. So that, according to that, you did know of two who have come to an end?—No, one has not come to an end; he still holds his ground and sub-lets.

50,002. What are the wages that the labourers get?—My regular labourers get 15*s.*, and a cottage.

50,003. Do they get any extra in harvest time?—Yes, they get 1*l.* in lieu of beer; they used to get beer; and my shepherd gets the same in lambing time.

50,004. Do the wives get anything extra?—The wives do, by private arrangement. In most cases I give the wives 1*l.* a year for keeping poultry for me, I supplying them with food also—the 1*l.* is for merely attending to the poultry.

50,005. What do you consider to be the standard of comfort between farmers and labourers?—I should say from observation of some of the quite small farmers that I should think their standard of comfort was hardly, if at all, higher than that of the labourers. As to a farmer tenant of mine on a small farm which I now occupy myself of 60 acres, I do not think his standard of comfort, so far as I could observe, was materially better than that of my labourers.

50,006. Do the labourers migrate much?—I believe that out of my last five carters certainly two have gone to the mining districts. One of my present men went there, and he came back again; he did not go when he was in my employment, but he went and then came back again to agricultural work.

50,007. Do you know what the temptation was to go and to come back?—The temptation to go, I imagine, was higher wages; it generally is; they are told that they will get higher wages. The cause of his coming back was that his wife disliked the life there.

50,008. So that the advantages would be very nearly equally balanced?—Well, that was her opinion, that having regard to the expenses of the necessaries of life there, and the additional house rent, the difference was not nearly as great as it appeared on paper.

50,009. We have heard in many places a good deal of this migration of labourers to the works districts, and we have had various reasons advanced for it; one would be the higher wages; you think that that would be an element?—I think so; I think that is the first inducement to go generally.

50,010. Another has been suggested to be better housing. How would that be in your case?—It would not be the case, I hope, with labourers living on my own ground.

50,011. That is to say, they are sufficiently well housed at home?—I think so. I hope so.

50,012. The third would be the temptation of getting greater advantages in the way of more society in point of numbers?—Yes, they are nearer shops, and I think they do feel that.

50,013. And greater advantages in the way of pleasurable society?—I think there is something in that.

50,014. And reading rooms. Have you reading rooms?—We have a reading room in Glangrwynay village, which is about a mile and a half away, but I doubt whether that is much used by any of the agricultural labourers. There is a factory down there, and it is used by the factory hands more.

50,015. I think I may gather from what you say that the principal temptation to go is the higher wages?—I should say so myself, but that is only a matter of opinion.

50,016. Yes, it is a matter of opinion, I suppose, with them and with you, and with everybody else, as to what the temptation may be, but it is very interesting to have your opinion?—What I meant was, I have never talked to them myself on the subject. In some of the remote districts I have no doubt the distance that the children are from school is a discomfort.

50,017. Yes, that is an element?—I think they feel that.

50,018. I observe you have put down on your précis that they not infrequently come back?—Yes, I have heard several cases of that.

50,019. Would living be cheaper here than up at the works?—Yes, I imagine so.

50,020. House rent would be cheaper, no doubt?—House rent would.

50,021. Would food be cheaper?—I could not say. You see they would have to pay for vegetables instead of growing their own.

50,022. So that food to that extent would be dearer?—Yes.

50,023. Could you make any suggestions as to remedies for improving the profits?—Do you mean improving agricultural profits?

50,024. I have a note in the statement which you have handed in that you will make various suggestions as to remedies for improving profits?—No, I cannot suggest any comprehensive or heroic remedies. I think there are various things in which farmers might do a little better. There is room for improvement in stock, and there is room for improvement in cultivation. Partly from being under-manned they are very often backward with their agricultural operations; they sow late and they harvest late, and a late harvest is a great loss because it makes it impossible to sow catch crops on the stubbles, by which, I think, a great deal might be done in this country.

50,025. What are the relations between landlord and tenant?—I think that is almost an impossible question to answer; they vary in every individual case. As I said, it is like asking what are the relations between husbands and wives.

50,026. I suppose those relations vary?—I am told so.

50,027. Can you speak as the positions of tenant farmers?—As to their positions in what way? It is rather a vague question, is it not? I dare say if it were broken up into one or two definite heads I might be able to answer it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,028. Say financially?—Well, that is a very difficult thing to get at, I imagine. A man's bank-book is a thing which he keeps to himself very much.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,029. I will put it a little more pointedly. Do you consider that the position of the tenant farmers is as good as that of freeholders?—There are no freeholders practically to compare them with.

50,030. You have no freeholders here?—No, with the two exceptions of which I have told you, as to which I should say that one of those men before he succeeded to that small freehold was a tenant farmer, and I believe at one period of his life a very prosperous tenant farmer, but he afterwards took to bad courses, he drank, so that I think we cannot argue from his case in any way.

50,031. That would not be a fair comparison?—No.

50,032. What is your opinion about Land Courts?—That would depend upon what they aim at doing.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,033. It would depend upon the functions of a Land Court?—Yes, it would depend upon the functions of a Land Court. I may say at once that I have great distrust of any sort of State interference with private contracts between individuals, and I could hardly imagine a Land Court existing for purposes apart from that—I can hardly imagine that the functions of a Land Court would not involve some such interference.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,034. Do you know the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not well.

50,034A. Very few people do seem to know it well?—That is so.

50,035. It is not generally known?—Not letting land, I have not had occasion to refer to it.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,036. In answer to the Chairman's question, whether better accommodation in the populous districts or in the works districts was one inducement for labourers to leave, you said just now that you hoped it was not so in your case, and I have no doubt as to your own labourers that you are right, but you seemed to me to lay stress upon those words. What did you mean by that?—I only meant by that that I did not know with regard to other cases.

50,037. I thought perhaps you would suggest that in some of the districts you do know of that might be the case?—No, I did not mean to imply that. I think in my parish good cottages are easily obtainable; I have no hesitation in saying that.

Mr. Grove.

50,038. Do you think that the game question causes any unpleasant relations between landlord and tenant so far as your experience goes?—I should say that there were individual cases where it did.

50,039. But not numerous?—No. I should be disposed to say that they were not very numerous.

50,040. Generally speaking, you would conceive that the landlord would fairly meet any claim for damages presented to them by their tenants?—I do not think I have data enough to answer that question one way or the other.

50,041. Are you on the Technical Instruction Committee of the County Council?—Yes.

50,042. There have been some lectures given on agriculture, have there not?—Yes.

50,043. Do you think they have been beneficial?—I can only speak from personal observation of those at Crickhowell. I think they were of some use there, and I think they might have been of more use. I think they were not quite as well attended as they might have been, but from what I have heard of other parts of the county I think they have been useful. I am not speaking now of the dairy classes.

50,044. No, I was going to ask you that. You mean the agricultural lectures?—Yes, I mean the lectures on manures and feeding.

50,045. Are there any field experiments in operation?—I think Professor Parry wished some tried, and I think some were tried on Sir Joseph Bailey's property, but I do not know about that.

Mr. Grove—continued.

50,046. You would consider them very beneficial, I suppose, if they were properly carried out, would you not?—I am afraid the difficulty is to get people to pay much attention to them.

50,047. Of course one can understand that in a lecture on the chemistry of agriculture there would be perhaps difficulties, but one would fancy that a field experiment to demonstration would get rid of some of the difficulty, and make the thing more useful?—Where communication is easy, no doubt, but you must remember that this is a difficult country to get about in.

50,048. You might have them in two or three centres?—Yes; also you must remember that the number of persons cultivating land who have leisure, and who can interfere with the regular and practical work of their farm in order to give up a bit of their time to field experiments is not large. That limits the choice of ground for them very much.

50,049. The butter school you think was useful?—Yes.

50,050. There is a good deal of dairying in this particular valley?—Yes, a good deal.

50,051. Do you know any farmers who use a separator, for instance?—No, I do not. Professor Parry's teaching in dairying was very practical I may say; it was not at all elaborate; it was intended to give farmers and their wives and daughters a knowledge of such dairy making as could be carried on with simple appliances. He seemed very fully alive to that.

50,052. As to the condition of the labourers' cottages—I do not mean your own, because you have spoken of those—but generally speaking as to the condition of the labourers' cottages, are they fairly satisfactory in the district?—Yes, I should say as to those I have gone into it is so, and certainly I can judge of those I pass on the road in my own parish. I should say for the most part they are.

50,053. And have they pretty good gardens attached to each?—I think so. In some cases very good gardens.

50,054. Evidence was given us in, I think, the last county we were in, Cardiganshire, to the effect that if a man tills his own land he can make it yield 50 per cent. more than it would if he were only a tenant. Do you sympathise with that view in any?—I do not see any reason to think so. I have heard it said, of course. It is sometimes that a person who has the freehold of the soil feels that he is improving for another person's benefit. I should doubt myself whether that operated to any extent to counteract the advantages which a tenant farmer has in other ways in having more capital available.

50,055. So that generally speaking, you would think that the land would yield as much to a tenant farmer as it would to an owner if he were cultivating it?—I am disposed to think so. I think in some cases it would be on the one side, and in some on the other, possibly.

50,056. You condemn the idea of the Land Court?—As I said, I do not quite see what useful functions a Land Court is to discharge. The only functions I can imagine it usefully discharging are to put into force existing legal agreements, but I should hardly imagine that a special Land Court was necessary for that purpose. If by a Land Court, a court to settle rents is meant, I certainly do not believe in it at all.

50,057. But if the landlord and the tenant were to confer together in a sympathising and kindly way, could they not agree upon their own rent, and agree upon their conditions, and not go near a Land Court at all?—Yes; I think so. I quite take that view.

50,058. Then if there was a difference between a tenant and a landlord, who was, say, a hard landlord, and I suppose there are such people in the world?—Oh, yes.

50,059. The Land Court might be useful in those cases?—Of course, wherever there is a contract of any kind, legal procedure of some kind may be necessary as a result of a breach of that contract; and the only question is, as it seems to me, whether it is worth while to trust to the ordinary law courts, or whether the business is likely to be sufficiently extensive to require a special court.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,060. I was not present when you gave your evidence with regard to the rights of pasturage, Mr. Doyle?—Sheep walks?

50,061. Yes; sheep walks. I think that in your report, as an Assistant Commissioner under the Royal Commission on Agriculture of 1880, you condemned the right of pasturage without stint?—Yes.

50,062. And you still adhere to that opinion?—Yes; I think so. I think it would be very much better if the number of sheep a man was entitled to put on his holding was proportionate to the amount of his enclosed land. I have heard that there obtained formerly, and I have been told that there does obtain still some such usage, but I can only say that on those hills that I know of practically, no such limit is enforced.

50,063. And nothing has been done to remedy that state of things since you reported to the Commission?—Nothing that I have heard of.

50,064. Would you recommend that any legal means should be taken to enforce a recommendation of that kind?—I hardly like to say off-hand whether I think it would be desirable, because I could not say off-hand what amount of existing interests would be interfered with by such a legislative change. All I do feel is that it would be economically better if the change could be made in some way or other.

50,065. In the interests of agriculture generally it would be better?—Yes; I think so.

50,066. You say that you have an objection to any State interference between landlord and tenant?—I should wish to minimise it, as I should all interference between two people making a bargain.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,067. Of course, the Agricultural Holdings Act is an interference, is it not?—To a certain extent, yes.

50,068. Do you think that the Agricultural Holdings Act is sufficient to protect a tenant against a bad landlord?—Its protection will be limited to its own provisions, of course, and it is quite impossible, I imagine, if you vest property in any person, to prevent some possible abuses resulting from vesting that property. When you vest property in a person, you run your risk of that to a certain extent; you may tie his hands as much as you like, but there are certain very undesirable things he can do, and certain things which will make tenancy under him less satisfactory and less profitable. That is inevitable in any event.

50,069. You would consider it a hardship for a tenant that he should be capriciously disturbed in his farm?—Yes; the whole point would turn on the weight to be attached to the word "capriciously."

50,070. Unless sufficient grounds were given for turning a tenant out?—Were given or existed; but then you come back to the weight to be attached to the word "sufficient."

50,071. Well, of course, it raises a difficulty I admit. Are you acquainted with the schedules of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, I am afraid I am not.

50,072. Then, of course, you are not in a position to suggest any alteration in the schedules?—No, I am not.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,073. Are there any labourers in your district who keep cows?—I do not think so.

50,074. By whom were these lectures given? Did Professor Parry give the lectures in dairying and manuring?—Yes, both accompanied by a certificated female butter maker.

50,075. Do you know whether the pupils were in the habit of carrying on the same principles when they returned to the farms that they were taught in the dairy school?—That I do not know.

50,076. In some instances we found that the mother did not allow their daughters to use the new system?—I have not heard so. I hope that is not so.

50,077. Is the butter making in the district as good as you could expect it, is it satisfactory?—It was not. I have heard many complaints of it before the introduction of the dairy lectures.

50,078. Do you think there is an improvement since?—I have not had an opportunity of satisfying myself on that point.

50,079. Then with regard to your agricultural labourers, you say you give them 15*s.* 6*d.* a week?—I give them 15*s.*, 15*s.* 6*d.* was a clerical error in the statement handed in.

50,080. And their cottages?—Yes.

50,081. At what do you value the cottages they live in?—According to the situation. I do not suppose they are worth in the market more than 2*s.* a week.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,082. That is generally what agricultural labourers cottages are considered to be worth?—Yes.

50,083. You employ labourers only; you do not employ any boys, or hire them by the year, do you?—Not hired by the year.

50,084. Are there many hired in the district?—By the year?

50,085. Yes?—I do not know. I employ a boy not unfrequently, almost always, and I pay him weekly wages.

50,086. Are the labourers as competent now as they were when you first knew them. Do the young men when they are growing up take the same interest; are they able to thatch and hedge?—I do not think they are. I do not think they are quite as versatile; they cannot turn their hands to as many things as they did.

50,087. You do not think they take quite the delight they did in the work?—I am not sure that they do. I think it is harder to get good thatching and hedging, and work of that sort done.

50,088. I see you keep the men employed upon your farm, but do you find many of the best men leaving for the mineral districts?—Well, what I already told the Chairman.

50,089. A most able-bodied man?—The two men who went from me I think were both good men.

50,090. You mentioned just now, with regard to the school, that labourers live in the villages or the towns. Is that for the sake of being near the schools, and so on?—I do not know that they would deliberately say themselves that they went for the sake of being near a school, but I think that having to send the children in a country like this a considerable distance to school is a discomfort in itself.

50,091. But is it not at the expense of making the labourer walk so many miles a day so that he is not able to carry on his work as well?—But I was comparing the cases. In my case I had one labourer who left me because he got a cottage close to the village, but he was able to get work pretty close to the village too. I was considering cases where living in a village did not involve living at any great distance from work.

50,092. Do you think the abatements generally given in the neighbourhood are sufficient to meet the present depression?—I do not know what they are myself.

50,093. You know what the depression is, I should think?—Yes, I know what the depression was last year, but I do not know what the abatements given were.

50,094. We have heard to-day?—I did not hear it. I was not present this morning.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,095. I have two or three questions put in by Mr. Vincent: "Have you purchased a shire

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

" horse for the benefit of the district?"—Well, I do not know that I ought to say for the benefit of the district. I thought it would be a useful thing; but I do not think it is very desirable to do anything of that sort unless it can be self-supporting. I think everything of that sort in agriculture ought to be self-supporting; but I was very glad that it should be useful to the neighbourhood.

50,096. "Do not the tenants of your neigh- " bours walk puppies for you quite willingly?" —Hound puppies—a good many of them do. I wish sometimes more would do so; but still a great many do.

50,097. "Have you not taken great interest " in agricultural shows and similar institu- " tions?'—I have taken a good deal of interest in a little show we have here at Crickhowell.

50,098. " Have you a brief statement of your " objections to a Land Court. Will you read it?" —No, I have not. I have nothing to read. Might I ask Mr. Vincent, from whom the question proceeds, to define or limit that inquiry a little more?

50,099. I have merely that question handed in. I should have thought that it assumed you had a written statement which you say you have not got?—No, I have not got one.

50,100. Have you or have you not got a written statement?—I beg your pardon, I have appended a statement here.

50,101. Prepared by yourself?—Yes.

50,102. That is what the question referred to?—I should be very happy to read that.

50,103. Is it your own preparation?—Yes.

50,104. I will repeat the question which is handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Have you a brief " statement of your objections to a Land Court?" —Yes, I have.

50,105. " Will you read it?"—I believe that Land Courts, with power to fix judicial rents, have been recommended in some quarters as a remedy for agricultural distress. It is, I think, hardly needful to point out that such machinery can only benefit the tenant in occupation at one particular time, and offers no future advantage or relief to the class of tenants as a whole. It is obvious that inasmuch as there is nothing in such machinery to abate the competitive desire for land—indeed by begetting a fallacious idea that the tenure of land had become more profitable it would probably, for a time, increase that desire—the same conditions would still exist which enable a landlord to fix a certain rent. If the rent of a farm, not accommodation land, and having no special attraction for any one individual, reaches a certain amount, say, for argument's sake, 27*s.* per acre, it must be because there is an unsuccessful applicant who is willing to pay 25*s.* per acre. The competitive desire of that tenant will remain unimpaired, and will still determine the price actually paid. It will not be paid in the form of rent to the landlord, but an equivalent will be paid possibly in the form of a lump sum representing the capitalised value paid for tenant right. You may say, "Forbid the tenant to assign his interest" But let us suppose A. holding a farm at a judicial rent, this judicial rent is ex hypothesi lower than the rack-rent; otherwise why have a court at all? B. is the competitor whose wish for the farm would have forced up the rack-rent to its actual level, he says to A., " I " will give you an advance" (representing half the difference between the judicial rent and the rack-rent, which he was willing to pay) and he makes the same offer to the landlord. The arrangement is for the benefit of all three parties. Is legislation going to prevent it?

To put it shortly, by a system of judicial rents you assign to a particular individual, chosen quite arbitrarily, a marketable commodity at less than the market value, leaving it in his power to make the best he can of it in open market. Very good for him, but for whom else? It seems to me that the whole mistake arises out of the erroneous belief that the rent is determined by the will of the landlord. It is really determined by the act of an indefinite number of potential tenants, and your supposed remedy leaves that condition intact.

Mr. Grove.

50,106. Is that "proposed" or "supposed"?—Well, I said "supposed."

50,107. I was going to ask you who has proposed the remedy?—The persons against whom I supposed myself to be arguing.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,108. I have some questions to put to you which have been handed in by Mr. William T. Lee: "To the best of your knowledge are the " agricultural labourers comfortably housed?"—I think in my parish I should say they were—in the cottages that I know of.

50,109. " What is the state of the dwellings generally?"—Does he mean small houses?

50,110. I take it to mean all houses, farmhouses as well as labourers cottages?—I should say that as compared with most English districts that I know, peasants' cottages compare on the whole favourably, at all events more favourably than the farms do, that is to say, with the English farmsteads of the same class.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,111. Have you farmed in England?—No, never. I have never farmed anywhere else than where I am now.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JAMES MAINWARING called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,112. You are Mr. James Mainwaring, of Bwlch?—Yes.

50,113. What is your occupation?—Rural postman.

50,114. Do you live in a cottage, or where?—Yes, in a cottage.

50,115. It was there you were born?—Yes.

50,116. How long have you lived there, or how long has your father?—He lived there 30 years, and I have occupied the house another nine years come October.

50,117. You have lived in the same house all your life, have you?—Yes.

50,118. You have gone there in place of your father?—Yes.

50,119. Is your father still alive?—Yes.

50,120. He moved to suit you?—Yes.

50,121. Where did he move to?—He moved to my grandfather's house.

50,122 Not far away, I suppose?—Not 100 yards away.

50,123. Near by?—Yes.

50,124. When was that?—Nine years come October.

50,125. Was it in October?—Yes.

50,126. What is the taking of your house?—From November to May.

50,127. Who pays the rent?—I do.

50,128. Promptly, or at the end of three months after it becomes due?—No. I pay it when it becomes due as I have the receipts to prove.

50,129. What is the rent of that cottage?—5*l.* a year.

50,130. That is not quite 2*s.* per week. Have you any land attached to it?—Yes, there is a small field.

50,131. How large?—About one-third of an acre.

50,132. Do you pay 1*l.* a year for it?—No, that is another field.

50,133. How long is it that you have had that field?—Between four and six years.

50,134. What do you pay for that field?—1*l.*, but I should have stated that there was a small field attached to the cottage previously to renting that field.

50,135. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Edward Hamer, Tymawr farm, Bwlch.

50,136. That is on the Duke of Beaufort's estate, is it?—Yes.

50,137. So that the land and the cottage is sub-let to you?—Quite so.

50,138. Are you on friendly relations with your landlord?—Yes, very.

50,139. You say in your statement "until these last few months"?—Yes, until these last few months.

50,140. Is there a difficulty now?—Yes.

50,141. There is a little difficulty now. You say you have not given him any cause to alter that good feeling?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,142. Have you taken any steps about allotments?—Yes, I joined with 13 other men last August.

50,143. What was the object of your joining with those other men?—To obtain allotments.

50,144. To petition the County Council?—Yes.

50,145. It was for a petition to the County Council about allotments?—Yes.

50,146. Who is your County Councillor?—Mr. Cowper Coles.

50,147. Did he take the case in hand?—Yes, very readily.

50,148. What was done?—Mr. Cowper Coles called a meeting at Bwlch, and afterwards they were summoned to Brecon to appear before the Small Holdings Committee.

50,149. Were you present at that meeting?—No, unfortunately I was away on my holidays at the time.

50,150. Was the meeting called at Brecon?—Yes, the second meeting was at Brecon.

50,151. Were there two meetings, one at Bwlch and the other at Brecon?—Yes.

50,152. What did the petitioners state at that meeting? Had they got any land in view?—Yes, several of the petitioners had fixed upon some land near their homes. Among them was George Barrett, who was living in a bytack, he having applied for it, stating that he was able to take it. In November he received notice to quit by this very month of May, and he is already turned out.

50,153. Whose tenant was he?—He was a tenant of Mr. Watkins, Llwynarwn farm. Another man, John Thomas, applied for a small field belonging to my landlord as it would satisfy all he wanted. My landlord was greatly displeased with this man for asking for this small field, and this spring he has ploughed it up, and has sown corn in it.

50,154. Are there any other fields adjacent to that about the same size?—Yes, there are two other fields.

50,155. What was the decision of the Committee?—The decision of the Committee was that the petitioners ought to inquire of the landlords before petitioning them whether the land was to be let or not.

50,156. What was the expectation of the petitioners?—The petitioners were under the belief that if they petitioned the County Council they would obtain the land for them.

50,157. Was anything done after that?—Of course they were greatly disappointed at the County Council's decision, but fortunately for the petitioners Mr. Cowper Coles told them that Sir J. R. Bailey, whom he was agent for, would readily cut up a farm in the neighbourhood of Bwlch for allotments.

50,158 Did the petitioners accept the offer of cutting up the farm or not?—Yes, they accepted it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,159. What was done after that?—Mr. Cowper Coles called another meeting at Bwlch last February, and at that meeting I asked on behalf of myself and Mr. John Thomas, the other man who had asked for that field, whether my landlord's fields were to be let or not, because I was under the impression that my landlord had had notice to give them up. If the Commissioners wish to know why I came to that conclusion I shall be most ready to answer.

50,160. I do not ask the question; apparently you do not wish to give the explanation. Please proceed?—Mr. Cowper Coles' answer was that he could not say.

50,161. What happened then?—My landlord was not long before he heard of it, and was heard stating that I wanted to take his land off him, although told differently by my wife, that is, I only wanted his land if it was to be let. He sends me notice to quit on March 24th.

50,162. Have you got that notice with you now?—Yes, he sent me two notices, one signed and the other not. (The witness handed in two notices.) I saw Mr. Hamer on the 21st of April, and asked him why he sent that notice to me, and he told me because I wanted to take his land from him.

50,163. Then you think there is not much chance of putting the Small Holdings Act into force, or getting allotments under those circumstances; is that so?—Yes.

50,164. Have you any remedy to suggest?—Yes. No working man should be disturbed from his home without a reasonable cause, which would satisfy a county court judge or someone appointed by the County Council?

50,165. Your garden is in a good state of cultivation, I suppose?—Yes.

50,166. Would that be a loss to you if it was taken off your hands?—Yes, a very great loss.

50,167. With regard to the house, you say that you were born there, and your father gave it up to you?—Yes.

50,168. Because it was convenient to you as a rural postman. Is that right?—No, I was about getting married, and he left it.

50,169. But your plans would be in vain if you were evicted, you consider?—Yes.

50,170. Have you got a cow now?—No.

50,171. You would under the new arrangement by which you proposed and hoped to get an allotment?—Yes.

50,172. Were you to have an allotment by this fresh arrangement on Sir Joseph's land?—Yes, I am one of the petitioners.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,173. Speaking of allotments, you spoke of a man that had been turned off and had to leave his cottage?—Yes.

50,174. Had he any land?—No, he was living in a cottage.

50,175. What was the reason alleged?—There was no reason assigned for it.

50,176. But there was some supposed reason?—Well, he believes, as he told me, that it was applying for this farm.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,177. It was a similar case to your own then?—Quite so.

50,178. Do you not think that both you and he made a mistake in not going to the County Council, instead of going to these men?—We did petition the County Council.

50,179. Why did you not leave it in the County Council's hands? They were more able to treat?—The County Council could do nothing with it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,180. Of course your allegation is this, that Mr. Hamer punished you and this other man?—I did not apply for it; I merely asked was it to be let or not.

50,181. Was it the best piece of land on his farm?—Oh, no.

50,182. Did he have any conversation with you about this piece of land?—Yes.

50,183. What was the nature of the conversation?—He came by my house one night, and he told me then that the agents had been talking to him about giving up these fields.

50,184. The agent?—His agents.

50,185. Has he got more than one?—I think on the rent audit there are a couple. He told me that the agents had talked to him about giving them up, and he was telling me that if they were going to take those fields off him, he would have so many acres back from the farm that they intended to cut up. Afterwards, another day, under the influence of drink, this man goes and measures these fields.

50,186. The farmer, you mean?—Yes, the farmer; he is an illiterate man. He is no scholar whatever, and he has not written out one of these receipts for me since I have been there; he has merely signed them. I have had to write them out myself. He goes and measures this field, which put me under the impression that he has had notice to give them up. That is the reason I asked Mr. Cowper Coles at that meeting whether that land was to be let or not, and if it was, as it was around my cottage, it would be most convenient for me than to go to Llygad-dwr farm, when I would have to walk half a mile, or it may be a quarter of a mile, according as the allotment would be allotted out.

50,187. Of course, the answer of the Small Holdings Committee to you was that you should obtain the consent of the landlord before you could get the land?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

50,188. You consider that if the County Council were to approach the landlord they would have a better chance of getting the land than by you, and the others going to ask for it?—Yes, that was the belief of the petitioners.

50,189. Have the County Council put the Act into operation, do you know?—No, I do not think they have.

50,190. You have lived all your life at this cottage?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

50,191. And you think it very hard that this piece of land should be taken from you?—This cottage chiefly, of course.

50,192. It is the extra piece of land, is it not?—No, I have no objection certainly to that, if he wished to take that. But he will turn me out of the cottage.

50,193. The cottage and the small field attached to the cottage?—Yes.

50,194. You do not know, then, whether the Act has been put into operation by the County Council?—I do not believe it has.

50,195. Has there been any other application made in any other part of the county that you know of for land under similar circumstances?—I do not think so. I think this was the only application to the County Council so far as I know.

50,196. Of course, you know that the County Council have no power to take the land; they have only power to put the Act into operation, and to try to get the land, and then to re-sell it or re-let it to those persons who are anxious to have it. You understand that?—Yes, we were fully aware of that.

Professor Rhŷs.

50,197. You consider, then, that it is rather difficult to get this Act into operation in cases like your own?—Yes. Especially when the Parish Councils Bill comes into force. I think that working men similar to myself ought to have some security, not to be turned from their homes without any reasonable cause.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,198. A question is put in by Mr. Doyle: "Before the application of the County Council "had any attempt been made to obtain allot-"ments"?—No.

50,199. "Is it a fact that Barrett was offered "and declined a portion of land other than that "which he originally asked for"?—He never told me so.

50,200. "Did the committee of the County "Council try to ascertain whether Barrett had "capital with which to farm his allotment, and "did he fail to satisfy them"?—Yes, they did ask him the question.

50,201. The following question is handed in by Mr. W. T. Lee: "You say your friend re-"ceived notice to quit. Can you give us the "reason?"—No, I cannot.

50,202. "Is there a demand for allotments?"—Yes.

50,203. The following question by Mr. Vincent: "Your grievance is against a tenant farmer "only, is it not?"—Yes, only.

50,204. "Have you any grievance against the "landlord, the Duke of Beaufort?"—None whatever.

Mr. Grove.

50,205. You know, I suppose, that anyone wanting a small holding of that sort must find one-fifth of the money. You understand that, do you not?—Yes, I am aware of that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Robert Probert called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,206. What is the evidence you desire to give?—It is with respect to Ysgybornewydd. I have had notice to leave.

50,207. Where is Ysgybornewydd?—A mile from Crickhowell on the Llanbedr side.

50,208. What is it you wish to state?—I rented Ysgybornewydd in 1867 for the first time at 156*l.* a year.

50,209. What is the acreage?—About 120 acres. I remained there seven years, and during that time I lost 400*l.* there. I left it after seven years, and it became vacant again in six years. I retook the farm at 100*l.* for the first year, and 110*l.* a year afterwards. There is one thing I have omitted to mention. The farm had been for five months—December, January, February, March, and April—vacant, and no one would take it. There was no land at the time I took it that I could sow any corn in. It was let in the spring. It was somewhere about the 20th of April, consequently I had 20 acres of fallow on it in that year. I got the farm into a very good state of cultivation; it will bear comparison with any farm similarly situated now in the county.

50,210. Are you there now?—I am living in the house on sufferance for a few days. I had to quit on the first of May. I had notice to quit the place, and I went to my landlord.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,211. Who is he?—Thomas Davies, of the Neuadd, a son of the late Mr. Tom Davies, who was the Duke's agent and agent to the late Sir Joseph Bailey. I had been living under him since 1847, with the exception of four years. The farm now, if it was put in the market, would fetch 140*l.* a year, and it would be well worth the money. I went to him to ask for compensation, and I have his answer in my pocket now from London.

50,212. Do you wish me to read it?—Please read it out.

50,213. "Dear Mr. Probert,—With regard to "your request to me for further compensation, I "have written to Mr. Williams on the subject as "agreed, and I have his reply. I put before "him that some time ago I met you and the "incoming tenant at Mr. Blennerhassett's office "to discuss the compensation question, and that "it was then explained that I was not in a "position to offer compensation, and that I "therefore agreed to let the farm on a seven "years' lease, provided that the new tenant would "settle the matter of compensation with you. "I further told Mr. Williams that I understood

" you to have received 125*l.* from the incoming " tenant for this purpose, but that you think I " ought to make you some still further advances. " Mr. Williams replies as follows: 'If the new " 'tenant has given Probert compensation, I " 'cannot see the least ground for his applying to " 'you in the matter, and I should think that if " 'he has had 125*l.* he has been very handsomely " 'paid.' I can only repeat that it was certainly " understood that any matter of compensation " would be settled by the new tenant, and I " must, therefore, decline to make any further " concession.—I am, yours faithfully, Thomas " A. Davies."—Mr. W. C. Williams, of Monmouth, was the acting trustee of the late Mr. Thomas Davies—the trustee over this gentleman—but he has not been on the farm for 11 years, and how is it possible he should know the state of the farm, and what it is worth? He says I have been amply compensated by having 125*l.*, whereas there was 26 acres of wheat-sowing land. The whole of the crop belonged to the tenant. I had to pay a year's rent on that 26 acres when I took the farm. I have been only compensated for the wheat sowing. The farm is worth 40*l.* more than when I took it, and I think it a hard case that I should be turned away in the manner I have for nothing whatever.

50,214. Have you made any practical improvements?—Yes, in the shape of pasture laid down in the farm. It is not merely sowing the seed and laying it down, but it was a lot of rubble, and I should be glad for any of you gentlemen to see what state it is in. I asked Mr. Davies and Mr. Blennerhassett the agent to go and see it, but neither of them would come on the ground. Perhaps if they did come they would know nothing about it, I believe that is the long and the short of it.

50,215. What age is Mr. Thomas Davies? Is he of age now?—He came of age three years last February. We have always been on the best of terms.

50,216. I do not understand whether it was in the hands of trustees or not?—It is in trust. I have the notice in my pocket that I received if you would like to see it.

50,217. Please make your own statement. I do not wish to interrupt you?—I think it is a very hard case that I should not get fairly compensated, but I am afraid I shall break down, as my memory is not very good. The shooting of the place is let yearly. There was a man had it this time of the name of Adney. He lived in the parson's house in Llanbedr, and he was coming over the ground there almost every day. I had a capital piece of turnips of about five acres. He was there I should think every day for five or six days running, himself, and his brother-in-law, and his brother, and three or four more others trampling it down. My son went and asked him if he had not any more shooting anywhere else, and he says, "Why do you ask me that " question," and my son said, "Because you are " continually trampling our turnips down." He said, "I shall come when I like and go when I like." Well, one word brought on another, and then he went and told Mr. Davies that my son had been killing partridges and pheasants out of season. Mr. Davies told me this. I asked Mr. Davies what proof had he of that. The answer Mr. Davies made was, "I have no proof " of it, but Mr. Adney believes he did, and what " Mr. Adney believes I believe." Those are the words which I will state on oath. I said to him, "Mr. Davies, I am very sorry to hear you " speak so silly as you do, and it is a very good " job that you are not a magistrate, if you would " convict people upon what a lot of wicked men " like Adney would think, that you would go " and believe what they think." In short, it is through this Adney no doubt I had notice to leave altogether. I think it is a very hard case that I should be turned away in my old age. I have had connexion with his father when he was agent for Mr. Rumsey Williams, the lawyer of Carnarvon, on the Upper House estate. Since 1845 I have been connected with him, and on the best terms all my lifetime. I am now 74. I have been connected with him for over 50 years. It has vexed me very much that I have had notice to leave my farm, and in the eyes of gentlemen here we are turned away as if we were bad people and poachers. It is a very serious thing to give me notice to quit. I have done everything that was right on the place, and I have been a real friend of his all my lifetime. It was about a twelvemonth, I think the 20th of next September, since we had the dispute.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,218. What was the dispute?—Through this Adney telling him a wilful lie.

Mr. Griffiths.

50,219. When you left your farm there was another person who took the farm, I suppose?—Do you mean the first time or the second time.

50,220. The first time you left it?—Yes.

50,221. Did he take it at the same rent?—As I did?

50,222. Yes?—Do you mean my first occupation of the farm, or this present one?

50,223. Your first occupation at 156*l.*?—I forgot myself. It was reduced 6*l.* a year within the last three years. That man took it at 150*l.*

50,224. How long did he remain there?—Six years.

50,225. Did he make it pay?—Well, I am afraid he did not. It is a question I should not like to enter into. He left it.

50,226. Why did he leave?—That was because he could not make the farm pay.

50,227. The same reason as why you left it the first time?—Yes.

50,228. What did you have the 125*l.* for?—For the wheat sowing. There were 26 acres of wheat-sowing on it.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

50,229. You have not the account, have you?—No, I have no account whatever. My grievance is this: that I consider the farm now is worth 40*l.* a year more than when I took it—in fact, I would give that for it myself—more than when I took it, and that the landlord is reaping the benefit of my labour. If I had known three years ago that I was going to leave the farm, I should have put 400*l.* in my pocket.

50,230. You consider you have made it that much better?—Yes, there is no mistake about that.

50,231. Is Mr. Davies a land valuer himself?—No. He was in court, I think, and perhaps he is in court now. He knows nothing himself about land.

50,232. How could he say that was sufficient?—He says that the trustee, Mr. W. C. A. Williams, says so, and he is certainly a gentleman who does understand everything connected with it, but he has not seen it for 10 years. I was on the best of terms with him and his brother, Mr. Hopkin Williams. When you are connected with gentlemen who know nothing about it you always come to grief—people meddling with things they do not understand.

50,233. Would you like some outside authority to step in and settle this question between you and your landlord?—Yes, I should. I should think that would be a very fair thing.

50,234. Then you are in favour of what is called a Land Court?—Yes. I will tell you what I wanted my landlord to do. When they said they were not in a position to offer me any compensation I said, "Offer the farm to tender: "you need not accept the lowest tender, but "you will have plenty of good men to bid for "the farm now."

50,235. If the farm was relet to you, you would be willing to give 40*l.* a year extra for it?—Yes, 40*l.* a year extra.

50,236. And you say you have made it worth that?—Yes, I have, but now I am turned out of it.

50,237. Rather than leave you would pay the 40*l.*?—Yes, I would, and I told him so.

50,238. Is Mr. Adney the shooting tenant?—Yes.

50,239. What does he shoot on the farm? Does he shoot the rabbits?—He wanted to keep a keeper on it, and to keep rabbits there, but I knew too much about farming to have a keeper on it.

50,240. I suppose you kill the rabbits yourself?—My son used to kill them. I have never killed but one rabbit in my lifetime, and then I very nearly shot a gentleman, and I said I would never shoot at another.

50,241. Is there much game let in this neighbourhood to shooting tenants in that way?—Well, I am speaking of this estate, the Neuadd; it is about 300 acres, I think; I could not speak of any other.

50,242. Is the game let on the whole estate?—Yes.

50,243. Are the tenants generally satisfied?—No, as a rule they are not. There is one man here in court now who had a letter from Adney telling him that he was not to interfere with the rabbits after the 1st February, I think, but he did not take any notice of it.

50,244. Is the shooting-tenant inclined to exercise rather higher authority than the landlord himself?—This one man, Mr. Davies, came and forbade us to kill the rabbits in any form. I said, "Here is Sir Joseph, he does not interfere "with his tenants shooting the rabbits or killing "them in any way they like; why should you "interfere with me more than the other land-"lords do—the Duke and Sir Joseph."

50,245. You would be quite agreeable for your landlord to come and walk over your farm?—Most certainly I should be very glad to see him.

50,246. You would try to keep some game for him?—Yes, I always did when the house was let to a gentleman, but this Adney was a sort of pot-hunter; he used to go about the country with a ferret in his pocket—it is true indeed—and he used to have his pony trap going to Abergavenny about twice a week with rabbits and partridges and everything he could get.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,247. I take it you are against the principle of sporting tenants?—Oh, yes, most certainly.

50,248. As a rule they are not so considerate as a landlord would be; that is in going across the corn?—Any man would be glad to see his landlord on a farm, partridge shooting and so on, at certain times, but I am thoroughly against having keepers on the ground under any circumstances. I would not have a farm under any circumstances where a keeper was kept on it; but I think it is the duty of the tenant to preserve and do what he can for his landlord to have sport when he comes over the farm, that is in September, or any time when he would like to come.

50,249. Did you find that the game did much damage on your farm?—No, I do not complain of the damage they have done.

50,250. You keep them down—that is, the ground game, the hares and rabbits?—There are no hares in the country now, and there are not many rabbits there. If Adney had his way it was a pretty spot for preserving them. I could see what he was at. He said he would keep a keeper there. I said no. He said, "It is a good place to preserve rabbits," and I said, "You may "rest assured you will not keep them at my "expense"—so that we started like that. He was no gentleman; in fact, he could not get a house in the country after he behaved as he did to me—he was sent away.

50,251. Supposing you had to make a claim for compensation, how would you make it, Mr. Probert?—That is what I want to find out, that brought me here to day.

50,252. What have you done on your farm to make it worth 40*l.* a year more rent?—I have farmed it well.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

50,253. Have you made any permanent improvements besides laying down permanent grass seeds?—Yes, I have put it down in form. We will say now that the farm was let at 110*l.* a year, 120 acres, that would be somewhere about 16*s.* an acre, or something like that. There is land now, if put up for auction, that I put down which would fetch 4*l.* an acre.

50,254. The letting of it?—Yes, the letting of it. It was stubble when I went there—wheat and oat stubble.

50,255. How much land did you lay down permanently?—From 35 to 40 acres. There are 25 acres of this land, as I tell you, laid down in the farm I am speaking of.

50,256. How much an acre do you consider it cost you to lay down?—That is a question I could not answer. It would take two years round to do it as I have done it; you could not do it in one fallow.

50,257. Have you done anything else besides laying down the land?—No.

50,258. You have done nothing in the way of buildings?—No.

50,259. But you have improved the farm generally?—It is like this. There were about eight applications, whereas when I took it no one would have it at any price. That is 14 years ago.

50,260. When did you lay this land down in grass?—I could not say exactly. Perhaps it has been down five or six years. They were 10-acre fields. Instead of doing the 10 acres of fallow a year I altered the plan of it, and I was making a fallow in two years.

50,261. Were you aware that if you had acted under the Agricultural Holdings Act, that is, written to the landlord to obtain his consent, and if he gave you consent to lay this land down, you could claim compensation?—Yes, I was, but then I was on such terms with him; he was one of the last people breathing I should have doubted. I could have laid down my life for him, in every sense of the word. I have done everything that is right with him, but this man Adney had persuaded him and got him on bad terms with us. That is the long and the short of it.

50,262. So that really you trusted to his honour?—Yes, I trusted to his honour. I never thought I should be moved away from there until I was carried.

50,263. Now you have discovered your trust was misplaced?—Yes. Ever since he has been a child his mother used to bring him up every Christmas there, and we were on the best of terms, but this man telling him a wilful lie about my son caused all the disturbance.

50,264. You think a man should be compensated for the general improvement of a farm?—What encouragement is there in farming unless you have that? What I think is this; that there ought to be fixity of tenure. A man cannot go and farm in any form unless he knows what he is doing. If I had had a lease of course this would not have happened, and I should have reaped the benefit of it.

Mr. Grove.

50,265. Did you have an agreement when you took the farm?—Yes, with the executor, Mr. W. C. A. Williams.

50,266. A written agreement?—Yes.

50,267. Do you consider that they have acted in accordance with that agreement in giving you notice?—It was like this; it was in 1880, and it was in 1883 that the amendment to the Agricultural Holdings Act was passed. I have had advice on the point, and it seems that the old agreement would still stand good, and that was six months' notice.

Mr. Richard Jones.

50,268. Have you a copy of the agreement?—No, I have not.

Mr. Grove.

50,269. You did get 125*l.*?—Yes.

50,270. How much do you consider you ought to have?—I ought to have had 300*l.*

50,271. You consider you are leaving behind you 175*l.*?—Yes, I do.

50,272. You think that if there was fixity of tenure that a man could make more of the land than he would if he was farming it on a yearly notice?—It would be like this. You would have security for your capital, and if I had known that I was to be served as I am, instead of laying out my money on the place, I should have been putting some little in my pocket every year.

50,273. You think that is a desirable thing to do, do you not?—Yes, I do, indeed.

50,274. Generally speaking, if a man were to farm his own small holding, or if he had fixity of tenure, you think he could develop the land and make more of it?—Oh, there is no mistake about that, because without an outlay on land you cannot get anything from it; you cannot get compensation.

50,275. Have you the notice to quit with you?—Yes (handing same).

Professor Rhŷs.

50,276. Your case seems one of considerable hardship according to your account. Have you known any other farmers to leave in somewhat the same way, and unable to get compensation for their improvements?—No, as a rule here the farmers do not get notice from their landlord. Sir Joseph and others do not give notices, but this young man gave me notice to leave, not knowing the consequences of it. It is a great hardship and great loss to me.

50,277. You have informed him since of the state of things, have you not?—Oh, yes. I have been with him, and in fact he came to me when he saw the advertisement of my sale, and he said, "What can we do, Probert," but it was too late then. By this time he could see his own error, but it had got too late then. I had advertised the sale, and I had to sell good heifers at 6*l.* a piece, which were worth, some of them, 6*l.* when they were calved—and sheep and everything—it has been a dead loss.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

50,278. If you could have kept them a few months it would have made a good deal of difference?—Yes. I had plenty of stuff on the farm. I was preparing plenty of everything for my animals, and I had everything to go in rotation in the farm, and always paid him every six months the whole of his rent. I never owed him a shilling.

50,279. Did you pay punctually?—Yes.

50,280. You ascribe the whole difficulty to the shooting tenant?—Yes, altogether. I do entirely to this Adney.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,281. What did you understand in reference to this letter written on the 25th of last January by Mr. Thomas Davies. He was "not "in a position to offer compensation"; probably he is not a rich man, and could not afford to do it. Is that it?—Yes; I think that is it.

50,282. And your difficulty is that you had trusted entirely to the estate, and not availed yourself of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act.

50,283. It was an honest attempt of the Legislature to help such a case as yours; I will not use the word honest; it was honest or not as you may think, but it was an attempt of the Legislature to help such a case. Had you made an application to the landlord you might then have claimed this compensation as of right. So that the Legislature has made an attempt to meet such a case as yours?—Yes.

50,284. Did your improvements include any erection of buildings?—No.

50,285. It was principally the laying down of permanent pasture?—Yes; and the general cultivation of the farm.

50,286. Did you make any fences?—No; I did not make any new fences.

50,287. Did you apply to the land any purchased or artificial or other manure?—Oh, yes. I paid last year Tucker's people 15*l.*

50,288. Did you consume on the holding, by cattle, sheep, or pigs, cake, or other feeding stuff which was not produced on the holding?—Yes; I was paying Tucker's people here somewhere about 20*l.* a year, and I have only sold six sacks of corn out of the farm this six years. I consumed everything on the farm.

50,289. You have not a copy of the agreement with you?—No; I never had a copy of the agreement. Mr. Williams has the agreement at Monmouth. I had no copy of it. There was only one agreement. It has been a one-sided affair with me.

Mr. Grove.

50,290. You signed the agreement when you took the place?—Yes.

50,291. When you signed that agreement, did you ask him to give you a copy of it?—No; I did not. It is the only agreement I have ever signed, though I have farmed largely in this neighbourhood.

Sir John Llewelyn.

50,292. There are two or three questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Did your son "resist the shooting party?"—Yes.

50,293. "Did he take out a game license himself?"—Yes.

50,294. "Did he go shooting in his landlord's "private garden?"—No.

50,295. "Did not you understand that the incoming tenant was to pay compensation to "you, and it was so agreed between him and "the landlord?"—It was like this: I had 125*l.* for the wheat sowing and for delivering up possession.

50,296. You claim something more?—Yes, I claim something more.

50,297. "Did not you receive all you asked "from him?"—I had the 125*l.*

50,298. Was that all you asked from the incoming tenant?—That is all he would give. I wanted 300*l.*, but that is all he would give.

50,299. "Do you say the landlord has reaped "the benefit of your labour?"—Yes.

50,300. "Is not the rent still the same?"—I do not believe it is. I am not positive of that, because when I was in Mr. Blennerhassett's office the thing was mentioned, and Blennerhassett said, "It shall never be rented at the "same rent again as you had it." I believe the rent is now about 128*l.* a year, but I am not certain of that.

50,301. Mr. Vincent asks you to look at this agreement, Clause A., at the bottom of the page, and say whether that was the clause as to game in your agreement?—There was something in the agreement about the game. That is my signature to that agreement.

50,302. This is the clause, "The tenant not "to sport, hunt, or shoot, nor allow any person "or persons to sport, hunt, or shoot on the said "premises or over any premises on which the "said landlord has the right of sporting, but shall "and will sign all notices required by the said "landlord to warn trespassers off such grounds, "and allow the said landlord and his heirs to "bring actions or take any other proceedings in "respect of such trespassers in the name of the "tenant if so desired, the said landlord or his "heirs paying all expenses arising therefrom "incurred by the said tenant, and shall and "will allow the said landlord and his heirs and "friends and servants to sport on the said "premises." Then this is in writing, "Provided nevertheless that the tenant shall be at "liberty to kill the rabbits upon the said "premises in any other way than by shooting "them?"—That was not in it then: that I will swear; that is put down since. I will bet 100*l.* that is not Mr. W. C. A. Williams' writing; that is shoved in.

50,303. You deny that handwriting?—Yes, I deny that handwriting.

50,304. There is a question by Mr. Lee: "Is "it not a fact that money-lenders took the "stock away from the tenant who succeeded "you after your first occupancy?"—Yes, it is.

Re-examined 50,388.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS DAVIES of Noyadd called and examined.

Sir John Llewelyn.

See evidence of preceding witness.

50,305. What do you wish to say?—In the first place, I should like to thoroughly indorse Mr. Probert's statement, that until this unfortunate affair about the shooting we were the very best of friends. Three years ago if it had been suggested to me that we should find ourselves here for this occasion I should have dismissed the idea as utter rubbish. I think I had better tell you my story of this shooting affair. My friend Mr. Adney, a person, I believe, not popular in the neighbourhood, because misunderstood, was a gentleman who was living in Llanbedr, in the parish where this question arises. He being a sportsman and I not being a particularly keen sportsman, I was pleased to give him permission to shoot over the land over which I had a right of shooting.

50,306. Llanbedr is up the valley, is it?—Yes.

50,307. Is that where this house Ysgybornewydd is situate?—Yes, that is it. Mr. Adney was shooting over the land and was met on the first occasion by Mr. Probert's son—at least on one occasion by Mr. Probert's son, the first time that I heard much of the trouble that was going to arise. Mr. Adney came to me afterwards and told me that Mr. Probert's son had requested him to leave the ground. Mr. Adney declined to do so. We had great trouble over the shooting, and I paid a visit to Mr. Probert on one occasion, and in consideration of this trouble about the shooting, and his son having ordered my friend in a rather uncourteous manner, as far as I could make out, to leave the ground, it seemed to me the best thing to do was to request him to put the gun away altogether. I knew, as I told him, that I could not enforce his doing so, but I was in a position, if he did not agree with my suggestion, to tell him that it would be the best thing to give up, for the sake of our relationship as tenant and landlord. Upon this, I understand, and I think Mr. Probert, senior, has given us to understand the same thing, Probert, junior, took out a game license, and came to the back of my house for the purpose of shooting. This occurred for several days, naturally to the annoyance of ourselves; and on one occasion I believe that I am right in saying that he told one of my gardeners that it would not be advisable for him to be working in the garden as he was going to shoot, the land upon which he would be shooting being in close proximity to the garden. On the occasion Mr. Probert has just referred to of my visit to him, as we had been on friendly terms until this affair into which I have been dragged occurred, I simply went up in a friendly way to talk to him of the matter. I told him that I was extremely sorry for what had happened, but that I did not see that I could have acted differently. If I had been misguided and I had made a mistake I was extremely sorry for it; but that I did not myself see that I had made a mistake or that I could have acted differently. Then, with regard to the compensation question, I made arrangements with the incoming tenant, I went so far as to let him the farm; we had several applicants, and we selected that one; I let him the farm on a seven years' lease, and I assisted Mr. Probert to get his compensation in that way; that the incoming tenant would settle the matter of compensation, and so doing he would take the farm for seven years.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

50,308. That was a part of the bargain, I understand?—Yes. I cannot think of anything further to say; I believe I have been through the painful story from the beginning up to the present.

50,309. Then I will complete that question. When you say that it was part of the bargain with the incoming tenant, was there anything specified as to the amount of the compensation or what the compensation was to be for?—The compensation, I believe, was to be for the general improvements done.

50,310. Was there any limit or was the outgoing tenant to be completely indemnified. He says that it was for the wheat, for the crops that were in the land, that the outgoing tenant paid him 125*l.*; whereas he claimed for something more. That is what he alleges?—Yes. I put that matter before the trustee—Mr. Williams, of Monmouth—and he wrote to me telling me that he did not think that Mr. Probert could possibly have any further claim and that if he had been compensated to the extent of 125*l.* he, Mr. Williams, thought that he had had a very fair allowance made to him. That, I think, sir, is in the letter of mine that has been read out.

50,311. As I understand, you looked upon that compensation, that 125*l.*, as covering everything?—I believed it to do so.
